British poetry and prose; a book of readin
820.8 LIED 215289
Lieder, Paul [illegible]rt, CLG

DISCARD

BRITISH POETRY AND PROSE

820.8
L623b

A Book of Readings

820.8
L623b

EDITED BY

PAUL ROBERT LIEDER
Professor of English Language and Literature in Smith College

ROBERT MORSS LOVETT
Professor of English in the University of Chicago

ROBERT KILBURN ROOT
Professor of English in Princeton University

c1928

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
BOSTON · NEW YORK · CHICAGO · DALLAS · SAN FRANCISCO

COPYRIGHT, 1928
BY PAUL ROBERT LIEDER, ROBERT MORSS LOVETT, AND ROBERT KILBURN ROOT
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

The selections reprinted in this collection are used by permission of and special arrangement with the proprietors of their respective copyrights

West Hills Community College District

The Riverside Press
CAMBRIDGE · MASSACHUSETTS PRINTED IN THE U.S.A.

PREFACE

In compiling this book the editors have recognized, first, that literature is a fine art; second, that literature has had an historical development both in its forms and in its material, corresponding to changing social conditions and intellectual interests and attitudes; and, third, that it is an expression of the personalities in whom its creative force was incarnate. Accordingly, literature may be approached from three points of view, not, of course, to be sharply separated — the æsthetic, the historical and social, and the personal. From the first point of view the effort has been made to select the most excellent examples of literary genius from Beowulf to the close of the nineteenth century. Arranged in chronological order, these will, it is believed, enable the student to gain for himself a consecutive view of the development of literature in accordance with the tastes, interests, and needs of changing generations. As a matter of convenience the conventional division into periods has been adopted, with the warning that these are not to be emphasized as hard-and-fast distinctions. The introductory notes to the several periods are intended to point out general characteristics of their literary production as affected by political and social movements. The introductions to individual authors have been prepared with the aim of identifying the writer, of giving a succinct account of his experience in life as a key to his work, and of suggesting the qualities of his mind and art. As it is hoped that the student will draw in his mind an outline of the historical development of English literature, so it is hoped that he will see and enjoy for himself the qualities which make its exponents memorable. The editors have tried to refrain from forcing opinions and conclusions, and in general to avoid doing for the student what he can reasonably be expected to do for himself.

With these principles in mind they have undertaken to select the most characteristic work of each writer, whether it is generally familiar, or comparatively unknown. They have sought to give due representation to the various types and forms of literature, and to illustrate their progress from period to period. For those who wish to approach the field from this point of view rather than the historical, a special introduction to the study of literature according to types has been provided. The editors have not hesitated to include in the volume selections which may be regarded as important primarily as expressive of the intellectual or social characteristics of a period or school. And they have been especially hospitable to work having the interest of autobiography and personal revelation.

In particular the editors have tried to limit the inclusion of fragmentary extracts, however striking or elegant or famous as purple patches, in the belief that for appreciation of a writer's point of view, form, and style, the unit in which he wrote should be considered. Particularly is this study of literature as units necessary in the case of works significant as historical documents. Thus, for example, both Sir Gawain and the Green Knight and Milton's Areopagitica have been presented in their entirety. Where space forbade such presentation, complete books, cantos or chapters, or other integral portions of the work have been chosen — e.g., the first book of the Faërie Queene, the first two books of Paradise Lost, the first voyage of Gulliver's Travels, the three chapters of Sartor Resartus which give the most vital portion of Carlyle's spiritual biography and creed. Omissions have been made only where the substance became clearly unnecessary, or unsuitable, such as the last third of Ruskin's chapter on the Nature of Gothic, which is too technical for reading without diagrams. Occasionally the editors have reduced to its fundamental elements a work too important to be omitted and too long to be reproduced in its entirety, such as Mill's tractate On Liberty, and Macaulay's Essay on Bacon.

This effort to present units has forced the editors to omit frankly and entirely the two forms of novel and drama. They believe that the study of a novelist's work in selections is of limited value, and that while several fine plays might be presented in completeness to give acquaintance with the dramatic form, the number would be inadequate to give a conception of the history and development of the form. And for both novel and drama there are editions easily accessible to be used as supplementary reading. For the editors are far from claiming anything like completeness or finality for their list of selections. They hope rather that their work may be a basis for widely intelligent choice and reading in accordance with the student's own interests and tastes and in addition to any formal academic requirement. In the description of types, references are given to the drama of the Elizabethan period and the novel of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries which the reader cannot fail to follow with greater understanding and interest through his general acquaintance with the characteristics of their periods as revealed in this book.

The editors have kept in mind the fact that the purpose of literature is to be read, not studied. They have therefore endeavored to reduce the apparatus for study to a minimum. They have sought to include in the introductions to periods, writers, and works such preliminary information as may be necessary to general understanding; and for details they have limited explanatory footnotes to a minimum. Absolute consistency in procedure in this matter is both impossible and undesirable. On the whole, the editors have attempted to give such explanations as are indispensable to an immediate understanding of the passage while leaving to the reader the pursuit of allusions which can be traced in generally accessible reference books, histories, encyclopædias, or classical and biographical dictionaries. Quotations and references to literature have not, in general, been referred to their sources, except when they were obviously intended to be read in connection with the work itself, as, for example, Macaulay's references in his Essay on Milton. In such cases usually the author's own notes are sufficient, and these have, wherever practicable, been retained.

Grateful acknowledgment is made to the following publishers and individuals for permission to reprint copyright material:

To George Allen and Unwin, Ltd., for selections from The Stones of Venice, Unto this Last, and Fors Clavigera, by John Ruskin.

To Ginn and Company for Professor Chauncey B. Tinker's translations from Old English prose.

To Harper and Brothers for selections from the works of Algernon Charles Swinburne.

To A. E. Housman for selections from A Shropshire Lad.

To Rudyard Kipling and his agents, A. P. Watt and Son, for poems from Rudyard Kipling's Verse, Inclusive Edition, published by Doubleday, Doran and Company, Inc., copyright, 1892, 1893, 1899, by Rudyard Kipling.

To Longmans, Green and Company for poems by William Morris from Earthly Paradise and Collected Works.

To The Macmillan Company for poems by Thomas Hardy, John Masefield, and W. B. Yeats.

To Macmillan and Company, London, for selections from Alfred, Lord Tennyson.

To the Princeton University Press for Professor J. D. Spaeth's translation of Old English poems.

To Charles Scribner's Sons for essays by Robert Louis Stevenson, for poems by George Meredith, and for the use of Professor Osgood's abridgment of Boswell's Life of Johnson.

CONTENTS

MAP SHOWING PLACES CONNECTED WITH ENGLISH LITERARY HISTORY Frontispiece

A GUIDE TO THE STUDY OF TYPES OF LITERATURE ..... xix

THE ANGLO-SAXON PERIOD

INTRODUCTION ..... 1

BEOWULF ..... 2

THE VENERABLE BEDE
- Bede's Account of the Poet Cædmon 28

THE WANDERER ..... 30

KING ALFRED THE GREAT
- The Voyages of Ohthere and Wulfstan ..... 31

THE BATTLE OF BRUNANBURH .... 33

THE BATTLE OF MALDON ..... 35

THE LATER MIDDLE AGES

INTRODUCTION ..... 41

EARLY ENGLISH LYRICS
- "Sumer is icumen in" ..... 42
- Alysoun ..... 42

PIERS THE PLOWMAN
- Prologue ..... 43
- Passus V ..... 45

GEOFFREY CHAUCER

THE CANTERBURY TALES
- The Prologue ..... 50
- The Nun's Priest's Tale ..... 60
- The Pardoner's Tale ..... 66
- The Prioress's Tale ..... 73
- The Friar's Tale ..... 76
- The Franklin's Tale ..... 81

THE MINOR POEMS
- The Parliament of Fowls ..... 91
- Truth ..... 99
- Gentilesse ..... 99
- The Compleint of Chaucer to his Empty Purse ..... 100

JOHN GOWER
- The Tale of Florent ..... 100

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT ..... 105

THE POPULAR BALLADS
- The Douglas Tragedy ..... 130
- Edward ..... 131
- Babylon; or, the Bonnie Banks o Fordie ..... 132
- Lord Thomas and Fair Annet ..... 132
- Lamkin ..... 134
- The Gay Goss-Hawk ..... 135
- The Three Ravens ..... 136
- The Twa Corbies ..... 136
- Sir Patrick Spence ..... 137
- The Wife of Usher's Well ..... 137
- The Dæmon Lover ..... 138
- Hugh of Lincoln ..... 138
- Chevy Chase ..... 139
- Robin Hood Rescuing the Widow's Three Sons ..... 142
- Robin Hood's Death and Burial ... 144
- Mary Hamilton ..... 145

SIR THOMAS MALORY
- Le Morte Darthur: Book XXI .... 146

THE ELIZABETHAN PERIOD

INTRODUCTION ..... 155

SIR THOMAS WYATT

The Lover Compareth his State to a Ship in Perilous Storm Tossed on the Sea ..... 157
The Lover having Dreamed of Enjoying of his Love, Complaineth that the Dream is not Either Longer or Truer ..... 157
A Renouncing of Love ..... 157
The Lover Beseecheth his Mistress not to Forget his Steadfast Faith and True Intent ..... 157
An Earnest Suit to his Unkind Mistress not to Forsake him ..... 157
The Lover Complaineth the Unkindness of his Love ..... 158
Of the Mean and Sure Estate ..... 158

HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY

Description of Spring ..... 160
Complaint of a Lover Rebuked ..... 160
A Complaint by Night of the Lover not Beloved ..... 160
Prisoned in Windsor, he Recounteth his Pleasure there Passed ..... 160
The Means to Attain Happy Life ..... 161
On the Death of Sir T[homas] W[yatt] ..... 161
From Virgil's Æneid ..... 162

ROGER ASCHAM

Introduction to Toxophilus ..... 162

EDMUND SPENSER

The Faerie Queene: Book I ..... 166
Amoretti: Nos. 1, 34, 79, 82 ..... 250
Prothalamion ..... 250

SIR WALTER RALEIGH

A Vision upon this Conceit of the Faerie Queene ..... 253
The Silent Lover ..... 254
His Pilgrimage ..... 254
Verses Found in his Bible in the Gate-House at Westminster ..... 254
The Lie ..... 255
From The Discovery of Guiana ..... 255
From The History of the World ..... 257

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY

The Bargain ..... 258
Astrophel and Stella ..... 259
Love is Dead ..... 260
From The Defense of Poetry ..... 260

ELIZABETHAN LYRICS

THOMAS SACKVILLE, LORD BUCKHURST

From Complaint of the Duke of Buckingham ..... 265

GEORGE GASCOIGNE

Piers Ploughman: From The Steel Glass ..... 266

SIR EDWARD DYER

My Mind to me a Kingdom Is. .. 266

JOHN LYLY

Apelles' Song: From Campaspe ... 267
Spring's Welcome: From Campaspe 267

GEORGE PEELE

Song: From The Arraignment of Paris ..... 268
Harvestmen A-Singing: From The Old Wives' Tale ..... 268
Farewell to Arms ..... 268

ROBERT GREENE

Song: From The Farewell to Folly 268
Philomela's Ode ..... 269
Sephestia's Song to her Child: From Menaphon ..... 269
Menaphon's Song: From Menaphon ..... 269
The Shepherd's Wife's Song: From Menaphon ..... 270

ANONYMOUS

Crabbed Age and Youth: From The Passionate Pilgrim ..... 270
Hey Nonny No! ..... 270
Back and Side, Go Bare, Go Bare: From Gammer Gurton's Needle .. 271

SAMUEL DANIEL

Love Is a Sickness ..... 271
To the Lady Margaret, Countess of Cumberland ..... 271
Sonnets: From Delia, 51, 52 ..... 272

MICHAEL DRAYTON
Sonnets: From Idea, 24, 44, 61 . . . 273
Ode XI. To the Virginian Voyage 273
Ode XII. To the Cambro-Britons and their Harp . . . . . 274

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE
The Passionate Shepherd to his Love . . . . . 276

THOMAS NASH
Spring . . . . . 276
Litany in the Time of Plague . . . . 276

THOMAS CAMPION
My Sweetest Lesbia . . . . . 277
When to her Lute Corinna Sings . . 277
Whether Men do Laugh or Weep 277
Vain Men, Whose Follies Make a God of Love . . . . . 278
Never Love unless you Can . . . . . 278
Cherry Ripe . . . . . 278
Chance and Change . . . . . 278

JOHN FLETCHER
Melancholy: From The Nice Valour 279
Invocation to Sleep: From Valentinian . . . . . 279
Aspatia's Song: From The Maid's Tragedy . . . . . 279
Song to Bacchus: From Valentinian 279
Drink To-day: From The Bloody Brother . . . . . 279
Away, Delights: From The Captain 279
Weep No More: From The Queen of Corinth . . . . . 280
Love's Emblems: From Valentinian . . . . . 280

FRANCIS BEAUMONT
On the Tombs in Westminster Abbey . . . . . 280
Master Francis Beaumont's Letter to Ben Jonson . . . . . 280

JOHN WEBSTER
Vanitas Vanitatum . . . . . 281

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
Sonnets: Nos. 15, 18, 23, 25, 29, 30, 32, 33, 54, 55, 60, 64, 65, 66, 70, 71, 73, 90, 97, 98, 104, 106, 107, 109, 110, 111, 116, 119, 130, 146 . . . . . 283
Songs from the Plays
From Love's Labour's Lost . . . . . 288
The Two Gentlemen of Verona . . . . . 288
The Merchant of Venice . . 288
As You Like It . . . . . 289
Much Ado About Nothing 289
Twelfth Night . . . . . 289
Measure for Measure . . . . 290
Cymbeline . . . . . 290
The Tempest . . . . . 290

BEN JONSON
Song to Celia . . . . . 291
Hymn to Diana: From Cynthia's Revels . . . . . 291
Simplex Munditiis: From Epicœne . . . . . 291
To the Memory of my Beloved Master, William Shakespeare . . 291
A Pindaric Ode . . . . . 292
Epitaph on Elizabeth L. H. . . . . 294
A Farewell to the World . . . . . 294

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

INTRODUCTION . . . . . 297

FRANCIS BACON

ESSAYS OR COUNSELS CIVIL AND MORAL:

1. Of Truth . . . . . 299
2. Of Death . . . . . 300
5. Of Adversity . . . . . 300
7. Of Parents and Children . . . . 301
8. Of Marriage and Single Life . . 302
10. Of Love . . . . . 302
11. Of Great Place . . . . . 303
12. Of Boldness . . . . . 304
17. Of Superstition . . . . . 305
18. Of Travel . . . . . 306
23. Of Wisdom for a Man's Self . . 307
27. Of Friendship . . . . . 307
28. Of Expense . . . . . 310
32. Of Discourse . . . . . 311
39. Of Custom and Education . . . 312

42. Of Youth and Age ..... 312
47. Of Negotiating ..... 313
50. Of Studies ..... 314

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY LYRICS

GEORGE WITHER

Shall I, Wasting in Despair ..... 315
I Loved a Lass ..... 315

WILLIAM BROWNE

For her Gait, if she be Walking... 316
On the Countess Dowager of Pembroke ..... 316

THOMAS CAREW

Song ..... 316
Persuasions to Joy: A Song ..... 316
Ingrateful Beauty Threatened ... 316
The Unfading Beauty ..... 317
Epitaph ..... 317

SIR WILLIAM DAVENANT

Song ..... 317
To a Mistress Dying ..... 317

EDMUND WALLER

Go, Lovely Rose! ..... 318
On a Girdle ..... 318
To Phyllis ..... 318
Old Age ..... 318

SIR JOHN SUCKLING

A Doubt of Martyrdom ..... 319
The Constant Lover ..... 319
Why So Pale and Wan? ..... 319

RICHARD CRASHAW

Wishes to his Supposed Mistress .. 319

RICHARD LOVELACE

To Lucasta, On Going to the Wars 321
To Althea, from Prison ..... 321

ANDREW MARVELL

Horatian Ode Upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland ..... 322
To his Coy Mistress ..... 323
The Garden ..... 324
An Epitaph ..... 324

HENRY VAUGHAN

The Retreat ..... 325
The World ..... 325
Departed Friends ..... 326

JOHN DONNE

Song ..... 327
A Valediction Forbidding Mourning. 327
The Indifferent ..... 327
Song ..... 328
Death ..... 328
The Funeral ..... 328
The Canonization ..... 329
Love's Deity ..... 329
A Hymn to God the Father ..... 329

ROBERT HERRICK

The Argument of his Book ..... 330
When he Would have his Verses Read 330
Upon the Loss of his Mistresses... 330
Cherry-Ripe ..... 331
Corinna's Going A-Maying ..... 331
To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time ..... 332
To Anthea, who may Command him Anything ..... 332
His Request to Julia ..... 332
A Lyric to Mirth ..... 332
Upon Julia's Clothes ..... 332
A Bacchanalian Verse ..... 332
To Silvia ..... 333
To Live Merrily, and to Trust to Good Verses ..... 333
Upon Mistress Susanna Southwell her Feet ..... 333
To Electra ..... 333
To Music, to Becalm his Fever .... 333
Delight in Disorder ..... 334
The Bracelet to Julia ..... 334
The Primrose ..... 334
His Tears to Thamesis ..... 334
To Daffodils ..... 335
A Grace for a Child ..... 335
The Country Life ..... 335
His Prayer to Ben Jonson ..... 336
Upon a Child ..... 336
The Mad Maid's Song ..... 336
The Night-Piece, to Julia ..... 336
The Hock Cart; or, Harvest Home .. 336
To Blossoms ..... 337
Upon Ben Jonson ..... 337
An Ode for Him ..... 337
Dissuasions from Idleness ..... 337
The Hag ..... 338
A Thanksgiving to God for his House 338
His Winding-Sheet ..... 338
His Litany to the Holy Spirit ..... 339

His Return to London ..... 339
On Himself ..... 340
To His Book ..... 340

GEORGE HERBERT
Virtue ..... 340
Love ..... 340
The Pulley ..... 341
The Collar ..... 341
The Quip ..... 341
The World ..... 342

IZAAK WALTON
The Compleat Angler: The Third Day ..... 342

SIR THOMAS BROWNE
Religio Medici: Sections 1–18 ..... 347

THOMAS FULLER
The Life of Sir Francis Drake. From The Holy State, Book II, Chapter XXII ..... 356

JEREMY TAYLOR
Of the Slavery and Pains Eternal ... 359

ABRAHAM COWLEY
Of Myself ..... 363
Anacreontics:
Drinking ..... 364
The Epicure ..... 365
The Wish ..... 365
The Thief ..... 365
A Supplication ..... 366

JOHN MILTON
L'Allegro ..... 367
Il Penseroso ..... 369
Lycidas ..... 370
On his Being Arrived to the Age of Twenty-Three ..... 374
When the Assault was Intended to the City ..... 374
To the Lord General Cromwell .... 374
On the Late Massacre in Piemont .. 374
On his Blindness ..... 375
On his Deceased Wife ..... 375
Paradise Lost
Book I ..... 376
Book II ..... 386
Areopagitica ..... 399

SAMUEL PEPYS
Diary of Samuel Pepys January, 1665–66 ..... 423

JOHN DRYDEN
Mac Flecknoe ..... 428
A Song for St. Cecilia's Day, November 22, 1687 ..... 431
Alexander's Feast; or, The Power of Music ..... 432
Ah, How Sweet it is to Love! ..... 434
Epigram on Milton ..... 434
From An Essay of Dramatic Poesy .. 435

JOHN BUNYAN
Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners ..... 444

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

INTRODUCTION ..... 459

JONATHAN SWIFT
Gulliver's Travels: A Voyage to Lilliput ..... 462
An Argument Against Abolishing Christianity ..... 489
A Modest Proposal ..... 495

JOSEPH ADDISON and RICHARD STEELE
THE TATLER:
On Duelling ..... 500
The Trumpet Club ..... 501
Character of the Upholsterer .... 503
Character of Sir Timothy Tittle .. 504
Early Rising ..... 506

THE SPECTATOR:
The Uses of the Spectator ..... 508
Signior Nicolini and the Lions ... 509
Westminster Abbey ..... 511
The Vision of Mirzah ..... 512
Dissection of a Beau's Head ..... 514
Dissection of a Coquette's Heart .. 516
On Waste of Time ..... 517

ALEXANDER POPE
The Rape of the Lock ..... 520
Eloisa to Abelard ..... 530

An Essay on Man, Epistle I
Of the Nature and State of Man, with Respect to the Universe .. 535
Moral Essays, Epistle IV
Of the Use of Riches ..... 538
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot..... 541

JOHN GAY
From Trivia, or the Art of Walking the Streets of London..... 547
Sweet William's Farewell to Black-Eyed Susan..... 549
Fables:
The Monkey who had Seen the World ..... 550
The Fox at the Point of Death ... 551
The Hare and Many Friends .... 551
Over the Hills and Far Away: From Beggar's Opera, Act I, Sc. XII ... 552
Youth's the Season: From Beggar's Opera, Act II, Sc. IV..... 552
Come, Sweet Lass: From Beggar's Opera, Act III, Sc. VIII..... 552
Love's Resort: From Acis and Galatea, Act I ..... 552
Galatea: From Acis and Galatea, Act II ..... 552
Woman's Chiefest Duty: From Achilles, Act III, Sc. VIII ..... 552

JAMES THOMSON
The Seasons: Winter (lines 1–321) 553
Rule, Britannia: From Alfred: A Masque ..... 557
The Castle of Indolence, Canto I... 558

THOMAS GRAY
Ode on the Spring ..... 569
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College ..... 569
Sonnet: On the Death of Mr. Richard West ..... 570
Ode on the Death of a Favorite Cat. 570
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard ..... 571
The Progress of Poesy ..... 573
The Bard ..... 574

WILLIAM COLLINS
Ode to Evening..... 577
The Passions: An Ode for Music ... 577
Ode: Written in the Beginning of the Year 1746 ..... 579
Dirge in Cymbeline ..... 579

SAMUEL JOHNSON
ESSAYS
From The Rambler:
The Modern Novel ..... 580
The Private Life of an Author .. 582
Crabbed Age and Youth ..... 584
The Busy Life of a Young Lady 586
From The Idler:
The Decay of Friendship ..... 588

JAMES BOSWELL
From The Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D. 1763, 1776..... 590

OLIVER GOLDSMITH
The Deserted Village ..... 612
An Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog 618
Stanzas on Woman: From The Vicar of Wakefield..... 618
The Citizen of the World
Letter XXI. At the Play-house.. 618
Letter LI. The Bookseller ..... 621
Letter LIV. The Character of Beau Tibbs ..... 622
Letter LV. Beau Tibbs at Home. 623
Letter LXXI. Beau Tibbs at Vauxhall ..... 625
Letter LXXVII. The London Shop-Keeper ..... 627

EDMUND BURKE
Reflections on the Revolution in France: The Events of October 6, 1789 ..... 629
The Impeachment of Warren Hastings, Esq.
The Charge..... 635
Peroration..... 637

WILLIAM COWPER
Walking with God ..... 639
The Task: Book IV. The Winter Evening ..... 639
On the Loss of the Royal George... 648
On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture out of Norfolk ..... 648
To Mary..... 650
The Castaway ..... 651

ROBERT BURNS
The Twa Dogs ..... 652
The Cotter's Saturday Night..... 655

To a Mouse ..... 658
To a Mountain Daisy ..... 658
Epistle to J. Lapraik ..... 659
Tam o' Shanter ..... 661
The Jolly Beggars ..... 663
My Nanie, O ..... 668
Green Grow the Rashes, O ..... 668
Will Ye Go to the Indies, My Mary. 669
The Silver Tassie ..... 669
Of a' the Airts ..... 669
Auld Lang Syne ..... 670
John Anderson My Jo ..... 670
Tam Glen ..... 670
Willie Brewed a Peck o' Maut ..... 671
Ae Fond Kiss ..... 671
Sweet Afton ..... 671
Ye Flowery Banks ..... 672
A Red, Red, Rose ..... 672
Last May a Braw Wooer ..... 672
Scots, Wha Hae ..... 673
Highland Mary ..... 673
Is There for Honest Poverty ..... 674
O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast ... 674
Mary Morison ..... 674

WILLIAM BLAKE

Song ..... 675
Mad Song ..... 675
Song ..... 676
To the Muses ..... 676
Songs of Innocence
Introduction ..... 676
The Lamb ..... 676
Infant Joy ..... 677
The Little Black Boy ..... 677
A Cradle Song ..... 677
Songs of Experience
Cradle Song ..... 678
The Tiger ..... 678
The Clod and the Pebble ..... 678
A Little Boy Lost ..... 678
Night ..... 678
Stanzas from Milton ..... 679
Love's Secret ..... 679

THE EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

INTRODUCTION ..... 683

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

Lines Written in Early Spring ..... 685
Expostulation and Reply ..... 686
The Tables Turned ..... 686
Lines Composed a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey ..... 687
Lucy ..... 688
Lucy Gray ..... 690
The Simplon Pass ..... 690
Michael ..... 691
The Prelude:
From Book First: Introduction — Childhood and School-time .... 697
From Book Ninth: Residence in France ..... 697
From Book Eleventh: France (concluded) ..... 699
My Heart Leaps Up ..... 699
To the Cuckoo ..... 700
Resolution and Independence ..... 700
Composed upon Westminster Bridge, September 3, 1802 ..... 702
Composed by the Seaside near Calais, August, 1802 ..... 702
It is a Beauteous Evening, Calm and Free ..... 702
On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic ..... 702
To Toussaint L'Ouverture ..... 703
Near Dover, September, 1802 ..... 703
Written in London, 1802 ..... 703
London, 1802 ..... 703
To the Daisy ..... 703
When I have Borne in Memory .... 704
At the Grave of Burns ..... 704
The Solitary Reaper ..... 705
She was a Phantom of Delight ..... 705
I wandered Lonely as a Cloud ..... 706
Elegiac Stanzas ..... 706
Ode to Duty ..... 707
To a Skylark ..... 708
Character of the Happy Warrior ... 708
Ode on Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood ..... 710
The World is Too Much with us .. 712
Song at the Feast of Brougham Castle 713
Laodamia ..... 714
Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty. 717

Mutability ..... 718
Inside of King's College Chapel, Cambridge ..... 718
The Trosachs ..... 718
Preface to Lyrical Ballads ..... 718

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
Kubla Khan, or, A Vision in a Dream 730
The Rime of the Ancient Mariner ... 731
Frost at Midnight ..... 739
Christabel ..... 740
Dejection: An Ode ..... 747
Youth and Age ..... 749
Work without Hope ..... 749
Biographia Literaria: Chapters X, XIV, XVII, XVIII ..... 749

SIR WALTER SCOTT
Lochinvar: From Marmion, Canto V, Lady Heron's Song ..... 766
Prologue to The Lady of the Lake ... 767
Soldier, Rest! Thy Warfare O'er: From The Lady of the Lake, Canto I 768
Boat Song: From The Lady of the Lake, Canto II ..... 768
Coronach: From The Lady of the Lake, Canto III ..... 769
Brignall Banks: From Rokeby ..... 769
Jock of Hazeldean ..... 770
Pibroch of Donald Dhu ..... 770
Clarion: From Old Mortality ..... 770
Lullaby of an Infant Chief ..... 770
Proud Maisie: From The Heart of Midlothian ..... 771
County Guy: From Quentin Durward 771
Bonny Dundee ..... 771
Here's a Health to King Charles: From Woodstock ..... 772

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
When we Two Parted ..... 774
She Walks in Beauty ..... 774
The Destruction of Sennacherib .... 774
Stanzas for Music ..... 775
From Childe Harold's Pilgrimage. Canto the Third ..... 775
Sonnet on Chillon ..... 793
The Prisoner of Chillon ..... 793
To Thomas Moore ..... 797
So we'll go no more a Roving ..... 797
To Thomas Moore ..... 797
Mazeppa ..... 797
From Don Juan. Canto the Third stanza 85–end ..... 805
Stanzas ..... 810
On this Day I Complete my Thirty-Sixth Year ..... 810

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
Hymn to Intellectual Beauty ..... 812
Ozymandias ..... 813
Stanzas Written in Dejection near Naples ..... 813
Ode to the West Wind ..... 814
The Indian Serenade ..... 815
Prometheus Unbound: End of the Last Act ..... 815
The Cloud ..... 816
To a Skylark ..... 817
To Night ..... 819
Time ..... 819
Mutability ..... 819
Adonais ..... 819
The Final Chorus from Hellas .... 828
To —— ..... 830
Lines: When the Lamp is Shattered 830
A Dirge ..... 831

JOHN KEATS
Sonnet ..... 832
To my Brothers ..... 832
From Endymion. Proem to Book I. 832
Robin Hood ..... 833
Stanzas ..... 833
Lines on the Mermaid Tavern .... 834
Fancy ..... 834
The Eve of St. Agnes ..... 835
Ode ..... 841
Ode on a Grecian Urn ..... 841
Ode to a Nightingale ..... 842
Ode on Melancholy ..... 843
To Autumn ..... 843
La Belle Dame Sans Merci ..... 844
Two Sonnets on Fame ..... 844
To Sleep ..... 845
Sonnet: To a Young Lady who Sent me a Laurel Crown ..... 845
Lamia ..... 845
Sonnet ..... 854

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR
Rose Aylmer ..... 855
A Fiesolan Idyl ..... 855
On his Seventy-Fifth Birthday .... 856

Imaginary Conversations
Marcellus and Hannibal ..... 856
Leofric and Godiva ..... 857
Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn .. 860
Bossuet and the Duchess de Fontanges ..... 862
The Empress Catharine and Princess Dashkof ..... 866

THOMAS HOOD
The Bridge of Sighs ..... 869
The Song of the Shirt ..... 870
The Death Bed ..... 871
Morning Meditations ..... 871

CHARLES LAMB
Essays of Elia
Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago ..... 872
Mrs. Battle's Opinions on Whist 878
Imperfect Sympathies ..... 882
Dream Children: A Reverie ... 885
A Dissertation upon Roast Pig . 887
In Praise of Chimney-Sweepers . 891
Poor Relations ..... 894
A Character of the Late Elia .. 897

WILLIAM HAZLITT
My First Acquaintance with Poets 900
On Going a Journey ..... 909
The Fight ..... 914
A Farewell to Essay-Writing ..... 922

THOMAS DE QUINCEY
Suspiria de Profundis: Levana and our Ladies of Sorrow ..... 927
The English Mail Coach ..... 930

THE LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

INTRODUCTION ..... 945

THOMAS CARLYLE
Sartor Resartus — Book II, Chapters VII, VIII, IX; Book III, Chapter VIII ..... 948
Past and Present — Book III, Chapters XII, XIII; Book IV, Chapter I 965

JOHN STUART MILL
On Liberty ..... 981

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY
Milton ..... 1002
Francis Bacon ..... 1026

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN
From Apologia Pro Vita Sua ..... 1039
The Idea of a University — Discourse V. Liberal Knowledge its Own End ..... 1044

ALFRED TENNYSON
The Poet ..... 1054
The Lady of Shalott ..... 1055
Œnone ..... 1057
The Palace of Art ..... 1060
The Lotos-Eaters ..... 1064
The Epic ..... 1066
Morte D'Arthur ..... 1067
Ulysses ..... 1071
Locksley Hall ..... 1071
Break, Break, Break ..... 1076
Songs from The Princess ..... 1076
From In Memoriam ..... 1078
Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington ..... 1084
The Charge of the Light Brigade . 1087
Lyrics from Maud ..... 1088
Milton ..... 1090
Northern Farmer, Old Style ..... 1090
The Higher Pantheism ..... 1092
The Revenge ..... 1092
Rizpah ..... 1094
Crossing the Bar ..... 1096

ROBERT BROWNING
Pippa's Song ..... 1097
Cavalier Tunes:
Marching Along ..... 1097
Give a Rouse ..... 1097
Boot and Saddle ..... 1098
My Last Duchess ..... 1098
Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister .. 1099
The Lost Leader ..... 1100
Meeting at Night ..... 1100
Parting at Morning ..... 1101
Home-Thoughts from Abroad .... 1101
The Bishop Orders his Tomb at Saint Praxed's Church ..... 1101
Love among the Ruins ..... 1103
Up at a Villa — Down in the City . 1104
A Toccata of Galuppi's ..... 1105

One Way of Love ..... 1106
Respectability ..... 1106
The Guardian-Angel ..... 1107
Memorabilia ..... 1107
The Last Ride Together ..... 1108
A Grammarian's Funeral ..... 1109
The Statue and the Bust ..... 1110
"Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came" ..... 1114
Fra Lippo Lippi ..... 1117
Andrea del Sarto ..... 1122
Prospice ..... 1125
Epilogue ..... 1126

JOHN RUSKIN
The Stones of Venice. Vol. II, Chapter VI ..... 1127
Unto this Last. Essay I ..... 1152
Fors Clavigera. Letter V ..... 1159

MATTHEW ARNOLD
Quiet Work ..... 1166
Shakespeare ..... 1166
The Forsaken Merman ..... 1167
Empedocles on Etna
Empedocles' Song. Act I, Sc. 2 .. 1168
Self-Dependence ..... 1172
Morality ..... 1173
The Buried Life ..... 1173
Lines written in Kensington Gardens ..... 1174
The Future ..... 1175
Requiescat ..... 1176
The Scholar-Gipsy ..... 1176
Isolation ..... 1180
Dover Beach ..... 1181
Rugby Chapel ..... 1181
Preface to Essays in Criticism, First Series ..... 1183
The Function of Criticism at the Present Time ..... 1185
Sweetness and Light ..... 1198
Essay on Wordsworth ..... 1206

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY
Autobiography ..... 1215
On the Advisableness of Improving Natural Knowledge ..... 1220
A Liberal Education; and where to Find It ..... 1227
On the Physical Basis of Life ..... 1230

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
Say Not the Struggle Nought Availeth ..... 1239
From Dipsychus ..... 1239
Qua Cursum Ventus ..... 1240
The Latest Decalogue ..... 1240
Hope Evermore and Believe ..... 1240
Qui Laborat, Orat ..... 1241
Ite Domum Saturæ, Venit Hesperus 1241
Life is Struggle ..... 1242
In a London Square ..... 1242
All is Well ..... 1242

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING
Sonnets from the Portuguese. Nos. 1, 3, 4, 14, 22, 26, 35, 43 ..... 1243
To George Sand ..... 1244
The Cry of the Children ..... 1244

EMILY BRONTË
Stanzas ..... 1247
The Old Stoic ..... 1247
Last Lines ..... 1247

EDWARD FITZGERALD
Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám of Naishápúr ..... 1248

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI
The Blessed Damozel ..... 1255
Sister Helen ..... 1256
The Ballad of Dead Ladies: From François Villon ..... 1259
Troy Town ..... 1260
The House of Life:
The Sonnet ..... 1261
Love-Sight ..... 1261
Silent Noon ..... 1261
The Choice ..... 1261
Vain Virtues ..... 1262
Lost Days ..... 1262
A Superscription ..... 1262
The One Hope ..... 1263
The Cloud Confines ..... 1263

WILLIAM MORRIS
The Defence of Guenevere ..... 1264
The Eve of Crecy ..... 1269
The Haystack in the Floods ..... 1269
An Apology: Prologue to The Earthly Paradise ..... 1271
L'Envoi to The Earthly Paradise ... 1272

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
Choruses from Atalanta in Calydon 1274
Hymn to Proserpine 1275
A Match 1277
A Ballad of Burdens 1277
The Garden of Proserpine 1279
Hertha 1280
To Walt Whitman in America 1282
A Ballad of François Villon 1284
On the Deaths of Thomas Carlyle and George Eliot 1284
Hope and Fear 1285
A Child's Future 1285

WALTER PATER
Studies in the History of the Renaissance — Conclusion 1286
The Renaissance — Sandro Botticelli 1287
The Child in the House 1291

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
A Gossip on Romance 1299
The Lantern-Bearers 1304
Pulvis et Umbra 1309
A Christmas Sermon 1312

JAMES THOMSON
Mater Tenebrarum 1316
From Sunday at Hampstead 1317
From The City of Dreadful Night 1317

FRANCIS THOMPSON
The Hound of Heaven 1319
Envoy 1321

GEORGE MEREDITH
Modern Love. Nos. 1, 2, 48, 49, 50 1322
Lucifer in Starlight 1323
A Certain People 1323
A Stave of Roving Tim 1323
Hard Weather 1324
Ode to the Comic Spirit 1325
Love in the Valley 1329

THOMAS HARDY
Her Dilemma 1333
Revulsion 1333
Her Initials 1333
Rome 1334
Lausanne 1334
An August Midnight 1334
Embarcation 1334
A Christmas Ghost-Story 1335
"I Said to Love" 1335
To Life 1335
At Casterbridge Fair:
The Ballad-Singer 1335
Former Beauties 1336
After the Club-Dance 1336
The Market-Girl 1336
The Inquiry 1336
A Wife Waits 1336
After the Fair 1337

RUDYARD KIPLING
A Ballad of East and West 1337
Fuzzy-Wuzzy 1339
Gunga Din 1340
L'Envoi 1341
Recessional 1341

ALFRED EDWARD HOUSMAN
Oh, when I was in Love with You 1341
To an Athlete Dying Young 1341
White in the Moon the Long Road Lies 1342
Into my Heart an Air that Kills 1342
Think No More, Lad, Laugh, be Jolly 1342
When I came Last to Ludlow 1342
The Carpenter's Son 1342

JOHN MASEFIELD
A Consecration 1343
Cargoes 1343
Roadways 1344
The West Wind 1344
Sea-Fever 1345
On Growing Old 1345

WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS
When you are Old 1346
The Voice 1346
The Song of the Happy Shepherd 1346
The Falling of the Leaves 1346

INDEX TO THE MAP ii

INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND FIRST LINES OF POETRY iii

A GUIDE TO THE STUDY OF TYPES OF LITERATURE

The general arrangement of this anthology is intended to present the development of English literature in historical sequence. For a simultaneous study of forms and types of literature the following classification is offered.

THE EPIC

The epic is a long narrative poem written in an elevated style, based on a racial or national theme, and dealing with supernatural and heroic characters. Folk epics arose spontaneously among primitive peoples; examples are The Iliad and The Odyssey. Imitations of these in more sophisticated times are called literary epics, the classical example of which is Virgil's Æneid. The epic is also imitated for humorous effect in the mock-heroic poem.

Anglo-Saxon

Beowulf, 2

Elizabethan

Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey
Virgil's Æneid, 162

Edmund Spenser
The Faerie Queene, Book I (Allegory), 166

Seventeenth Century

John Milton
Paradise Lost: Book I, 376
Book II, 386

Mock Epics

Eighteenth Century

Alexander Pope
The Rape of the Lock, 520

Early Nineteenth Century

George Gordon, Lord Byron
Don Juan, 805

THE BALLAD

The ballad is a short story in song. It employs a simple meter, usually stanzas of four lines, alternately of four and three feet, sometimes with a refrain. Like the folk epic, the ballad arose spontaneously in primitive times. It was preserved by memory, and only later were the original ballads written down. Most of the famous old ballads in English date from the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The revival of interest in the past during the eighteenth century led to the recovery and preservation of ballads — Percy's Reliques of Old English Poetry being the most famous collection — and to their imitation, as a form of literature.

Later Middle Ages

The Popular Ballads
The Douglas Tragedy, 130
Edward, 131
Babylon; or, the Bonnie Banks o Fordie, 132
Lord Thomas and Fair Annet, 132
Lamkin, 134
The Gay Goss-Hawk, 135
The Three Ravens, 136
The Twa Corbies, 136
Sir Patrick Spence, 137
The Wife of Usher's Well, 137
The Dæmon Lover, 138
Hugh of Lincoln, 138
Chevy Chase, 139
Robin Hood Rescuing the Widow's Three Sons, 142
Robin Hood's Death and Burial, 144
Mary Hamilton, 145

Early Nineteenth Century

Samuel Taylor Coleridge
The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, 731

Sir Walter Scott
Jock of Hazeldean, 770

JOHN KEATS
La Belle Dame sans Merci, 844

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
The Revenge, 1092

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI
Sister Helen, 1256
Troy Town, 1260

RUDYARD KIPLING
A Ballad of East and West, 1337

THE ROMANCE

The romance is a type of narrative in verse or prose which flourished especially in the Middle Ages. It dealt with aristocratic themes of war, adventure, and love, in a spirit of idealism. It was revived in modern times, particularly in connection with the romantic movement of the nineteenth century. Browning developed a type of narrative poem which he called the dramatic romance, examples of which have been included under this heading.

LATER MIDDLE AGES

GEOFFREY CHAUCER
The Franklin's Tale, 81

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT, 105

SIR THOMAS MALORY
Le Morte Darthur: Book XXI, 146

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
Christabel, 740

JOHN KEATS
The Eve of St. Agnes, 835
Lamia, 845

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
The Lady of Shalott, 1055
Morte D'Arthur, 1067

ROBERT BROWNING
My Last Duchess, 1098
The Last Ride Together, 1108
A Grammarian's Funeral, 1109
The Statue and the Bust, 1110
"Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came," 1114

WILLIAM MORRIS
The Defence of Guenevere, 1264
The Haystack in the Floods, 1269

THE TALE

The tale corresponds in popular literature to the romance in aristocratic. It is an unpretending and realistic narrative of events and human characteristics. Great numbers of tales were afloat in the Middle Ages, preserved, like the ballads, by oral tradition. Many were directed to moral edification; others to counsel in ways of gaining worldly success; others merely recorded striking or humorous episodes, practical jokes, etc. Many collections of tales were made in the Renaissance, such as those of Boccaccio in Italy, and Chaucer in England. It was a convention to bind such collections together by a frame story, such as that furnished by Chaucer's account of the Canterbury pilgrims. The short story is a modern outgrowth of the tale, differing chiefly in its unity and concentration, and its avoidance of diffusion of interest. Examples of modern short stories are those of Poe, Stevenson, and Kipling.

LATER MIDDLE AGES

GEOFFREY CHAUCER
The Canterbury Tales:
The Prologue, 50
The Nun's Priest's Tale, 60
The Pardoner's Tale, 66
The Prioress's Tale, 73
The Friar's Tale, 76

JOHN GOWER
The Tale of Florent, 100

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

ROBERT BURNS
The Twa Dogs, 652
Tam o' Shanter, 661

THE ALLEGORY

The allegory is a story in prose or verse specifically intended to teach a lesson, in which the characters are personifications of human qualities. Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress is a well-known example. The fables of Æsop and the parables of Jesus are short allegories.

LATER MIDDLE AGES

The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman, 43

GEOFFREY CHAUCER
The Parliament of Fowls, 91

ELIZABETHAN

EDMUND SPENSER
The Faerie Queene:
Book I, 166.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

JONATHAN SWIFT
Gulliver's Travels: A Voyage to Lilliput 462

JOHN GAY
Fables:
The Monkey Who had Seen the World, 550
The Fox at the Point of Death, 551
The Hare and Many Friends, 551

JAMES THOMSON
The Castle of Indolence, 558

OTHER NARRATIVE POEMS

ANGLO-SAXON PERIOD

ANONYMOUS
The Wanderer, 30
The Battle of Brunanburh, 33
The Battle of Maldon, 35

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

ALEXANDER POPE
Eloisa to Abelard, 530

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Lucy Gray, 690
Michael, 691
Laodamia, 714

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
The Prisoner of Chillon, 793
Mazeppa, 797

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR
A Fiesolan Idyll, 855

PROSE NARRATIVE

ANGLO-SAXON PERIOD

THE VENERABLE BEDE
Bede's Account of the Poet Cædmon, 28

KING ALFRED THE GREAT
The Voyages of Ohthere and Wulfstan, 31

ELIZABETHAN

SIR WALTER RALEIGH
From The Discovery of Guiana, 255
From The History of the World, 257

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

IZAAK WALTON
The Third Day: From The Compleat Angler, 342

THE LYRIC

The lyric is a short poem expressive of the emotion of the author or of some character whom he represents. It was originally intended to be sung, but often in modern times it merely suggests a connection with music. The lyric is various in its forms and uses.

The Sonnet

Of the established forms of lyric the sonnet is most important. Originating in Southern France in the twelfth century, it was introduced into Italy, where it was practiced by Dante, Petrarch, and other poets. It was brought to England in the early sixteenth century by Sir Thomas Wyatt. It enjoyed great vogue in the later years of the century, as an expression of courtly love. Sidney, Spenser, Shakespeare, Daniel, Drayton, and many others wrote series or sequences of sonnets. The sonnet was also turned to reflective and religious, and later to political themes.

The sonnet properly consists of fourteen lines of five feet, divided into two parts, the octave of eight and the sestet of six lines. In the Italian sonnet the octave rhymes abbaabba; the sestet employs the rhymes cde in various orders, avoiding the couplet at the close. The English sonnet is an adaptation used by the Earl of Surrey, which consists of three quatrains, ab ab, cd cd, ef ef, closed by a couplet gg. This form was followed by Shakespeare. The sonnet sequence lends itself to narrative as in Sidney's Astrophel and Stella, and in Meredith's Modern Love, where the "sonnet" is expanded to sixteen lines.

Elizabethan

Sir Thomas Wyatt
The Lover Compareth His State to a Ship in Perilous Storm Tossed on the Sea, 157
The Lover having Dreamed of Enjoying of His Love, etc., 157
A Renouncing of Love, 157

Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey
Description of Spring, 160
Complaint of a Lover Rebuked, 160
A Complaint by Night of the Lover not Beloved, 160

Edmund Spenser
Amoretti, 250

Sir Walter Raleigh
A Vision upon this Conceit of the Faerie Queene, 253

Sir Philip Sidney
Astrophel and Stella, 259

Samuel Daniel
Sonnets: From Delia, 272

Michael Drayton
Sonnets: From Idea, 273

William Shakespeare
Sonnets, 283

Seventeenth Century

John Milton
On His Being Arrived to the Age of Twenty-Three, 374
When the Assault was Intended to the City, 374
To the Lord General Cromwell, 374
On the Late Massacre in Piemont, 374
On His Blindness, 375
On His Deceased Wife, 375

Eighteenth Century

Thomas Gray
Sonnet: On the Death of Mr. Richard West, 570

Early Nineteenth Century

William Wordsworth
Composed upon Westminster Bridge, 702
Composed by the Seaside near Calais, 702
It is a Beauteous Evening, Calm and Free, 702
On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic, 702
To Toussaint L'Ouverture, 703
Near Dover, September, 1802, 703
Written in London, 1802, 703
London, 1802, 703
The World is Too Much with Us, 712
Mutability, 718
Inside of King's College Chapel, Cambridge, 718
The Trosachs, 718

George Gordon, Lord Byron
Sonnet on Chillon, 793

Percy Bysshe Shelley
Ozymandias, 813

John Keats
Sonnet, 832
To My Brothers, 832
Two Sonnets on Fame, 844
To Sleep, 845
Sonnet: To a Young Lady Who Sent Me a Laurel Crown, 845
Sonnet, 854

Later Nineteenth Century

Matthew Arnold
Quiet Work, 1166
Shakespeare, 1166

Elizabeth Barrett Browning
Sonnets from the Portuguese, 1243
To George Sand, 1244

Dante Gabriel Rossetti
The House of Life:
The Sonnet, 1261
Love-Sight, 1261
Silent Noon, 1261
The Choice, 1261
Vain Virtues, 1262

Lost Days, 1262
A Superscription, 1262
The One Hope, 1263

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
On the Deaths of Thomas Carlyle and George Eliot, 1284
Hope and Fear, 1285

GEORGE MEREDITH
Modern Love, 1322
Lucifer in Starlight, 1323
A Certain People, 1323

THOMAS HARDY
Revulsion, 1333
Embarcation, 1334

The Ode

The ode was a form of lyric poetry of recognized structure among the Greeks. Pindar's odes have been imitated by English poets, notably Cowley and Gray, but in general the term is applied by poets freely to sustained lyric utterances, based on elevated themes and often intended for some dignified celebration. The ode form usually connotes irregular structure, permitting change of rhythm, meter, and rhyme scheme according to the mood.

ELIZABETHAN

ROBERT GREENE
Philomela's Ode, 269

MICHAEL DRAYTON
Ode XI: To the Virginian Voyage (Patriotic), 273
Ode XII: The Ballad of Agincourt (Patriotic), 274

BEN JONSON
A Pindaric Ode, 292

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

ANDREW MARVELL
Horation Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland (Patriotic), 322

ROBERT HERRICK
An Ode for Ben Jonson (Friendship), 337

JOHN MILTON
L'Allegro (Nature), 367
Il Penseroso (Nature), 369

JOHN DRYDEN
A Song for St. Cecilia's Day, 431
Alexander's Feast; or, The Power of Music, 432

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

THOMAS GRAY
Ode on the Spring (Nature), 569
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College (Nature), 569
Ode on the Death of a Favorite Cat, 570
The Progress of Poesy (Pindaric), 573
The Bard (Pindaric), 574

WILLIAM COLLINS
Ode to Evening (Nature), 577
The Passions: An Ode for Music, 577
Ode: Written in the Beginning of the Year 1746 (Patriotic), 579

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Ode to Duty, 707
Ode on Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood, 710

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
Dejection: An Ode, 747

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
Ode to the West Wind, 814

JOHN KEATS
Ode, 841
Ode on a Grecian Urn, 841
Ode to a Nightingale, 842
Ode to Melancholy, 843
To Autumn, 843

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington (Elegy), 1084

FRANCIS THOMPSON
The Hound of Heaven, 1319

GEORGE MEREDITH
Ode to the Comic Spirit, 1325

The Elegy

The eclogue and elegy were originally of late Greek origin. The poet Theocritus in Alexandria, remembering the songs of goatherds which he had heard in his native Sicily, imitated them in more cultivated form. Some of these were love songs, others songs sung in competition among shepherds for prizes, others were dirges on the death of a dead shepherd. This pastoral verse was imitated by Virgil, and later by the poets of the Renaissance. In particular, the elegy became a recognized medium for the expression of grief, and many of the great mourning poems in English have taken this form.

Seventeenth Century

John Milton
Lycidas, 370

Early Nineteenth Century

Percy Bysshe Shelley
Adonais, 819

Elegiac Poems and Epitaphs

Elizabethan

Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey
On the Death of Sir Thomas Wyatt, 161

Ben Jonson
To the Memory of My Beloved Master, William Shakespeare, 291
Epitaph on Elizabeth L. H., 294

Seventeenth Century

William Browne
On the Countess Dowager of Pembroke, 316

Thomas Carew
Epitaph, 317

Andrew Marvell
An Epitaph, 324

Robert Herrick
Upon a Child, 336
Upon Ben Jonson, 337

Eighteenth Century

Thomas Gray
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, 571

William Collins
Dirge in Cymbeline, 579

Early Nineteenth Century

William Wordsworth
Lucy, 688
At the Grave of Burns, 704

Sir Walter Scott
Soldier, Rest! Thy Warfare O'er: From The Lady of the Lake, Canto I, 768
Coronach: From The Lady of the Lake, Canto III, 769
Proud Maisie: From The Heart of Midlothian, 771

Walter Savage Landor
Rose Aylmer, 855

Thomas Hood
The Death Bed, 871

Later Nineteenth Century

Alfred Tennyson
Home They Brought Her Warrior Dead: From The Princess, 1077
In Memoriam A. H. H., 1078

Matthew Arnold
Requiescat, 1176
Rugby Chapel, 1181

Alfred Edward Housman
To an Athlete Dying Young, 1341

The Dramatic Lyric

The dramatic lyric is a poem defined by Browning as lyric in expression, but dramatic in principle, the thought or feeling attributed to some person other than the author.

Eighteenth Century

Robert Burns
The Jolly Beggars, 663

Percy Bysshe Shelley
Prometheus Unbound: End of the last act, 815

Later Nineteenth Century

Alfred Tennyson
Œnone, 1057
Ulysses, 1071
Locksley Hall, 1071
Northern Farmer, Old Style, 1090
Rizpah, 1094

ROBERT BROWNING
Cavalier Tunes:
Marching Along, 1097
Give a Rouse, 1097
Boot and Saddle, 1098
Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister, 1099
The Lost Leader, 1100
Meeting at Night, 1100
Parting at Morning, 1101
Home-Thoughts, from Abroad, 1101
Love Among the Ruins, 1103
Up at a Villa — Down in the City, 1104
A Toccata of Galuppi's, 1105
One Way of Love, 1106
Respectability, 1106
Memorabilia, 1107

MATTHEW ARNOLD
The Forsaken Merman, 1167

WILLIAM MORRIS
The Eve of Crécy, 1269

THOMAS HARDY
Her Dilemma, 1333
At Casterbridge Fair:
After the Club-Dance, 1336
The Inquiry, 1336
A Wife Waits, 1336

RUDYARD KIPLING
Fuzzy-Wuzzy, 1339
Gunga Din, 1340

Miscellaneous Lyrics

Many lyrics which cannot be indexed under the foregoing divisions may be classified according to subject matter under: Religion, Love, Friendship, Drinking Songs, Nature, Patriotism and War, Childhood, Reflection.

Religion

ELIZABETHAN

SIR WALTER RALEIGH
His Pilgrimage, 254
Verses Found in His Bible in the Gate-House at Westminster, 254

THOMAS NASH
Litany in Time of Plague, 276

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

HENRY VAUGHAN
The Retreat, 325
The World, 325
Departed Friends, 326

JOHN DONNE
A Hymn to God the Father, 329

ROBERT HERRICK
A Thanksgiving to God for His House, 338
His Litany to the Holy Spirit, 339

GEORGE HERBERT
Virtue, 340
Love, 340
The Pulley, 341
The Collar, 341
The Quip, 341
The World, 342

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM COWPER
Walking with God, 639

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
The Destruction of Sennacherib, 774

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
The Higher Pantheism, 1092
Crossing the Bar, 1096

ROBERT BROWNING
The Guardian-Angel, 1107

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
Qui Laborat, Orat, 1241

RUDYARD KIPLING
Recessional, 1341

Love

LATER MIDDLE AGES

Alysoun, 42

ELIZABETHAN

SIR THOMAS WYATT
The Lover Beseecheth His Mistress not to Forget His Steadfast Faith and True Intent, 157

An Earnest Suit to His Unkind Mistress not to Forsake Him, 157
The Lover Complaineth the Unkindness of His Love, 158

EDMUND SPENSER
Prothalamion, 250

SIR WALTER RALEIGH
The Silent Lover, 254

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
The Bargain, 258
Love is Dead, 260

JOHN LYLY
Apelles' Song: From Campaspe, 267

GEORGE PEELE
Song: From The Arraignment of Paris, 268
Harvestmen A-Singing: From The Old Wives' Tale, 268

ROBERT GREENE
Menaphon's Song: From Menaphon, 269
The Shepherd's Wife's Song: From Menaphon, 270

SAMUEL DANIEL
Love is a Sickness, 271

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE
The Passionate Shepherd to His Love, 276

THOMAS CAMPION
My Sweetest Lesbia, 277
When to Her Lute Corinna Sings, 277
Vain Men, Whose Follies Make a God of Love, 278
Never Love Unless You Can, 278
Cherry Ripe, 278

JOHN FLETCHER
Aspatia's Song: From The Maid's Tragedy, 279
Away, Delights: From The Captain, 279
Love's Emblems: From Valentinian, 280

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
Who is Silvia? From The Two Gentlemen of Verona, 288
Tell me, Where is Fancy Bred? From The Merchant of Venice, 288
Sigh no more: From Much Ado about Nothing, 289
O Mistress Mine, where Are You Roaming From Twelfth Night, 289
Come Away, Come Away, Death: From Twelfth Night, 289
Take, O, Take Those Lips Away: From Measure for Measure, 290
Hark, Hark! the Lark: From Cymbeline, 290

BEN JONSON
Song to Celia, 291

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

GEORGE WITHER
Shall I, Wasting in Despair, 315
I Loved a Lass, 315

WILLIAM BROWNE
For Her Gait, if She be Walking, 316

THOMAS CAREW
Song, 316
Persuasions to Joy: A Song, 316
Ingrateful Beauty Threatened, 316
The Unfading Beauty, 317

SIR WILLIAM DAVENANT
Song, 317

EDMUND WALLER
Go, Lovely Rose! 318
On a Girdle, 318
To Phyllis, 318

SIR JOHN SUCKLING
A Doubt of Martyrdom, 319
The Constant Lover, 319
Why so Pale and Wan? 319

RICHARD CRASHAW
Wishes to His Supposed Mistress, 319

RICHARD LOVELACE
To Lucasta, On Going to the Wars, 321
To Althea, from Prison, 321

ANDREW MARVELL
To His Coy Mistress, 323

JOHN DONNE
Song, 327
A Valediction Forbidding Mourning, 327
The Indifferent, 327
Song, 328
The Funeral, 328
The Canonization, 329
Love's Deity, 329

Robert Herrick
Upon the Loss of His Mistresses, 330
Cherry-Ripe, 331
Corinna's Going A-Maying, 331
To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time, 332
To Anthea, Who may Command Him Anything, 332
His Request to Julia, 332
Upon Julia's Clothes, 332
To Silvia, 333
Upon Mistress Susanna Southwell Her Feet, 333
To Electra, 333
Delight in Disorder, 334
The Bracelet to Julia, 334
The Primrose, 334
The Mad Maid's Song, 336
The Night-Piece, to Julia, 336
Dissuasions from Idleness, 337

Abraham Cowley
The Thief, 365

John Dryden
Ah, How Sweet it is to Love! 434

Eighteenth Century

John Gay
Sweet William's Farewell to Black-Eyed Susan, 549
Over the Hills and Far Away: From The Beggar's Opera, 552
Youth's the Season: From The Beggar's Opera, 552
Come, Sweet Lass: From The Beggar's Opera, 552
Love's Resort: From Acis and Galatea, 552
Galatea: From Acis and Galatea, 552

Robert Burns
My Nanie, O, 668
Green Grow the Rashes, O, 668
Will Ye Go to the Indies, My Mary, 669
Of a' the Airts, 669
John Anderson My Jo, 670
Tam Glen, 670
Ae Fond Kiss, 671
Sweet Afton, 671
Ye Flowery Banks, 672
A Red, Red, Rose, 672
Last May a Braw Wooer, 672
Highland Mary, 673
O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast, 674
Mary Morison, 674

William Blake
Song, 675
Song, 676
The Clod and the Pebble, 678
Love's Secret, 679

Early Nineteenth Century

William Wordsworth
She was a Phantom of Delight, 705

Sir Walter Scott
Lochinvar: From Marmion, Canto V, Lady Heron's Song, 766

George Gordon, Lord Byron
When We Two Parted, 774
So We'll Go No More A Roving, 797
Stanzas, 810

Percy Bysshe Shelley
The Indian Serenade, 815
To ———, 830

Later Nineteenth Century

Alfred Tennyson
Come into the Garden, Maud: From Maud, 1088
O That 'Twere Possible: From Maud, 1089

Dante Gabriel Rossetti
The Blessed Damozel, 1255

Algernon Charles Swinburne
A Match, 1277

James Thomson
Mater Tenebrarum, 1316
From Sunday at Hampstead, 1317

George Meredith
Love in the Valley, 1329

Thomas Hardy
At Casterbridge Fair:
The Ballad-Singer, 1335
The Market-Girl, 1336

Alfred Edward Housman
Oh, When I was in Love with You, 1341
White in the Moon the Long Road Lies, 1342

William Butler Yeats
When You are Old, 1346
The Falling of the Leaves, 1346

Friendship

ELIZABETHAN

FRANCIS BEAUMONT
Master Francis Beaumont's Letter to Ben Jonson, 280

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

ROBERT HERRICK
His Prayer to Ben Jonson, 336

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM COWPER
To Mary, 650

ROBERT BURNS
Auld Lang Syne, 670

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
She Walks in Beauty, 774
To Thomas Moore, 797

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED EDWARD HOUSMAN
When I Came Last to Ludlow, 1342

Drinking Songs

ELIZABETHAN

ANONYMOUS
Back and Side, Go Bare, Go Bare, 271

JOHN FLETCHER
Song to Bacchus: From Valentinian, 279
Drink To-day: From The Bloody Brother, 279

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

ROBERT HERRICK
A Lyric to Mirth, 332
A Bacchanalian Verse, 332
To Live Merrily, and to Trust to Good Verses, 333

ABRAHAM COWLEY
Anacreontics: Drinking, 364
The Epicure, 365

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

ROBERT BURNS
The Silver Tassie, 669
Willie Brewed a Peck o' Maut, 671

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
To Thomas Moore, 797

Nature

LATER MIDDLE AGES

EARLY ENGLISH LYRICS
"Sumer is icumen in," 42

ELIZABETHAN

JOHN LYLY
Spring's Welcome: From Campaspe, 267

THOMAS NASH
Spring, 276

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
When Icicles Hang by the Wall: From Love's Labour's Lost, 288
Under the Greenwood Tree: From As You Like It, 289
Where the Bee Sucks: From The Tempest, 290

BEN JONSON
Hymn to Diana: From Cynthia's Revels, 291

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

ANDREW MARVELL
The Garden, 324

ROBERT HERRICK
The Argument of His Book, 330
His Tears to Thamesis, 334
To Daffodils, 335
To Blossoms, 337
The Hag, 338

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

ROBERT BURNS
To a Mountain Daisy, 658
To a Mouse, 658

WILLIAM BLAKE
The Lamb, 676
The Tiger, 678
Night, 678

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Lines Written in Early Spring, 685
The Simplon Pass, 690

To the Cuckoo, 700
To the Daisy, 703
The Solitary Reaper, 705
I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud, 706
To a Skylark, 708

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
Kubla Khan, or A Vision in a Dream, 730

SIR WALTER SCOTT
Brignall Banks: From Rokeby, 769

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
The Cloud, 816
To a Skylark, 817
To Night, 819
A Dirge, 831

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
Break, Break, Break, 1076
The Splendor Falls on Castle Walls: From The Princess, 1076

ROBERT BROWNING
Pippa's Song, 1097

MATTHEW ARNOLD,
Lines written in Kensington Gardens, 1174

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
Ite Domum Saturæ, Venit Hesperus, 1241

JOHN MASEFIELD
Roadways, 1344
The West Wind, 1344
Sea-Fever, 1345

Patriotism and War

ELIZABETHAN

GEORGE PEELE
Farewell to Arms, 268

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

JAMES THOMSON
Rule, Britannia, 557

ROBERT BURNS
Scots, Wha Hae wi' Wallace Bled, 673

WILLIAM COWPER
On the Loss of the Royal George, 648

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Song at the Feast of Brougham Castle, 713

SIR WALTER SCOTT
Prologue to The Lady of the Lake, 767
Boat Song: From The Lady of the Lake, Canto II, 768
Pibroch of Donald Dhu, 770
Bonny Dundee, 771
Here's a Health to King Charles, 772

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
The Charge of the Light Brigade, 1087

Childhood

ELIZABETHAN

ROBERT GREENE
Sephestia's Song to Her Child: From Menaphon, 269

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

ROBERT HERRICK
A Grace for a Child, 335

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM BLAKE
Introduction to Songs of Innocence, 676
Infant Joy, 677
The Little Black Boy, 677
Cradle Song: From Songs of Experience, 678
A Little Boy Lost, 678

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

SIR WALTER SCOTT
Lullaby of an Infant Chief, 770

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING
The Cry of the Children, 1244

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
A Child's Future, 1285

Reflection

LATER MIDDLE AGES

GEOFFREY CHAUCER
The Minor Poems:

Truth, 99
Gentilesse, 99
The Compleint of Chaucer to His Empty Purse, 100

ELIZABETHAN

SIR THOMAS WYATT
Of the Mean and Sure Estate, 158

HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY
Prisoned in Windsor, He Recounteth His Pleasure There Passed, 160
The Means to Attain Happy Life. 161

SIR WALTER RALEIGH
The Lie, 255

THOMAS SACKVILLE, LORD BUCKHURST
Complaint of the Duke of Buckingham, 265

SIR EDWARD DYER
My Mind to Me a Kingdom is, 266

ROBERT GREENE
Song: From The Farewell to Folly, 268

ANONYMOUS
Crabbed Age and Youth: From The Passionate Pilgrim, 270
Hey Nonny No! 270

SAMUEL DANIEL
To the Lady Margaret, Countess of Cumberland, 271

THOMAS CAMPION
Whether Men do Laugh or Weep, 277
Chance and Change, 278

JOHN FLETCHER
Melancholy: From The Nice Valour, 279
Invocation to Sleep: From Valentinian, 279
Weep no More: From The Queen of Corinth, 280

FRANCIS BEAUMONT
On the Tombs in Westminster Abbey, 280

JOHN WEBSTER
Vanitas Vanitatum, 281

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
Fear no More the Heat o' the Sun: From Cymbeline, 290
Full Fathom Five Thy Father Lies: From The Tempest, 290

BEN JONSON
Simplex Munditiis: From Epicœne, 291
A Farewell to the World, 294

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

SIR WILLIAM DAVENANT
To a Mistress Dying, 317

EDMUND WALLER
Old Age, 318

JOHN DONNE
Death, 328

ROBERT HERRICK
When He Would Have His Verses Read, 330
To Music, to Becalm His Fever, 333
The Country Life, 335
The Hock Cart; or, Harvest Home, 336
His Winding-Sheet, 338
His Return to London, 339
On Himself, 340
To His Book, 340

ABRAHAM COWLEY
The Wish, 365
A Supplication, 366

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM COWPER
On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture out of Norfolk, 648
The Castaway, 651

ROBERT BURNS
Epistle to J. Lapraik, 659
Is There for Honest Poverty, 674

WILLIAM BLAKE
Mad Song, 675
To the Muses, 676
A Cradle Song, 677
Stanzas from Milton, 679

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Expostulation and Reply, 686
The Tables Turned, 686
My Heart Leaps Up, 699
Song at the Feast of Brougham Castle, 713

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
Youth and Age, 749
Work Without Hope, 749

GEORGE GORDON, LORD BYRON
Stanzas for Music, 775
On This Day I Complete My Thirty-Sixth Year, 810

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
Hymn to Intellectual Beauty, 812
Stanzas Written in Dejection near Naples, 813
Time, 819
Mutability, 819
The Final Chorus from Hellas, 828
Lines: When the Lamp is Shattered, 830

JOHN KEATS
Robin Hood, 833
Stanzas, 833
Lines on the Mermaid Tavern, 834
Fancy, 834

THOMAS HOOD
The Bridge of Sighs, 869
The Song of the Shirt, 870

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

ALFRED TENNYSON
The Lotos-Eaters, 1064
Tears, Idle Tears: From The Princess, 1076
Milton, 1090

ROBERT BROWNING
Prospice, 1125
Epilogue, 1126

MATTHEW ARNOLD
Empedocles on Etna: Empedocles' Song, 1168
Morality, 1173
Isolation, 1180
Dover Beach, 1181

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
Say Not the Struggle Nought Availeth, 1239
Qua Cursum Ventus, 1240
Hope Evermore and Believe, 1240
Life is Struggle, 1242
In a London Square, 1242
All is Well, 1242

EMILY BRONTE
Stanzas, 1247
The Old Stoic, 1247
Last Lines, 1247

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI
The Ballad of Dead Ladies: From François Villon, 1259
The Cloud Confines, 1263

WILLIAM MORRIS
An Apology: Prologue to The Earthly Paradise, 1271
L'Envoi to The Earthly Paradise, 1272

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
Choruses from Atalanta in Calydon, 1274
Hymn to Proserpine, 1275
A Ballad of Burdens, 1277
The Garden of Proserpine, 1279
To Walt Whitman in America, 1282
A Ballad of François Villon, 1284

JAMES THOMSON
From The City of Dreadful Night, 1317

FRANCIS THOMPSON
Envoy, 1321

GEORGE MEREDITH
A Stave of Roving Tim, 1323

THOMAS HARDY
Her Initials, 1333
Rome, 1334
Lausanne, 1334
An August Midnight, 1334
A Christmas Ghost-Story, 1335
"I Said to Love," 1335
To Life, 1335
At Casterbridge Fair:
Former Beauties, 1336
After the Fair, 1337

RUDYARD KIPLING
L'Envoi, 1341

ALFRED EDWARD HOUSMAN
Into My Heart an Air that Kills, 1342
Think No More, Lad; Laugh, Be Jolly, 1342
The Carpenter's Son, 1342

JOHN MASEFIELD
A Consecration, 1343
Cargoes, 1343
On Growing Old, 1345

WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS
The Voice, 1346
The Song of the Happy Shepherd, 1346

OTHER REFLECTIVE POEMS

Eighteenth Century

Alexander Pope
An Essay on Man. Of the Nature and State of Man, with Respect to the Universe, 535
Moral Essays: Of the Use of Riches, 538

James Thomson
The Seasons: Winter, 553

Oliver Goldsmith
The Deserted Village, 612

William Cowper
The Task: Book IV, The Winter Evening, 639

Robert Burns
The Cotter's Saturday Night, 655

Early Nineteenth Century

William Wordsworth
Lines Composed a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey, on Revisiting the Banks of the Wye during a Tour July 13, 1798, 687
Resolution and Independence, 700
Elegiac Stanzas, 706
Character of the Happy Warrior, 708
Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty, 717

Samuel Taylor Coleridge
Frost at Midnight, 739

George Gordon, Lord Byron
Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, 775

Later Nineteenth Century

Alfred Tennyson
The Poet, 1054
The Palace of Art, 1060

Robert Browning
The Bishop Orders His Tomb at Saint Praxed's Church, 1101
Fra Lippo Lippi, 1117
Andrea del Sarto, 1122

Matthew Arnold
Self-Dependence, 1172
The Buried Life, 1173
The Future, 1175
The Scholar-Gipsy, 1176

Edward Fitzgerald
Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám of Naishápúr 1248

Algernon Charles Swinburne
Hertha, 1280

George Meredith
Hard Weather, 1324

SATIRE

The satire was originally a poem holding up to ridicule and condemnation follies and vices, private or public. In modern literature satire is a mood rather than a specific form.

Elizabethan

George Gascoigne
Piers Ploughman: From The Steel Glass, 266

Seventeenth Century

John Dryden
Mac Flecknoe, 428

Eighteenth Century

Jonathan Swift
Gulliver's Travels: A Voyage to Lilliput, 462
An Argument Against Abolishing Christianity, 489
A Modest Proposal, 495

Alexander Pope
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, 541

John Gay
From Trivia, or the Art of Walking the Streets of London, 547
Woman's Chiefest Duty: From Achilles, 552

Oliver Goldsmith
An Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog, 618
Stanzas on Woman, 618

Later Nineteenth Century

Arthur Hugh Clough
From Dipsychus, 1239
The Latest Decalogue, 1240

THE EPIGRAM

The epigram is a condensed statement of fact or opinion, usually in four lines.

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

JOHN DRYDEN
Epigram on Milton, 434

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR
On His Seventy-Fifth Birthday, 856

THE ESSAY

The essay is a form of prose which, like the lyric, is of wide and various application. Originally applied by Bacon to what he called "a set of dispersed meditations," as suggestive of their tentative character, it has been used to designate writings as different as Lamb's whimsical personalities, and Macaulay's brief biographies. Certain types of the essay may be distinguished as Personal or Familiar, Reflective or Philosophical, Historical, or as Criticism of Literature and Art, and Criticism of Life.

Personal or Familiar

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

ABRAHAM COWLEY
Of Myself, 363

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

JOSEPH ADDISON and RICHARD STEELE
Essays from The Tatler:
On Duelling, 500
The Trumpet Club, 501
Character of the Upholsterer, 503
Character of Sir Timothy Tittle, 504
Early Rising, 506
Essays from The Spectator:
The Uses of the Spectator, 508
Signior Nicolini and the Lions, 509
Westminster Abbey, 511
The Vision of Mirzah, 512
Dissection of a Beau's Head, 514
Dissection of a Coquette's Heart, 516
On Waste of Time, 517

SAMUEL JOHNSON
Essays from The Rambler:
The Modern Novel, 580
The Private Life of an Author, 582
Crabbed Age and Youth, 584
The Busy Life of a Young Lady, 586
Essays from The Idler:
The Decay of Friendship, 588

OLIVER GOLDSMITH
The Citizen of the World.
Letter XXI: At the Play-house, 618
Letter LI: The Bookseller, 621
Letter LIV: The Character of Beau Tibbs, 622
Letter LV: Beau Tibbs at Home, 623
Letter LXXI: Beau Tibbs at Vauxhall, 625
Letter LXXVII: The London Shop-Keeper, 627

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

CHARLES LAMB
Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago, 872
Mrs. Battle's Opinions on Whist, 878
Imperfect Sympathies, 882
Dream Children: A Reverie, 885
A Dissertation upon Roast Pig, 887
In Praise of Chimney-Sweepers, 891
Poor Relations, 894
A Character of the Late Elia, 897

WILLIAM HAZLITT
My First Acquaintance with Poets, 900
On Going a Journey, 909
The Fight, 914
A Farewell to Essay-Writing, 922

THOMAS DE QUINCEY
Suspiria de Profundis: Levana and Our Ladies of Sorrow, 927
The English Mail Coach, 930

Reflective or Philosophical

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

FRANCIS BACON
Essays or Counsels Civil and Moral:
Of Truth, 299
Of Death, 300
Of Adversity, 300
Of Parents and Children, 301
Of Marriage and Single Life, 302
Of Love, 302
Of Great Place, 303
Of Boldness, 304
Of Superstition, 305
Of Travel, 306

Of Wisdom for a Man's Self, 307
Of Friendship, 307
Of Expense, 310
Of Discourse, 311
Of Custom and Education, 312
Of Youth and Age, 312
Of Negotiating, 313
Of Studies, 314

SIR THOMAS BROWNE
From Religio Medici, 347

Criticism of Literature and Art

ELIZABETHAN

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
From The Defense of Poetry, 260

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

JOHN DRYDEN
From An Essay of Dramatic Poesy, 435

EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH
Preface to the Lyrical Ballads, 718

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE
Biographia Literaria: Chapters X, XIV, XVII, XVIII, 749

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY
Milton, 1002
Francis Bacon, 1026

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

JOHN RUSKIN
The Stones of Venice, Vol. II, Chapter VI, 1127

MATTHEW ARNOLD
Essay on Wordsworth, 1206

WALTER PATER
The Renaissance — Sandro Botticelli, 1287

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
A Gossip on Romance, 1299

Criticism of Life

ELIZABETHAN

ROGER ASCHAM
Introduction to Toxophilus, 162

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

JONATHAN SWIFT
An Argument Against Abolishing Christianity, 489
A Modest Proposal, 495

EDMUND BURKE
From Reflections on the Revolution in France, 629

LATER NINETEENTH CENTURY

THOMAS CARLYLE
Past and Present:
Book III, Chapters XII, XIII; Book IV, Chapter I, 966

JOHN STUART MILL
On Liberty, 981

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN
From Apologia Pro Vita Sua, 1039
The Idea of a University — Discourse V: Liberal Knowledge Its Own End, 1044

JOHN RUSKIN
The Stones of Venice, Vol. II, Chapter VI, 1127
Unto This Last, Essay I, 1152
Fors Clavigera, Letter 5, 1159

MATTHEW ARNOLD
Preface to Essays in Criticism — First Series, 1183
The Function of Criticism at the Present Time, 1185
Sweetness and Light, 1198

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY
On the Advisableness of Improving Natural Knowledge, 1220
A Liberal Education; and Where to Find It, 1227
On the Physical Basis of Life, 1230

WALTER PATER
Studies in the History of the Renaissance — Conclusion, 1286

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
The Lantern-Bearers, 1304
Pulvis et Umbra, 1309
A Christmas Sermon, 1312

THE DIALOGUE

The dialogue was a form of exposition and argument, largely used by Greek and Roman writers, the dialogues of Plato being most famous. It is only occasionally employed in modern times. Landor's Imaginary Conversations are in part directed to developing ideas and opinions; in part to revealing character.

Early Nineteenth Century

Walter Savage Landor
Imaginary Conversations:
Marcellus and Hannibal, 856
Leofric and Godiva, 857
Henry VIII and Anne Boleyn, 860
Bossuet and the Duchess de Fontanges, 862
The Empress Catharine and Princess Dashkof, 866

THE ORATION

The oration was a classic form of great importance in the days of Athens and Republican Rome. British Parliamentary institutions also fostered a type of political argument intended for oral delivery. In the debates of the Long Parliament at the time of the Civil War, oratory was a great public weapon. Milton in approaching Parliament on the subject of a free press modeled his address on the classic orations of Isocrates. The eighteenth and nineteenth centuries likewise furnished many examples of British eloquence of which Burke was the accepted master.

Seventeenth Century

John Milton
Areopagitica, 399

Eighteenth Century

Edmund Burke
From The Impeachment of Warren Hastings, Esq., 635

THE SERMON

Seventeenth Century

Jeremy Taylor
From Of Slavery and Pains Eternal, 359

BIOGRAPHY AND AUTOBIOGRAPHY

The biography was written in Greece and Rome largely for purposes of commemoration of, or inspiration to, civic virtue. In the Renaissance it became important as a record of experience, and this function has increased its interest and value until at present it is one of the most popular forms of literature. Realism and frankness of portrayal are necessary elements, in both of which Boswell's Johnson set a standard. Autobiography likewise owes its value to these qualities, of which Pepys' Diary is a notable instance.

Seventeenth Century

Thomas Fuller
The Life of Sir Francis Drake, 356

Samuel Pepys
From The Diary of Samuel Pepys, 423

John Bunyan
From Grace Abounding, 444

Eighteenth Century

James Boswell
From The Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D., 590

Early Nineteenth Century

William Wordsworth
The Prelude:
From Book First: Childhood and Schooltime, 697
From Book Ninth: Residence in France, 697

Later Nineteenth Century

Thomas Carlyle
Sartor Resartus:
Book II, Chapters VII, VIII, IX; Book III, Chapter VIII, 948

John Henry Newman
From Apologia pro Vita Sua, 1039

Thomas Henry Huxley
Autobiography, 1215

Walter Pater
The Child in the House, 1291

THE DRAMA AND THE NOVEL

Two important longer forms of literature, which cannot properly be represented in this work, are the drama and the novel.

The drama originated in religious ceremonies among primitive peoples, and achieved distinction in Athens in the fifth century B.C. and later in Rome. The drama in the Middle Age likewise owed its revival to religious influences, and scenes from the Bible, or the lives of the saints, were acted in the churches on appropriate days. These were later taken over by the guilds of artisans, and performed out of doors on holidays, upon movable stages or pageants. Gradually, companies of professional actors were formed who acted in the courtyards of inns, or other public places. Thus, the popular drama was secularized. At the same time a revival of the classical drama was taking place in schools and universities. The first theater was built in London in 1576. Others rapidly followed, and the drama written in blank verse became the leading form of popular literature in the early seventeenth century. With this greatest period of the flourishing of the drama are connected the names of Marlowe, Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, Webster, and others. The theaters were closed by the Puritans in 1642, but reopened after the Restoration, when Dryden and Congreve became the leading dramatists. In the nineteenth century, determined efforts were made to revive the poetic drama, to which Byron, Shelley, Tennyson, and Browning contributed. Toward the close of the century, the realistic prose drama became a vehicle for social criticism in the hands of Mr. G. B. Shaw, Mr. John Galsworthy, and others.

A collection of plays illustrating fully the progress of the drama from the Middle Ages to the present is Matthews and Lieder, The Chief British Dramatists.

The novel is a long narrative in prose, partaking of the qualities of the epic, the romance, the tale, and, particularly in its modern form, of the biography. Features of the novel may also be attributed to the influence of the drama, the essay, and the lyric. In the Elizabethan period, large numbers of stories were translated and adapted, one of them furnishing the germ of John Lyly's Euphues, a didactic narrative, accompanied by essays, which in the second part, Euphues and His England, becomes a sort of novel of manners. Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia shows the influence of the epic, through the Greek romance, and the romance of chivalry. A novel by Thomas Nash, called The Unfortunate Traveller, imitated in England a type of novel destined to be very popular, the picaresque romance, in which the hero of the chivalric romance, intent on idealistic adventure, is replaced by the picaro, or rogue, whose motive is the realistic one of cheating his way through the world.

The interest in human experience in the late seventeenth century showed itself in the popularity of biography, and this speedily became fiction. Defoe's novels, particularly Robinson Crusoe, are excellent examples of this process. Thenceforth the English novel may be described as fictional biography or autobiography. Such is the character of the eighteenth-century novels by Richardson, Fielding, Smollett, and Sterne. The didactic element appears strongly in fiction at the close of the eighteenth century, and at the same time the revival of romantic feeling shows itself in the novel dealing with the past.

In the fiction of the nineteenth century, the historical novel is important. From the time of Sir Walter Scott, nearly every great novelist has contributed to this type. The industrial and social problems of the century are reflected in the novels of Charles Dickens and Charles Kingsley. At the beginning of the century, we have admirable pictures of English manners in the novels of Jane Austen; and this realistic strain remains one of the chief qualities of nineteenth-century fiction, in Thackeray and Trollope. The philosophical element of fiction, reflecting the influence of science, becomes stronger in the work of George Eliot, George Meredith, and Thomas Hardy. Toward the close of the century, a revival of romanticism is seen in the work of Stevenson, Kipling, and Joseph Conrad.

THE ANGLO-SAXON PERIOD

BRITISH POETRY AND PROSE

THE ANGLO-SAXON PERIOD

English literature first began to be when the Angles and Saxons, who had won for themselves a new home in the island of Britain, were converted to Christianity and learned from the Christian missionaries the art of writing. It flourished vigorously for some four hundred years, and then with the Norman Conquest suffered a long period of almost total eclipse, during which the language itself underwent such radical changes that this earlier literature became unintelligible to Englishmen. When in the fourteenth century English again became the vehicle of a fine literature, it was to French and Italian models that writers turned for inspiration. But cut off as it is from the continuous tradition of our later literature, the literature of Anglo-Saxon England is an integral part of the great heritage of English-speaking people. It shows the same qualities of robust vigor and bold imagination which appear in all later English writers who are in their temper most completely English. Since the time of Tennyson and William Morris it has begun to make its influence felt upon modern literature.

When Julius Cæsar invaded Britain in 55 B.C., he found there a Celtic people who spoke a language similar to the Gaelic of Ireland and to the Celtic speech which still survives in parts of Wales and in the Highlands of Scotland. A century later Britain became a province of the Roman Empire; and its people gradually adopted the civilization of Rome and, among the town-dwellers at least, the Latin language. But this Celto-Roman civilization was short-lived. It was destroyed by the Germanic tribes of Angles and Saxons who shortly after the middle of the fifth century began to cross the North Sea, first as piratical raiders, later as ruthless conquerors. Before the year 600, these invading tribes possessed the whole island except the mountainous country which fringes it on the West and North. It was they who gave to their new home the name "Englalond," land of the Angles; and their speech, which they called "Englisc," a dialect of Low German closely related to the language still spoken in the islands off the northern coast of Holland, became what we call the English language.

The invading Angles and Saxons brought with them their own rude but not ignoble culture which had been affected hardly at all by the civilization of Rome. Something of their way of life may be gathered from the manners and customs, and the ideals of conduct, poetically depicted in the story of Beowulf. Each petty tribe had its "king" who was surrounded by his faithful company of warlike followers, to whom he distributed in his great "mead-hall" the plunder won in battle. They brought also from their continental home the rudiments of our earliest literature. At each tribal court was to be found the "scop" who put into poetic form, and sang to the accompaniment of his harp, the exploits of his lord or the heroic legends of his tribe; and these epic lays were spread abroad by the gleeman, whose profession it was to know them and recite them to an assembled company. It is from the matter of such lays as these, brought across the seas by the invading tribes, that a more sophisticated poet later put together his epic story of Beowulf. We have in Beowulf echoes of other heroic lays; and there can be no doubt that still others have perished without leaving a trace.

In 597, a Roman missionary named Augustine, sent by Pope Gregory the Great, landed in Kent; and shortly afterwards missionaries from Ireland brought the Christian religion to northern England. The Angles and Saxons were ready converts, and within a century from the landing of Augustine the religion of the pagan North had yielded to the Cross, and the pagan scop had given place to the Christian poet.

With the Christian religion came the rich civilization of Latin Christianity. Monasteries were established all over the country, which became centers of learning, where the Latin classics as well as the writings of the Fathers were copied and read. This Christian civilization of Anglo-Saxon England is vividly described for us in The Ecclesiastical History of the English People, written in Latin prose by the Venerable Bede (673–735), a scholarly monk of the monastery at Jarrow in Northumbria. It is Bede who has preserved the record of the first English poet whose name has come down to us, Caedmon, a lay brother of the monastery of Whitby, who put into the alliterating measure of Beowulf poetical paraphrases of portions of the Bible. Of Caedmon's poetry all but a short hymn quoted by Bede has perished. We have similar paraphrases of parts of Genesis and Exodus and Daniel which were formerly believed to be by Caedmon, and are still called "Caedmonian" though now believed to be of later date. In them the Biblical stories are freely retold with much of the vigor and the delight in battle which characterize Beowulf.

The Christian poetry of Anglo-Saxon England is at its best in the writings of Cynewulf and his imitators. Of Cynewulf's life we know nothing with certainty. He probably lived in Northumbria and wrote about the middle of the eighth century. Four poems are signed in riddling fashion with his name — two legends of Christian saints, a short poem called The Fates of the Apostles, and the Christ, a mystic rhapsody, done with profound religious fervor and vivid poetic power, on Christ's ascension and His coming again with power to judge the world. Other poems which may be by Cynewulf, or by an imitator of his art, are the Andreas, which deals with the marvelous missionary adventures of St. Andrew the Apostle, and the Phœnix, a very lovely allegory of the resurrection. To the same general school of Northumbrian poetry belong the more lyric, elegiac poems, The Wanderer and The Seafarer.

The literary culture of Northumbria, and the poetry fostered by it, were suddenly crushed by the Danish invasions which began before the end of the eighth century. It was in Wessex, south of the valley of the Thames, that English literature next found a home. Here Alfred the Great, King of the West-Saxons from 871 to 901, succeeded in checking the Danes and in establishing peace and prosperity. Alfred was a patron of learning and a lover of literature. He collected and preserved the poetry of Northumbria, which has in consequence survived to us only in a West-Saxon form, and himself translated or caused to be translated into English various Latin writings — among them Bede's Ecclesiastical History — which he thought most useful to the intellectual life of his people. He also began the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, which was continued year by year for a century after his death. Into it were incorporated two fine historical poems, The Battle of Brunnanburh (937) and The Battle of Maldon (991), which mark the end of Anglo-Saxon poetry. With the eloquent homilies of Aelfric (about 1000) ends the earliest period of English literature; for even before the Norman Conquest of 1066 French had become the polite language of England, and consequently the medium of all literary composition which did not prefer the greater dignity of Latin.

For the general history of the period one may read Chapter I of Green's Short History of the English People; for an account of the literature, Volume I of The Cambridge History of English Literature and Stopford Brooke's English Literature from the Beginning to the Norman Conquest (Macmillan) are the best guides. The student who wishes to extend beyond the selections contained in the present volume his acquaintance with Old English literature should use J. D. Spaeth's Old English Poetry (Princeton University Press), Cook and Tinker's Select Translations from Old English Prose (Ginn), and C. W. Kennedy's The Poems of Cynewulf and The Poems of Caedmon (Dutton).

BEOWULF

Modern Version by J. Duncan Spaeth[1]

In the British Museum is preserved a manuscript written about the year 1000 A.D. which contains the Old English epic of Beowulf. To the lucky survival of this precious volume we owe our knowledge of the heroic poem which stands at the very beginning of English literature. But the poem itself is older than the one surviving copy of it. It was probably composed somewhere about the year 750 A.D. in the far north of England. The name and identity of its author are hopelessly lost. The material which this nameless author put into its present poetic form is still older — a body of oral lays brought over from the Continent by the Angles and Saxons when they settled in the island of Britain. These lays embodied a certain amount of historic fact — Hygelac, uncle of Beowulf and his predecessor as king of the Geats, is an historic chieftain who died about 520 A.D. But if the hero, Beowulf, is to some extent an historic personage, the greater part of his heroic exploits have been built up out of legend and myth. One of the Old Norse sagas, the Grettis Saga, contains what is clearly a variant version of Beowulf's fight with Grendel's mother below the waters of the haunted mere. The scene of the poem is in the regions of the Baltic Sea, modern Denmark and southern Sweden; England is never mentioned. Though the English poet has supplied a certain amount of Christian comment, the story itself and all its persons are purely pagan. It is the pagan divinity Wyrd, or Destiny, who shapes their ends. The manners and customs portrayed belong also to the pagan North. Pagan also are the qualities of character which the poem extols — courage, loyalty, generosity. To these fine and abiding virtues the Christian tradition has taught us to add another, the quality of modesty. Beowulf is unashamedly boastful.

The story of the poem falls into three episodes: Beowulf's fight with Grendel, the monster who has been ravaging the great mead-hall of Hrothgar, king of the Scyldings; the fight with Grendel's mother who has sought to avenge her son; finally, after the lapse of fifty years, the fight of the aged Beowulf with the fire-breathing dragon who has been laying waste the kingdom of which Beowulf is now king.

1 By the kind permission of Professor Spaeth and of the Princeton University Press this spirited version of Beowulf, and those of the Wanderer and of the Battle of Maldon which follow, are reprinted from Professor Spaeth's volume of Old English Poetry, Princeton, 1921.

The poem is written in that primitive form of English, spoken and written before the Norman Conquest, which we call Old English or Anglo-Saxon. Though actually our own speech in an earlier form, it is so unlike modern English that it presents all the difficulties of a foreign language; so that most modern readers must be content to know it only in translation. In the original the first five lines of the poem run thus:

Hwæt! we Gar-Dena in gear-dagum þeod cyninga þrym gefrunon, hu þa æþelingas ellen fremedon.
Oft Scyld Scefing sceaþena þreatum, monegum mægþum meodo-setla ofteah.

The metrical form, freely reproduced in Professor Spaeth's rendering, consists of a line of four feet. Each foot contains a heavily stressed syllable and a varying number of unstressed syllables. The line is divided into halves by a heavy cæsural pause after the second foot. The two halves of the line are bound together by alliteration of stressed syllables — normally the first, second, and third, or merely the first and third. There is no use of rhyme. A characteristic feature of Old English poetry is the device of repetition in parallel clauses. As in the Hebrew poetry of the Psalms, an idea is repeated, sometimes in a series of striking metaphors, a line or half-line echoing that which precedes it.

The poem has been many times translated. An excellent translation of the entire text into modern English prose is that of C. B. Tinker (Henry Holt and Co.). The version by J. D. Spaeth printed here is condensed to about two thirds of the original length by the omission of passages not essential to the story. The passages omitted are briefly summarized in prose. The result of this condensation is a narrative considerably more unified than the original. A good edition of the original text is that of F. Klaeber, Boston, 1922.

BEOWULF

The Myth of the Sheaf-Child[1]

List to an old-time lay of the Spear-Danes,
Full of the prowess of famous kings,
Deeds of renown that were done by the heroes;
Scyld the Sheaf-Child from scourging foemen,
From raiders a-many their mead-halls wrested.
He lived to be feared, though first as a waif,
Puny and frail he was found on the shore.
He grew to be great, and was girt with power
Till the border-tribes all obeyed his rule,
And sea-folk hardy that sit by the whale-path
Gave him tribute, a good king was he.
Many years after, an heir was born to him,
A goodly youth, whom God had sent
To stay and support his people in need.
(Long time leaderless living in woe,
The sorrow they suffered He saw full well.)
The Lord of Glory did lend him honor,
Beowulf's[2] fame afar was borne,
Son of old Scyld in the Scandian lands.
A youthful heir must be open-handed,
Furnish the friends of his father with plenty,
That thus in his age, in the hour of battle,
Willing comrades may crowd around him
Eager and true. In every tribe
Honorable deeds shall adorn an earl.
The aged Scyld, when his hour had come,
Famous and praised, departed to God.
His faithful comrades carried him down
To the brink of the sea, as himself had bidden,
The Scyldings' friend, before he fell silent,
Their lord beloved who long had ruled them.
Out in the bay a boat was waiting
Coated with ice, 'twas the king's own barge.
They lifted aboard their bracelet-bestower,
And down on the deck their dear lord laid,
Hard by the mast. Heaped-up treasure
Gathered from far they gave him along.
Never was ship more nobly laden
With wondrous weapons and warlike gear.
Swords and corselets covered his breast,
Floating riches to ride afar with him
Out o'er the waves at the will of the sea.
No less they dowered their lord with treasure,
Things of price, than those who at first
Had launched him forth as a little child
Alone on the deep to drift o'er the billows.
They gave him to boot a gilded banner,
High o'er his head they hung it aloft.
Then set him adrift, let the surges bear him.
Sad were their hearts, their spirits mournful;
Man hath not heard, no mortal can say
Who found that barge's floating burden.

1 Scyld, the "Sheaf-Child," is the mythical ancestor of Hrothgar, King of the Scyldings, or Spear-Danes.

2 Not the hero of the poem, but another of the same name, an ancestor of King Hrothgar.

I

The Line of the Danish Kings and the Building of Heorot

Now Beowulf was king in the burgs of the Scyldings, Famed among folk. (His father had left
The land of the living.) From his loins was sprung Healfdene the royal, who ruled to old age,
Gray and battlegrim, the bold-hearted Scyldings.
Children four to this chief of the people
Woke unto life, one after another;
Heorogar and Hrothgar, and Halga the brave,
And winsome Sigeneow, a Scylfing she wedded;
Saewela's queen they say she became.
To Hrothgar was given such glory in battle,
Such fame he won, that his faithful band
Of youthful warriors waxed amain.
So great had grown his guard of kinsmen,
That it came in his mind to call on his people
To build a mead-hall, mightier far
Than any e'er seen by the sons of men,
Wherein to bestow upon old and young,
Gifts and rewards, as God vouchsafed them,
Save folk-share lands and freemen's lives.
Far and wide the work was published;
Many a tribe, the mid-earth round,
Helped to fashion the folk-stead fair.
With speed they built it, and soon 'twas finished,
Greatest of halls. Heorot[1] he named it,
Whose word was law o'er lands afar;
Nor failed in his promise, but freely dealt
Gifts at the feast. The fair hall towered
Wide-gabled and high, awaiting its doom,
The sweep of fire; not far was the time
That ancient feuds should open afresh,
And sword-hate sunder sons from fathers.

In the darkness dwelt a demon-sprite
Whose heart was filled with fury and hate,
When he heard each night the noise of revel
Loud in the hall, laughter and song.
To the sound of the harp the singer chanted
Lays he had learned, of long ago;
How the Almighty had made the earth,
Wonder-bright lands, washed by the ocean;
How he set, triumphant, sun and moon
To lighten all men that live on the earth.
He brightened the land with leaves and branches;
Life he created for every being,
Each in its kind, that moves upon earth.
So, happy in hall, the heroes lived,
Wanting naught, till one began
To work them woe, a wicked fiend.
The demon grim was Grendel called,
March-stalker huge, the moors he roamed.
The joyless creature had kept long time
The lonely fen, the lairs of monsters,
Cast out from men, an exile accurst.
On offspring of Cain, the killing of Abel
Was justly avenged by the Judge Eternal.
Nought gained by the feud the faithless murderer;[1]
He was banished unblest from abode of men.
And hence arose the host of miscreants,
Monsters and elves and eldritch sprites,
Warlocks and giants, that warred against God;
Jotuns and goblins; He gave them their due.

1 The word Heorot means hart, stag.

II

The Ravaging of Heorot Hall by the Monster Grendel

When night had fallen, the fiend crept near
To the lofty hall, to learn how the Danes
In Heorot fared, when the feasting was done.
The aethelings[2] all within he saw Asleep after revel, not recking of danger,
And free from care. The fiend accurst,
Grim and greedy, his grip made ready;
Snatched in their sleep, with savage fury,
Thirty warriors; away he sprang
Proud of his prey, to repair to his home,
His blood-dripping booty to bring to his lair.
At early dawn, when day-break came,
The vengeance of Grendel was revealed to all;
Their wails after wassail were widely heard,
Their morning-woe. The mighty ruler,
The aetheling brave, sat bowed with grief.
The fate of his followers filled him with sorrow,
When they traced the tracks of the treacherous foe,
Fiend accurst. Too fierce was that onset,
Too loathsome and long, nor left them respite.
The very next night, anew he began
To maim and to murder, nor was minded to slacken
His fury of hate, too hardened in crime.
'Twas easy to find then earls who preferred
A room elsewhere, for rest at night,
A bed in the bowers, when they brought this news

1 i. e. Cain. 2 princes.

Of the hall-foe's hate; and henceforth all
Who escaped the demon, kept distance safe.

So Grendel wrongfully ruled the hall,
One against all till empty stood
That lordly mansion, and long remained so.
For the space of twelve winters the Scyldings' Friend [1]
Bore in his breast the brunt of this sorrow, Measureless woe. In mournful lays
The tale became known; 'twas told abroad
In gleemen's songs, how Grendel had warred
Long against Hrothgar, and wreaked his hate
With murderous fury through many a year,
Refusing to end the feud perpetual,
Or decently deal with the Danes in parley,
Take their tribute for treaty of peace;
Nor could their leaders look to receive
Pay from his hands for the harm that he wrought.
The fell destroyer kept feeding his rage
On young and old. So all night long
He prowled o'er the fen and surprised his victims,
Death-shadow dark. (The dusky realms
Where the hell-runes haunt are hidden from men.)
So the exiled roamer his raids continued;
Wrong upon wrong in his wrath he heaped.
In midnights dark he dwelt alone
'Mongst Heorot's trophies and treasures rich.
Great was the grief of the gold-friend of Scyldings,
Vexed was his mood that he might not visit
His goodly throne, his gift-seat proud,
Deprived of joy by the judgment of God.
Many the wise men that met to discover
Ways of escape from the scourge of affliction.
Often they came for counsel together;
Often at heathen altars they made
Sacrifice-offerings, beseeching their idols
To send them deliverance from assault of the foe.
Such was their practice, they prayed to the Devil;
The hope of the heathen on hell was fixed,
The mood of their mind. Their Maker they knew not,
The righteous Judge and Ruler on high.
The Wielder of Glory they worshipped not,
The Warden of Heaven. Woe be to him
Whose soul is doomed through spite and envy,
In utter despair and agony hopeless
Forever to burn. But blessed is he Who, after this life, the Lord shall seek,
Eager for peace in the arms of the Father.

1 Hrothgar.

III

The Voyage of Beowulf to the Hall of Hrothgar

Thus boiled with care the breast of Hrothgar;
Ceaselessly sorrowed the son of Healfdene,
None of his chieftains might change his lot.
Too fell was the foe that afflicted the people
With wrongs unnumbered, and nightly horrors.
Then heard in his home king Hygelac's thane,[1]
The dauntless Jute,[2] of the doings of Grendel.
In strength he outstripped the strongest of men
That dwell in the earth in the days of this life.
Gallant and bold, he gave command
To get him a boat, a good wave-skimmer.
O'er the swan-road, he said, he would seek the king
Noble and famous, who needed men.
Though dear to his kin, they discouraged him not;
The prudent in counsel praised the adventure,
Whetted his valor, awaiting good omens.

So Beowulf chose from the band of the Jutes
Heroes brave, the best he could find;
He with fourteen followers hardy,
Went to embark; he was wise in seamanship,
Showed them the landmarks, leading the way.
Soon they descried their craft in the water,
At the foot of the cliff. Then climbed aboard
The chosen troop; the tide was churning
Sea against sand; they stowed away
In the hold of the ship their shining armor,
War-gear and weapons; the warriors launched
Their well-braced boat on her welcome voyage.

Swift o'er the waves with a wind that favored,
Foam on her breast, like a bird she flew;
A day and a night they drove to seaward,
Cut the waves with the curving prow,
Till the seamen that sailed her sighted the land,
Shining cliffs and coast-wise hills,
Headlands bold. The harbor opened,
Their cruise was ended. Then quickly the sailors,

1 Beowulf.
2 In the original, Geat. This tribe of Geats, to which Beowulf belonged, lived somewhere on the shores of the Baltic, possibly in Jutland, possibly in southern Sweden. Professor Spaeth's translation assumes that it is identical with the Jutes.

The crew of Weder-folk, clambered ashore,
Moored their craft with clank of chain-mail,
And goodly war-gear. God they thanked
That their way was smooth o'er the surging waves.

High on the shore, the Scylding coast-guard
Saw from the cliff where he kept his watch,
Glittering shields o'er the gang-plank carried,
Polished weapons: it puzzled him sore,
He wondered in mind who the men might be.
Down to the strand on his steed came riding
Hrothgar's thane, with threatening arm
Shook his war-spear and shouted this challenge:
"Who are ye, men, all mailed and harnessed,
That brought yon ship o'er the broad seaways,
And hither have come across the water,
To land on our shores. Long have I stood
As coast-guard here, and kept my sea-watch,
Lest harrying foe with hostile fleet
Should dare to damage our Danish[1] land.
Armed men never from overseas came
More openly hither. But how do ye know
That law of the land doth give ye leave
To come thus near. I never have seen
Statelier earl upon earth than him, —
Yon hero in harness. No house-carl he,
In lordly array, if looks speak true,
And noble bearing. But now I must learn
Your names and country, ere nearer ye come,
Underhand spies, for aught I know,
In Danish land. Now listen ye strangers,
In from the sea, to my open challenge:
Heed ye my words and haste me to know
What your errand and whence ye have come."

IV

Beowulf's Words with the Coast-Guard

Him the hero hailed with an answer,
The war-troop's leader, his word-hoard unlocked:
"In truth we belong to the tribe of the Jutes;
We are Hygelac's own hearth-companions.
Far among folk my father was known,
A noble chieftain, his name was Ecgtheow.
Honored by all, he ended his days
Full of winters and famed in the land.
Wise men everywhere well remember him.
Hither we fare with friendly purpose
To seek thy lord, the son of Healfdene,
The land-protector. Instruct us kindly.
Bound on adventure we visit thy lord,
The prince of the Danes. Our purpose is open;
Nought keep we secret; thou surely wilt know
If the tale we were told is true or not:
That among the Scyldings a monster strange,
A nameless demon, when nights are dark,
With cruel cunning, for cause unknown,
Works havoc and slaughter. I have in mind
A way to help your wise king Hrothgar,
Your ruler to rid of the ravening foe,
If ever his tide of troubles shall turn,
The billows of care that boil in his breast
Shall cool and subside, and his sorrow be cured;
Else, failing my purpose, forever hereafter
He shall suffer distress, while stands on its hill,
Mounting on high, his matchless hall."
Straight answered the coast-guard, astride his horse,
The warrior brave: "Twixt words and deeds
A keen-witted thane, if he thinks aright,
Must well distinguish and weigh the difference.
Your words I believe, that you wish no evil
To the Scylding lord. I will let you bring Your shields ashore and show you the way.
My comrades here shall keep the watch,
From meddling foe defend your craft,
Your fresh-tarred boat, fast by the beach,
And faithfully guard her till again she bear
With curving bow, o'er the bounding main,
Her master well-loved to the Wedermark.
Fortune oft favors the fighter who yields not;
Hero unflinching comes unhurt from the fray."
Landward they hastened, leaving behind them
Fast at her moorings the full-bosomed boat,
The ship at anchor. Shone the boar-heads,
Gleaming with gold, o'er the guards of their helmets;
Bright and fire-forged the beast kept watch.
Forward they pressed, proud and adventurous,
Fit for the fight, till afar they descried
The high-peaked radiant roof of the hall.
Of houses far-praised, 'neath heaven by the people
That inhabit the earth, this house was most famous,
The seat of King Hrothgar; its splendor gleamed bright O'er many a land. Their leader well-armed Showed them the shining shield-burg of heroes,
And set them right on the road to their goal.

[1] The Scyldings are "Danes"; but their home is in modern Sweden.

Then, wheeling his steed, he wished them farewell:

'Tis time that I leave you; the Lord of Heaven,
The Father Almighty in mercy keep you
Safe on your journey; seaward I turn Watch to keep and ward against foe."

V

Beowulf's Arrival at the Hall and the Manner of his Reception

The street was stone-paved; straight it led
To the goal of their journey. Glistened their byrnies [1]
Stout and strong-linked; sang the rings
Of their iron mail as they marched along,
In armor and helmet right up to the hall.
Sea-voyage-sated, they set their shields,
Their linden-woods broad, along the wall.
As they bent to the bench, their byrnies clattered.
They stacked their spears that stood in a row,
Ashwood tipped with iron above;
Well-equipped was the warlike band.
A stately Dane the strangers addressed,
Asked who they were and whence they had come:
"Whence do ye bear your burnished shields,
Your visored helmets and harness gray
Your heap of spear-shafts? A servant of Hrothgar's,
His herald, am I. Hardier strangers,
Nobler in mien, have I never seen.
'Tis clear you come to the court of Hrothgar,
Not outlaws and beggars, but bent on adventure."
To him gave answer the hero brave,
The lord of the Weders these words returned,
Bold 'neath his helmet: "We are Hygelac's men,
His board-companions. I am Beowulf called.
Ready am I the ruler to answer,
To say to thy lord, the son of Healfdene,
Why we have come his court to seek,
If he will graciously grant us a hearing."
Wulfgar replied: (he was prince of the Wendles,
His noble renown was known to many,
His courage in war, and wisdom in counsel)
"I will carry thy quest to the king of the Danes,
And ask him whether he wishes to grant
The boon thou dost ask of the breaker-of-rings,
To speak to himself concerning thy journey;
And straight will I bring thee the answer he sends."
Swiftly he hied him where Hrothgar sat,
White-haired and old, his earls around him.
Stately he strode, till he stood in the presence
Of the king of the Danes, — in courtly ways
Was Wulfgar skilled; he spoke to his lord:
"Hither have fared from a far country,
A band of Jutes o'er the bounding sea.
Their leader and chief by his chosen comrades
Is Beowulf called; this boon they ask:
That they may find with thee, my lord,
Favor of speech; refuse them not,
But grant them, Hrothgar, gracious hearing
In armor clad, they claim respect
Of choicest earls; but chiefly their lord
Who lately hither hath led his comrades."

[1] coats of chain-armor.

VI

Hrothgar's Welcome to Beowulf

Hrothgar spoke, the Scyldings' protector:
"Beowulf I knew in his boyhood days;
His aged father was Ecgtheow named.
To him, to take home, did Hrethel give
His only daughter. Their dauntless son
Now comes to my court in quest of a friend.
My sea-faring men whom I sent afar
To the land of the Jutes, with generous gifts,
In token of friendship, have told me this,
That the power of his grip was so great it equalled
The strength of thirty stout-armed thanes.
Him bold in battle, the blessed God
Hath sent in his mercy, to save our people
— So I hope in my heart — from the horror of Grendel.
I shall offer him gold for his gallant spirit.
Go now in haste, and greet the strangers;
Bid to the hall the whole of the company;
Welcome with words the warrior band,
To the home of the Danes." To the hall door went Wulfgar the courtly, and called them in:
"My master commands me this message to give you,
The lord of the Danes your lineage knows;
Bids me to welcome you, brave-hearted warriors,
Bound on adventure o'er the billowy main.
Ye may rise now and enter, arrayed in your armor,
Covered with helmets, the king to greet.

But leave your shields, and your shafts of slaughter,
Here by the wall to await the issue."
Then rose the leader, around him his comrades,
Sturdy war-band; some waited without,
Bid by the bold one their battle-gear to guard.
Together they hastened where the herald led them,
Under Heorot's roof. The hero went first,
Strode under helmet, till he stood by the hearth.
Beowulf spoke, his byrnie glistened,
His corslet chain-linked by cunning of smithcraft:
"Hail, king Hrothgar! Hygelac's thane
And kinsman am I. Known is the record
Of deeds of renown I have done in my youth.
Far in my home, I heard of this Grendel;
Sea-farers tell the tale of the hall:
How bare of warriors, this best of buildings
Deserted stands, when the sun goes down
And twilight deepens to dark in the sky.
By comrades encouraged, I come on this journey.
The best of them bade me, the bravest and wisest,
To go to thy succor, O good king Hrothgar;
For well they approved my prowess in battle,
They saw me themselves come safe from the conflict
When five of my foes I defeated and bound,
Beating in battle the brood of the monsters.
At night on the sea with nicors I wrestled,
Avenging the Weders, survived the sea-peril,
And crushed in my grip the grim sea-monsters
That harried my neighbors. Now I am come
To cope with Grendel in combat single,
And match my might against the monster, alone.
I pray thee therefore, prince of the Scyldings,
Not to refuse the favor I ask,
Having come so far, O friend of the Shield-Danes,
That I alone with my loyal comrades,
My hardy companions, may Heorot purge.
Moreover they say that the slaughterous fiend
In wanton mood all weapons despises.
Hence, — as I hope that Hygelac may,
My lord and king, be kind to me, —
Sword and buckler I scorn to bear,
Gold-adorned shield, as I go to the conflict.
With my grip will I grapple the gruesome fiend,
Foe against foe, to fight for our life.
And he that shall fall his faith must put
In the judgment of God. If Grendel wins,
He is minded to make his meal in the hall
Untroubled by fear, on the folk of the Jutes,
As often before he fed on the Danes.
No need for thee then to think of my burial.
If I lose my life, the lonely prowler
My blood-stained body will bear to his den,
Swallow me greedily, and splash with my gore
His lair in the marsh; no longer wilt then
Have need to find me food and sustenance.
To Hygelac send, if I sink in the battle,
This best of corslets that covers my breast,
Heirloom of Hrethel, rarest of byrnies,
The work of Weland.[1] So Wyrd will be done."

VII

The Feasting in Heorot and the Customs of the Hall

Hrothgar spoke, the Scyldings' defender:
"Thou hast come, dear Beowulf, to bring us help,
For the sake of friendship to fight our battles

Fifteen lines are omitted, in which Hrothgar recounts the exploits of Beowulf's father.

Sad is my spirit and sore it grieves me
To tell to any the trouble and shame
That Grendel hath brought me with bitter hate,
The havoc he wrought in my ranks in the hall.
My war-band dwindles, driven by Wyrd[2]
Into Grendel's grasp; but God may easily
End this monster's mad career.
Full often they boasted, my beer-bold warriors,
Brave o'er their ale-cups, the best of my fighters,
They'd meet in the mead-hall the mighty Grendel,
End his orgies with edge of the sword.
But always the mead-hall, the morning after,
The splendid building, was blood-bespattered;
Daylight dawned on the drippings of swords;
Soiled with slaughter were sills and benches,
My liege-men perished, and left me poor.
Sit down to the board; unbend thy thoughts;
Speak to my men as thy mood shall prompt."
For the band of the Jutes a bench was cleared;
Room in the mead-hall was made for them all.

1 The heroic smith of Norse legend. 2 Destiny.

Then strode to their seats the strong-hearted heroes.
The warriors' wants a waiting-thane served;
Held in his hand the highly-wrought ale-cup,
Poured sparkling mead, while the minstrel sang
Gaily in Heorot. There was gladness of heroes,
A joyous company of Jutes and of Danes.

VIII

Unferth Taunts Beowulf

Then up spoke Unferth, Ecglaf's son,
Who sat at the feet of the Scylding ruler;
He vented his jealousy. The journey of Beowulf,
His sea-adventure, sorely displeased him.
It filled him with envy that any other
Should win among men more war-like glory,
More fame under heaven than he himself:
"Art thou the Beowulf that battled with Brecca,
Far out at sea, when ye swam together,
What time you two made trial of the billows,
Risking your lives in reckless folly,
On the open sea? None might dissuade you,
Friend nor foe, from the fool-hardy venture,
When straight from the shore you struck for the open,
Breasted the waves and beat with your arms
The mounting billows, measured the sea-paths
With lusty strokes. Stirred was the ocean
By wintry storms. Seven days and nights
Your sea-strife lasted; at length he beat you,
His strength was the better; at break of day
He made the beach where the Battle-Reamas
Dwell by the shore; and straightway returned
To his people beloved in the land of the Brondings,
Where liegemen and towns and treasure were his.
In sooth I say, the son of Beanstan
His boast against thee made good to the full.
But now I ween a worse fate awaits thee,
Though thy mettle be proved in many a battle
And grim encounter, if the coming of Grendel
Thou darest abide, in the dead of the night."
Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow:
"What a deal of stuff thou hast talked about Brecca,
Garrulous with drink, my good friend Unferth.
Thou hast lauded his deeds. Now listen to me!
More sea-strength had I, more ocean-endurance,
Than any man else, the wide earth round.
'Tis true we planned in the pride of our youth
This ocean-adventure, and vowed we would risk
Our lives in the deep, each daring the other.
We were both of us boys, but our boast we fulfilled.
Our naked swords as we swam from the land,
We held in our grasp, to guard against whales.
Not a stroke could he gain on me, strive as he would,
Make swifter speed through the swelling waves,
Nor could I in swimming o'ercome him at sea.
Side by side in the surge we labored
Five nights long. At last we were parted
By furious seas and a freezing gale.
Night fell black; the norther wild
Rushed on us ruthless and roughened the sea.
Now was aroused the wrath of the monsters,
But my war-proof ring-mail, woven and hand-locked,
Served me well 'gainst the sea-beasts' fury;
The close-linked battle-net covered my breast.
I was dragged to the bottom by a blood-thirsty monster,
Firm in his clutch the furious sea-beast
Helpless held me. But my hand came free,
And my foe I pierced with point of my sword.
With my battle-blade good 'twas given me to kill
The dragon of the deep, by dint of my blow."

IX

Beowulf Completes the Story of his Swimming Adventure with Brecca. Hrothgar's Departure from the Hall

"Thus sore beset me sea-beasts thronging,
Murderous man-eaters. I met their charges,
Gave them their due with my goodly blade.
They failed of their fill, the feast they expected
In circle sitting on the sea-floor together
With me for their meal. I marred their pleasure.
When morning came, they were cast ashore
By the wash of the waves; their wounds proved fatal,
Bloated and dead on the beach they lay.
No more would they cross the course of the ships,

In the chop of the channel charge the sailors.
Day broke in the east, bright beacon of God;
The sea fell smooth. I saw bold headlands,
Windy walls; for Wyrd oft saveth
A man not doomed, if he dauntless prove.
My luck did not fail me, my long sword finished
Nine of the nicors. Ne'er have I heard
Of fiercer battle fought in the night,
Of hero more harried by horrors at sea.
Yet I saved my life from the sea-beasts' clutch.
Worn with the struggle, I was washed ashore
In the realm of the Finns by the run of the tide,
The heave of the flood. I have failed to hear
Of like adventure laid to thee,
Battle so bitter. Brecca did never, —
Neither of you was known to achieve
Deed so valiant, adventure so daring,
Sword-play so nimble; not that I boast of it,
But mark me Unferth, you murdered your brothers,
Your closest of kin. The curse of hell
For this you will suffer, though sharp be your wit.
In sooth I say to you, son of Ecglaf,
Never had Grendel such grim deeds wrought,
Such havoc in Heorot, so harried your king
With bestial fury, if your boasted courage
In deeds as well as in words you had proved.
But now he has found he need not fear
Vengeance fierce from the Victory-Scyldings,
Ruthless attack in return for his raids.
He takes his toll of your tribe as he pleases,
Sparing none of your spearmen proud.
He ravens and rages and recks not the Dane folk,
Safe from their sword-play. But soon I will teach him
How the Jute-folk fight. Then freely may go
To the mead-hall who likes, when the light of morning,
The next day's dawn, the dark shall dispel,
And the heaven-bright sun from the south shall shine."

Glad in his heart was the giver of rings,
Hoped to have help, the hoar-headed king;
The Shield-Danes' shepherd was sure of relief,
When he found in Beowulf so firm a resolve.
There was laughter of heroes. Loud was their revelry,
Words were winsome, as Wealhtheow rose,
Queen of Hrothgar, heedful of courtesy,
Gold-adorned greeted the guests in the hall.
First to her lord, the land-defender,
The high-born lady handed the cup;
Bade him be gleeful and gay at the board,
And good to his people. Gladly he took it,
Quaffed from the beaker, the battle-famed king.
Then leaving her lord, the lady of the Helmings
Passed among her people in each part of the hall,
Offered the ale-cup to old and young,
Till she came to the bench where Beowulf sat.
The jewel-laden queen in courteous manner
Beowulf greeted; to God gave thanks,
Wise in her words, that her wish was granted,
That at last in her trouble a trusted hero
Had come for comfort. The cup received
From Wealhtheow's hand the hardy warrior,
And made this reply, his mind on the battle;
Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow:
"I made up my mind when my mates and I
Embarked in our boat, outbound on the sea,
That fully I'd work the will of thy people,
Or fall in the fight, in the clutch of the fiend.
I surely shall do a deed of glory,
Worthy an earl, or end my days,
My morning of life, in the mead-hall here."
His words pleased well the wife of Hrothgar,
The Jutish lord's boast. The jewelled queen
Went to sit by the side of her lord.

Renewed was the sound of noisy revel,
Wassail of warriors. Brave words were spoken.
Mirth in the mead-hall mounted high,
Till Healfdene's son [1] the sign did give
That he wished to retire. Full well he knew
The fiend would find a fight awaiting him,
When the light of the sun had left the hall,
And creeping night should close upon them,
And shadowy shapes come striding on Dim through the dark. The Danes arose.
Hrothgar again gave greeting to Beowulf,
Wished him farewell; the wine-hall lofty
He left in his charge. These last words spoke he:
"Never before have I fully entrusted
To mortal man this mighty hall,
Since arm and shield I was able to lift.
To thee alone I leave it now,
To have and to hold it. Thy hardihood prove!
Be mindful of glory; keep watch for the foe!
No reward shalt thou lack if thou live through this fight."

1 Hrothgar.

X

Beowulf's Watch in Heorot

Then Hrothgar went with his warrior-band,
The Arm-of-the-Scyldings, out of the hall.
Would the war-lord Wealhtheow seek,
The queen for his bed-mate. The best of kings
Had placed in the hall, so heroes report,
Watch against Grendel, to guard his house,
Deliverance bring to the land of the Danes.
To the lord of the Jutes, joyfully trusted
In the might of his arm and the mercy of God.
Then he stripped his iron byrnie,
Helmet from head, and handed his sword,
Choicest of blades, to his body-thane,
And bade him keep the battle armor.
Then made his boast once more the warrior,
Beowulf the bold, ere his bed he sought,
Summoned his spirit; "Not second to Grendel
In combat I count me and courage of war.
Not with the sword will I slay this foeman,
Though light were the task to take his life.
Nothing at all does he know of such fighting,
Of hewing of shields, though shrewd be his malice
And deeds to contrive. We two in the night
Shall do without swords, if he dare to meet me
Hand to hand battle. May the holy Lord
Give one or the other award the victory,
As it seems to Him right, Ruler all-wise."
Then he sought his bed. The bolster received
The head of the hero. In the hall about him,
Stretched in sleep, his sailormen lay.
Not one of them thought he would ever return
Home to his country, nor hoped to see
His people again, and the place of his birth.
They had heard of too many men of the Danes
Overtaken suddenly, slain without warning,
In the royal hall. But the Ruler on High
Through the woof of fate to the Wederfolk gave Friendship and help, their foes to o'ercome,
By a single man's strength to slay the destroyer.
Thus all may learn that the Lord Almighty
Wields for aye the Wyrds of men.

. . . . . .

XI

Beowulf's Fight with Grendel

Now Grendel came, from his crags of mist
Across the moor; he was curst of God.
The murderous prowler meant to surprise
In the high-built hall his human prey.
He stalked neath the clouds, till steep before him
The house of revelry rose in his path,
The gold-hall of heroes, the gaily adorned.
Hrothgar's home he had hunted full often,
But never before had he found to receive him
So hardy a hero, such hall-guards there.
Close to the building crept the slayer,
Doomed to misery. The door gave way,
Though fastened with bolts, when his fist fell on it.
Maddened he broke through the breach he had made;
Swoln with anger and eager to slay,
The ravening fiend o'er the bright-paved floor
Furious ran, while flashed from his eyes
An ugly glare like embers aglow.
He saw in the hall, all huddled together,
The heroes asleep. Then laughed in his heart
The hideous fiend; he hoped ere dawn
To sunder body from soul of each;
He looked to appease his lust of blood,
Glut his maw with the men he would slay.
But Wyrd had otherwise willed his doom;
Never again should he get a victim
After that night. Narrowly watched
Hygelac's thane how the horrible slayer
Forward should charge in fierce attack.
Nor was the monster minded to wait:
Sudden he sprang on a sleeping thane,
Ere he could stir, he slit him open;
Bit through the bone-joints, gulped the blood,
Greedily bolted the body piecemeal.
Soon he had swallowed the slain man wholly,
Hands and feet. Then forward he hastened,
Sprang at the hero, and seized him at rest;
Fiercely clutched him with fiendish claw.
But quickly Beowulf caught his forearm,
And threw himself on it with all his weight.
Straight discovered that crafty plotter,
That never in all midearth had he met
In any man a mightier grip.
Gone was his courage, and craven fear
Sat in his heart, yet helped him no sooner.
Fain would he hide in his hole in the fenland,
His devil's den. A different welcome
From former days he found that night!

Now Hygelac's thane, the hardy, remembered
His evening's boast, and bounding up,
Grendel he clenched, and cracked his fingers;
The monster tried flight, but the man pursued;
The ravager hoped to wrench himself free,
And gain the fen, for he felt his fingers
Helpless and limp in the hold of his foe.
'Twas a sorry visit the man-devourer
Made to the Hall of the Hart that night.
Dread was the din, the Danes were frighted
By the uproar wild of the ale-spilling fray.
The hardiest blenched as the hall-foes wrestled
In terrible rage. The rafters groaned;
'Twas wonder great that the wine-hall stood,
Firm 'gainst the fighters' furious onslaught,
Nor fell to the ground, that glorious building.
With bands of iron 'twas braced and stiffened
Within and without. But off from the sill
Many a mead-bench mounted with gold
Was wrung where they wrestled in wrath together.
The Scylding nobles never imagined
That open attack, or treacherous cunning,
Could wreck or ruin their royal hall,
The lofty and antlered, unless the flames
Should some day swallow it up in smoke.
The din was renewed, the noise redoubled;
Each man of the Danes was mute with dread,
That heard from the wall the horrible wail,
The gruesome song of the godless foe,
His howl of defeat, as the fiend of hell
Bemoaned his hurt. The man held fast;
Greatest he was in grip of strength,
Of all that dwelt upon earth that day.

XII

The Defeat of Grendel

Loath in his heart was the hero-deliverer
To let escape his slaughterous guest.
Of little use that life he deemed
To human kind. The comrades of Beowulf
Unsheathed their weapons to ward their leader,
Eagerly brandished their ancient blades,
The life of their peerless lord to defend.
Little they deemed, those dauntless warriors,
As they leaped to the fray, those lusty fighters,
Laying on boldly to left and to right,
Eager to slay, that no sword upon earth,
No keenest weapon, could wound that monster:
Point would not pierce, he was proof against iron;
'Gainst victory-blades the devourer was charmed.
But a woful end awaited the wretch,
That very day he was doomed to depart,
And fare afar to the fiends' domain.

Now Grendel found, who in former days
So many a warrior had wantonly slain,
In brutish lust, abandoned of God,
That the frame of his body was breaking at last.
Keen of courage, the kinsman of Hygelac
Held him grimly gripped in his hands.
Loath was each to the other alive.
The grisly monster got his death-wound:
A huge split opened under his shoulder;
Crunched the socket, cracked the sinews,
Glory great was given to Beowulf.
But Grendel escaped with his gaping wound
O'er the dreary moor his dark den sought,
Crawled to his lair. 'Twas clear to him then
The count of his hours to end had come,
Done were his days. The Danes were glad
The hard fight was over, they had their desire
Cleared was the hall, 'twas cleansed by the hero
With keen heart and courage, who came from afar.
The lord of the Jutes rejoiced in his work,
The deed of renown he had done that night
His boast to the Danes he bravely fulfilled;
From lingering woe delivered them all;
From heavy sorrow they suffered in heart;
From dire distress they endured so long;
From toil and from trouble. This token they saw:
The hero had laid the hand of Grendel
Both arm and claws, the whole forequarter
With clutches huge, 'neath the high-peaked roof.

XIII

The Celebration of the Victory and the Song of the Gleeman

When morning arrived, so runs the report,
Around the gift-hall gathered the warriors;
The folk-leaders fared from far and near,
The wide ways o'er, the wonder to view,
The wild beast's foot-prints. Not one of them felt Regret that the creature had come to grief,
When they traced his retreat by the tracks on the moor;
Marked where he wearily made his way,

rried and beaten, to the haunt of the nicors,
nk to the water, to save his life.
ere they beheld the heaving surges,
lows abrim with bloody froth,
ed with gore, where the gruesome fiend, icken and doomed, in the struggle of death ve up his ghost in the gloom of the mere,
s heathen soul for hell to receive it.
en from the mere the thanes turned back,
en and youths from the merry hunt,
me they rode on their horses gray,
oudly sitting their prancing steeds.
owulf's prowess was praised by all.
ey all agreed that go where you will,
wixt sea and sea, at the south or the north,
ne better than he, no braver hero,
ne worthier honor could ever be found,
hey meant no slight to their master and lord,
e good king Hrothgar their ruler kind.)

ow and again the noble chiefs ave rein to their steeds, and spurred them to race, alloped their grays where the ground was smooth.
ow and again a gallant thane,
hose mind was stored with many a lay,
ith songs of battle and sagas old,
ound new words in well-knit bars,
old in verse the valor of Beowulf, latched his lines and moulded his lay.

Here is introduced an episode of the Nibelungen Lend. The gleeman tells how Sigmund the Volsung, with s son and nephew Fitela, ranged the forests and slew ld beasts. Later, when Fitela was no longer with him, gmund killed a dragon and won a great treasure.

hen the lay was ended, they urged once more heir racers fleet to fly o'er the plain.
s the morning sped, and the sun climbed higher,
lany went in, the marvellous sight lore closely to scan. The king himself, ith a troop of trusty retainers about him,
trode from his bower; the bestower-of-rings ame, and with him the queen, in state, he meadow-path trod, by her maidens attended.

XIV

Hrothgar's Praise of Beowulf, and Beowulf's Reply

Hrothgar spoke when he reached the hall, stood on the step, and stared at the roof
dorned with gold, and Grendel's hand:
"Prompt be my heart to praise the Almighty
For the sight I behold. Much harm have I suffered,
And grief from Grendel, but God still works
Wonder on wonder, the Warden of Glory.
But a little while since, I scarcely dared,
As long as I lived to look for escape
From my burden of sorrow, when blood-stained stood,
And dripping with slaughter, this stately hall.
Wide-spread woe my warriors scattered;
They never hoped this house to rid,
While life should last, this land-mark of people,
Of demons and devils. 'Tis done by the hero.
By the might of the Lord this man has finished
The feat that all of us failed to achieve
By wit or by war. And well may she say,
— Whoever she be, — that bore this son,
That the Ancient of Days dealt with her graciously,
And blest her in child-birth. Now Beowulf, hear!
I shall henceforth hold thee, hero beloved,
As child of my own, and cherish thee fondly
In kinship new. Thou shalt never lack Meed of reward that is mine to give.
For deeds less mighty have I many times granted
Fullest reward to warriors feebler,
In battle less brave. Thy boldness and valor
Afar shall be known; thy fame shall live
To be great among men. Now God the Almighty
With honor reward thee, as ever he doth."

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow
"Gladly we fought this good fight through,
Fearlessly faced the foe inhuman,
Grappled him gruesome; it grieves me sore
That the man-beast himself you may not see,
Dead in the hall, fordone in the fray.
I meant to master the monster quickly,
To his death-bed pin him by power of my grip,
Hold him hard till my hand could strangle him,
Bringing him low, but he broke away.
In vain I tried to prevent his escape.
The Lord was unwilling; I lost my hold
On the man-destroyer; too strong was the monster,
Too swift on his feet. But to save his life
He left behind him the whole of his fore-paw,
Arm and shoulder. 'Twas a useless shift,

Profiting nothing. He ne'er will prolong
His life by the loss, the loathly slayer,
Sunk in sin; but sorrow holds him,
Caught in the grasp of its grip relentless,
In woful bonds to await in anguish,
Guilty wretch, the rest of his doom,
As the Lord Almighty shall mete it to him."

More silent seemed the son of Ecglaf,[1]
Less boastful in bragging of brave deeds done,
When all of them, looking aloft, beheld
The hand on high, where it hung 'neath the roof,
The claw of the fiend; each finger was armed
With a steel-like spur instead of a nail,
The heathen's handspikes, the horrible paw
Of the evil fiend. They all declared
No iron blade could e'er have bit
On the monstrous bulk of the man-beast's hide,
Or hewn away that woful talon.

XV

The Feasting and Giving of Treasure in the Hall

Now orders were given the guest-hall to cleanse,
And furnish it fresh. Forth went hurrying
Men and maids. To the mead-hall they went
And busily worked. Woven tapestries,
Glinting with gold, hung gay on the walls,
Marvellous wonders for men to look upon.
Ruin and wreck had been wrought in the building,
Though braced within by iron bands,
The hinges were wrenched, the roof alone stood
Undamaged and sound, when the sin-spotted wretch,
The demon destroyer, in despair of his life,
Turned and made off, — not easy it is
To escape from death, essay it who will.
(So each of us all to his end must come,
Forced by fate to his final abode
Where his body, stretched on the bier of death, Shall rest after revel.) Now right was the hour
For Healfdene's heir to enter the hall;
The king himself would come to the feast.
I never have heard of nobler bearing
'Mongst ranks of liegemen surrounding their lord
As they took their seats, the trusty com rades,
And fell to feasting. Freely quaffed
Many a mead-cup the mighty kinsmen,
Hrothgar and Hrothulf, the high hall within Heorot was filled with a friendly host.
(Far was the day when the Scylding host Should treachery plot, betraying each other
Then Healfdene's son bestowed on Beowulf
A gold-adorned banner for battle-reward,
A rich-broidered standard, breast-plate and helmet.
The swordmen assembled saw the treasures
Borne before the hero. Beowulf drank
The health of Hrothgar, nor had reason to feel Ashamed before shieldmen to show his re ward.
Never were offered by earls that I heard of,
In token of friendship four such treasures,
Never was equalled such ale-bench bounty.
Round the ridge of the helmet a rim of iron
Wound with wire, warded the head,
That the offspring of files, with fearful stroke
The hard-tempered sword-blade, might harm it not,
When fierce in the battle the foemen shoul join.
At a sign from the king, eight stallions proud
Bitted and bridled, were brought into hall.
On the back of one was a wondrous saddle,
Bravely wrought and bordered with jewels
The battle-seat bold of the best of kings,
When Hrothgar himself would ride to th sword-play.
(Nor flinched from the foe the famous war rior
In the front of the fight where fell the slain.
To the hero delivered the lord of the Scyld ings,
The heir of Ing, both armor and horses,
Gave them to Beowulf, and bade him enjo them.
Thus royally, the ruler famous,
The heroes' hoard-guard, heaped his bounty
Repaid the struggle with steeds and trophies
Praised by all singers who speak the truth.

XVI

The King's Gifts to Beowulf's Men, and the Gleeman's Lay of Finn

The Lord of the earls then added gifts,
At the mead-bench remembered the men each one,
That Beowulf brought o'er the briny deep,
With ancient heirlooms and offered to pay

1 Unferth

n gold for the man that Grendel had slain,
s more of them surely the monster had killed
Had not holy God and the hero's courage verted their doom. (So daily o'errules he Father Almighty the fortunes of men.
herefore is insight ever the best,
nd prudence of mind; for much shall suffer
f lief and of loath who long endures he days of his life in labor and toil.)
ow music and song were mingled together,
n the presence of Hrothgar, ruler in war.
Harp was struck and hero-lays told.
Along the mead-bench the minstrel spread Cheer in hall, when he chanted the lay
f the sudden assault on the sons of Finn.

The episode which follows alludes obscurely to details f a feud between Frisians and Danes. The Finnsburg ragment contains a portion of the same story; and one of he heroes, Hnaef, is also mentioned in Widsith.

XVII

The Lay of Finn Ended. The Speech of the Queen

The lay was ended,
The gleeman's song. Sound of revelry
Rose again. Gladness brightened
Along bench and board. Beer-thanes poured
From flagons old the flowing wine.
Wealhtheow the queen walked in state,
Under her crown, where uncle and nephew
Together sat, — they still were friends.
There too sat Unferth, trusted counsellor,
At Hrothgar's feet; though faith he had broken
With his kinsmen in battle, his courage was proved.
Then the queen of the Scyldings spoke these words:
"Quaff of this cup my king and my lord,
Gold-friend of men. To thy guests be kind,
To the men of the Jutes be generous with gifts.
Far and near thou now hast peace.
I have heard thou dost wish the hero for son,
To hold as thy own, now Heorot is cleansed,
The jewel-bright hall. Enjoy while thou mayest,
Allotment of wealth, and leave to thy heirs
Kingdom and rule when arrives the hour
That hence thou shalt pass to thy place appointed.
Well I know that my nephew Hrothulf
Will cherish in honor our children dear,
If thou leavest before him this life upon earth;
He will surely requite the kindness we showed him,
Faithfully tend our two young sons,
When to mind he recalls our care and affection,
How we helped him and housed him when he was a child."
She turned to the bench where her two boys sat,
Hrethric and Hrothmund, and the rest of the youth,
A riotous band, and right in their midst,
Between the two brothers, Beowulf sat.

XVIII

The Queen's Gifts to Beowulf

With courteous bow the cup she offered,
Greeted him graciously and gave him to boot
Two armlets rare of twisted gold,
A robe and rings, and the rarest collar;
A better was never known among men,
Since Hama brought to his bright-built hall
The jewelled necklace, the gem of the Brisings.[1]
Before the warriors Wealhtheow spoke:
"Accept, dear Beowulf, this bright-gemmed collar;
Make happy use of this heirloom jewelled,
This ring and robe and royal treasure;
Be brave and bold. My boys instruct
In gentle manners; mine be the praise.
Thou hast done such a deed that in days to come
Men will proclaim thy might and valor
To the ends of the earth, where the ocean-wave
Washes the windy walls of the land.
I wish thee joy of thy jewelled treasure,
Long be thy life; enlarge thy prosperity,
Show thee a friend to my sons in deed.
Here each earl to the other is faithful,
True to his liege-lord, loyal and kind.
My warriors obey me, willing and prompt.
The Danes carousing, do as I bid.'
She went to her seat, the wine flowed free;
'Twas a glorious feast. The fate that impended,
None of them knew, though near to them all.

When darkness came, the king of the Danes
Went to his rest in the royal bower;
But a throng of his kinsmen kept the hall

Lines 1200–1214 interrupt the narrative to tell of the subsequent history of Wealhtheow's gift; how Beowulf gave it to Hygelac, who wore it on his famous raid against the Frisians, in which he was slain by the Franks.

1 This necklace belonged to the goddess Freyia.

As they used to do in the days of old.
They cleared the boards and covered the floor
With beds and bolsters. One beer-thane there
Lay down to sleep with his doom upon him.
They placed by their heads their polished shields,
Their battle-boards bright, on the bench nearby.
Above each earl, within easy reach,
Was his helmet high and his harness of mail
And the spear-shaft keen. 'Twas their custom so,
That always at rest they were ready for war
At home or abroad, where'er they might be,
At what hour soever for aid might call
Their lord and king; they were comrades true.

END OF THE FIRST ADVENTURE

XIX

The Coming of Grendel's Dam to Avenge her Son

Then sank they to sleep, but sorely paid
One poor wretch for his sleep that night.
The same thing fell, as in former days
When Grendel his raids on the gold-hall made,
Before the fiend had found his match,
Caught in his sins. 'Twas seen that night
An avenger survived the villainous fiend,
Although they had ceased from their sorrow and care.
'Twas Grendel's mother, a monstrous hag.
She remembered her loss. She had lived in the deep,
In a water-hell cold, since Cain had become
The evil slayer of his only brother,
His kin by blood; accursed he fled,
Marked by murder, from men's delights,
Haunted the wilds; from him there sprung
Ghastly demon-shapes, Grendel was one.

The omitted lines break the narrative to turn back to the Grendel fight.

Now grim and vengeful
His mother set out on her errand of woe,
Damage to wreak for the death of her son.
Arrived at Heorot, the Ring-Danes she found
Asleep in the hall. Soon was to come
Surprise to the earls, when into the hall
Burst Grendel's dam. (Less grim was the terror,
As terror of woman in war is less,
— The fury of maidens, than full-armed men's,
When the blood-stained war-blade with wire-bound hilt,
Hard and hammer-forged, hurtling through air
Hews the boar from the helmet's crest.)
Many the swords that were suddenly drawn,
Blades from the benches; buckler and shield
Were tightly grasped; no time for the helmet,
For harness of mail, when the horror was on them.
The monster was minded to make for the open;
Soon as discovered, she sought to escape.
Quickly she seized a sleeping warrior,
Fast in her clutch to the fens she dragged him.
He was to Hrothgar of heroes the dearest,
Most trusted of liegemen between the two seas,
Comrade the nearest, killed in his sleep,
The bravest in battle. Nor was Beowulf there,
They had elsewhere quartered the earl that night,
After the giving of gifts in the hall.
There was shouting in Heorot; the hand she seized,
The bloody talon, she took away.
Sorrow was renewed in the nearby dwellings,
Bad was the bargain that both had made
To pay for their friends with further lives lost.
With grief overcome was the gray-haired king,
When he learned that his thane was alive no more,
His dearest comrade by death o'ertaken;
Quick from his bower was Beowulf fetched,
The hero brave. At break of dawn,
He with his comrades came to the place
Where the king in sorrow was waiting to see Whether God the Wielder of All would grant him
A turn in his tide of trouble and woe.
Then entered the room the ready hero;
With his band of brave men the boards resounded.
He eagerly greeted the aged ruler,
Delayed not to ask the lord of the Ingwines
If his night had passed in peace and quiet.

XX

Hrothgar Describes the Haunt of the Monster and Asks Beowulf to Undertake a Second Adventure

Hrothgar spoke, the Scylding defender:
"Speak not of peace for pain is renewed longst all the Danes. Dead is Æschere, der brother of Irmenlaf,

y comrade true and counsellor trusted,
y right-hand friend when in front of the combat e stood shoulder to shoulder, when shield-burg broke, id boar-crests crashed in battle together.
irls should ever like Æschere be.
n Heorot's floor he was foully slain
y warlock wild. I wot not whither he prey-proud fury hath fled to cover, lutted and gorged. With gruesome claws id violence fierce she avenged thy deed,
he slaying of Grendel her son last night,
ecause too long my loyal thanes
e had hunted and hurt. In the hall he fell, is life was forfeit. To the fray returned nother as cruel, her kin to avenge;
aring from far, the feud re-opened.
ence many a thane shall mourn and think
f the giver of gifts with grief renewed, nd heart-woe heavy. The hand lies low hat fain would have helped and defended you all.
have heard my people, the peasant folk
Who house by the border and hold the fens, ay they have seen two creatures strange,
uge march-stalkers, haunting the moor-land, anderers outcast. One of the two eemed to their sight to resemble a woman;
he other manlike, a monster misshapen,
ut huger in bulk than human kind,
rod an exile's track of woe.
he folk of the fen in former days amed him Grendel. Unknown his father, r what his descent from demons obscure.
onely and waste is the land they inhabit,
Wolf-cliffs wild and windy headlands,
edges of mist, where mountain torrents
Downward plunge to dark abysses, nd flow unseen. Not far from here
O'er the moorland in miles, a mere expands:
pray-frosted trees o'erspread it, and hang O'er the water with roots fast wedged in the rocks.
here nightly is seen, beneath the flood,
A marvellous light. There lives not the man
Has fathomed the depth of the dismal mere.
Though the heather-stepper, the strong-horned stag,
eek this cover, forspent with the chase,
racked by the hounds, he will turn at bay,
To die on the brink ere he brave the plunge,
Hide his head in the haunted pool.
Wan from its depths the waves are dashed,
When wicked storms are stirred by the wind,
And from sullen skies descends the rain.
In thee is our hope of help once more.
Not yet thou hast learned where leads the way
To the lurking-hole of this hatcher of outrage.
Seek, if thou dare, the dreaded spot!
Richly I pay thee for risking this fight,
With heirlooms golden and ancient rings,
As I paid thee before, if thou come back alive."

XXI

The Arrival of Hrothgar and Beowulf at Grendel's Mere

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow:
"Sorrow not, gray-beard, nor grieve o'er thy friend!
Vengeance is better than bootless mourning.
To each of us here the end must come
Of life upon earth: let him who may Win glory ere death. I deem that best,
The lot of the brave, when life is over.
Rise, O realm-ward, ride we in haste,
To track the hag that whelped this Grendel.
I tell thee in truth, she may turn where she will,
No cave of ocean nor cover of wood,
No hole in the ground shall hide her from me.
But one day more thy woe endure,
And nurse thy hope as I know thou wilt."
Sprang to his feet the sage old king,
Gave praise to God for the promise spoken.
And now for Hrothgar a horse was bridled,
A curly-maned steed. The king rode on,
Bold on his charger. A band of shield-men Followed on foot. Afar they saw Footprints leading along the forest.
They followed the tracks, and found she had crossed
Over the dark moor, dragging the body
Of the goodliest thane that guarded with Hrothgar
Heorot Hall, and the home of the king.
The well-born hero held the trail;
Up rugged paths, o'er perilous ridges,
Through passes narrow, an unknown way,
By beetling crags, and caves of the nicors.
With a chosen few he forged ahead,
Warriors skilled, to scan the way.
Sudden they came on a cluster of trees
Overhanging a hoary rock,
A gloomy grove; and gurgling below,
A stir of waters all stained with blood.
Sick at heart were the Scylding chiefs,
Many a thane was thrilled with woe,

For there they beheld the head of Æschere
Far beneath at the foot of the cliff.
They leaned and watched the waters boil
With bloody froth. The band sat down,
While the war-horn sang its summons to battle.
They saw in the water sea-snakes a many,
Wave-monsters weird, that wallowed about.
At the base of the cliff lay basking the nicors,
Who oft at sunrise ply seaward their journey,
To hunt on the ship-trails and scour the main,
Sea-beasts and serpents. Sudden they fled,
Wrathful and grim, aroused by the hail
Of the battle-horn shrill. The chief of the Jutes,
With a bolt from his bow a beast did sunder
From life and sea-frolic; sent the keen shaft
Straight to his vitals. Slow he floated,
Upturned and dead at the top of the waves.
Eager they boarded their ocean-quarry;
With barb-hooked boar-spears the beast they gaffed,
Savagely broached him and brought him to shore,
Wave-plunger weird. The warriors viewed
The grisly stranger. But straightway Beowulf
Donned his corslet nor cared for his life. . . .

Lines 1443–1472 break the narrative with a description of Beowulf's armor and the sword Hrunting, lent him by Unferth.

XXII

Beowulf's Fight with Grendel's Dam

To Hrothgar spoke the son of Ecgtheow:
"Remember O honored heir of Healfdene,
Now that I go, thou noble king,
Warriors' gold-friend, what we agreed on,
If I my life should lose in thy cause,
That thou wouldst stand in stead of my father,
Fulfil his office when I was gone.
Be guardian, thou, to my thanes and kinsmen,
My faithful friends, if I fail to return.
To Hygelac send, Hrothgar beloved,
The goodly gifts thou gavest to me.
May the lord of the Jutes, when he looks on this treasure,
May Hrethel's son, when he sees these gifts,
Know that I found a noble giver,
And joyed, while I lived, in a generous lord.
This ancient heirloom to Unferth give,
To the far-famed warrior, my wondrous sword
Of matchless metal, I must with Hrunting [1]
Glory gain, or go to my death."

After these words the Weder-Jute lord
Sprang to his task, nor staid for an answer.
Swiftly he sank 'neath the swirling flood;
'Twas an hour's time ere he touched the bottom.
Soon the sea-hag, savage and wild,
Who had roamed through her watery realms at will,
For winters a hundred, was 'ware from below,
An earthling had entered her ocean domain.
Quickly she reached and caught the hero;
Grappled him grimly with gruesome claws.
Yet he got no scratch, his skin was whole;
His battle-sark shielded his body from harm.
In vain she tried, with her crooked fingers,
To tear the links of his close-locked mail.
Away to her den the wolf-slut dragged
Beowulf the bold, o'er the bottom ooze.
Though eager to smite her, his arm was helpless.
Swimming monsters swarmed about him,
Dented his mail with dreadful tusks.
Sudden the warrior was 'ware they had come
To a sea-hall strange and seeming hostile,
Where water was not nor waves oppressed,
For the caverned rock all round kept back
The swallowing sea.[2] He saw a light,
A flicker of flame that flashed and shone.
Now first he discerned the sea-hag monstrous,
The water-wife wolfish. His weapon he raised,
And struck with his sword a swinging blow.
Sang on her head the hard-forged blade
Its war-song wild. But the warrior found
That his battle-flasher refused to bite,
Or maim the foe. It failed its master
In the hour of need, though oft it had cloven
Helmets, and carved the casques of the doomed
In combats fierce. For the first time now
That treasure failed him, fallen from honor.
But Hygelac's earl took heart of courage;
In mood defiant he fronted his foe.
The angry hero hurled to the ground,
In high disdain, the hilt of the sword,
The gaudy and jewelled; rejoiced in the strength
Of his arm unaided. So all should do
Who glory would find and fame abiding,
In the crash of conflict, nor care for their lives.

1 The sword which Unferth lends to Beowulf.
2 In the related story of the Grettis Saga, the cavern is behind a waterfall which empties into the mere.

he Lord of the Battle-Jutes braved the encounter;
he murderous hag by the hair he caught;
own he dragged the dam of Grendel his swelling rage, till she sprawled on the floor.
uick to repay in kind what she got,
n her foe she fastened her fearful clutches;
nfolded the warrior weary with fighting;
he sure-footed hero stumbled and fell.
s helpless he lay, she leapt on him fiercely;
nsheathed her hip-knife, shining and broad, er son to avenge, her offspring sole.
ut the close-linked corslet covered his breast,
oiled the stroke and saved his life.
l had been over with Ecgtheow's son,
nder the depths of the ocean vast,
ad not his harness availed to help him,
is battle-net stiff, and the strength of God.
he Ruler of battles aright decided it;
he Wielder all-wise awarded the victory:
ghtly the hero leaped to his feet.

XXIII

Beowulf's Victory and Return to Heorot

e spied 'mongst the arms a sword surpassing,
uge and ancient, a hard-forged slayer,
eapon matchless and warriors' delight,
ve that its weight was more than another ight bear into battle or brandish in war;
iants had forged that finest of blades.
hen seized its chain-hilt the chief of the Scyldings;
is wrath was aroused, reckless his mood,
s he brandished the sword for a savage blow.
it the blade in the back of her neck,
ut the neck-bone, and cleft its way lean through her flesh; to the floor she sank;
he sword was gory; glad was the hero.
light flashed out from the inmost den, ike heaven's candle, when clear it shines rom cloudless skies. He scanned the cave, alked by the wall, his weapon upraised;
rim in his hand the hilt he gripped.
ell that sword had served him in battle.
teadily onward he strode through the cave,
eady to wreak the wrongs untold,
hat the man-beast had wrought in the realm of Danes. . . .
le gave him his due when Grendel he found tretched as in sleep, and spent with the battle.
ut dead was the fiend, the fight at Heorot

Had laid him low. The lifeless body
Sprang from the blows of Beowulf's sword,
As fiercely he hacked the head from the carcass.[1]

But the men who were watching the water with Hrothgar
Suddenly saw a stir in the waves,
The chop of the sea all churned up with blood
And bubbling gore. The gray-haired chiefs
For Beowulf grieved, agreeing together
That hope there was none of his home-returning,
With victory crowned, to revisit his lord.
Most of them feared he had fallen prey
To the mere-wolf dread in the depths of the sea.
When evening came, the Scyldings all
Forsook the headland, and Hrothgar himself
Turned homeward his steps. But sick at heart
The strangers[2] sat and stared at the sea,
Hoped against hope to behold their comrade
And leader again.
Now that goodly sword
Began to melt with the gore of the monster;
In bloody drippings it dwindled away.
'Twas a marvellous sight: it melted like ice,
When fetters of frost the Father unlocks,
Unravels the ropes of the wrinkled ice,
Lord and Master of months and seasons.
Beheld in the hall the hero from Juteland
Treasures unnumbered, but naught he took,
Save Grendel's head, and the hilt of the sword,
Bright and jewelled, — the blade had melted,
Its metal had vanished, so venomous hot
Was the blood of the demon-brute dead in the cave.

Soon was in the sea the slayer of monsters;
Upward he shot through the shimmer of waves;
Cleared was the ocean, cleansed were its waters,
The wolfish water-hag wallowed no more;
The mere-wife had yielded her miserable life.
Swift to the shore the sailors' deliverer
Came lustily swimming, with sea-spoil laden;
Rejoiced in the burden he bore to the land.
Ran to meet him his mailéd comrades,
With thanks to God who gave them their leader
Safe again back and sound from the deep.

1 Beowulf dismembers Grendel's dead body so that his ghost may not return to haunt the Hall.
2 Beowulf's band of retainers.

Quickly their hero's helmet they loosened,
Unbuckled his breastplate. The blood-stained waves
Fell to a calm 'neath the quiet sky.
Back they returned o'er the tracks with the footprints,
Merrily measured the miles o'er the fen,
Way they knew well, those warriors brave;
Brought from the holm-cliff the head of the monster;
'Twas toil and labor to lift the burden,
Four of their stoutest scarce could carry it
Swung from a spear-pole, a staggering load. . . .
Thus the fourteen of them, thanes adventurous,
Marched o'er the moor to the mead-hall of Hrothgar.
Tall in the midst of them towered the hero;
Strode among his comrades, till they came to the hall.
In went Beowulf, the brave and victorious,
Battle-beast hardy, Hrothgar to greet.
Lifting by the hair the head of Grendel,
They laid it in the hall, where the heroes were carousing,
Right before the king, and right before the queen;
Gruesome was the sight that greeted the Danes.

XXIV, XXV

Beowulf's Story of His Fight, and Hrothgar's Counsel

Beowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow:
"Gladly we offer this ocean-booty,
That here thou lookest on, lord of the Scyldings,
For sign of victory, son of Healfdene.
Hard was the fight I fought under water;
That combat nearly cost me my life.
Soon had been ended the ocean-encounter,
Had God in his mercy not given me aid.
No help I got from the good blade Hrunting;
The well-tried weapon worthless proved.
By the grace of God, who guided me friendless,
A splendid old sword I spied on the wall,
Hanging there, huge; by the hilt I grasped it,
And seeing my chance, I struck amain
At the sea-cave's wardens, when sudden the blade
Melted and burned, as the blood gushed out,
The battle-gore hot. The hilt I saved
From the villainous fiends, and avenged their crimes,
The murder of the Danes, as was meet and due.
I promise thee now, in peace thou shalt slee
In Heorot hall, with the whole of thy band
Thou and thy thanes may throng within
As ye used of yore, both young and old.
Thou need'st not fear renewal of strife,
Harm to thy folk at the hands of the fiends.
The golden hilt was given to the king;
The jewelled work of the giants of old
Came into hand of the hoary warrior.
On the death of the demons, the Danish lor kept it,
Wondersmiths' work. When the world wa rid
Of the evil fiend, the enemy of God,
Guilty of murder, and his mother too,
The trophy passed to the peerless lord,
The goodliest king, that gave out treasure
Between the two seas on Scandia's isle.
Hrothgar gazed on the golden hilt,
Relic of old, where was writ the tale
Of a far-off fight, when the flood o'erwhelmed
The raging sea, the race of the giants
(They wantonly dared to war against God;
Then rose in his wrath the Ruler Eternal,
'Neath the heaving billows buried them all.
On the polished gold of the guard of the hilt
Runes were writ that rightly told,
To him that read them, for whom tha weapon,
Finest of sword-blades, first was made,
The splendid hilt with serpents entwined.
All were silent, when the son of Healfdene,
The wise king spoke: "Well may he say,
The aged ruler, who aye upholds
Truth and right, 'mid the ranks of his people
Whose mind runs back to by-gone days,
This guest is born of a goodly breed.
Thy fame shall fly afar among men,
Beowulf my friend, firmly thou holdest Both wisdom and might. My word will keep,
The love that I proffered. Thou shal prove a deliverer
To thy folk and followers in far-off years,
A help to the heroes. Not Heremod thus,
Ecgwela's heir, did offer at need
His strength to the Scyldings; instead, he brought
Slaughter and death on the sons of the Danes
Swoln with wrath he slew his comrades,
His friends at the board and fled alone,
Ill-famed earl, an outcast from men.
Though God endowed him with gifts o
strength,
With boldness and might above all men,
And prospered him greatly, yet he grew to be lood-thirsty and cruel. No bracelets he gave o the Danes as was due, but dwelt in gloom, eaped the reward of the woful strife,

nd wearisome feud. Take warning from him.

Hrothgar now delivers a long sermon to Beowulf on the ngers of pride, the fickleness of fortune, and the brevity life, and ends by asking him to sit down to the feast, omising more gifts on the morrow.

eowulf hastened, happy in mood,
o seek his bench as bid by the king.
nce more, as of old, for the earls in hall, ne famous in battle, the board was set or feasting anew. When night with its shadows erwhelmed the world, the heroes arose.
he gray-haired ruler his rest would seek,
he Scylding his bed; and Beowulf too,
he lusty warrior, longed for his sleep.
oon an attendant showed the way
o the stranger from far, spent with his faring.
Vith courtly custom, he cared for his needs.
ll that to warriors, overseas wandering,
as due in those days, he did for the guest.
igh-gabled and gold-decked, the gift-hall towered;
he stout-hearted hero slept soundly within,
ill the raven black, with blithe heart hailed he bliss of heaven, and bright the sun ame gliding o'er earth. Then, eager to start, he warriors wakened; they wished to set out
n their homeward journey. The hero brave Vould board his ship, and back again sail.
he hardy one bade that Hrunting be brought o the son of Ecglaf:[1] the sword he offered him;
hanked him for lending the lovely weapon;
alled it a war-friend, keen in the battle;
ot a word in blame of the blade he uttered,
reat-hearted hero. Now hastened the guests, ager to part, and armed for their voyage.
heir dauntless leader, beloved of the Danes.
ame to the high-seat, and to Hrothgar the king
he bold-in-battle now bade farewell.

XXVI

Beowulf's Leave-Taking of Hrothgar

eowulf spoke, the son of Ecgtheow:
Now we sea-farers would make known our desire;

1 Unferth.

Far-travelled wanderers, we wish to return
To Hygelac now. A hearty welcome
We here have found, thou hast harbored us well.
If ever on earth I may anywise win,
Master of men, more of thy love
Than now I have won, for another adventure
Of arms and war I am eager and willing.
If ever I hear, o'er the ocean-ways
That neighbor-tribes threaten annoyance or war,
As feud-seeking foemen afore time assailed thee,
A thousand thanes to thee will I bring,
Heroes to help thee. For Hygelac, I know,
Though young in years will yield me aid;
The people's Shepherd will surely help me
By word and deed to do thee service,
And bring thee spear-shafts to speed thee in battle,
Thy might to strengthen when men thou needest.
If ever Hrethric, heir of thy line,
Should come to sojourn at the court of the Jutes,
A host of friends he will find awaiting him.
Who boasts himself brave, abroad should travel."
The aged Hrothgar answering spoke:
"To utter these words, the All-wise Lord
Hath prompted thy heart; more prudent counsel
From one in years so young as thou,
I never have heard. Thou art hardy in strength,
And sage in spirit, and speakest well.
If ever it happen that Hrethel's heir
Be stricken by spear and slain in battle,
If sickness or sword assail thy lord,
And thou survive him, I think it likely
The Sea-Jutes in vain will seek for a better
As choice for their king, their chief to become
And rule o'er the thanes, if thou be willing
The lordship to hold. The longer I know thee
The better I like thee, Beowulf my friend.
Thou hast brought it about that both our peoples,
Jutes and the Spear-Danes, shall be joined in peace.
They shall cease from war, the strife shall be ended,
The feuds of aforetime, so fiercely waged.
While I rule this realm, our riches we share;
Many shall travel with treasure laden,
Each other to greet, o'er the gannet's bath;
O'er the rolling waves the ringéd prow
Tokens of friendship shall freely bring

And bind our people in peace together,
Toward friend and foe, in faith as of old."

Still other treasures, twelve in all,
Healfdene's heir in the hall bestowed
On Beowulf brave, and bade him take them
And seek his people, and soon return.
Then kissed the king, of kin renowned,
The thane beloved. The lord of the Scyldings Fell on his neck. Fast flowed the tears
Of the warrior gray; he weighed both chances
But held to the hope, though hoary with years,
That each should see the other again,
And meet in the mead-hall. The man was so dear
That he could not restrain the storm in his breast.
Locked in his heart, a hidden longing
For the man he loved so, le/t him no peace,
And burnt in his blood. But Beowulf went;
The gold-decked hero the grass-way trod,
Proud of his booty. The boat awaited
Its owner and master, where at anchor it rode.
As they went on their way, the warriors praised
The bounty of Hrothgar, the blameless king.
None was his equal till age snatched away
The joy of his manhood,—no mortal it spares.

XXVII

Beowulf's Return Voyage to Hygelac

Then came to the coast the comrades brave,
The lusty warriors, wearing their ring-nets,
Their chain-linked corslets. The coast-guard saw them,
The same that at first had spied them coming;
This time he chose not to challenge them harshly,
But gave them his greeting, galloping toward them.
Said the Weder-folk would welcome the sight of them,
Boarding their ship in shining armor.
Then by the sands, the seaworthy craft,
The iron-ringed keel, with arms was laden,
With horses and treasure. On high the mast
Towered above the treasures of Hrothgar.
To the man who had waited as watchman aboard,
Beowulf gave a gold-bound sword.
(Oft on the mead-bench that heirloom precious
Its owner would honor.) When all had embarked,
They drove for the deep, from Daneland shore.
Then soon did the mast its sea-suit wear,
A sail was unfurled, made fast with ropes,
The sea-wood sang as she sped o'er the ocean
No baffling head-wind hindered her course;
The foamy-necked floater flew o'er the billows,
The sea-craft staunch o'er the salt-sea wave
Till they came in sight of the cliffs of Jutland
The well known capes, and the wind-driven keel,
Grating the sand, stood still on the shore.
Soon was at hand the harbor-watch eager.
Long had he looked for his loved companions
Scanning the sea for their safe return.
The broad-bosomed boat to the beach moored
With anchor-ropes fast, lest the force of the waves
That comely craft should cast adrift.
Then Beowulf bade them bring ashore
His treasure-cargo of costly gold
And weapons fine; not far was the way
To Hygelac's hall, where at home he dwelt
The king and his comrades, close by the sea

END OF THE SECOND ADVENTURE

After the death of Hygelac and his son, Beowulf became king of the Jutes, and ruled over them fifty years. In his old age his people were harried by a fire-dragon, whom the hero went out to fight. It seems that an outlaw, banished and flying for shelter, had come upon a treasure hid in a deep cave or barrow, guarded by a dragon. Long years before, an earl, the last of his race, had buried the treasure. After his death the dragon, sniffing about the stones, had found it and guarded it three hundred years, until the banished man discovered the place, and carried off one of the golden goblets. In revenge the dragon made nightly raids on Beowulf's realm, flying through the air, spitting fire, burning houses and villages, even Beowulf's hall, the "gift-stool" of the Jutes. Beowulf had an iron shield made against the dragon's fiery breath, and with eleven companions, sought out the hill-vault near the sea. These events are related in Sections XXVIII–XXXV of the Beowulf MS.

XXXV

Beowulf's Fight with the Fire Dragon

Before attacking the fire-dragon, Beowulf once more and for the last time, makes his "battle-boast" in the presence of his followers.

Beowulf said to them, brave words spoke he:
"Brunt of battles I bore in my youth,
One fight more I make this day.
I mean to win fame defending my people,
If the grim destroyer will seek me out,
Come at my call from his cavern dark."
Then he greeted his thanes each one,

or the last time hailed his helmeted warriors,
is comrades dear. "I should carry no sword,
o weapon of war 'gainst the worm should bear,
the foe I might slay by strength of my arm, s Grendel I slew long since by my hand.
ut I look to fight a fiery battle,
Vith scorching puffs of poisonous breath.
or this I bear both breastplate and shield;
o foot will I flinch from the foe of the barrow.
Wyrd is over us, each shall meet is doom ordained at the dragon-cliff!
old is my mood, but my boast I omit Gainst the battle-flier. Abide ye here, eroes in harness, hard by the barrow,
ased in your armor the issue await:
Vhich of us two his wounds shall survive.
ot yours the attempt, the task is mine.
is meant for no man but me alone
o measure his might 'gainst the monster fierce.
get you the gold in glorious fight,
r battle-death bitter shall bear off your lord."
Uprose with his shield the shining hero, old 'neath his helmet. He bore his harness n under the cliff; alone he went, himself he trusted; no task for faint-heart.
hen saw by the wall the warrior brave,
lero of many a hard-fought battle,
rches of stone that opened a way;
rom the rocky gate there gushed a stream,
ubbling and boiling with battle-fire.
o great the heat no hope was there
o come at the hoard in the cavern's depth, nscathed by the blast of the scorching dragon.
He let from his breast his battle-cry leap,
Swoln with rage was the royal Jute, stormed the stout-heart; strong and clear
Through the gloom of the cave his cry went ringing.
Hate was aroused, the hoard-ward knew
The leader's hail. Too late 'twas now
To parley for peace.. The poisonous breath
Of the monster shot from the mouth of the cave,
Reeking hot. The hollow earth rumbled.
The man by the rock upraised his shield,
The lord of the Jutes, 'gainst the loathly dragon.
Now kindled for battle the curled-up beast;
The king undaunted with drawn sword stood,
('Twas an heirloom olden with edge of lightning)
Each was so fierce he affrighted the other.
Towering tall 'neath tilted shield,
Waited the king as the worm coiled back,
Sudden to spring: so stood he and waited.
Blazing he came in coils of fire
Swift to his doom. The shield of iron Sheltered the hero too short a while, —
Life and limb it less protected
Than he hoped it would, for the weapon he held
First time that day he tried in battle;
Wyrd had not willed he should win the fight.
But the lord of the Jutes uplifted his arm,
Smote the scaly worm, struck him so fierce
That his ancient bright-edged blade gave way,
Bent on the bone, and bit less sure
Than its owner had need in his hour of peril.
That sword-stroke roused the wrath of the cave-guard;
Fire and flame afar he spirted,
Blaze of battle; but Beowulf there
No victory boasted: his blade had failed him,
Naked in battle, as never it should have,
Well-tempered iron. Nor easy it was
For Ecgtheow's heir,[1] honored and famous,
This earth to forsake, forever to leave it;
Yet he must go, against his will
Elsewhere to dwell. So we all must leave
This fleeting life. — Erelong the foes,
Bursting with wrath, the battle renewed.
The hoard-ward took heart, and with heaving breast
Came charging amain. The champion brave,
Strength of his people, was sore oppressed,
Enfolded by flame. No faithful comrades
Crowded about him, his chosen band,
All aethelings' sons, to save their lives,
Fled to the wood. One of them only
Felt surging sorrow; for nought can stifle
Call of kin in a comrade true;

XXXVI

Wiglaf's Reproach to his Comrades. Beowulf Mortally Wounded.

The shield-thane beloved, lord of the Scylfings,
Wiglaf was called, 'twas Weohstan's son,
Ælfhere's kinsman. When his king he saw
Hard by the heat under helmet oppressed,
He remembered the gifts he had got of old,
Lands and wealth of the Waegmunding line,
The folk-rights all that his father's had been;
He could hold no longer, but hard he gripped

[1] Beowulf.

Linden shield yellow and ancient sword. . . .

The intervening lines tell the history of the sword and the feuds in which it has participated.

For the first time there the faithful thane,
Youthful and stalwart, stood with his leader,
Shoulder to shoulder in shock of battle.
Nor melted his courage, nor cracked his blade,
His war-sword true, as the worm found out
When together they got in grim encounter.

Wiglaf in wrath upbraided his comrades,
Sore was his heart as he spake these words:
"Well I mind when our mead we drank
In the princely hall, how we promised our lord
Who gave us these rings and golden armlets,
That we would repay his war-gifts rich,
Helmets and armor, if haply should come
His hour of peril; us hath he made
Thanes of his choice for this adventure;
Spurred us to glory, and gave us these treasures
Because he deemed us doughty spearmen,
Helmeted warriors, hardy and brave.
Yet all the while, unhelped and alone,
He meant to finish this feat of strength,
Shepherd of men and mightiest lord
Of daring deeds. The day is come, —
Now is the hour he needs the aid
Of spearmen good. Let us go to him now,
Help our hero while hard bestead
By the nimble flames. God knows that I
Had rather the fire should ruthlessly fold
My body with his, than harbor me safe.
Shame it were surely our shields to carry
Home to our lands, unless we first
Slay this foe and save the life
Of the Weder-king. Full well I know
To leave him thus, alone to endure,
Bereft of aid, breaks ancient right.
My helmet and sword shall serve for us both,
Shield and armor we share to-day."

Waded the warrior through welter and reek;
Buckler and helmet he bore to his leader;
Heartened the hero with words of hope:
"Do thy best now, dearest Beowulf,
Years ago, in youth, thou vowedst,
Living, ne'er to lose thine honor,
Shield thy life and show thy valor.
I stand by thee to the end!"
After these words the worm came on,
Snorting with rage, for a second charge;
All mottled with fire his foes he sought,
The warriors hated. But Wiglaf's shield
Was burnt to the boss by the billows of fire;
His harness helped not the hero young.
Shelter he found 'neath the shield of his kinsman,
When the crackling blaze had crumbled his own.
But mindful of glory, the mighty hero
Smote amain with his matchless sword.
Down it hurtled, driven by anger,
Till it stuck in the skull, then snapped the blade,
Broken was Naegling, Beowulf's sword,
Ancient and gray. 'Twas granted him never
To count on edge of iron in battle;
His hand was too heavy, too hard his strokes
As I have heard tell, for every blade
He brandished in battle: the best gave way,
And left him helpless and hard bestead.
Now for a third time neared the destroyer;
The fire-drake fierce, old feuds remembering,
Charged the warrior who wavered an instant.
Blazing he came and closed his fangs
On Beowulf's throat; and throbbing spirts
Of life-blood dark o'erdrenched the hero.

XXXVII

The Slaying of the Dragon

Then in the hour of utmost peril,
The stripling proved what stock he came of.
Showed his endurance and dauntless courage.
Though burnt was his hand when he backed his kinsman,
With head unguarded the good thane charged,
Thrust from below at the loathly dragon,
Pierced with the point and plunged the blade in,
The gleaming-bright, till the glow abated
Waning low. Ere long the king
Came to himself, and swiftly drew
The war-knife that hung at his harness' side,
And cut in two the coiléd monster.
So felled they the foe and finished him bravely,
Together they killed him, the kinsmen two,
A noble pair. So needs must do
Comrades in peril. For the king it proved
His uttermost triumph, the end of his deeds
And work in the world. The wound began,
Where the cave-dragon savage had sunk his teeth,
To swell and fever, and soon he felt
The baleful poison pulse through his blood,
And burn in his breast. The brave old warrior
Sat by the wall and summoned his thoughts,
Gazed on the wondrous work of the giants:
Arches of stone, firm-set on their pillars,
Upheld that hill-vault hoar and ancient.

ow Beowulf's thane, the brave and faithful,
ashed with water his darling lord, s comrade and king, all covered with blood
d faint with the fight; unfastened his helmet.
eowulf spoke despite his hurt, s piteous wound; full well he knew
s years on earth were ended now,
s hours of glad life, gone for aye
s days alloted, and death was near:
Now would I gladly give to a son
ese weapons of war, had Wyrd but granted hat heir of my own should after me come, rung from my loins. This land have I ruled fty winters. No folk-king dared, one of the chiefs of the neighboring tribes,
o touch me with sword or assail me with terror battle-threats. I bided at home, eld my peace and my heritage kept,
eking no feuds nor swearing false oaths.
his gives me comfort, and gladdens me now,
hough wounded sore and sick unto death.
s I leave my life, the Lord may not charge me ith killing of kinsmen. Now quickly go, iglaf beloved, to look at the hoard,
here hidden it rests 'neath the hoary rock.
or the worm lies still, put asleep by his wound, obbed of his riches. Then rise and haste!
ive me to see that golden hoard,
aze on the store of glorious gems,
he easier then I may end my life,
eave my lordship that long I held."

XXXVIII

The Rescue of the Hoard and the Death of Beowulf

Swiftly, 'tis said, the son of Weohstan beyed the words of his bleeding lord, laimed in the battle. Through the mouth of the cave oldly he bore his battle-net in.
lad of the victory, he gazed about him;
lany a sun-bright jewel he saw,
littering gold, strewn on the ground,
leaped in the den of the dragon hoary,
ld twilight-flier, — flagons once bright, assail cups wondrous of warriors departed tript of their mountings, many a helmet ncient and rusted, armlets a many, uriously woven. (Wealth so hoarded,
uried treasure, will taint with pride, im that hides it, whoever it be.) owering high o'er the hoard he saw
A gleaming banner with gold inwoven,
Of broidure rare, its radiance streamed
So bright, he could peer to the bounds of the cave,
Survey its wonders; no worm was seen.
Edge of the sword had ended his life.
Then, as they say, that single adventurer
Plundered the hoard that was piled by the giants;
Gathered together old goblets and platters,
Took what he liked; the towering banner,
Brightest of beacons, he brought likewise.
The blade of Beowulf, his brave old chief,
With edge of iron had ended the life
Of him that had guarded the golden hoard
For many a year, and at midnight hour
Had spread the terror of surging flames
In front of the den, till death o'ertook him.
So Wiglaf returned with treasure laden,
The high-souled hero hastened his steps,
Anxiously wondered if he should find
The lord of the Weders alive where he left him
Sapped of his strength and stretched on the ground.
As he came from the hill he beheld his comrade,
His lord of bounty, bleeding and faint,
Near unto death. He dashed him once more
Bravely with water, till burden of speech
Broke from his breast, and Beowulf spoke,
Gazing sad at the gold before him:
"For the harvest of gold that here I look on,
To the God of Glory I give my thanks.
To the Ruler Eternal I render praise
That ere I must go, he granted me this,
To leave to my people this priceless hoard.
'Twas bought with my life; now look ye well
To my people's need when I have departed.
No more I may bide among ye here.
Bid the battle-famed build on the foreland
A far-seen barrow when flames have burnt me.
High o'er the headland of whales it shall tower,
A beacon and mark to remind my people.
And sailors shall call it in years to come
Beowulf's Barrow, as back from afar
O'er the glooming deep they drive their keels."

The great-hearted king unclasped from his neck
A collar of gold and gave to his thane,
The brave young warrior, his bright-gilt helmet,
Breastplate and ring. So bade him farewell:
"Thou are the last to be left of our house.

Wyrd hath o'erwhelmed our Waegmunding line,
Swept my kinsmen swift to their doom.
Earls in their prime. I must follow them."
These words were the last that the warrior gray
Found, ere the funeral-flames he chose.
Swift from his bosom his soul departed
To find the reward of the faithful and true.

In lines 2821–2891, Section XXXIX of the MS., the narrative doubles back upon itself to repeat the description of Beowulf and the Dragon lying dead before the cave, and to report Wiglaf's second reproach to the deserters.

XL

Beowulf's Death Announced to the People. The Speech of the Herald.

Then Wiglaf bade the battle-work tell
To the sorrowful troop that had sat all day
At the sea-cliff's edge, their shields in hand,
In dread and in hope, yet doubtful of either:
Their dear lord's return, or his death in the fight.
The herald that came to the headland riding,
Nought kept back of the news that befell,
But truthfully told them the tidings all:
"Now lies low the lord of the Weders;
The generous giver of gifts to the Jutes,
Sleeps his battle-sleep, slain by the worm.
At his side lies stretched his slaughterous foe,
Fordone by the dagger. The dragon fierce
Would take no wound from touch of sword;
Its blade would not bite. At Beowulf's side
Wiglaf sits, the son of Weohstan;
By the hero dead, the hero living
At his head keeps watch with woful heart
O'er friend and foe."
. . . . . .

The Herald now warns of renewed attacks on the Jutes by Franks and Frisians, and alludes to the origin of the feud in the famous raid in which Hygelac was slain. He further warns of renewed attacks by the Swedes, now that Beowulf is dead, and refers to the origin of the wars between Swedes and Jutes and to a famous battle at "Ravenswood." The episodic digression over, the herald returns to present events.

XLI

The Herald's Speech Concluded.

"'Tis time we hasten
To see where lies our lord and king,
Our giver of bounty, and bear him away
To the funeral pyre; of precious gems
Not a few shall melt in the fire with him.
The hoard he won, the wealth untold,
The priceless treasure he purchased so dear,
And bought with his life at the bitter end,
The flame shall enfold it, the fire consume.
No warrior one keepsake shall carry away,
No necklace be worn by winsome maid.
In sorrow rather, and reft of her gold,
Alone she shall tread the track of an exile,
Now our lord lies low, his laughter stilled,
His mirth and revel. Now many a spear
Shall morning-cold be clasped in the hand
And held on high. No harp shall sound
The warriors to wake, but the wan-hued raven
Shall croak o'er the carcass and call to the eagle,
To tell how he fared at the feast after battle
When he and the gray wolf gorged on the slain."
Thus ended his tale, his tidings of woe,
The faithful thane, nor falsely reported
Wyrd or word. The warriors rose;
To the Eagles' Cliff they came in sadness,
With welling tears, the wonder to see.
Lying helpless, their lord they found
Stretched on the ground, the giver of rings.
The end had come to him, open-handed
King of the Weders, warrior brave.
That day a fearful death he had found.
A stranger thing they saw near by:
The loathsome monster lying dead
On the field where they fought, the fiery dragon,
The gruesome beast was burnt and charred.
Fifty feet in full he measured
In length, as he lay, along the ground.
'Twas his wont at night to wing aloft
And dip to earth as his den he sought;
Now he lay dead, his night-revels over.
Scattered about were bowls and flagons,
Golden platters, and priceless swords,
With rust eaten through, as though they had lain
Winters a thousand in the womb of the earth.
O'er that heritage huge, the hoard of aforetime,
A spell had been woven to ward off despoilers,
And none might touch the treasure-vault hidden;
Save that God alone, the Lord of victory,
The Guardian of men, might grant the power
To unlock the hoard, and lift the treasure,
To such a hero as to Him seemed meet.
. . . . . .

XLII

Beowulf's Body Carried to the Funeral Pyre and the Dragon Cast into the Sea.

Wiglaf spoke, the son of Weohstan:
"Let us go once more to gaze at the marvels till left 'neath the rock; I will lead you in

There your hands may touch great heaps of gold, racelets and rings. Let the bier be ready
When out of the cave we come again,
o bear away the warrior brave,
ur lord beloved, where long he shall bide, ept in the sheltering care of God."
he son of Weohstan, warrior brave, alled on the folk-men, far and wide, rom house and home to hasten and bring ood for the pyre of the peerless man, is funeral pile. "Now fire shall consume,
he wan flame wax o'er the warrior strong,
ho oft stood firm in the iron shower,
hen the storm of arrows, sent from the bow-string,
lew o'er the shield-wall, and the fleet-winged shaft,
eathered behind, pushed home the barb." 19
ow the wise young warrior, Weohstan's son, even men called, of the king's own thanes,
he best of the band; the bravest he gathered,
imself the eighth, they sought the den
f the hateful beast; one bore in his hand lighted torch and led the way. 25
o lots were drawn for the dragon's hoard, hen they saw it lying, loose in the cave,
ncared for, unguarded, unclaimed by a soul;
here was none to hinder as they hurried away,
aden with spoils and splendid heirlooms. 30
'er the edge of the cliff they cast the dragon,
nto the sea, the scaly worm;
et the waves engulf the gold-hoard's keeper.
n a wagon they loaded the wondrous treasure, old past counting. The gray-haired king hey bore to the pyre, on the Point of Whales. 36

XLIII

The Burning of Beowulf's Body

hen built for Beowulf the band of the Jutes
A funeral pyre; 'twas firmly based.
hey hung it with helmets as he had bidden,
With shining byrnies and battle-shields.
n the midst they laid, with loud lament, 5
heir lord beloved, their leader brave.
On the brow of the cliff they kindled the blaze,
Black o'er the flames the smoke shot up;
Cries of woe, in the windless air,
Rose and blent with the roar of the blast, 10
Till the frame of the body burst with the heat
Of the seething heart. In sorrowing mood
They mourned aloud their leader dead.
Joined in the wail a woman old,[1]
With hair upbound for Beowulf grieved, 15
Chanted a dreary dirge of woe,
Dark forebodings of days to come,
Thick with slaughter and throes of battle,
Bondage and shame. The black smoke rose.
High on the headland they heaped a barrow,
Lofty and broad 'twas built by the Weders,
Far to be seen by sea-faring men. 22
Ten days long they toiled to raise it,
The battle-king's beacon. They built a wall
To fence the brands of the funeral burning, 25
The choicest and best their chiefs could devise.
In the barrow they buried the bracelets and rings,
All those pieces of precious treasure
That bold-hearted men had brought from the cave,
Returned to earth the heirloom of heroes, 30
The gold to the ground, again to become
As useless to men as of yore it had been.

Around the barrow the battle-brave rode,
Twelve in the troop, all true-born aethelings,
To make their lament and mourn for the king; 35
To chant a lay their lord to honor.
They praised his daring; his deeds of prowess
They mentioned in song. For meet it is
That men should publish their master's praise,
Honor their chieftain, and cherish him dearly
When he leaves this life, released from the body. 41

Thus joined the men of the Jutes in mourning
Their hero's end. His hearth-companions
Called him the best among kings of the earth,
Mildest of men, and most beloved, 45
Kindest to kinsmen, and keenest for fame,

1 Perhaps his wife.

END OF BEOWULF

THE VENERABLE BEDE (673–735)

The Venerable Bede, a scholarly monk in the Benedictine monastery at Jarrow in Northumbria, is the author of the Ecclesiastical History of the English People, a work written in Latin which is our chief historical authority for the life and civilization of Anglo-Saxon England. In Book IV, Chapter XXIV, of his History, he tells the famous story of the poet Cædmon, the earliest English poet whose name has survived to us. Of his poetry, unfortunately, there has been preserved only the short hymn which Bede quotes. The poetical paraphrases of the Bible which long went under Cædmon's name are now known to be of later date.

The Ecclesiastical History was one of the works which King Alfred translated, or caused to be translated, into Old English. A good modern translation is that of J. A. Giles (Bohn Library). The selection here printed, translated by A. S. Cook, is by kind permission of Professor Cook and of Ginn & Co. taken from Cook and Tinker's Select Translations from Old English Poetry.

BEDE'S ACCOUNT OF THE POET CÆDMON

Translated by Albert S. Cook

There was in the monastery of this abbess a certain brother especially distinguished by the grace of God, since he was wont to make poems breathing of piety and religion. Whatever he learned of Sacred Scripture by the mouth of interpreters, he in a little time gave forth in poetical language composed with the greatest sweetness and depth of feeling, in English, his native tongue; and the effect of his poems was ever and anon to incite the souls of many to despise the world and long for the heavenly life. Not but that there were others after him among the people of the Angles who sought to compose religious poetry; but none there was who could equal him, for he did not learn the art of song from men, nor through the means of any man; rather did he receive it as a free gift from God. Hence it came to pass that he never was able to compose poetry of a frivolous or idle sort; none but such as pertain to religion suited a tongue so religious as his. Living always the life of a layman until well advanced in years, he had never learned the least thing about poetry. In fact, so little did he understand of it that when at a feast it would be ruled that every one present should, for the entertainment of the others, sing in turn, he would, as soon as he saw the harp coming anywhere near him, jump up from the table in the midst of the banqueting, leave the place, and make the best of his way home.

This he had done at a certain time, and, leaving the house where the feast was in progress, had gone out to the stable where the care of the cattle had been assigned to him for that night. There, when it was time to go to sleep, he had lain down for that purpose. But while he slept some one stood by him in a dream, greeted him, called him by name, and said, "Cædmon, sing me something." To this he replied, "I know not how to sing, and that is the very reason why I left a feast and came here, because I could not sing." But the one who was talking with him answered, "No matter, you are to sing for me." "Well, then," said he, "what is it that I must sing?" "Sing," said the other, "the beginning of created things." At this reply he immediately began to sing verses in praise of God the Creator, verses that he had never heard, and whose meaning is as follows: "Now should we praise the Keeper of the heavenly kingdom, the might of the Creator and His counsel, the works of the Father of glory; how He, though God eternal, became the author of all marvels. He, the almighty Guardian of mankind, first created for the sons of men heaven as a roof, and afterwards the earth." This is the meaning, but not the precise order, of the words which he sang in his sleep; for no songs, however well they may be composed, can be rendered from one language into another without loss of grace and dignity. When he rose from sleep, he remembered all that he had sung while in that state, and shortly after added, in the same strain, many more words of a hymn befitting the majesty of God.

In the morning he went to the steward who was set over him, and showed him what gift he had acquired. Being led to the abbess, he was bidden to make known his dream and repeat his poem to the many learned men who were present, that they all might give their judgment concerning the thing which he related, and whence it was: and they were unanimously of the opinion that heavenly grace had been bestowed upon him by the Lord. They then set about expounding to him a piece of sacred history or teaching, bidding him, if he could, to turn it into the rhythm of poetry. This he under-ok to do, and departed. In the morning returned and delivered the passage as-gned to him, converted into an excellent oem. The abbess, honoring the grace of od as displayed in the man, shortly after-ard instructed him to forsake the condition a layman and take upon himself the vows a monk. She thereupon received him into e monastery with his whole family, and ade him one of the company of the breren, commanding that he should be taught e whole course and succession of Biblical story. He, in turn, calling to mind what was able to learn by the hearing of the r, and, as it were, like a clean animal, hewing upon it as a cud, transformed it all to most agreeable poetry; and, by echoing back in a more harmonious form, made his achers in turn listen to him. Thus he reearsed the creation of the world, the origin man, and all the story of Genesis; the de-arture of Israel from Egypt and their entry to the Promised Land, together with many ther histories from Holy Writ; the incarnaon of our Lord, his passion, resurrection, nd ascension into heaven; the coming of the oly Ghost and the teaching of the Apostles; oreover, he made many poems about the rror of the future judgment, the awfulness the pains of hell, and the joy of the hea-enly kingdom, besides a great number about e mercies and judgments of God. In all ese he exerted himself to allure men from e love of wickedness, and to impel them to e love and practice of righteous living; for e was a very devout man, humbly submisve to the monastic rule, but full of consum-g zeal against those who were disposed to ct otherwise.

Hence it came to pass that he ended his fe with a fair death. For when the hour of is departure drew nigh, he was afflicted for he space of a fortnight with a bodily weak-ess which seemed to prepare the way; yet it as so far from severe that he was able durng the whole of that time to walk about and onverse. Near at hand there was a cottage, o which those who were sick and appeared igh unto death were usually taken. At the approach of evening on the same night when he was to leave the world, he desired his attendant to make ready a place there for him to take his rest. The attendant did so, though he could not help wondering at the request, since he did not seem in the least like a person about to die. When he was placed in the infirmary, he was somehow full of good humor, and kept talking and joking with those who had already been brought there. Some time after midnight he asked whether they had the Eucharist at hand. "What do you need of the Eucharist?" they answered, "you aren't going to die yet, for you are just as full of fun in talking with us as if nothing were the matter with you." "Never mind," said he, "bring me the Eucharist." Taking it in his hand, he asked, "Are you all at peace with me, and free from any grudge or ill-will?" "Yes," they all responded, "we are perfectly at peace with you, and cherish no grievance whatever." "But are you," said they, "entirely at peace with us?" "Yes, my dear children," he answered without hesitation, "I am at peace with all the servants of God." And thus saying, he made ready for his entrance into the other life by partaking of the heavenly journey-bread. Not long after he inquired, "How near is it to the hour when the brethren are wakened for lauds?" "But a little while," was the reply. "Well then," said he, "let us wait for that hour," and, making over himself the sign of the cross, he laid his head on the pillow, and falling into a light slumber, ended his life in silence. And so it came to pass that, as he had served the Lord in simplicity and purity of mind, and with serene attachment and loyalty, so by a serene death he left the world, and went to look upon His face. And meet in truth it was that the tongue which had indited so many helpful words in praise of the Creator, should frame its very last words in His praise, while in the act of signing himself with the cross, and of commending his spirit into His hands. And that he foresaw his death is apparent from what has here been related.

THE WANDERER

Translated by J. Duncan Spaeth[1]

The Wanderer, probably composed early in the eighth century, is one of the poems of the Exeter Book, a manuscript which has belonged continuously to the library of Exeter Cathedral since the time of the Norman Conquest. It presents with an intensity which suggests personal experience the thoughts of a wandering exile. His liege-lord is dead; his home has been laid waste; his friends are scattered. In the desolation which has come upon him he sees the type of the transitoriness of all human life.

THE WANDERER

Many a lonely man at last comes to honor;
Merits God's mercy, though much he endured
On wintry seas, with woe in his heart,
Dragging his oar through drenching-cold brine,
Homeless and houseless and hunted by Wyrd.[1]

These are the words of a way-faring wanderer,
This is his song of the sorrow of life,
Slaughter of foemen, felling of kinsmen:

Oft in the dark, alone before dawning,
All to myself my sorrow I tell.
No friend have I here, to whom I may open
My heart's deep secret, my hidden spring of woe.
Well do I know 'tis the way of the high-born,
Fast in his heart to fetter his feelings,
Lock his unhappiness in the hold of his mind.
Spirit that sorrows withstandeth not destiny,
Heart that complaineth plucketh no help.
A haughty hero will hide his suffering,
Manfully master misery's pang.
Thus stricken with sorrow, stript of my heritage,
Far from kinsmen and country and friends,
Grimly I grappled my grief to my bosom,
Since long time ago, my giver of bounty
Was laid in the earth, and left me to roam
Watery wastes, with winter in my heart.
Forsaken I sought a shielder and protector;
Far and near I found none to greet the wanderer,
No master to make him welcome in his wine-hall;
None to cheer the cheerless, or the friendless to befriend.

He who has lost all his loved companions
Knoweth how bitter a bedfellow is sorrow.
Loneliness his lot, not lordly gold,
Heart-chilling frost, not harvest of plenty.
Oft he remembers the mirth of the mead-hall,
Yearns for the days of his youth, when his dear lord
Filled him with abundance. Faded are those joys!
He shall know them no more; no more shall he listen
To the voice of his lord, his leader and counsellor.
Sometimes sleep and sorrow together
Gently enfold the joyless wanderer:
Bright are his dreams, he embraces his lord again,
Kisses his liege, and lays on his knee
Head and hands as in happy days,
When he thanked for a boon his bountiful giver.
Wakes with a start the wanderer homeless;
Nought he beholds but the heaving surges,
Seagulls dipping and spreading their wings,
Scurries of snow and the scudding hail.
Then his heart is all the heavier,
Sore after sweet dreams sorrow reviveth.
Fain would he hold the forms of his kinsmen,
Longingly leans to them, lovingly greets them;
Slowly their faces swim into distance;
No familiar greeting comes from the fleeting Companies of kinsmen. Care ever shadows
The way of the traveller, whose track is on the waters,
Whose path is on the billows of the boundless deep.

Behold I know not how I may keep
My heart from sinking, heavy with sorrow,
When all life's destiny deeply I ponder, —
Men that are suddenly snatched in their prime,
High-souled heroes; so the whole of this earth

1 Destiny.

1 Old English Poetry, Princeton University Press. 1921.

ty by day droopeth and sinketh to decay. . . .[1]
ow dread is the doom of the last desolation, hen all the wealth of the world shall be waste,
e that is wise may learn, if he looks road o'er this land, where lonely and ruinous, ind-swept walls, waste are standing;
ttering towers, crusted with frost,
umbling wine-halls, bare to the sky.
ead is their revelry, dust are the revellers!
me they have fallen on far fields of battle,
me have gone down in ships on the sea;
me were the prey of the prowling gray-wolf,
me by their loved ones were laid in the earth.
ie Lord of the living hath levelled their mansions,
lenced the sound of the singing and laughter.
mpty and bare are all their habitations,
ondrous works of the giants of old.

e that considers this scene of desolation, id this dark life deeply doth ponder, — attle and blood-shed, burning and slaughter, bringeth to mind, and mournfully he asks:
Where is the warrior, where is the war-horse?
Where is the giver of bounty, where are the boon-companions,
The "dream and the gleam" that gladden the hall?
Alas the bright ale-cup, alas the brave warrior!
Alas the pride of princes! Their prime is no more;
Sunk under night's shadow, as though it never had been!
Where lusty warriors thronged, this lone wall towers,
Weird with dragon-shapes, wondrously carven;
Storm of ash-spears hath stricken the heroes,
Blood-thirsty weapons, Wyrd the supreme.
Wintry blasts now buffet these battlements;
Dreary snow-storms drift up the earth,
The terror of winter when wild and wan
Down from the north with the darkness drives
The ruinous scourge of the ruthless hail.

All this life is labor and sorrow,
Doom of destiny darkens o'er earth.
Wealth is fleeting, friends are fleeting,
Man is fleeting, maid is fleeting,
All this earth's foundations utterly shall pass.[1]

[1] Ten lines are omitted in Professor Spaeth's translation.

[1] Five concluding lines of moralizing comment are omitted in Professor Spaeth's rendering.

KING ALFRED THE GREAT (849–901)

Alfred, King of the West-Saxons from 871 to 901, having driven back the invading Danes, and established his people in security and peace, turned to the problem of their education. He welcomed at his court scholars from many lands. Finding that many, even of his high ecclesiastics, knew little Latin, he translated, or caused to be translated, into English five important books: the Consolation of Philosophy of Boethius, the Pastoral Care of Gregory the Great, the Soliloquies of St. Augustine, the Ecclesiastical History of Bede, and the Universal History of Orosius. Into this last translation he inserted two narratives brought to him by Ohthere, a Norwegian traveller and explorer, and by Wulfstan, who had voyaged into the pagan countries of the eastern Baltic.

The translation of these passages, by C. B. Tinker, is by kind permission of Ginn & Co. reproduced from Cook and Tinker's Select Translations from Old English Prose.

THE VOYAGES OF OHTHERE AND WULFSTAN

Translated by Chauncey B. Tinker

OHTHERE'S FIRST VOYAGE

Ohthere[1] told King Alfred, his lord, that he, of all the Norwegians, dwelt farthest to the north. He said that he lived in the northern part of the country, by the shore of the West Sea. Notwithstanding, the land extended yet farther to the north; but it was all waste, save in a few places here and there where Finns dwell, attracted by the hunting in winter and the sea-fishing in summer. He said that at a certain time he wished to discover how far north the land extended and whether anybody lived north of the waste. So he set out due north along the coast for three days, with the waste land to starboard and the high seas to larboard. By that time he was as far north as whale-fishers ever go. Upon this, he proceeded due north as far as he could sail in the next three days. At that point the land curved to the east — or the sea in on the land, he knew not which; all he knew was that there he waited for a wind from the west, or somewhat from the north-west, and so sailed east, close to land, as far as he could in four days. There he was obliged to wait for a wind from due north, for at that point the land curved due south — or the sea in on the land, he knew not which. Thence he sailed due south, close to land, as far as he could in five days. At that point a great river extended up into the land. Then they turned up into this river, for they durst not sail beyond it for dread of hostile treatment, the land being all inhabited on the other side of the river. He had not encountered any inhabited land since leaving his own home, for to the right the land was uninhabited all the way, save for fishermen, fowlers, and hunters, and these were all Finns; to the left there was always open sea. The Permians had cultivated their land very well, but they durst not enter it. The land of the Terfinns was all waste, save where hunters, fishers, or fowlers encamped.

[1] Pronounce Ocht'-hair-e (with the ch as in German).

The Permians told him many stories both about their own country and about countries which were round them, but he knew not what was true, because he did not see it himself. The Finns and the Permians, it seemed to him, spoke nearly the same language. He made this voyage, in addition to his purpose of seeing the country, chiefly for walruses, for they have very good bone in their teeth — they brought some of these teeth to the king — and their hides are very good for ship-ropes. This whale is much smaller than other whales, being not more than seven ells long; but the best whale-fishing is in his own country — those are eight and forty ells long, and the largest fifty ells long. He said he was one of a party of six who killed sixty of these in two days.

Ohthere was a very wealthy man in such possessions as constitute their wealth, that is, in wild beasts. He still, at the time when he came to the king, had six hundred tame deer that he had not sold. They call these reindeer. Six of these were decoy deer, which are very valuable among the Finns, for it is with them that they capture the wild reindeer. He was among the first men in th land, though he had not more than twent horned cattle, twenty sheep, and twent swine, and the little that he plowed h plowed with horses. But their income chiefly in the tribute that the Finns pa them — skins of animals, feathers of bird whalebone, and ship-ropes made of whale hide and seal's hide. Every one pays a cording to his means; the richest has to pa fifteen marten skins and five reindeer skin one bear skin, forty bushels of feathers, bear- or otter-skin kirtle, and two ship-rope each sixty ells long, one made of whale's hid and the other of seal's.

He said that the country of the Northme was very long and very narrow. All that hi man can use for either grazing or ploughin lies by the sea, and even that is very rocky i some places; and to the east, alongside th inhabited land, lie wild moors. In thes waste lands dwell the Finns. And the in habited land is broadest to the eastward growing ever narrower the farther north To the east it may be sixty miles broad, o even a little broader, and midway thirty o broader; and to the north, where it was nar rowest, he said it might be three miles broa up to the moor. Moreover the moor is s broad in some places that it would take a ma two weeks to cross it, in other places of such a breadth that a man can cross it in si days. . . .

WULFSTAN'S VOYAGE

Wulfstan said that he set out from Haddeby,[1] arriving at Truso after seven days and nights, the ship running all the way under sail. He had Wendland [Mecklenburg and Pomerania] on the starboard, and Langland Laaland, Falster, and Sconey on the larboard; and all these lands belong to Denmark. And then we[2] had on our larboard the land of the Burgundians [Bornholmians], who have their own king. After the land of the Burgundians, we had on our left those lands that were first called Blekinge, and Meore,[3] and Öland, and Gothland; these lands belong to the Swedes. And we had Wendland [the country of the Wends] to the starboard all the way to the mouth of the Vistula. The Vistula is a very large river, separating Witland from Wendland; and Witland belongs to the Esthonians. The Vistula flows out of Wendland, and runs into

1 In Eastern Schleswig. 2 So the Old English.
3 The mainland of Sweden, opposite Öland.

he Frische Haff. The Frische Haff is about teen miles broad. Then the Elbing empties to the Frische Haff, flowing from the east ut of the lake [Drausen] on the shore of hich stands Truso; and there empty to- ether into the Frische Haff, the Elbing from he east, flowing out of Esthonia, and the istula from the south, out of Wendland. he Vistula gives its name to the Elbing, nning out of the mere [the Frische Haff] est and north into the sea; therefore it [the lace where it flows out of the Frische Haff] called the mouth of the Vistula.

Esthonia [Eastland] is very large, and any towns are there, and in every town here is a king. There is also very much oney, and fishing. The king and the richest hen drink mare's milk, but the poor and aves drink mead. There is much strife mong them. There is no ale brewed by the sthonians, but there is mead enough.

There is a custom among the Esthonians hat when a man dies he lies unburnt in his ouse, with his kindred and friends, a month – sometimes two; and the kings and other hen of high rank still longer, in proportion to heir wealth; it is sometimes half a year that hey remain unburnt, lying above ground, in heir houses. All the while that the body is ithin there is to be drinking and sports until he day he is burned. The same day on hich they are to bear him to the pyre they ivide his property, what is left after the rinking and sports, into five or six parts — ometimes into more, according to the amount of his goods. Then they lay the largest share about a mile from the town, then the second, then the third, till it is all laid within the one mile; and the smallest part must be nearest the town in which the dead man lies. Then there are assembled all the men in the land that have the swiftest horses, about five or six miles from the goods. Then they all run toward the goods, and the man who has the swiftest horse comes to the first and largest portion, and so one after another till it be all taken; and he who arrives at the goods nearest the town gets the smallest portion. Then each man goes his way with the goods, and he may keep them all; and for this reason swift horses are excessively dear in that country. When his property is thus all spent, they bear him out and burn him with his weapons and clothes. Usually they spend all his wealth, what with the long time that the corpse lies within and what with the goods that they lay along the roads, and that the strangers race for and carry off.

It is also a custom among the Esthonians to burn men of every tribe, and if any one finds a bone unburned they have to make great amends for it.

There is one tribe among the Esthonians that has the power of producing cold, and it is because they produce this cold upon them that the corpses lie so long without decaying. And if a man sets two vats full of ale or water, they cause both to be frozen over, whether it be summer or winter.

THE BATTLE OF BRUNANBURH

Translated by Tennyson

In the year 937, Athelstan, son of Edward the Elder, grandson of Alfred the Great, and king of he West-Saxons and Mercians, defeated the allied armies of Constantine, king of the Scots, and Anlaf (or Olaf), leader of the Norsemen who a hundred years earlier had established themselves in reland. The poem which describes the battle is entered in the Saxon Chronicle under the year 937. It is in the same metrical form as Beowulf and the rest of Old English poetry; but Tennyson's ersion, based on a prose translation by his son Hallam, treats the half-line of two beats as the metrical unit.

THE BATTLE OF BRUNANBURH

I

Athelstan King,
Lord among Earls,
Bracelet-bestower and Baron of Barons,
He with his brother,
Edmund Atheling,
Gaining a lifelong Glory in battle,
Slew with the sword-edge
There by Brunanburh,
Brake the shield-wall,
Hewed the linden-wood,[1]
Hacked the battle-shield,
Sons of Edward with hammered brands.

1 Shields of linden-wood.

II

Theirs was a greatness
Got from their grandsires —
Theirs that so often in Strife with their enemies
Struck for their hoards and their hearths and their homes.

III

Bowed the spoiler,
Bent the Scotsman,
Fell the ship-crews
Doomed to the death.
All the field with blood of the fighters
Flowed, from when first the great
Sun-star of morning-tide,
Lamp of the Lord God
Lord everlasting,
Glode over earth till the glorious creature
Sank to his setting.

IV

There lay many a man
Marred by the javelin,
Men of the Northland
Shot over shield.
There was the Scotsman
Weary of war.

V

We the West-Saxons,
Long as the daylight
Lasted, in companies
Troubled the track of the host that we hated.
Grimly with swords that were sharp from the grindstone,
Fiercely we hacked at the flyers before us.

VI

Mighty the Mercian,
Hard was his hand-play,
Sparing not any of Those that with Anlaf,
Warriors over the Weltering waters
Borne in the bark's-bosom,
Drew to this island —
Doomed to the death.

VII

Five young kings put asleep by the sword-stroke,
Seven strong Earls of the army of Anlaf
Fell on the war-field, numberless numbers,
Shipmen and Scotsmen.

VIII

Then the Norse leader,
Dire was his need of it,
Few were his following,
Fled to his war-ship;
Fleeted his vessel to sea with the king in it,
Saving his life on the fallow flood.

IX

Also the crafty one,
Constantinus,
Crept to his North again,
Hoar-headed hero!

X

Slender warrant had
He to be proud of
The welcome of war-knives —
He that was reft of his Folk and his friends that had Fallen in conflict,
Leaving his son too
Lost in the carnage,
Mangled to morsels,
A youngster in war!

XI

Slender reason had
He to be glad of
The clash of the war-glaive —
Traitor and trickster
And spurner of treaties —
He nor had Anlaf
With armies so broken
A reason for bragging
That they had the better
In perils of battle
On places of slaughter —
The struggle of standards,
The rush of the javelins,
The crash of the charges,[1]
The wielding of weapons —
The play that they played with
The children of Edward.

XII

Then with their nailed prows
Parted the Norsemen, a Blood-reddened relic of Javelins over
The jarring breaker, the deep-sea billow,
Shaping their way toward Dyflen[2] again
Shamed in their souls.

1 Lit. "the gathering of men." 2 Dublin.

XIII

Also the brethren,
King and Atheling,
Each in his glory,
Went to his own in his own West-Saxonland,
Glad of the war.

XIV

Many a carcase they left to be carrion,
Many a livid one, many a sallow-skin —
Left for the white-tailed eagle to tear it, and Left for the horny-nibbed raven to rend it, and Gave to the garbaging war-hawk to gorge it, and That gray beast, the wolf of the weald.

XV

Never had huger
Slaughter of heroes
Slain by the sword-edge —
Such as old writers
Have writ of in histories —
Hapt in this isle, since
Up from the East hither
Saxon and Angle from Over the broad billow Broke into Britain with Haughty war-workers who Harried the Welshman, when Earls that were lured by the Hunger of glory gat
Hold of the land.

THE BATTLE OF MALDON

Translated by J. Duncan Spaeth[1]

The battle of Maldon was fought in the year 991 on the shores of a tidal river near the coast of Essex, where a marauding band of Vikings under the famous Olaf Tryggvason had made a landing. Byrhtnoth, alderman of Essex, and liegeman of King Æthelred the Redeless, hastily gathered an army and marched against him. He was killed in the battle, and his army was defeated. The poem is a spirited song of heroic defeat, written, apparently, by some one who had first-hand knowledge of the events, and who was also familiar with the Old English epic poetry of the seventh and eighth centuries.

THE BATTLE OF MALDON

The beginning of the poem is lost. The first sixteen lines of the remaining portion describe how Byrhtnoth's men, arrived at the battle field, dismount and turn their horses loose, how one of them sends his hawk flying to the wood, and how the East Saxon alderman proceeds to marshal his band on the banks of the stream. The poem continues as follows:

Byrhtnoth encouraged his comrades heartily;
Rode through the ranks and roused their spirits;
Marshalled his men to meet the onset;
Showed them how they should hold their shields
Firm in their grip, and fearless stand.
When he had briskly whetted their courage,
He leaped from his steed and stood with his people,
His hearth-band beloved and household thanes.

Then strode to the strand a stalwart Northman,
The viking herald. They heard him shout,
Send o'er the tide the taunt of the pirates;
Hailing the earl, he hurled this challenge:

"Bold sea-rovers bade me tell thee
Straightway thou must send them tribute,
Rings for ransom, royal treasure;
Better with gifts ye buy us off,
Ere we deal hard blows and death in battle.
Why spill we blood when the bargain is easy?
Give us the pay and we grant ye peace.
If thou dost agree, who art greatest here,
To ransom thy folk with the fee we demand,
And give to the seamen the gold they ask,
Pay with tribute for treaty of peace,
We load the booty aboard our ships,
Haul to sea and hold the truce."
Byrhtnoth spake, he brandished his spear,
Lifted his shield and shouted aloud,
Grim was his wrath as he gave them his answer:
"Hearest thou, pirate, my people's reply?
Ancient swords they will send for ransom;
Poison-tipped points they will pay for tribute;
Treasure that scarce will serve you in battle.
Go back pirate, give them my answer;
Bring them this word of bitter defiance;
Tell them here standeth, stern and intrepid,
The earl with his folk, to defend his country,
Æthelred's realm, the rights of my lord,
His house and his home; the heathen shall fall,
Pirates and robbers. My people were shamed,

[1] Old English Poetry, Princeton University Press, 1921

If ye loaded our booty aboard your ships,
And floated them off unfought for, to sea,
Having sailed so far, to set foot on our soil.
Not all so easily earn ye our gold!
Sword-blades and spear-points we sell you first;
Battle-play grim, ere ye get our tribute!"

Forward he told his troop to come,
To step under shield and stand by the shore.
The breadth of the stream kept the bands asunder;
Strong came flowing the flood after ebb,
Filled the channel, and foamed between them.
Impatient stood by Panta stream,
East-Saxon host and horde of the pirates,
Longing to lock their lances in battle.
Neither could harass or harm the other,
Save that some fell by the flight of arrows.

Down went the tide, the Danes were ready;
Burned for battle the band of the Vikings;
On the bridge stood Wulfstan, and barred their way.
Byrhtnoth sent him, a seasoned warrior,
Ceola's son, with his kinsmen to hold it.
The first of the Vikings who ventured to set Foot on the bridge, he felled with his spear.
Two sturdy warriors stood with Wulfstan,
Maccus and Ælfhere, mighty pair,
Kept the approach where the crossing was shallow;
Defended the bridge, and fought with the boldest,
As long as their hands could lift a sword.
When the strangers discovered and clearly saw
What bitter fighters the bridgewards proved,
They tried a trick, the treacherous robbers,
Begged they might cross, and bring their crews
Over the shallows, and up to the shore.
The earl was ready, in reckless daring,
To let them land too great a number.
Byrhthelm's son,[1] while the seamen listened,
Called across, o'er the cold water:
"Come ye seamen, come and fight us!
We give you ground, but God alone knows
Who to-day shall hold the field."

Strode the battle-wolves bold through the water;
West over Panta waded the pirates;
Carried their shields o'er the shining waves;
Safely their lindenwoods landed the sailors.
Byrhtnoth awaited them, braced for the onslaught,

1 Byrhtnoth.

Haughty and bold at the head of his band.
Bade them build the bristling war-hedge,
Shield against shield, to shatter the enemy.
Near was the battle, now for the glory,
Now for the death of the doomed in the field.
Swelled the war-cry, circled the ravens,
Screamed the eagle, eager for prey;
Sped from the hand the hard-forged spear-head,
Showers of darts, sharp from the grindstone.
Bows were busy, bolt stuck in buckler;
Bitter the battle-rush, brave men fell,
Heroes on either hand, hurt in the fray.
Wounded was Wulfmær, went to his battle-rest;
Cruelly mangled, kinsman of Byrhtnoth,
Son of his sister, slain on the field.

Pay of vengeance they paid the Vikings;
I heard of the deed of the doughty Edward:
He struck with his sword a stroke that was mighty,
Down fell the doomed man, dead at his feet.
For this the thane got the thanks of his leader,
Praise that was due for his prowess in fight.
Grimly they held their ground in the battle,
Strove with each other the stout-hearted heroes,
Strove with each other, eager to strike
First with their darts the foe that was doomed.
Warriors thronged, the wounded lay thick.
Stalwart and steady they stood about Byrhtnoth.
Bravely he heartened them, bade them to win
Glory in battle by beating the Danes.
Raising his shield, he rushed at the enemy;
Covered by buckler, he came at a Viking;
Charged him furious, earl against churl,
Each for the other had evil in store.
The sailorman sent from the south a javelin,
Sorely wounding the war-band's leader;
He shoved with his shield, the shaft snapped short;
The spear was splintered and sprang against him;
Wroth was Byrhtnoth, reached for his weapon;
Gored the Viking that gave him the wound.
Straight went the lance, strong was the leader;
Sheer through the throat of the pirate he thrust it.
His dart meant death, so deadly his aim.
Swiftly he sent him a second javelin,

That crashed through the corslet and cleft his bosom,
Wounded him sore through his woven mail;
The poisonous spear-head stood in his heart.
Blithe was the leader, laughed in his breast,
Thanked his Lord for that day's work.

Now one of the pirates poised his weapon;
Sped from his hand a spear that wounded
Through and through the thane of Æthelred.[1]
There stood at his side a stripling youth;
Brave was the boy; he bent o'er his lord,
Drew from his body the blood-dripping dart.
'Twas Wulfmær the youthful, Wulfstan's son;
Back he hurled the hard-forged spear.
In went the point, to earth fell the pirate
Who gave his master the mortal hurt.
A crafty seaman crept toward the earl,
Eager to rob him of armor and rings,
Bracelets and gear and graven sword.
Then Byrhtnoth drew his blade from the sheath,
Broad and blood-stained, struck at the breast-plate.
But one of the seamen stopped the warrior,
Beat down the arm of the earl with his lance.
Fell to the ground the gray-hilted sword;
No more he might grasp his goodly blade,
Wield his weapon; yet words he could utter;
The hoar-headed warrior heartened his men;
Bade them forward to fare and be brave.
When the stricken leader no longer could stand,
He looked to heaven and lifted his voice:
"I render Thee thanks, O Ruler of men,
For the joys Thou hast given, that gladdened my life.
Merciful Maker, now most I need,
Thy goodness to grant me a gracious end,
That my soul may swiftly speed to Thee,
Come to Thy keeping, O King of angels,
Depart in peace. I pray Thee Lord
That the fiends of hell may not harm my spirit."
The heathen pirates then hewed him to pieces,
And both the brave men that by him stood;
Ælfnoth and Wulfmær, wounded to death,
Gave their lives for their lord in the fight.

Then quitted the field the cowards and faint-hearts;
The son of Odda started the flight.
Godric abandoned his good lord in battle,
Who many a steed had bestowed on his thane.
Leaped on the horse that belonged to his leader,
Not his were the trappings, he had no right to them.
Both of his brothers basely fled with him,
Godwin and Godwy, forgetful of honor,
Turned from the fight, and fled to the woods,
Seeking the cover, and saving their lives.
Those were with them, who would have remained,
Had they remembered how many favors
Their lord had done them in days of old.
Offa foretold it, what time he arose
To speak where they met to muster their forces.
Many, he said, were mighty in words
Whose courage would fail when it came to fighting.
There lay on the field the lord of the people,
Æthelred's earl; all of them saw him,
His hearth-companions beheld him dead.
Forward went fighting the fearless warriors,
Their courage was kindled, no cowards were they;
Their will was fixed on one or the other:
To lose their life, or avenge their leader.
Ælfwiné spoke to them, son of Ælfric,
Youthful in years, but unyielding in battle;
Roused their courage, and called them to honor:
"Remember the time when we talked in the mead-hall,
When bold on our benches we boasted our valor,
Deeds of daring we'd do in the battle!
Now we may prove whose prowess is true.
My birth and my breeding I boldly proclaim:
I am sprung from a mighty Mercian line.
Aldhelm the alderman, honored and prosperous,
He was my grandsire, great was his fame:
My people who know me shall never reproach me,
Say I was ready to run from the battle,
Back to my home, and abandon my leader,
Slain on the field. My sorrow is double,
Both kinsman and lord I've lost in the fight."
Forward he threw himself, thirsting for vengeance;
Sent his javelin straight at a pirate.
Fell with a crash his foe to the earth,
His life-days ended. Then onward he strode,
Urging his comrades to keep in the thick of it.

[1] Byrhtnoth.

Up spake Offa, with ashen spear lifted:
"Well hast thou counselled us, well hast encouraged;
Noble Ælfwiné, needs must we follow thee.
Now that our leader lies low on the field,
Needs must we steadfastly stand by each other,
Close in the conflict keeping together,
As long as our hands can hold a weapon,
Good blade wield. Godric the coward,
Son of Odda, deceived us all.
Too many believed 'twas our lord himself,
When they saw him astride the war-steed proud.
His run-away ride our ranks hath broken,
Shattered the shield-wall. Shame on the dastard,
Who caused his comrades like cowards to fly!"
Up spake Leofsunu, lifted his linden-wood,
Answered his comrades from under his shield:
"Here I stand, and here shall I stay!
Not a foot will I flinch, but forward I'll go!
Vengeance I've vowed for my valiant leader.
Now that my friend is fallen in battle,
My people shall never reproach me, in Stourmere;
Call me deserter, and say I returned,
Leaderless, lordless, alone from the fight.
Better is battle-death; boldly I welcome
The edge and the iron." Full angry he charged,
Daring all danger, disdaining to fly.

Up spake Dunheré, old and faithful,
Shook his lance and shouted aloud,
Bade them avenge the valiant Byrhtnoth:
"Wreak on the Danes the death of our lord!
Unfit is for vengeance who values his life."
Fell on the foe the faithful body-guard,
Battle-wroth spearmen, beseeching God
That they might avenge the thane of Æthelred,
Pay the heathen with havoc and slaughter.
The son of Ecglaf, Æscferth by name,
Sprung from a hardy North-humbrian race,
— He was their hostage, — helped them manfully.
Never he faltered or flinched in the war-play;
Lances a plenty he launched at the pirates,
Shot them on shield, or sheer through the breast-plate;
Rarely he missed them, many he wounded,
While he could wield his weapon in battle.
Still Edward the long held out at the front;
Brave and defiant, he boasted aloud
That he would not yield a hair's breadth of ground,
Nor turn his back where his better lay dead.
He broke through the shield-wall, breasted the foe,
Worthily paid the pirate warriors
For the life of his lord ere he laid him down.
Near him Æthelric, noble comrade,
Brother of Sibryht, brave and untiring,
Mightily fought, and many another;
Hacked the hollow shields, holding their own.
Bucklers were broken, the breast-plate sang
Its gruesome song. The sword of Offa
Went home to the hilt in the heart of a Viking.
But Offa himself soon had to pay for it,
The kinsman of Gadd succumbed in the fight.
Yet ere he fell, he fulfilled his pledge,
The promise he gave to his gracious lord,
That both should ride to their burg together,
Home to their friends, or fall in the battle,
Killed in conflict and covered with wounds;
He lay by his lord, a loyal thane.
Mid clash of shields the shipmen came on,
Maddened by battle. Full many a lance
Home was thrust to the heart of the doomed.
Then sallied forth Wistan, Wigelin's son;
Three of the pirates he pierced in the throng,
Ere he fell, by his friends, on the field of slaughter.
Bitter the battle-rush, bravely struggled
Heroes in armor, while all around them
The wounded dropped and the dead lay thick.
Oswold and Eadwold all the while
Their kinsmen and comrades encouraged bravely,
Both of the brothers bade their friends
Never to weaken or weary in battle,
But keep up their sword-play, keen to the end.
Up spake Byrhtwold, brandished his ash-spear,
— He was a tried and true old hero, —
Lifted his shield and loudly called to them:
"Heart must be keener, courage the hardier,
Bolder our mood as our band diminisheth.
Here lies in his blood our leader and comrade,
The brave on the beach. Bitter shall rue it
Who turns his back on the battle-field now.
Here I stay; I am stricken and old;
My life is done; I shall lay me down
Close by my lord and comrade dear."

Six more lines and the MS. breaks off. There cannot have been much left. The battle is over.

THE LATER MIDDLE AGES

THE LATER MIDDLE AGES

Edward the Confessor (reigned 1042–66), the last English king before the Conquest, had spent s youth in exile at the court of Normandy, and during his reign he surrounded himself with ench-speaking courtiers and ecclesiastics. The Norman Conquest of 1066 determined for the xt three centuries the predominance in England of French culture and French literature. There s no conscious effort on the part of the conquerors to force their language on the country; but the eat estates were in the hands of French-speaking nobles, and all the higher offices of the Church re held by French-speaking ecclesiastics. French thus became the official and polite language of e realm, and English was depressed into the position of an illiterate dialect, though it continued thout interruption to be spoken by the great mass of the population. So far as the finer issues of e were concerned, England was a province of France.

During the twelfth and thirteenth centuries many books were written on English soil, for it was a ne of eager intellectual activity; but they were written either in Latin, the language of the learned roughout Western Europe, or in courtly French. Only rarely was English used for literary purses, as by Layamon in his long poem the Brut (about 1200), or in such graceful lyrics as "Sumer icumen in."

Relegated almost exclusively to the everyday uses of unlettered speakers, English suffered dical and rapid change. Careless speakers spoke it ungrammatically, with confusion in the use of flected forms, with slipshod utterance; and there was no one who cared to set them right. Every strict had its own dialect, and there was no standard by which to measure good speech and bad.
he rich vocabulary of Old English became impoverished through the disuse of all the words for uch uneducated people have no need. When in the fourteenth century English became once ore the language of literature, it had lost the elaborate inflections of King Alfred's speech, and as almost as simple in its grammatical structure as it is to-day; and the losses in its vocabulary d been made good by wholesale borrowings from French and Latin. The language of Beowulf is r us to-day in effect a foreign language which we must laboriously learn; the language of Chaucer, spite some unfamiliar and obsolete words and forms, is essentially our own speech.

The temper of English literature was also profoundly affected by the long supremacy of French.
he poetry of Anglo-Saxon England has both vigor and elevation, but lacks most of the lighter aces. It is concerned with the serious, the grimmer aspects of life — with battle and storm and dden death, the cold gray ocean and the wild moorland. There is not in the whole of it a single ve-story. There is no wit or humor or delicate play of fancy. All these elements in which our odern literature is so rich are part of what we have learned from the French.

Of all the forms of literature which flourished in medieval France and Anglo-Norman England he most important was the romance of chivalrous adventure and courtly love. In these poems, hich often extend themselves to inordinate length, knights, perfect in courtesy as in valor, pass rough marvelous adventures and pay tribute of extravagant and despairing devotion to a noble istress whose every wish is their supreme law. Very characteristic of them is this worship of omanhood, which has its spiritual analogue in the deep devotion paid to the person of the Blessed irgin. The matter of these romances is sometimes drawn from the stories of classical antiquity, in the romances on which are founded Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde and the Knight's tale of alamon and Arcite; sometimes from the exploits of Charlemagne and his peers; and, chief source all, from the cycle of romantic adventures which grew up about the legendary figure of King rthur. Most perfect of all the romances in English is Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, the action which begins and ends in Arthur's court. In the fifteenth century, Sir Thomas Malory retold in ately English prose the whole cycle of Arthurian romances, and made them an integral part of nglish literature.

Another important type is the allegory, which most often takes the form of a dream-vision in hich, as in the Romance of the Rose and in Chaucer's Parliament of Fowls, the poet is transported a lovely garden where he meets such abstract personages as Idleness, Fair-Welcome, Mirth, and Vicked-Tongue. This form serves in the Vision of Piers Plowman as the vehicle of trenchant ocial satire.

Romance and allegory, saint's legend and moral tale, the fable of beasts who talk like men, the nort realistic tale of sordid realities, the balade and roundelay, these and other literary forms had een developed in the French literature of the thirteenth century, and were ready for immediate doption by the authors of the fourteenth century who discovered that English also was capable of terary use. Gower had written a long poem in French, and another in Latin, before he wrote in nglish his Confessio Amantis. Chaucer was steeped in the literature of France, and may well have written French verses in his youthful days. Both Chaucer and Gower learned their art and the forms of their verse from French sources, though Chaucer drew inspiration also from the great writers of Italy and from the poetry of ancient Rome. But the tradition of the Old English alliterative unrhymed verse had lingered on, and Piers Plowman is written in a measure similar to that of Beowulf. Sir Gawain and the Green Knight uses the same measure combined with short quatrains of rhyming verse.

The fourteenth century in England is a period of great literary and intellectual activity. While Chaucer with his delicate irony and the poet of Piers Plowman with his grim humor and moral earnestness were showing how far practice had departed from the fair ideal of medieval society, the reformer Wiclif was openly questioning the fundamental theories of the medieval Church and was translating into English the Latin Vulgate Bible.

The fifteenth century, on the other hand, is for English literature a relatively barren period. Lydgate, Occleve, King James of Scotland, and many others tried with very indifferent success to carry on the poetical tradition of Chaucer and Gower. Much was written both in prose and verse; but, if we except the popular ballads some of which may date from the fifteenth century, nothing of first-rate importance remains except the splendid prose of Sir Thomas Malory's Morte Darthur.

An excellent account in brief compass of the literature of the period, French and Latin as well as English, is C. S. Baldwin's English Medieval Literature (Longmans). More detailed is W. H. Schofield's History of English Literature from the Norman Conquest to Chaucer (Macmillan). W. P. Ker's Epic and Romance (Macmillan) and English Literature, Medieval (Holt) are excellent guides. For a fuller body of selections than is possible in the present volume, see Neilson and Webster's Chief British Poets of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Houghton Mifflin). An exhaustive scholarly bibliography of the period is J. E. Wells's Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050–1400.

---

EARLY ENGLISH LYRICS

"SUMER IS ICUMEN IN"

This song, written about 1240, is found, with musical setting, in MS. Harleian 978 of the British Museum.

Sumer is icumen [1] in;
Lhude [2] sing, cuccu!
Groweth sed, and bloweth [3] med,[4]
And springth the wude [5] nu.
Sing, cuccu!
Awe [6] bleteth after lomb,
Lhouth [7] after calve cu;
Bulluc sterteth,[8] bucke verteth; [9]
Murie [10] sing, cuccu!
Cuccu! cuccu!
Wel singes thu, cuccu;
Ne swik [11] thu naver [12] nu.

1 come. 2 loudly. 3 bloometh. 4 meadow. 5 wood. 6 ewe. 7 loweth. 8 frisketh. 9 breaks wind. 10 merrily. 11 cease. 12 never.

ALYSOUN

Bytuene Mersh and Averil,
When spray biginneth to springe,
The lutel foul hath hire wyl
On hyre lud [13] to synge.
Ic libbe [14] in love-longinge
For semlokest [15] of alle thinge;
He [16] may me blisse bringe;
Icham [1] in hire baundoun.[2]
An hendy hap ichabbe yhent; [3]
Ichot [4] from hevene it is me sent;
From alle wymmen mi love is lent,[5]
And lyht [6] on Alysoun.

On heu [7] hire her [8] is fayr ynoh,[9]
Hire browe broune, hire eye blake;
With lossum chere he on me loh, [10]
With middel [11] smal and wel ymake.
Bote [12] he me wolle to hire take,
For te buen [13] hire owen make,[14]
Longe to lyven ichulle [15] forsake,
And feye [16] fallen adoun.

Nihtes when I wende [17] and wake,
Forthi [18] myn wonges [19] waxeth won;
Levedi,[20] al for thine sake
Longinge is ylent me on.[21]
In world nis non so wyter mon,[22]
That al hire bounte telle con.
Hire swyre [23] is whittore then the swon,
And feyrest may [24] in toune.

13 language. 14 I live. 15 goodliest. 16 she.

1 I am. 2 power. 3 A kindly fate I have lighted on. 4 I know. 5 turned. 6 lighted. 7 color. 8 hair. 9 enough. 10 With loving mien she on me laughed. 11 waist. 12 unless. 13 be. 14 mate. 15 I shall. 16 death-stricken. 17 turn. 18 for this reason. 19 cheeks. 20 lady. 21 appointed to me. 22 wise man. 23 neck. 24 maid.

Icham for wowing al forwake,[1]
Wery so water in wore.[2]
Lest eny reve[3] me my make,
Ichabbe y-yerned yore.[4]
Beter is tholien whyle sore,[5]
Then mournen evermore.

Geynest under gore,[1]
Herkne to my roun.[2]
An hendy hap ichabbe yhent;
Ichot from hevene it is me sent;
From alle wymmen mi love is lent,
And lyht on Alysoun.

About 1310.

PIERS THE PLOWMAN

e Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman was very popular in its own day, and is document of great historical and literary interest. It has come down to us in three distinct ons. Version A, written soon after 1362, consists of a prologue and twelve "passus" or can- and contains nearly 2600 lines. Version B, written about 1377, contains the material of Ver- A with many revisions and additions, and adds ten new passus. It is nearly three times as as A. Version C, written between 1393 and 1398, is a revision of Version B, but a revision h does not add materially to the number of verses.

e poem consists of a series of dream-visions, allegorically interpreted as criticisms of human — the life of the individual and the life of society as a whole. The world of fourteenth-century and, the "fair field full of folk," as the dreamer sees it, is seriously out of joint. Many of the are the same which in the kindlier pages of Chaucer are exposed to good-natured laughter. author of Piers the Plowman is by no means lacking in humor; but it is a humor of a grimmer than Chaucer's. His satire is informed with moral indignation, with the reformer's zeal to call anity back to the ideals, religious and social, from which it has strayed.

ho was the author, we do not know. In all three of the versions the dreamer is called Will or iam; and tradition has called the author William Langland. But the authenticity of this tradi- is doubtful. Whether Versions B and C are the work of the original author, or of other men took up his work and carried it on in his spirit, is also matter of dispute.

he metre is the unrhymed, alliterating measure of Beowulf, the tradition of which survived the man Conquest and was revived by many English poets of the fourteenth century, at the very e when Chaucer and Gower were establishing the more regular rhymed verse of their French and ian models.

iers the Plowman has been edited by W. W. Skeat for the Oxford University Press. The selec- s here printed — the Prologue and Passus V of Version A — are from the translation into mod- English by Neilson and Webster printed in Chief British Poets of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth turies (Houghton Mifflin Co.).

THE VISION OF WILLIAM CONCERNING PIERS THE PLOWMAN

VERSION A

PROLOGUE

a summer season, when soft was the sun, lad me in rough clothing, a shepherd as I were;
habit of a hermit, unholy of works,
nt I wide in this world, wonders to hear.
t on a May morning on Malvern Hills me befell a marvel, a fairy thing me-thought.
as weary of wandering and went me to rest der a broad bank by a burn side;
And as I lay and leaned and looked on the waters,
I slumbered in a sleep, it sounded so pleasant.
Then did I dream a marvellous dream,
That I was in a wilderness, wist I not where;
And as I beheld into the east, on high to the sun,
I saw a tower on a hill-top, splendidly fashioned;
A deep dale beneath, a dungeon therein,
With a deep ditch and dark, and dreadful to see.
A fair field full of folk found I there between,
Of all manner of men, the mean and the rich,
Working and wandering, as the world requireth.
Some put them to the plow, and played full seldom,

I am, because of my yearning, exhausted by lying ke.
weir (?). 3 rob.
yearned long. 5 suffer for a while sorely.
1 loveliest alive (lit. in a dress). 2 song.

In plowing and sowing produced they full hardly
What many of these wasters in gluttony destroy.
And some gave themselves to pride, appareled them accordingly,
In fashion of clothing strangely disguised.
To prayer and to penance put themselves many,
For love of our Lord lived they full hard,
In hope to have the bliss of heaven's kingdom,
As anchorites and hermits that hold themselves in cells,
Covet not in the country to gad all about,
With luxurious living their body to please.
And some chose trade, to prosper the better,
As it seems to our sight that such men should;
And some mirth to make, as minstrels can,
And get gold with their glee, guiltless, I trow.
But jesters and buffoons, Judas's children,
Found for themselves fantasies and of themselves fools made,
Yet have their wits at command, to work if they will.
What Paul preached of them I dare not prove here;
Qui loquitur turpiloquium,[1] he is Lucifer's servant.
Askers and beggars fast about flitted,
Till their bags and their bellies brimful were crammed;
Feigned for their food, fought at the alehouse;
In gluttony, God wot, go they to bed
And rise up with ribaldry, these bullying beggar-knaves;
Sleep and sloth follow them ever.
Pilgrims and palmers pledge themselves together
To seek the shrine of St. James and saints at Rome;
Went forth in their way with many wise tales,
And had leave to lie all their life after.
Hermits in a band with hooked staves
Went to Walsingham, and their wenches after.
Great lubbers and long, that loath were to work,
Clothed themselves in capes to be known for brethren,
And some dressed as hermits their ease to have.

1 He who speaketh baseness.

I found there friars, all the four orders,
Preaching to the people for profit of the bellies,
Interpreting the gospel as they well please
For covetousness of capes construes it ill;
For many of these masters may clothe themselves at will,
For money and their merchandise meet together.
Since Charity hath turned trader, and shriven chiefly lords,
Many wonders have befallen in these few years.
Unless Holy Church now be better held together
The most mischief on earth will mount up fast.
There preached a pardoner, as he a priest were,
And brought up a bull with bishop's seals,
And said he himself would absolve them all
From breach of fasting and broken vows.
The laymen liked him well, believed his speech,
And came up kneeling and kissed his bull;
He banged them with his brevet,[1] and bleared their eyes,
And purchased with his parchment rings and brooches.
Thus ye give your gold gluttony to help,
And grant it to rascals that run after lechery.
Were the bishop holy and worth both his ears,
They should not be so brazen to deceive the people.
Yet it is not against the bishop that the knave preacheth;
But the parish priest and pardoner share the silver
That the poor parishioners should have but for them.
Parsons and parish priests complain to their bishops
That their parish hath been poor since the pestilence[2] time,
And ask leave and licence at London to dwell
To sing there for simony,[3] for silver is sweet.
There hang about a hundred in hoods of silk,
Sergeants, it seems, to serve at the bar;
Plead at the law for pence and for pounds,
Not for love of our Lord unloose their lips once.

1 letter of indulgence.
2 Probably the great plague of 1348–1349.
3 getting money singing anniversary masses for the dead.

u mightest better measure the mist on Malvern hills
n get a mum of their mouth till money be shown.
saw there bishops bold and bachelors of divinity ome clerks of account, the king to serve;
ndeacons and deacons, that dignity have preach to the people and poor men to feed,
e leapt to London, by leave of their bishops, be clerks of the King's Bench, to the country's hurt.
arons and burgesses, and husbandmen also,
aw in that assembly, as ye shall hear hereafter.
akers, butchers, and brewers many,
ollen weavers, and weavers of linen,
lors, tanners, and fullers also,
sons, miners, and many other crafts,
chers and delvers, that do their work ill,
d drive forth the long day with "Dieu vous sauve, dame Emma." [1]
ooks and their boys cry "Hot pies, hot!
od geese and pigs, go dine, go dine!"
verners to them told the same tale
th good wine of Gascony and wine of Alsace, Rhine and of Rochelle, the roast to digest.
this I saw sleeping, and seven times more.

PASSUS V

The king and his knights to the church went hear matins and mass, and to the meat after.
hen waked I from my winking, I was woful withal hat I had not heavier slept and seen more.
e I a furlong had fared, a faintness me seized, hat further might I not a-foot, for default of sleep.
sat softly adown, and said my creed,
nd so I babbled on my beads that it brought me asleep.
hen saw I much more than I before told,
or I saw the field full of folk that I before showed,
nd Conscience with a cross came to preach.
He prayed the people to have pity on themselves,
nd proved that these pestilences were for pure sin,
And this southwestern wind on a Saturday at even
Was clearly for pride, and for no cause else,
Peartrees and plumtrees were dashed to the ground,
In ensample to men that we should do the better.
Beeches and broad oaks were blown to the earth.
And turned the tail upward in token of dread
That deadly sin ere Doomsday should destroy them all.
On this matter I might mumble full long,
But I say as I saw, so help me God!
How Conscience with a cross commenced to preach.
He bade wasters go work at what they best could,
And win what they wasted with some sort of craft.
He prayed Peronelle her fur-trimming to leave,
And keep it in her coffer for capital at need.
Thomas he taught to take two staves,
And fetch home Felice from the cucking-stool.
He warned Wat his wife was to blame,
That her head-dress was worth a mark and his hood worth a groat.
He charged merchants to chasten their children,
Let them lack no respect, while they are young.
He prayed priests and prelates together,
What they preach to the people to prove it in themselves —
"And live as ye teach us, we will love you the better."
And then he advised the orders their rule to obey —
"Lest the king and his council abridge your supplies,
And be steward in your stead, till ye be better ordered.
And ye that seek St. James, and saints at Rome,
Seek me Saint Truth, for He can save you all;
Qui cum patre et filio, fare you well!"
Then ran Repentance and rehearsed this theme,
And made William to weep water with his eyes.
Pride Pernel Proud-heart flung herself on the ground,
And lay long ere she looked up, and to Our Lady cried,

[1] "God save you, dame Emma" — apparently a popular song.

And promised to Him who all of us made
She would unsew her smock, and wear instead a hair shirt
To tame her flesh with, that frail was to sin:
"Shall never light heart seize me, but I shall hold me down
And endure to be slandered as I never did before.
And now I can put on meekness, and mercy beseech
Of all of whom I have had envy in my heart."

Lust Lecher said "Alas!" and to Our Lady cried
To win for him mercy for his misdeeds,
Between God himself and his poor soul,
Provided that he should on Saturday, for seven years,
Drink but with the duck and dine but once.

Envy Envy, with heavy heart, asketh after shrift,
And greatly his guiltiness beginneth to show.
Pale as a pellet, in a palsy he seemed,
Clothed in a coarse cloth, I could him not describe;
A kirtle and a short cloak, a knife by his side;
Of a friar's frock were the fronts of his sleeves.
As a leek that had lain long in the sun
So looked he with lean cheeks; foully he frowned.
His body was swollen; for wrath he bit his lips.
Wrathfully he clenched his fist, he thought to avenge himself
With works or with words, when he saw his time.
"Venom, or varnish, or vinegar, I trow,
Boils in my belly, or grows there, I ween.
Many a day could I not do as a man ought,
Such wind in my belly welleth ere I dine.
I have a neighbor nigh me, I have annoyed him oft,
Blamed him behind his back, to bring him in disgrace,
Injured him by my power, punished him full oft,
Belied him to lords, to make him lose silver,
Turned his friends to foes, with my false tongue;
His grace and his good luck grieve me full sore.
Between him and his household I have made wrath;
Both his life and his limb were lost through my tongue.
When I met in the market him I most hate,
I hailed him as courteously as if I were his friend.
He is doughtier than I, I dare do him harm.
But had I mastery and might, I had mu dered him for ever!
When I come to the church, and kneel befo the rood,
And should pray for the people, as the pri teacheth us,
Then I cry upon my knees that Christ gi them sorrow
That have borne away my bowl and broad sheet.
From the altar I turn mine eye and hold
How Henry hath a new coat, and his wi another;
Then I wish it were mine, and all the w with it.
At his losing I laugh, in my heart I like it
But at his winning I weep, and bewail t occasion.
I deem that men do ill, yet I do mu worse,
For I would that every wight in this wor were my servant,
And whoso hath more than I, maketh m heart angry.
Thus I live loveless, like an ill-tempere dog,
That all my breast swelleth with the bitte ness of my gall;
No sugar is sweet enough to assuage it all,
Nor no remedy drive it from my heart;
If shrift then should sweep it out, a gre wonder it were."
"Yes, surely," quoth Repentance, and a vised him to good,
"Sorrow for their sins saveth full many."
"I am sorry," quoth Envy, "I am seldo other,
And that maketh me so mad, for I may n avenge me."

Covetousness Then came Covetousness, could not describe hi
So hungry and so hollow Sir Harvey looke
He was beetle-browed with two bleare eyes,
And like a leathern purse flapped his cheek
In a torn tabard of twelve winters' age;
Unless a louse could leap, I can not believe
That she could wander on that walk, it w so threadbare.
"I have been covetous," quoth this Caitif "I admit it here;
For some time I served Sim at 'The Oak'
And was his pledged apprentice, his prof to watch.

st I learned to lie, in a lesson or two,
d wickedly to weigh was my second lesson.
Winchester and to Weyhill I went to the fair ith many kinds of merchandise, as my master bade;
t had not the grace of guile gone among my ware,
had been unsold these seven year, so help me God!
Then I betook me to the drapers, my grammar to learn,
draw the list[1] along, to make it seem longer.
nong these rich striped cloths learned I a lesson,
erced them with a pack-needle, and pleated them together,
t them in a press, and fastened them therein
ll ten yards or twelve were drawn out to thirteen.
And my wife at Westminster, that woollen cloth made,
ake to the spinners to spin it soft.
he pound that she weighed by, weighed a quarter more nan my balance did, when I weighed true.
I bought her barley, she brewed it to sell;
enny-ale and white perry, she poured it together,
r laborers and low folk, that work for their living.
he best in the bed-chamber lay by the wall, hoso tasted thereof bought it ever after, gallon for a groat, God wot, no less hen it came in cups. Such tricks I used.
ose the retailer is her right name;
e hath been a huckster these eleven winters.
But I swear now soothly that sin will I quit,
nd never wickedly weigh, nor false trade practise, ut wend to Walsingham, and my wife also,
nd pray the Rood of Bromholm to bring me out of debt."

luttony Now beginneth the Glutton to go to the shrift, nd wanders churchwards, his shrift to tell,

hen Bet the brewster bade him good morrow,
nd then she asked him whither he would go.
To holy church," quoth he, "to hear mass,
Since I shall be shriven, and sin no more."
"I have good ale, gossip," quoth she; "Glutton, what say you?"
"Hast aught in thy purse," quoth he, "any hot spices?"
"Yea, Glutton, gossip," quoth she, "God wot, full good;
I have pepper and peony-seeds, and a pound of garlick,
A farthing worth of fennel-seed, for these fasting days."
Then goeth Glutton in, and great oaths after;
Cis the shoemaker's wife sat on the bench,
Wat the ward of the warren, and his wife both,
Tomkin the tinker and twain of his servants;
Hick the hackney-man, and Hogg the needle seller,
Clarice of Cock's-Lane, and the clerk of the church,
Sir Piers of Prie-Dieu, and Pernel of Flanders,
Dawe the ditcher, and a dozen others.
A fiddler, a rat-catcher, a scavenger of Cheapside,
A rope-maker, a riding-boy, and Rose the dish-maker,
Godfrey of Garlickshire, and Griffin the Welshman,
And of tradesmen a band, early in the morning
Stand Glutton, with good-will, a treat in good ale.
Then Clement the cobbler cast off his cloak,
And at "the new fair" made offer to barter it;
And Hick the ostler flung his hood after,
And bade Bett the butcher act on his behalf.
Then were chapmen chosen, the articles to value;
Whoso had the hood should have something to boot.
They rose up rapidly, and whispered together,
And appraised the penny-worths, and parted them by themselves;
There were oaths a-plenty, whoso might hear them.
They could not, in conscience, accord together,
Till Robin the rope-maker was chosen to arise,
And named for an umpire, to avoid all debate,

[1] edge of the cloth, in measuring.

For he should appraise the pennyworths, as seemed good to him.
Then Hick the ostler had the cloak,
On condition that Clement should have his cup filled,
And have Hick the ostler's hood, and hold him well served;
And he that first repented should straight arise
And greet Sir Glutton with a gallon of ale.
There was laughing and cheating and "Let go the cup!"
Bargains and beverages began to arise,
And they sat so till evensong, and sang some while,
Till Glutton had gulped down a gallon and a gill.
. . . . . .
He had no strength to stand, till he his staff had;
Then 'gan he to go like a gleeman's bitch,
Sometimes to the side, sometimes to the rear,
Like a man laying lines to catch birds with.
When he drew to the door, then his eyes grew dim,
He stumbled at the threshold, and threw to the ground.
Clement the cobbler caught Glutton by the middle,
And to lift him up he laid him on his knees;
And Glutton was a great churl, and grim in the lifting,
And coughed up a caudle in Clement's lap,
That the hungriest hound in Hertfordshire
Durst not lap that loathsomeness, so unlovely it smacketh;
So that, with all the woe in the world, his wife and his wench
Bore him home to his bed, and brought him therein.
And after all this surfeit, a sickness he had,
That he slept Saturday and Sunday, till sun went to rest.
Then he waked from his winking, and wiped his eyes;
The first word that he spake was, "Where is the cup?"
His wife warned him then, of wickedness and sin.
Then was he ashamed, that wretch, and scratched his ears,
And 'gan to cry grievously, and great dole to make
For his wicked life, that he had lived.
"For hunger or for thirst, I make my vow,
Shall never fish on Friday digest in my maw,
Till Abstinence, my aunt, have given [me] leave;
And yet I have hated her all my life-time.
Sloth Sloth for sorrow fell down swooning, Till Vigilate, the watcher, fetched water his eyes,
Let it flow on his face, and fast to him cried
And said, "Beware of despair, that will thee betray.
'I am sorry for my sins,' say to thyself,
And beat thyself on the breast, and pray God for grace,
For there is no guilt so great that His mercy is not more."
Then Sloth sat up and sighed sore,
And made a vow before God, for his foul sloth,
"There shall be no Sunday this seven year (save sickness it cause)
That I shall not bring myself ere day to the dear church,
And hear matins and mass, as I a monk were.
No ale after meat shall withhold me thence Till I have heard evensong, I promise by the rood.
And[1] yet I shall yield again — if I have so much —
All that I wickedly won, since I had wit.
And though I lack a livelihood I will not stint
Till each man shall have his own, ere I hence wend:
And with the residue and the remnant, by the rood of Chester,
I shall seek Saint Truth, ere I see Rome!"
Robert the robber, on Reddite[2] he looked
And because there was not wherewith, he wept full sore.
But yet the sinful wretch said to himself:
"Christ, that upon Calvary on the cross died'st,
Though Dismas[3] my brother besought grace of thee,
And thou hadst mercy on that man for mi memento[4] sake,
Thy will be done upon me, as I have well deserved
To have hell for ever if no hope there were.
So rue on me, Robert, that no counsel have,
Nor ever ween to win by any craft that I know.

1 Ll. 236–259, dealing with the restitution of stole goods, appear in C in connection with Avarice. The a taching of them to Sloth in A and B seems to point t some confusion in the text. Note that in A the sin Wrath is omitted.

2 Make restitution, Romans, xiii, 7.

3 The name given to the penitent thief in the apo ryphal Gospel of Nicodemus.

4 Remember me, Luke, xxiii, 42.

ut, for thy much mercy, mitigation I beseech;
amn me not on Doomsday because I did so ill."
it what befell this felon, I cannot well show,
it well I know he wept hard, water with his eyes,
nd acknowledged his guilt to Christ again thereafter, hat the pikestaff of Penitence he should polish anew,
And leap with it o'er the land, all his lifetime,
For he hath lain by Latro,[1] Lucifer's brother.
A thousand of men then throng together,
Weeping and wailing for their wicked deeds,
Crying up to Christ, and to His clean Mother
To give grace to seek Saint Truth, God grant they so might!

1 Latin for "thief."

GEOFFREY CHAUCER (?1340–1400)

Chaucer was born in London about the year 1340. His father, a prosperous wine-merchant, had fluence enough to secure for his son an appointment as page in the household of a great noble, and er as valet of the king's household, a position ordinarily open only to young men of noble birth. haucer's whole life was spent in the service of his royal masters, Edward III and Richard II, under hom he held various offices of trust and responsibility, among others that of Comptroller of Customs for the Port of London. In 1359 he saw military service in France, where he was taken prisier by the French. In 1373, and again in 1378, he was sent on the king's business to Italy. There learned to read Italian, and became acquainted with the writings of Dante, Petrarch, and Boccio, by whom his own writing was profoundly influenced. In the latter part of his life he lived itside of London, at Greenwich on the road to Canterbury. In 1386 he was elected Member of arliament for the shire of Kent, a fact which suggests that he was a landowner in the county. He as married to a lady named Philippa, who seems also to have been connected with the court. haucer died in 1400, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

His principal writings are: the Book of the Duchess, an elegy on the death of Blanche, Duchess Lancaster, in the form of the dream-vision so popular in Old French poetry, written about 1369; ie House of Fame, also a dream-vision poem, but showing the influence of Chaucer's reading of alian literature; the Parliament of Fowls; Troilus and Criseyde, in many ways its author's greatest asterpiece, a poem of over 8000 lines, finished about 1385, which, modelled on Boccaccio's poem, Filostrato, tells the story of Troilus, son of King Priam of Troy, and his love for Criseyde, who in ie end plays him false; the Legend of Good Women, begun about 1386 but never finished, which ter a very lovely dream-vision prologue, gives the stories of various heroines of antiquity who ere faithful to their faithless lovers; the Canterbury Tales, begun about 1387 but never finished.

Chaucer is one of the greatest poets of our literature. If Shakespeare stands apart as our greatst, only Milton can dispute with Chaucer the honor of second place. Troilus and Criseyde, with s vivid dramatic power, its subtle analysis of character, and its poetic style at the same time gracous and noble, is the outstanding masterpiece of English narrative verse. The Canterbury Tales resent in varied pageantry the whole range of medieval life — its religious aspiration, its chivalric leals, its intellectual interests, its every-day realities. And despite the difference of external apearance, the life so brilliantly depicted in Chaucer's pages has much in common with our own. hen one gets accustomed to the unfamiliar forms of the language, one feels that Chaucer, like hakespeare, is not of an age but for all time.

His prevailing manner is that of high comedy. Everywhere about him he sees the contrast beween what men profess and what they practice, between what they hope for and what they get; ut he sees it not with the eyes of the reformer but of the kindly critic, ready to find good in the orst of us, disposed to laugh rather than weep at the perpetual irony of human life.

The standard edition of Chaucer is by W. W. Skeat in six volumes (Oxford Press). The best ngle-volume edition is Skeat's Student's Chaucer (Oxford Press); but the edition now in preparaon by F. N. Robinson (Houghton Mifflin) will probably displace it. Useful critical studies are haucer and his Poetry by G. L. Kittredge (Harvard University Press, 1915); and The Poetry of haucer by R. K. Root (Houghton Mifflin, revised ed. 1922).

The poems of Chaucer included in this volume are all in five-stress iambic verse, rhymed either couplets or in the seven-line stanza known as rhyme royal. Chaucer had an exacting ear for etre; but the music of his verse will be lost unless the reader learns to pronounce it with some pproach to Chaucer's pronunciation, which was in many respects different from our own. A full tatement of these differences is not possible in brief compass, and a correct pronunciation requires uch practice; but observance of the following rules will produce a pronunciation near enough to hat of Chaucer to preserve the effect of his metre and rhyme.

1. Long vowels are to be given their so-called Continental values, the values which they have in Latin, French, German, Spanish, or Italian: a as in father; e as in café; i (or y) as in machine; o as in bone; u as in French du. Short vowels are to be given the same sounds spoken more rapidly; but unaccented e has the sound of a in China.

2. Diphthongs: ai (or ay) as in play; au (or aw) like ow in brow; ei (or ey) as in rein; oi (or oy) as in boy; ou (or ow) as in croup.

3. There are no silent letters. Every letter is to be pronounced, except that final unaccented e is usually elided when the following word begins with a vowel (or with h). Doubling a vowel indicates that the vowel is long, but does not alter its value; oo never has the sound of modern English moon.

4. Consonants are in general pronounced as in modern English; but gh has the sound of German ch.

THE CANTERBURY TALES

The Canterbury Tales is a collection of stories set in the framework of a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Thomas à Becket at Canterbury. Lines 791–94 of the Prologue show that at one time Chaucer had intended that each of the thirty pilgrims should tell two stories on the road to Canterbury and two on the journey back to London. Connecting links were to bind the stories into a whole and to give the happenings along the way. But of this ambitious plan he completed only the fragments; and there is, in the connecting links which we have, clear indication that his final plan contemplated only a single tale from each pilgrim on each of the two journeys.

The Prologue introduces the pilgrims, met at the Tabard Inn at Southwark, just across London Bridge, ready to start the next morning. It is a masterly set of portraits; each pilgrim is typical of a class, and yet individualized as a real human being. There is the Prioress, with all the proprieties of the head-mistress of a school for young ladies, and the coarse but genial Wife of Bath; the rascally Pardoner and the ideal Parson of a parish. Both town and country life are represented. Together the company is representative of the whole social fabric of fourteenth-century England, from the Knight to the Plowman.

THE PROLOGUE

Here biginneth the Book of the Tales of Caunterbury

Whan that Aprille with his shoures sote [1]
The droghte of Marche hath perced to the rote,
And bathed every veyne in swich [2] licour,
Of which vertu [3] engendred is the flour;
Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth
Inspired hath in every holt and heeth
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the Ram his halfe cours y-ronne,[4]
And smale fowles maken melodye,
That slepen al the night with open yë,
(So priketh hem nature in hir corages): [5]
Than longen folk to goon on pilgrimages
(And palmers for to seken straunge strondes)
To ferne halwes,[6] couthe [7] in sondry londes;
And specially, from every shires ende
Of Engelond, to Caunterbury they wende,
The holy blisful martir [8] for to seke,
That hem hath holpen, whan that they were seke.

Bifel that, in that seson on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Caunterbury with ful devout corage,
At night was come in-to that hostelrye
Wel nyne and twenty in a companye,
Of sondry folk, by aventure y-falle
In felawshipe, and pilgrims were they alle,
That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde;
The chambres and the stables weren wyde,
And wel we weren esed [1] atte beste.
And shortly, whan the sonne was to reste,
So hadde I spoken with hem everichon,
That I was of hir felawshipe anon,
And made forward [2] erly for to ryse,
To take our wey, ther as I yow devyse.

But natheles, whyl I have tyme and space,
Er that I ferther in this tale pace,
Me thinketh it acordaunt to resoun,
To telle yow al the condicioun
Of ech of hem, so as it semed me,
And whiche they weren, and of what degree;
And eek in what array that they were inne:
And at a knight than wol I first biginne.

A KNIGHT ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the tyme that he first bigan

1 sweet. 2 such. 3 by virtue of which.
4 i.e. the time of year is mid-April.
5 dispositions. 6 distant saints.
7 famous. 8 St. Thomas à Becket.

1 accommodated. 2 agreement.

ryden out, he loved chivalrye, louthe [1] and honour, fredom [2] and curteisye.
l worthy was he in his lordes werre,
d therto hadde he riden (no man ferre) [3]
wel in Cristendom as hethenesse,
d ever honoured for his worthinesse.
At Alisaundre he was, whan it was wonne;
l ofte tyme he hadde the bord bigonne [4]
boven alle naciouns in Pruce.[5]
Lettow [6] hadde he reysed [7] and in Ruce,
Cristen man so ofte of his degree.
Gernade [8] at the sege eek hadde he be
Algezir,[9] and riden in Belmarye.[10]
Lyeys [11] was he, and at Satalye,[12] han they were wonne; and in the Grete See [13] many a noble armee [14] hadde he be.
mortal batailles hadde he been fiftene,
d foughten for our feith at Tramissene [15]
listes thryes, and ay slayn his fo.
his ilke [16] worthy knight had been also mtyme with the lord of Palatye,[17]
geyn [18] another hethen in Turkye:
d evermore he hadde a sovereyn prys.[19]
d though that he were worthy, he was wys,
d of his port as meke as is a mayde.
e never yet no vileinye [20] ne sayde al his lyf, un-to no maner wight.
e was a verray parfit gentil knight.
t for to tellen yow of his array,
is hors were gode, but he was nat gay.
fustian [21] he wered a gipoun [22]
bismotered with his habergeoun; [23] or he was late y-come from his viage, nd wente for to doon his pilgrimage.
With him ther was his sone, a yong SQUYER, lovyere, and a lusty bacheler,[24]
ith lokkes crulle, as they were leyd in presse.[25]
f twenty yeer of age he was, I gesse.
f his stature he was of evene [26] lengthe, nd wonderly deliver,[27] and greet of strengthe.
nd he had been somtyme in chivachye,[28]
Flaundres, in Artoys, and Picardye,

1 loyalty. 2 generosity. 3 farther.
4 sat at the head of the table.
5 Prussia, i.e. East Prussia. 6 Lithuania.
7 made a campaign. 8 Grenada.
9 Algeciras, taken from the Moors in 1344.
0 A district in northern Africa.
1 A town in Armenia. 12 A town in Asia Minor.
3 Mediterranean. 14 expedition.
5 A district in northern Africa. 16 same.
7 A district in Asia Minor. 18 against.
9 high praise. 20 discourtesy.
1 coarse heavy cloth. 22 doublet.
3 stained by his coat of mail.
4 aspirant to knighthood.
5 curly as though artificially curled.
6 medium. 27 active. 28 military expeditions.

And born him wel, as of so litel space,
In hope to stonden in his lady grace.
Embrouded was he, as it were a mede
Al ful of fresshe floures, whyte and rede.
Singinge he was, or floytinge,[1] al the day;
He was as fresh as is the month of May.
Short was his goune, with sleves longe and wyde.
Wel coude he sitte on hors, and faire ryde.
He coude songes make and wel endyte,[2]
Juste and eek daunce, and wel purtreye and wryte.
So hote he lovede, that by nightertale [3]
He sleep namore than dooth a nightingale.
Curteys he was, lowly, and servisable,
And carf [4] biforn his fader at the table.
A YEMAN [5] hadde he, and servaunts namo
At that tyme, for him liste ryde so;
And he was clad in cote and hood of grene;
A sheef of pecok-arwes brighte and kene
Under his belt he bar ful thriftily;
(Wel coude he dresse his takel yemanly:
His arwes drouped noght with fetheres lowe),
And in his hand he bar a mighty bowe.
A not-heed [6] hadde he, with a broun visage.
Of wode-craft wel coude [7] he al the usage.
Upon his arm he bar a gay bracer,[8]
And by his syde a swerd and a bokeler,
And on that other syde a gay daggere,
Harneised [9] wel, and sharp as point of spere;
A Cristofre [10] on his brest of silver shene.[11]
An horn he bar, the bawdrik was of grene;
A forster [12] was he, soothly, as I gesse.
Ther was also a Nonne, a PRIORESSE,
That of hir smyling was ful simple and coy [13]
Hir gretteste ooth was but by sëynt Loy;
And she was cleped madame Eglentyne.
Ful wel she song the service divyne,
Entuned in hir nose ful semely;
And Frensh she spak ful faire and fetisly,[14]
After the scole of Stratford atte Bowe,[15]
For Frensh of Paris was to hir unknowe.
At mete wel y-taught was she with-alle;
She leet no morsel from hir lippes falle,
Ne wette hir fingres in hir sauce depe.
Wel coude she carie a morsel, and wel kepe,
That no drope ne fille up-on her brest.
In curteisye was set ful muche hir lest.[16]

1 whistling. 2 compose words and music.
3 night-time. 4 carved. 5 yeoman.
6 close-cropped head. 7 knew.
8 guard for the arm. 9 equipped.
10 image of St. Christopher, as protection against accidents.
11 bright. 12 forester. 13 coy. 14 elegantly.
15 A convent-school near London. 16 desire.

Hir over lippe wyped she so clene,
That in hir coppe was no ferthing [1] sene
Of grece, whan she dronken hadde hir draughte.
Ful semely after hir mete she raughte,[2]
And sikerly she was of greet disport,[3]
And ful plesaunt, and amiable of port,
And peyned hir to countrefete chere [4]
Of court, and been estatlich of manere,
And to ben holden digne [5] of reverence.
But, for to speken of hir conscience,
She was so charitable and so pitous,
She wolde wepe, if that she sawe a mous
Caught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde.
Of smale houndes had she, that she fedde
With rosted flesh, or milk and wastel-breed.[6]
But sore weep she if oon of hem were deed,
Or if men smoot it with a yerde smerte: [7]
And al was conscience and tendre herte.
Ful semely hir wimpel pinched [8] was;
Hir nose tretys; [9] hir eyen greye as glas;
Hir mouth ful smal, and ther-to softe and reed;
But sikerly she hadde a fair forheed;
It was almost a spanne brood, I trowe;
For, hardily,[10] she was nat undergrowe.
Ful fetis [11] was hir cloke, as I was war.
Of smal coral aboute hir arm she bar
A peire [12] of bedes, gauded al with grene; [13]
And ther-on heng a broche of gold ful shene,
On which ther was first write a crowned A,
And after, Amor vincit omnia.

Another NONNE with hir hadde she,
That was hir chapeleyne, and PREESTES THREE.

A MONK ther was, a fair for the maistrye,[14]
An out-rydere,[15] that lovede venerye [16];
A manly man, to been an abbot able.
Ful many a deyntee hors hadde he in stable:
And, whan he rood, men mighte his brydel here
Ginglen in a whistling wind as clere,
And eek as loude as dooth the chapel-belle Ther as this lord was keper of the celle.[17]

1 smallest trace. 2 reached.
3 And certainly she was full of pleasantry.
4 imitate the manners. 5 worthy.
6 cake-bread. 7 with a stick smartly.
8 pleated. 9 well formed.
10 certainly. 11 handsome. 12 string.
13 i.e. every eleventh bead was green. These larger green beads in her rosary marked Paternosters. The smaller coral beads marked Aves.
14 preëminently fine.
15 an inspector of the properties of his monastery.
16 hunting. 17 subordinate monastery.

The reule [1] of seint Maure or of seint Benei
By-cause that it was old and som-del strei
This ilke monk leet olde thinges pace,
And held after the newe world the space.
He yaf nat of that text a pulled [3] hen,
That seith, that hunters been nat holy me
Ne that a monk, whan he is cloisterlees,
Is lykned til a fish that is waterlees;
This is to seyn, a monk out of his cloistre.
But thilke text held he nat worth an oistre
And I seyde, his opinioun was good.
What sholde he studie, and make himselve wood,[4]
Upon a book in cloistre alway to poure,
Or swinken [5] with his handes, and laboure,
As Austin bit? [6] How shal the world b served?
Lat Austin have his swink to him reserved.
Therfore he was a pricasour [7] aright;
Grehoundes he hadde, as swifte as fowel i flight;
Of priking [8] and of hunting for the hare
Was al his lust, for no cost wolde he spare.
I seigh his sleves purfiled [9] at the hond
With grys,[10] and that the fyneste of a lond
And, for to festne his hood under his chin,
He hadde of gold y-wroght a curious pin:
A love-knotte in the gretter ende ther was.
His heed was balled,[11] that shoon as any glas
And eek his face, as he had been anoint.
He was a lord ful fat and in good point; [12]
His eyen stepe,[13] and rollinge in his heed,
That stemed as a forneys of a leed; [14]
His botes souple, his hors in greet estat.
Now certeinly he was a fair prelat;
He was nat pale as a for-pyned [15] goost.
A fat swan loved he best of any roost.
His palfrey was as broun as is a berye.

A FRERE ther was, a wantown and merye,
A limitour,[16] a ful solempne man.
In alle the ordres foure [17] is noon that can [18]
So muche of daliaunce and fair langage.
He hadde maad ful many a mariage
Of yonge wommen, at his owne cost.
Un-to his ordre he was a noble post.[19]
Ful wel biloved and famulier was he
With frankeleyns [20] over-al in his contree,
And eek with worthy wommen of the toun:
For he had power of confessioun,

1 The monastic regulations of the Benedictine order.
2 somewhat strict. 3 plucked. 4 crazy.
5 labor. 6 as St. Augustine bids.
7 man fond of riding. 8 riding. 9 trimmed.
10 fur. 11 bald. 12 physical condition.
13 bright. 14 shone like the fire under a cauldron.
15 tormented.
16 A friar licensed to beg in a limited district.
17 Dominican, Franciscan, Carmelite, Augustinian.
18 knows. 19 pillar. 20 well-to-do land-owners.

seyde him-self, more than a curat,
r of his ordre he was licentiat.
l swetely herde he confessioun,
d plesaunt was his absolucioun;
was an esy man to yeve penaunce er as he wiste to han [1] a good pitaunce;
r unto a povre ordre for to yive
signe that a man is wel y-shrive.
r if he yaf, he dorste make avaunt,[2]
wiste that a man was repentaunt.
r many a man so hard is of his herte,
may nat wepe al-thogh him sore smerte.
erfore, in stede of weping and preyeres,
en moot [3] yeve silver to the povre freres.
s tipet was ay farsed [4] ful of knyves
d pinnes, for to yeven faire wyves.
d certeinly he hadde a mery note;
el coude he singe and pleyen on a rote.[5]
yeddinges [6] he bar utterly the prys.
s nekke whyt was as the flour-de-lys;
er-to he strong was as a champioun.
knew the tavernes wel in every toun,
d everich hostiler and tappestere
t than a lazar or a beggestere; [7] r un-to swich a worthy man as he orded nat, as by his facultee,[8] have with seke lazars aqueyntaunce.
is nat honest, it may nat avaunce
r to delen with no swich poraille,[9]
t al with riche and sellers of vitaille.
d over-al, ther as [10] profit sholde aryse,
rteys he was, and lowly of servyse.
er nas no man no-wher so vertuous.[11]
was the beste beggere in his hous;
r thogh a widwe hadde noght a sho,[12]
plesaunt was his "In principio," [13]
t wolde he have a ferthing, er he wente.
is purchas was wel bettre than his rente.[14]
d rage [15] he coude, as it were right a whelpe.[16]
love-dayes [17] ther coude he muchel helpe.
r there he was nat lyk a cloisterer,[18]
ith a thredbar cope, as is a povre scoler,
t he was lyk a maister or a pope.
double worsted was his semi-cope,[19] hat rounded as a belle out of the presse.[20]
mwhat he lipsed, for his wantownesse,

1 Where he knew he should have. 2 boast.
3 one should. 4 stuffed. 5 fiddle. 6 songs.
7 Better than he did any leper or beggar-woman.
8 It was not fitting to a man of his importance.
9 poor trash. 10 And everywhere where.
11 of such ability. 12 shoe.
13 The first words of St. John's gospel.
14 His occasional winnings amounted to more than his regular income.
15 romp. 16 young dog.
17 days for settling minor disputes.
18 recluse. 19 short cape. 20 clothes-press.

To make his English swete up-on his tonge;
And in his harping, whan that he had songe,
His eyen twinkled in his heed aright,
As doon the sterres in the frosty night.
This worthy limitour was cleped Huberd.

A MARCHANT was ther with a forked berd,
In mottelee,[1] and hye on horse he sat,
Up-on his heed a Flaundrish bever hat;
His botes clasped faire and fetisly.
His resons he spak ful solempnely,
Souninge [2] alway th'encrees of his winning.
He wolde the see were kept for any thing [3]
Bitwixe Middleburgh and Orewelle.[4]
Wel coude he in eschaunge sheeldes selle.[5]
This worthy man ful wel his wit bisette; [6]
Ther wiste no wight that he was in dette,
So estatly was he of his governaunce,
With his bargaynes, and with his chevisaunce.[7]
For sothe he was a worthy man with-alle,
But sooth to seyn, I noot how men him calle.

A CLERK ther was of Oxenford also,
That un-to logik hadde longe y-go.
As lene was his hors as is a rake,
And he nas nat right fat, I undertake;
But loked holwe, and ther-to soberly.
Ful thredbar was his overest courtepy; [8]
For he had geten him yet no benefyce,
Ne was so worldly for to have offyce.
For him was lever [9] have at his beddes heed
Twenty bokes, clad in blak or reed,
Of Aristotle and his philosophye,
Than robes riche, or fithele,[10] or gay sautrye.[11]
But al be that he was a philosophre,
Yet hadde he but litel gold in cofre; [12]
But al that he mighte of his freendes hente,[13]
On bokes and on lerninge he it spente,
And bisily gan for the soules preye
Of hem that yaf him wher-with to scoleye.[14]
Of studie took he most cure [15] and most hede.
Noght o word spak he more than was nede,
And that was seyd in forme and reverence,
And short and quik, and ful of hy sentence.[16]
Souninge in [17] moral vertu was his speche,
And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche.

1 cloth of a mixed color.
2 relating to. 3 guarded at all costs.
4 Ports in Holland and England.
5 sell currency at exchange. 6 employed.
7 financial dealings. 8 short overcoat.
9 he preferred. 10 fiddle.
11 psaltery (musical instrument).
12 His scientific knowledge (philosophy) did not include alchemy.
13 get. 14 go to school. 15 care.
16 lofty maxims. 17 tending towards.

A Sergeant of the Lawe, war and wys,
That often hadde been at the parvys,[1]
Ther was also, ful riche of excellence.
Discreet he was, and of greet reverence:
He semed swich, his wordes weren so wyse.
Justyce he was ful often in assyse,
By patente, and by pleyn commissioun;
For his science, and for his heigh renoun
Of fees and robes hadde he many oon.
So greet a purchasour[2] was no-wher noon.
Al was fee simple to him in effect,[3]
His purchasing mighte nat been infect.[4]
No-wher so bisy a man as he ther nas,
And yet he semed bisier than he was.
In termes hadde he caas and domes alle,[5]
That from the tyme of king William were falle.
Therto he coude endyte, and make a thing,[6]
Ther coude no wight pinche at his wryting;
And every statut coude he pleyn by rote.[7]
He rood but hoomly in a medlee cote
Girt with a ceint[8] of silk, with barres smale;
Of his array telle I no lenger tale.

A Frankeleyn[9] was in his companye;
Whyt was his berd, as is the dayesye.
Of his complexioun[10] he was sangwyn.
Wel loved he by the morwe a sop in wyn.[11]
To liven in delyt was ever his wone,[12]
For he was Epicurus owne sone,
That heeld opinioun, that pleyn delyt
Was verraily felicitee parfyt.
An housholdere, and that a greet, was he;
Seint Julian[13] he was in his contree.
His breed, his ale, was alwey after oon;[14]
A bettre envyned[15] man was no-wher noon.
With-oute bake mete[16] was never his hous,
Of fish and flesh, and that so plentevous,
It snewed[17] in his hous of mete and drinke,
Of alle deyntees that men coude thinke.
After the sondry sesons of the yeer,
So chaunged he his mete and his soper.
Ful many a fat partrich hadde he in mewe,[18]
And many a breem and many a luce in stewe.[19]

1 The porch of St. Paul's, where lawyers met for consultation.
2 conveyancer.
3 He could set aside any entail, and convey the property as though it were held in fee simple.
4 invalidated.
5 He could cite cases and decisions word for word.
6 compose and write out a legal document.
7 knew he fully by heart. 8 girdle.
9 rich land-owner. 10 temperament.
11 wine with bread or cake in it. 12 custom.
13 Patron saint of hospitality.
14 i.e. it never varied in quality.
15 provided with wine. 16 cooked food.
17 snowed. 18 a coop. 19 fish-pond.

Wo was his cook,[1] but-if his sauce were Poynaunt and sharp, and redy al his gere.
His table dormant[2] in his halle alway
Stood redy covered al the longe day.
At sessiouns ther was he lord and sire;
Ful ofte tyme he was knight of the shire.[3]
An anlas[4] and a gipser[5] al of silk
Heng at his girdel, whyt as morne milk.
A shirreve hadde he been, and a countour;
Was no-wher such a worthy vavasour.[7]

An Haberdassher and a Carpenter,
A Webbe, a Dyere, and a Tapicer,[8]
Were with us eek, clothed in o liveree,[9]
Of a solempne and greet fraternitee.[10]
Ful fresh and newe hir gere apyked was;
Hir knyves were y-chaped[12] noght with bra
But al with silver, wroght ful clene and we
Hir girdles and hir pouches every-deel.
Wel semed ech of hem a fair burgeys,
To sitten in a yeldhalle on a deys.[13]
Everich, for the wisdom that he can,
Was shaply for to been an alderman.
For catel[14] hadde they y-nogh and rente,
And eek hir wyves wolde it wel assente;
And elles certein were they to blame.
It is ful fair to been y-clept "ma dame,"
And goon to vigilyës[15] al bifore,
And have a mantel royalliche y-bore.

A Cook they hadde with hem for the non
To boille the chiknes with the marybones,
And poudre-marchant tart,[16] and galingale.
Wel coude he knowe a draughte of Londo ale.
He coude roste, and sethe, and broille, a frye,
Maken mortreux,[18] and wel bake a pye.
But greet harm was it, as it thoughte me,
That on his shine a mormal[19] hadde he;
For blankmanger,[20] that made he with t beste.

A Shipman was ther, woning fer b weste:[21]
For aught I woot, he was of Dertemouthe.
He rood up-on a rouncy,[22] as he couthe,[23]
In a gowne of falding[24] to the knee.
A daggere hanging on a laas[25] hadde he Aboute his nekke under his arm adoun.
The hote somer had maad his hewe al brou

1 It was a bad day for his cook.
2 permanent dining-table — not boards on trestles.
3 member of Parliament for the county.
4 dagger. 5 purse. 6 auditor.
7 A feudal tenant ranking immediately below a baro
8 upholsterer. 9 distinctive dress.
10 guild. 11 trimmed. 12 mounted.
13 in a guild-hall on a dais. 14 property.
15 eves of festival days. 16 tart flavoring-powder.
17 A variety of spice. 18 stews. 19 sore.
20 creamed chicken. 21 dwelling far in the we 22 an awkward nag. 23 as well as he knew ho
24 coarse cloth. 25 cord.

d, certeinly, he was a good felawe.
l many a draughte of wyn had he y-drawe om Burdeux-ward, whyl that the chapman sleep.[1] nyce conscience took he no keep.
that he faught, and hadde the hyer hond, water he sente hem hoom to every land.[2]
t of his craft to rekene wel his tydes,
s stremes [3] and his daungers him bisydes,
s herberwe [4] and his mone, his lodemenage,[5]
er nas noon swich from Hulle to Cartage.[6]
rdy he was, and wys to undertake;
th many a tempest hadde his berd been shake.
knew wel alle the havenes, as they were,
om Gootlond [7] to the cape of Finistere,
d every cryke in Britayne and in Spayne;
s barge y-cleped was the Maudelayne.
With us ther was a DOCTOUR OF PHISYK, al this world ne was ther noon him lyk speke of phisik and of surgerye;
r he was grounded in astronomye.
kepte his pacient a ful greet del houres, by his magik naturel.[8]
el coude he fortunen the ascendent his images [9] for his pacient.
knew the cause of everich maladye, ere it of hoot or cold, or moiste, or drye,[10]
d where engendred, and of what humour;
was a verrey parfit practisour.
he cause y-knowe, and of his harm the rote,
non he yaf the seke man his bote.[11]
l redy hadde he his apothecaries, sende him drogges and his letuaries,[12]
r ech of hem made other for to winne; r frendschipe nas nat newe to biginne.
el knew he th'olde Esculapius,
d Deiscorides, and eek Rufus,
d Ypocras, Haly, and Galien;
rapion, Razis, and Avicen;
errois, Damascien, and Constantyn;
ernard, and Gatesden, and Gilbertyn.[13]
his diete mesurable was he, r it was of no superfluitee,
t of greet norissing and digestible.
s studie was but litel on the bible.

In sangwin and in pers [1] he clad was al,
Lyned with taffata and with sendal; [2]
And yet he was but esy of dispence; [3]
He kepte that he wan in pestilence.
For gold in phisik is a cordial,[4]
Therfore he lovede gold in special
A good WYF was ther of bisyde BATHE,
But she was som-del [5] deef, and that was scathe.[6]
Of clooth-making she hadde swiche an haunt,[7]
She passed hem of Ypres and of Gaunt.
In al the parisshe wyf ne was ther noon
That to th' offring bifore hir sholde goon;
And if ther dide, certeyn, so wrooth was she,
That she was out of alle charitee.
Hir coverchiefs ful fyne were of ground; [8]
I dorste swere they weyeden ten pound
That on a Sonday were upon hir heed.
Hir hosen weren of fyn scarlet reed,
Ful streite y-teyd, and shoos ful moiste and newe.
Bold was hir face, and fair, and reed of hewe.
She was a worthy womman al hir lyve.
Housbondes at chirche-dore [9] she hadde fyve,
Withouten [10] other companye in youthe;
But therof nedeth nat to speke as nouthe.[11]
And thryes hadde she been at Jerusalem;
She hadde passed many a straunge streem;
At Rome she hadde been, and at Boloigne,
In Galice at seint Jame,[12] and at Cologne.
She coude muche of wandring by the weye:
Gat-tothed [13] was she, soothly for to seye.
Up-on an amblere [14] esily she sat,
Y-wimpled [15] wel, and on hir heed an hat
As brood as is a bokeler or a targe;
A foot-mantel aboute hir hipes large,
And on hir feet a paire of spores sharpe.
In felawschip wel coude she laughe and carpe.[16]
Of remedyes of love she knew perchaunce,
For she coude of that art the olde daunce.[17]
A good man was ther of religioun,
And was a povre PERSOUN [18] of a toun;
But riche he was of holy thoght and werk.
He was also a lerned man, a clerk,
That Cristes gospel trewely wolde preche;
His parisshens [19] devoutly wolde he teche.

1 He had stolen many a drink of the wine which he was nging from Bordeaux, while the supercargo was asleep.
2 made them walk the plank.
3 currents. 4 harborage.
5 steersmanship. 6 Carthaginia in Spain.
7 The island of Gottland in the Baltic.
8 He knew which hours were astrologically favorable giving medicine.
9 He devised magic images at a moment when astrically fortunate planets were rising.
10 The four primary elements which composed all tter.
11 remedy. 12 syrups.
13 The chief authorities on medieval medicine.

1 blood-red and light blue. 2 thin silk.
3 careful about spending. 4 heart-stimulant.
5 somewhat. 6 a pity. 7 skill.
8 of very fine texture.
9 Weddings were celebrated in the porch of the church.
10 Besides. 11 just now.
12 Compostella, a great pilgrim shrine in Spain.
13 With teeth set wide apart. 14 ambling nag.
15 provided with a pleated head-covering. 16 talk.
17 She knew all the tricks in the game of love.
18 parson. 19 parishioners.

Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,
And in adversitee ful pacient;
And swich he was y-preved ofte sythes.[1]
Ful looth were him to cursen for his tythes,
But rather wolde he yeven, out of doute,
Un-to his povre parisshens aboute
Of his offring, and eek of his substaunce.
He coude in litel thing han suffisaunce.
Wyd was his parisshe, and houses fer a-sonder,
But he ne lafte nat, for reyn ne thonder,
In siknes nor in meschief,[2] to visyte
The ferreste in his parisshe, muche and lyte,[3]
Up-on his feet, and in his hand a staf.
This noble ensample to his sheep he yaf,
That first he wroghte, and afterward he taughte;
Out of the gospel[4] he tho wordes caughte;
And this figure he added eek ther-to,
That if gold ruste, what shal iren do?
For if a preest be foul, on whom we truste,
No wonder is a lewed[5] man to ruste;
And shame it is, if a preest take keep,[6]
A shiten shepherde and a clene sheep.
Wel oghte a preest ensample for to yive,
By his clennesse, how that his sheep shold live.
He sette nat his benefice to hyre,
And leet his sheep encombred in the myre,
And ran to London, un-to sëynt Poules,
To seken him a chaunterie for soules,[7]
Or with a bretherhed to been withholde;[8]
But dwelte at hoom, and kepte wel his folde,
So that the wolf ne made it nat miscarie;
He was a shepherde and no mercenarie.
And though he holy were, and vertuous,
He was to sinful man nat despitous,
Ne of his speche daungerous ne digne,[9]
But in his teching discreet and benigne.
To drawen folk to heven by fairnesse
By good ensample, was his bisinesse:
But it were any persone obstinat,
What-so he were, of heigh or lowe estat,
Him wolde he snibben[10] sharply for the nones.
A bettre preest, I trowe that nowher noon is.
He wayted after no pompe and reverence,
Ne maked him a spyced conscience,[11]
But Cristes lore, and his apostles twelve,
He taughte, and first he folwed it himselve.

1 times. 2 misfortune.
3 of high estate and low. 4 St. Matthew, v, 19.
5 lay. 6 heed.
7 To seek the easy work of merely saying masses for the repose of departed souls.
8 to be chaplain for a guild.
9 overbearing nor haughty. 10 rebuke.
11 He did not exaggerate small peccadillos.

With him ther was a PLOWMAN, was his brother,
That hadde y-lad of dong ful many fother,[1]
A trewe swinker[2] and a good was he,
Livinge in pees and parfit charitee.
God loved he best with al his hole herte
At alle tymes, thogh him gamed or smerte,
And thanne his neighebour right as himselve.
He wolde thresshe, and ther-to dyke and delve,
For Cristes sake, for every povre wight,
Withouten hyre, if it lay in his might.
His tythes payed he ful faire and wel,
Bothe of his propre swink and his catel.[4]
In a tabard[5] he rood upon a mere.
Ther was also a Reve[6] and a Millere,
A Somnour[7] and a Pardoner[8] also,
A Maunciple,[9] and my-self; ther were nam
The MILLER was a stout carl, for t
nones,
Ful big he was of braun, and eek of bones
That proved wel,[10] for over-al ther he cam
At wrastling he wolde have alwey the ram
He was short-sholdred, brood, a thik
knarre,[12]
Ther nas no dore that he nolde heve
harre,[13]
Or breke it, at a renning, with his heed.
His berd as any sowe or fox was reed,
And ther-to brood, as though it were spade.
Up-on the cop[14] right of his nose he hade
A werte, and ther-on stood a tuft of heres,
Reed as the bristles of a sowes eres;
His nose-thirles[15] blake were and wyde.
A swerd and bokeler bar he by his syde;
His mouth as greet was as a greet forneys.
He was a janglere and a goliardeys,[16]
And that was most of sinne and harlotryes
Wel coude he stelen corn, and tollen thryes;
And yet he hadde a thombe of gold,[19] parde
A whyt cote and a blew hood wered he.
A baggepype wel coude he blowe a sowne,
And ther-with-al he broghte us out of town

1 load. 2 worker.
3 though his lot was pleasant or unpleasant.
4 by giving both personal services and property.
5 a sleeveless jerkin.
6 steward of a landed estate.
7 An officer who summoned offenders to the ecclesiastical courts.
8 a hawker of papal indulgences.
9 steward of a college.
10 that was clearly proved.
11 i.e. the prize. 12 knotty muscled fellow.
13 hinge. 14 tip. 15 nostrils.
16 an idle talker and teller of coarse stories.
17 ribaldries. 18 take triple toll.
19 i.e. he was expert in judging the quality of flour.

A gentil MAUNCIPLE was ther of a temple,[1] which achatours [2] mighte take exemple to be wyse in bying of vitaille whether that he payde, or took by taille,[3] ate he wayted so in his achat,[4]
at he was ay biforn and in good stat.
w is nat that of God a ful fair grace,
at swich a lewed mannes wit shal pace
e wisdom of an heep of lerned men?
maistres hadde he mo than thryes ten,
at were of lawe expert and curious;
which ther were a doseyn in that hous
orthy to been stiwardes of rente and lond any lord that is in Engelond, make him live by his propre good,
honour dettelees, but he were wood,[5]
live as scarsly as him list desire; d able for to helpen al a shire any cas that mighte falle or happe;
d yit this maunciple sette hir aller cappe.[6]
The REVE was a sclendre colerik man, s berd was shave as ny as ever he can.
s heer was by his eres round y-shorn.
s top was dokked lyk a preest biforn.[7]
l longe were his legges, and ful lene, lyk a staf, ther was no calf y-sene.
el coude he kepe a gerner and a binne;
er was noon auditour coude on him winne.[8]
el wiste he, by the droghte, and by the reyn,
e yelding of his seed, and of his greyn.
s lordes sheep, his neet,[9] his dayerye,
s swyn, his hors, his stoor,[10] and his pultrye, as hoolly in this reves governing,
d by his covenaunt yaf the rekening,
n that his lord was twenty yeer of age;
er coude no man bringe him in arrerage.[11]
er nas baillif, ne herde,[12] ne other hyne,[13] hat he ne knew his sleighte and his covyne;[14]
ey were adrad of him, as of the deeth.
s woning [15] was ful fair up-on an heeth,
ith grene treës shadwed was his place.
e coude bettre than his lord purchace.
l riche he was astored prively,
is lord wel coude he plesen subtilly,
o yeve and lene him of his owne good,
d have a thank, and yet a cote and hood.

In youthe he lerned hadde a good mister;[1]
He was a wel good wrighte, a carpenter.
This reve sat up-on a ful good stot,[2]
That was al pomely [3] grey, and highte Scot.
A long surcote of pers up-on he hade,
And by his syde he bar a rusty blade.
Of Northfolk was this reve, of which I telle,
Bisyde a toun men clepen Baldeswelle.
Tukked he was, as is a frere, aboute,
And ever he rood the hindreste of our route.
A SOMNOUR was ther with us in that place,
That hadde a fyr-reed cherubinnes face,
For sawcefleem [4] he was, with eyen narwe.[5]
As hoot he was, and lecherous, as a sparwe;
With scalled [6] browes blake, and piled [7] berd;
Of his visage children were aferd.
Ther nas quik-silver, litarge, ne brimstoon,
Boras, ceruce, ne oille of tartre noon,
Ne oynement that wolde clense and byte,
That him mighte helpen of his whelkes [8] whyte,
Nor of the knobbes sittinge on his chekes.
Wel loved he garleek, oynons, and eek lekes,
And for to drinken strong wyn, reed as blood.
Than wolde he speke, and crye as he were wood.[9]
And whan that he wel dronken hadde the wyn,
Than wolde he speke no word but Latyn.
A fewe termes hadde he, two or three,
That he had lerned out of som decree;
No wonder is, he herde it al the day;
And eek ye knowen wel, how that a jay
Can clepen "Watte," [10] as well as can the pope.
But who-so coude in other thing him grope,[11]
Thanne hadde he spent al his philosophye;
Ay "Questio quid iuris" wolde he crye.
He was a gentil harlot [12] and a kinde;
A bettre felawe sholde men noght finde.
He wolde suffre, for a quart of wyn,
A good felawe to have his concubyn
A twelf-month, and excuse him atte fulle:
Ful prively a finch eek coude he pulle.[13]
And if he fond o-wher a good felawe,
He wolde techen him to have non awe,
In swich cas, of the erchedeknes [14] curs,
But-if a mannes soule were in his purs;
For in his purs he sholde y-punisshed be.
"Purs is the erchedeknes helle," seyde he.

1 One of the inns of court, a college of lawyers.
2 buyers. 3 on account.
4 He always looked out so well for his purchase.
5 unless he were crazy. 6 made fools of them all.
7 His hair was cut short in front like a priest's.
8 get the better of him. 9 cattle. 10 stock.
11 catch him in arrears 12 herdsman.
13 hired laborer. 14 deceitfulness. 15 dwelling.

1 trade. 2 horse. 3 dappled.
4 pimpled. 5 set close together. 6 scabby.
7 thin and uneven. 8 pimples. 9 crazy.
10 Wat, short for Walter, was a common name for jays, as Polly for modern parrots.
11 examine. 12 rogue. 13 fleece a gull.
14 The archdeacon presided over the bishop's court.

But wel I woot he lyed right in dede;
Of cursing[1] oghte ech gilty man him drede —
For curs wol slee, right as assoilling[2] saveth —
And also war him of a significavit.[3]
In daunger[4] hadde he at his owne gyse
The yonge girles[5] of the diocyse,
And knew hir counseil, and was al hir reed.
A gerland hadde he set up-on his heed,
As greet as it were for an ale-stake;[6]
A bokeler hadde he maad him of a cake.
With him ther rood a gentil PARDONER
Of Rouncival,[7] his freend and his compeer,
That streight was comen fro the court of Rome.
Ful loude he song, "Com hider, love, to me."
This somnour bar to him a stif burdoun,[8]
Was never trompe of half so greet a soun.
This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wex,
But smothe it heng, as dooth a strike of flex;
By ounces[9] henge his lokkes that he hadde,
And ther-with he his shuldres overspradde;
But thinne it lay, by colpons[10] oon and oon;
But hood, for jolitee, ne wered he noon,
For it was trussed up in his walet.
Him thoughte, he rood al of the newe jet;[11]
Dischevele, save his cappe, he rood al bare.
Swiche glaringe eyen hadde he as an hare.
A vernicle[12] hadde he sowed on his cappe.
His walet lay biforn him in his lappe,
Bret-ful[13] of pardoun come from Rome al hoot.
A voys he hadde as smal as hath a goot.
No berd hadde he, ne never sholde have,
As smothe it was as it were late y-shave;
I trowe he were a gelding or a mare.
But of his craft, fro Berwik into Ware,
Ne was ther swich another pardoner.
For in his male[14] he hadde a pilwe-beer,[15]
Which that, he seyde, was our lady[16] veyl:
He seyde, he hadde a gobet of the seyl
That sëynt Peter hadde, whan that he wente
Up-on the see, til Jesu Crist him hente.
He hadde a croys of latoun,[17] ful of stones,
And in a glas he hadde pigges bones.

1 ecclesiastical condemnation. 2 absolution.
3 A writ of excommunication.
4 under his power. 5 young people of both sexes.
6 sign of an ale-house. 7 A hospital in London.
8 bass accompaniment. 9 small portions.
10 shreds. 11 the latest fashion.
12 A copy of the handkerchief of St. Veronica, on which was miraculously imprinted the face of Christ.
13 brim-full. 14 bag. 15 pillowslip.
16 i.e. the blessed Virgin's
17 latten. a composition metal similar to brass.

But with thise relikes, whan that he fond
A povre person[1] dwelling up-on lond,
Up-on a day he gat him more moneye
Than that the person gat in monthe tweye.
And thus, with feyned flaterye and japes,[2]
He made the person and the peple his apes.
But trewely to tellen, atte laste,
He was in chirche a noble ecclesiaste.
Wel coude he rede a lessoun or a storie,
But alderbest[3] he song an offertorie;
For wel he wiste, whan that song was songe,
He moste preche, and wel affyle[4] his tonge
To winne silver, as he ful wel coude;
Therefore he song so meriely and loude.
Now have I told you shortly, in a clause,
Th'estat, th'array, the nombre, and eek the cause
Why that assembled was this companye
In Southwerk, at this gentil hostelrye,
That highte the Tabard, faste by the Belle.
But now is tyme to yow for to telle
How that we baren us that ilke night,
Whan we were in that hostelrye alight.
And after wol I telle of our viage,
And al the remenaunt of our pilgrimage.
But first I pray yow, of your curteisye,
That ye n'arette it nat my vileinye,[5]
Thogh that I pleynly speke in this matere,
To telle yow hir wordes and hir chere;
Ne thogh I speke hir wordes properly.
For this ye knowen al-so wel as I,
Who-so shal telle a tale after a man,
He moot reherce, as ny as ever he can,
Everich a word, if it be in his charge,
Al speke he never so rudeliche and large;[6]
Or elles he moot telle his tale untrewe
Or feyne thing, or finde wordes newe.
He may nat spare, al-thogh he were his brother;
He moot as wel seye o word as another.
Crist spak him-self ful brode in holy writ,
And wel ye woot, no vileinye is it.
Eek Plato seith, who-so that can him rede,
The wordes mote be cosin to the dede.
Also I prey yow to foryeve it me,
Al have I nat set folk in hir degree[7]
Here in this tale, as that they sholde stonde;
My wit is short, ye may wel understonde.
Greet chere made our hoste us everichon,
And to the soper sette us anon;

1 parson. 2 tricks. 3 best of all. 4 polish
5 That you do not attribute it to lack of good manners on my part.
6 broadly. 7 in order of social rank.

d served us with vitaille at the beste.
ong was the wyn, and wel to drinke us
leste.[1]
emely man our hoste was with-alle
r to han been a marshal in an halle;
arge man he was with eyen stepe,[2]
airer burgeys is ther noon in Chepe:[3] ld of his speche, and wys, and wel
y-taught,
d of manhod him lakkede right naught.
k therto he was right a mery man,
d after soper pleyen he bigan,
d spak of mirthe amonges othere thinges, nan that we hadde maad our rekeninges;
d seyde thus: "Now, lordinges, trewely,
been to me right welcome hertely:
r by my trouthe, if that I shal nat lye, ie saugh this yeer so mery a companye ones in this herberwe[4] as is now.
yn wolde I doon yow mirthe, wiste I how.
d of a mirthe I am right now bithoght,
doon yow ese, and it shal coste noght.
Ye goon to Caunterbury; God yow spede,
e blisful martir quyte yow your mede.[5]
d wel I woot, as ye goon by the weye, shapen yow to talen[6] and to pleye;
r trewely, confort ne mirthe is noon ryde by the weye doumb as a stoon;
d therfore wol I maken yow disport,
I seyde erst,[7] and doon yow som confort.
d if yow lyketh alle, by oon assent,
ow for to stonden at my jugement,
d for to werken as I shal yow seye,
-morwe, whan ye ryden by the weye,
ow, by my fader soule, that is deed,
it ye be merye, I wol yeve yow myn heed.
ld up your hond, withouten more speche."
Our counseil was nat longe for to seche;[8] thoughte it was noght worth to make it wys,[9]
nd graunted him withouten more avys,
d bad him seye his verdit, as him leste.
"Lordinges," quod he, "now herkneth for the beste;
it tak it not, I prey yow, in desdeyn;
is is the poynt, to speken short and pleyn,
at ech of yow, to shorte with your weye,
this viage, shal telle tales tweye, Caunterbury-ward, I mene it so,
d hom-ward he shal tellen othere two,
aventures that whylom han bifalle.
nd which of yow that bereth him best of alle,

1 we were disposed. 2 bright.
3 Cheapside, London. 4 inn.
5 give you your reward. 6 tell stories.
7 before. 8 It did not take us long to agree.
9 to be particular about.

That is to seyn, that telleth in this cas
Tales of best sentence and most solas,[1]
Shal have a soper at our aller cost[2]
Here in this place, sitting by this post,
Whan that we come agayn fro Caunterbury.
And for to make yow the more mery,
I wol my-selven gladly with yow ryde,
Right at myn owne cost, and be your gyde.
And who-so wol my jugement withseye[3]
Shal paye all that we spenden by the weye.
And if ye vouche-sauf that it be so,
Tel me anon, with-outen wordes mo,[4]
And I wol erly shape me[5] therfore."
This thing was graunted, and our othes swore
With ful glad herte, and preyden him also
That he wold vouche-sauf for to do so,
And that he wolde been our governour,
And of our tales juge and reportour
And sette a soper at a certeyn prys;
And we wold reuled been at his devys,
In heigh and lowe;[6] and thus, by oon assent,
We been acorded to his jugement.
And ther-up-on the wyn was fet[7] anon;
We dronken, and to reste wente echon,
With-outen any lenger taryinge.
A-morwe, whan that day bigan to springe,
Up roos our host, and was our aller cok,[8]
And gadrede us togidre, alle in a flok,
And forth we riden, a litel more than pas,[9]
Un-to the watering of seint Thomas.[10]
And there our host bigan his hors areste,
And seyde; "Lordinges, herkneth, if yow
leste.
Ye woot your forward,[11] and I it yow
recorde.
If even-song and morwe-song acorde,[12]
Lat see now who shal telle the firste tale.
As ever mote I drinke wyn or ale,
Who-so be rebel to my jugement
Shal paye for al that by the weye is spent.
Now draweth cut, er that we ferrer
twinne;[13]
He which that hath the shortest shal biginne.
Sire knight," quod he, "my maister and my lord,
Now draweth cut, for that is myn acord.
Cometh neer," quod he, "my lady prioresse;
And ye, sir clerk, lat be your shamfast-nesse,

1 most instructive and entertaining.
2 at the cost of us all. 3 dispute.
4 more. 5 make my arrangements.
6 i.e. in everything. 7 fetched in.
8 the cock who waked us all.
9 faster than a walk.
10 A place two miles from Southwark.
11 agreement.
12 If you sing the same tune now that you did last evening.
13 Now draw lots before we get any further from town.

Ne studieth noght; ley hond to, every man."
Anon to drawen every wight bigan,
And shortly for to tellen, as it was,
Were it by aventure, or sort, or cas,[1]
The sothe is this, the cut fil to the knight,
Of which ful blythe and glad was every wight;
And telle he moste his tale, as was resoun,
By forward and by composicioun,[2]
As ye han hard; what nedeth wordes mo?
And whan this gode man saugh it was so,
As he that wys was and obedient
To kepe his forward by his free assent,
He seyde: "Sin I shal beginne the game,
What, welcome be the cut, a Goddes name!
Now lat us ryde, and herkneth what I seye."
And with that word we riden forth our weye;
And he bigan with right a mery chere
His tale anon, and seyde in this manere.

Here endeth the prolog of this book

THE NUN'S PRIEST'S TALE

This tale of the Cock and the Fox is a beast-fable, from the great medieval cycle of Reynard the Fox, told to impress the moral: "Beware of flatterers." In Chaucer's hands it has become much more than this — a mock-heroic epic, elaborated with the most delicious wit and humor. Chauntecleer is a royal prince, whose predestined fate is foretold by a warning dream, the significance of which he pedantically expounds with full medieval dialectic for the benefit of his favorite wife. But the scene is laid at the humble dwelling of a poor peasant woman, who owns this princely bird; and Chaucer never lets the reader forget that his hero is after all only a very "cocky" cock.

Here biginneth the Nonne Preestes Tale of the Cok and Hen, Chauntecleer and Pertelote.

A povre widwe, somdel stape[3] in age,
Was whylom dwelling in a narwe cotage,
Bisyde a grove, stonding in a dale.
This widwe, of which I telle yow my tale,
Sin thilke day that she was last a wyf,
In pacience ladde a ful simple lyf,
For litel was hir catel[4] and hir rente;
By housbondrye,[5] of such as God hir sente,
She fond[6] hir-self, and eek hir doghtren two.
Three large sowes hadde she, and namo,
Three kyn, and eek a sheep that highte Malle,
Ful sooty was hir bour, and eek hir halle,
In which she eet ful many a sclendre meel.
Of poynaunt sauce hir neded never a deel.
No deyntee morsel passed thurgh hir throte;
Hir dyete was accordant to hir cote.
Repleccioun ne made hir never syk;
Attempree[1] dyete was al hir phisyk,
And exercyse, and hertes suffisaunce.
The goute lette hir no-thing[2] for to daunce,
N'apoplexye shente[3] nat hir heed;
No wyn ne drank she, neither whyt ne reed.
Hir bord was served most with whyt and blak,
Milk and broun breed, in which she fond no lak,
Seynd[4] bacoun, and somtyme an ey[5] or tweye,
For she was as it were a maner deye.[6]
A yerd she hadde, enclosed al aboute
With stikkes, and a drye dich with-oute,
In which she hadde a cok, hight Chauntecleer,
In al the land of crowing nas his peer.
His vois was merier than the mery orgon
On messe-dayes that in the chirche gon;
Wel sikerer[7] was his crowing in his logge,
Than is a clokke, or an abbey orlogge.[8]
By nature knew he ech ascencioun
Of equinoxial in thilke toun;
For whan degrees fiftene were ascended,[9]
Thanne crew he, that it mighte nat ben amended.
His comb was redder than the fyn coral,
And batailed, as it were a castel-wal.
His bile was blak, and as the jeet it shoon;
Lyk asur were his legges, and his toon;
His nayles whytter than the lilie flour,
And lyk the burned gold was his colour.
This gentil cok hadde in his governaunce
Sevene hennes, for to doon al his plesaunce,
Whiche were his sustres and his paramours,
And wonder lyk to him, as of colours.
Of whiche the faireste hewed on hir throte
Was cleped faire damoysele Pertelote.
Curteys she was, discreet, and debonaire,
And compaignable, and bar hir-self so faire,
Sin thilke day that she was seven night old,
That trewely she hath the herte in hold
Of Chauntecleer loken in every lith;[10]
He loved hir so, that wel was him therwith.
But such a joye was it to here hem singe,
Whan that the brighte sonne gan to springe,
In swete accord, "my lief is faren in londe."
For thilke tyme, as I have understonde,

1 by hap, or fate, or chance.
2 agreement and contract.
3 advanced.
4 property.
5 economy.
6 provided for.

1 temperate.
2 did not hinder her at all.
3 injured.
4 broiled.
5 egg.
6 dairywoman.
7 more reliable.
8 time-piece.
9 i.e. every hour.
10 limb.

estes and briddes coude speke and singe.
And so bifel, that in a daweninge,
s Chauntecleer among his wyves alle
t on his perche, that was in the halle, nd next him sat this faire Pertelote,
his Chauntecleer gan gronen in his throte,
s man that in his dreem is drecched[1] sore.
nd whan that Pertelote thus herde him rore,
he was agast, and seyde, "O herte dere,
hat eyleth yow, to grone in this manere?
e been a verray sleper, fy for shame!"
nd he answerde and seyde thus, "madame,
pray yow, that ye take it nat a-grief:
y god, me mette[2] I was in swich meschief ight now, that yet myn herte is sore afright.
low god," quod he, "my swevene recche[3] aright,
nd keep my body out of foul prisoun!
e mette, how that I romed up and doun
Vithinne our yerde, wher-as I saugh a beste, as lyk an hound, and wolde han maad areste pon my body, and wolde han had me deed.
is colour was bitwixe yelwe and reed;
nd tipped was his tail, and bothe his eres,
Vith blak, unlyk the remenant of his heres;
is snowte smal, with glowinge eyen tweye.
et of his look for fere almost I deye;
his caused me my groning, doutelees."
"Avoy!" quod she, "fy on yow, hertelees!
llas!" quod she, "for, by that god above,
ow han ye lost myn herte and al my love;
can nat love a coward, by my feith.
or certes, what so any womman seith,
e alle desyren, if it mighte be,
o han housbondes hardy, wyse, and free,[4]
nd secree, and no nigard, ne no fool,
e him that is agast of every tool,[5]
e noon avauntour,[6] by that god above!
ow dorste ye seyn for shame unto your love,
hat any thing mighte make yow aferd?
ave ye no mannes herte, and han a berd?
llas! and conne ye been agast of swevenis?
o-thing, god wot, but vanitee,[7] in sweven is.
wevenes engendren of replecciouns,[8]
nd ofte of fume,[9] and of complecciouns,[10]
Vhan humours been to habundant in a wight.
ertes this dreem, which ye han met to-night,

1 troubled. 2 I dreamed. 3 interpret my dream.
4 generous. 5 weapon. 6 boaster.
7 emptiness. 8 Dreams come from over-eating.
9 gas on the stomach.
10 mixtures of the humors which compose the body.

Cometh of the grete superfluitee
Of youre rede colera,[1] pardee,
Which causeth folk to dreden in here dremes
Of arwes, and of fyr with rede lemes,[2]
Of grete bestes, that they wol hem byte,
Of contek,[3] and of whelpes grete and lyte;
Right as the humour of malencolye[4]
Causeth ful many a man, in sleep, to crye,
For fere of blake beres, or boles blake,
Or elles, blake develes wole hem take.
Of othere humours coude I telle also,
That werken many a man in sleep ful wo;
But I wol passe as lightly as I can.
Lo Catoun, which that was so wys a man,
Seyde he nat thus, ne do no fors[5] of dremes?
Now, sire," quod she, "whan we flee fro the bemes,
For Goddes love, as tak som laxatyf;
Up peril of my soule, and of my lyf,
I counseille yow the beste, I wol nat lye,
That bothe of colere and of malencolye
Ye purge yow; and for ye shul nat tarie,
Though in this toun is noon apotecarie,
I shal my-self to herbes techen yow,
That shul ben for your hele, and for your prow;[6]
And in our yerd tho herbes shal I finde,
The whiche han of hir propretee, by kinde,[7]
To purgen yow binethe, and eek above.
Forget not this, for goddes owene love!
Ye been ful colerik of compleccioun.
Ware the sonne in his ascencioun
Ne fynde yow nat repleet of humours hote;
And if it do, I dar wel leye a grote,
That ye shul have a fevere terciane,
Or an agu, that may be youre bane.
A day or two ye shul have digestyves
Of wormes, er ye take your laxatyves,
Of lauriol,[8] centaure,[9] and fumetere,[10]
Or elles of ellebor, that groweth there,
Of catapuce,[11] or of gaytres beryis,[12]
Of erbe yve,[13] growing in our yerd, that mery is;
Pekke hem up right as they growe, and ete hem in.
Be mery, housbond, for your fader kin!
Dredeth no dreem; I can say yow namore."
"Madame," quod he, "graunt mercy[14] of your lore.
But nathelees, as touching daun Catoun,
That hath of wisdom such a greet renoun,
Though that he bad no dremes for to drede,
By god, men may in olde bokes rede

1 red bile, one of the four humors. 2 flames.
3 strife. 4 black bile. 5 pay no attention to.
6 advantage. 7 nature. 8 spurge-laurel.
9 centaury. 10 fumitory. 11 caper-spurge.
12 dogwood. 13 ground ivy. 14 many thanks.

Of many a man, more of auctoritee
Than ever Catoun was, so mote I thee,[1]
That al the revers seyn of his sentence,
And han wel founden by experience,
That dremes ben significaciouns,
As wel of joye as tribulaciouns
That folk enduren in this lyf present.
Ther nedeth make of this noon argument;
The verray preve sheweth it in dede.
Oon of the gretteste auctours that men rede[2]
Seith thus, that whylom two felawes wente
On pilgrimage, in a ful good entente;
And happed so, thay come into a toun,
Wher-as ther was swich congregacioun
Of peple, and eek so streit of herbergage[3]
That they ne founde as muche as o cotage
In which they bothe mighte y-logged be.
Wherfor thay mosten, of necessitee,
As for that night, departen compaignye;
And ech of hem goth to his hostelrye,
And took his logging as it wolde falle.
That oon of hem was logged in a stalle,
Fer in a yerd, with oxen of the plough;
That other man was logged wel y-nough,
As was his aventure, or his fortune,
That us governeth alle as in commune.
And so bifel, that, longe er it were day,
This man mette[4] in his bed, ther-as he lay,
How that his felawe gan up-on him calle,
And seyde, 'allas! for in an oxes stalle
This night I shal be mordred ther I lye.
Now help me, dere brother, er I dye;
In alle haste com to me,' he sayde.
This man out of his sleep for fere abrayde;[5]
But whan that he was wakned of his sleep,
He turned him, and took of this no keep;[6]
Him thoughte his dreem nas but a vanitee.
Thus twyës in his sleping dremed he.
And atte thridde tyme yet his felawe
Cam, as him thoughte, and seide, 'I am now slawe;
Bihold my blody woundes, depe and wyde!
Arys up erly in the morwe-tyde,
And at the west gate of the toun,' quod he,
'A carte ful of dong ther shaltow see,
In which my body is hid ful prively;
Do thilke carte aresten boldely.
My gold caused my mordre, sooth to sayn;'
And tolde him every poynt how he was slayn,
With a ful pitous face, pale of hewe.
And truste wel, his dreem he fond ful trewe;
For on the morwe, as sone as it was day,
To his felawes in he took the way;
And whan that he cam to this oxes stalle,
After his felawe he bigan to calle.
The hostiler answered him anon,
And seyde, 'sire, your felawe is agon,
As sone as day he wente out of the toun.'
This man gan fallen in suspecioun,
Remembring on his dremes that he mette,
And forth he goth, no lenger wolde he lette,
Unto the west gate of the toun, and fond
A dong-carte, as it were to donge lond,
That was arrayed in the same wyse
As ye han herd the dede man devyse;
And with an hardy herte he gan to crye
Vengeaunce and justice of this felonye: —
'My felawe mordred is this same night,
And in this carte he lyth gapinge upright.
I crye out on the ministres,' quod he,
'That sholden kepe and reulen this citee;
Harrow! allas! her lyth my felawe slayn!'
What sholde I more un-to this tale sayn?
The peple out-sterte, and caste the cart grounde,
And in the middel of the dong they founde
The dede man, that mordred was al newe.
O blisful god, that art so just and trewe!
Lo, how that thou biwreyest[2] mordre alway!
Mordre wol out, that see we day by day.
Mordre is so wlatsom[3] and abhominable
To god, that is so just and resonable,
That he ne wol nat suffre it heled[4] be;
Though it abyde a yeer, or two, or three,
Mordre wol out, this my conclusioun.
And right anoon, ministres of that toun
Han hent the carter, and so sore him pyned,
And eek the hostiler so sore engyned,[6]
That thay biknewe[7] hir wikkednesse anoon,
And were an-hanged by the nekke-boon.
Here may men seen that dremes been drede.
And certes, in the same book I rede,
Right in the nexte chapitre after this,
(I gabbe[8] nat, so have I joye or blis,)
Two men that wolde han passed over see,
For certeyn cause, in-to a fer contree,
If that the wind ne hadde been contrarie,
That made hem in a citee for to tarie,
That stood ful mery upon an haven-syde.
But on a day, agayn the even-tyde,
The wind gan chaunge, and blew right as hem leste.
Jolif and glad they wente un-to hir reste,
And casten hem ful erly for to saille;
But to that oo man fil a greet mervaille.
That oon of hem, in sleping as he lay,
Him mette a wonder dreem, agayn the day

1 prosper. 2 Cicero.
3 so limited in its lodging places. 4 dreamed.
5 started up in fright. 6 paid no attention to it.

1 delay. 2 revealest. 3 disgusting.
4 concealed. 5 tortured. 6 racked.
7 confessed. 8 speak idly.

m thoughte a man stood by his beddes syde,
d him comaunded, that he sholde abyde,
d seyde him thus, 'if thou to-morwe wende, hou shalt be dreynt;[1] my tale is at an ende.'
wook, and tolde his felawe what he mette,
d preyde him his viage for to lette;[2]
for that day, he preyde him to abyde.
s felawe, that lay by his beddes syde,
n for to laughe, and scorned him ful faste.
o dreem,' quod he, 'may so myn herte agaste,
at I wol lette for to do my thinges.
ette not a straw by thy dreminges,
r swevenes been but vanitees and japes.[3]
en dreme al-day of owles or of apes,
d eke of many a mase[4] therwithal;
en dreme of thing that never was ne shal.
t sith I see that thou wolt heer abyde,
d thus for-sleuthen[5] wilfully thy tyde,
d wot it reweth me;[6] and have good day.'
d thus he took his leve, and wente his way.
t er that he hadde halfe his cours y-seyled,
ot I nat why, ne what mischaunce it eyled,
t casuelly the shippes botme rente, d ship and man under the water wente
sighte of othere shippes it byside, at with hem seyled at the same tyde.
d therfor, faire Pertelote so dere,
swiche ensamples olde maistow lere,
at no man sholde been to recchelees dremes, for I sey thee, doutelees, at many a dreem ful sore is for to drede.
Lo, in the lyf of seint Kenelm, I rede,
at was Kenulphus sone, the noble king
Mercenrike,[7] how Kenelm mette a thing;
lyte er he was mordred, on a day, s mordre in his avisioun he say.
s norice him expouned every del is sweven, and bad him for to kepe him wel
r traisoun; but he nas but seven yeer old, d therfore litel tale hath he told any dreem, so holy was his herte.
y god, I hadde lever than my sherte at ye had rad his legende, as have I.
ame Pertelote, I sey yow trewely, acrobeus,[8] that writ th'avisioun
Affrike of the worthy Cipioun, ermeth dremes, and seith that they been arning of thinges that men after seen.

And forther-more, I pray yow loketh wel
In th'olde testament, of Daniel,
If he held dremes any vanitee.
Reed eek of Joseph, and ther shul ye see
Wher dremes ben somtyme (I sey nat alle)
Warning of thinges that shul after falle.
Loke of Egipt the king, daun[1] Pharao,
His bakere and his boteler also,
Wher they ne felte noon effect in dremes.
Who-so wol seken actes of sondry remes,[2]
May rede of dremes many a wonder thing.
Lo Cresus, which that was of Lyde king,
Mette he nat that he sat upon a tree,
Which signified he sholde anhanged be?
Lo heer Andromacha, Ectores wyf,
That day that Ector sholde lese his lyf,
She dremed on the same night biforn,
How that the lyf of Ector sholde be lorn,
If thilke day he wente in-to bataille;
She warned him, but it mighte nat availle;
He wente for to fighte nathelees,
But he was slayn anoon of Achilles.
But thilke tale is al to long to telle,
And eek it is ny day, I may nat dwelle.
Shortly I seye, as for conclusioun,
That I shal han of this avisioun
Adversitee; and I seye forther-more,
That I ne telle of laxatyves no store,
For they ben venimous, I woot it wel;
I hem defye, I love hem never a del.
Now let us speke of mirthe, and stinte al this;
Madame Pertelote, so have I blis,
Of o thing god hath sent me large grace;
For whan I see the beautee of your face,
Ye ben so scarlet-reed about your yën,
It maketh al my drede for to dyen;
For, also siker[3] as In principio,[4]
Mulier est hominis confusio;
Madame, the sentence of this Latin is —
Womman is mannes joye and al his blis.
For whan I fele a-night your softe syde,
Al-be-it that I may nat on you ryde,
For that our perche is maad so narwe, alas!
I am so ful of joye and of solas
That I defye bothe sweven and dreem."
And with that word he fley doun fro the beem,
For it was day, and eek his hennes alle;
And with a chuk he gan hem for to calle,
For he had founde a corn, lay in the yerd.
Royal he was, he was namore aferd;
He fethered Pertelote twenty tyme,
And trad as ofte, er that it was pryme.

1 drowned. 2 delay. 3 jokes.
4 confused matter. 5 waste in idleness.
6 I lament it. 7 Mercia, i.e. central England.
8 Author of a commentary on Cicero's Somnium Scipionis

1 lord. 2 realms. 3 just as sure.
4 The first words of St. John's Gospel. The following line means, "woman is man's undoing." Chauntecleer deliberately mistranslates it.

He loketh as it were a grim leoun;
And on his toos he rometh up and doun,
Him deyned not to sette his foot to grounde.
He chukketh, whan he hath a corn y-founde,
And to him rennen thanne his wyves alle.
Thus royal, as a prince is in his halle,
Leve I this Chauntecleer in his pasture;
And after wol I telle his aventure.
Whan that the month in which the world bigan,[1]
That highte March, whan god first maked man,
Was complet, and passed were also,
Sin March bigan, thritty dayes and two,[2]
Bifel that Chauntecleer, in al his pryde,
His seven wyves walking by his syde,
Caste up his eyen to the brighte sonne,
That in the signe of Taurus hadde y-ronne
Twenty degrees and oon, and somewhat more;
And knew by kynde,[3] and by noon other lore,
That it was pryme,[4] and crew with blisful stevene.
"The sonne," he sayde, "is clomben up on hevene
Fourty degrees and oon, and more, y-wis.
Madame Pertelote, my worldes blis,
Herkneth thise blisful briddes how they singe,
And see the fresshe floures how they springe;
Ful is myn herte of revel and solas."
But sodeinly him fil a sorweful cas;
For ever the latter ende of joye is wo.
God woot that worldly joye is sone ago;
And if a rethor[5] coude faire endyte,
He in a cronique saufly mighte it wryte,
As for a sovereyn notabilitee.
Now every wys man, lat him herkne me;
This storie is al-so trewe, I undertake,
As is the book of Launcelot de Lake,[6]
That wommen holde in ful gret reverence.
Now wol I torne agayn to my sentence.
A col-fox,[7] ful of sly iniquitee,
That in the grove hadde woned yeres three,
By heigh imaginacioun forn-cast,[8]
The same night thurgh-out the hegges brast
Into the yerd, ther Chauntecleer the faire
Was wont, and eek his wyves, to repaire;
And in a bed of wortes[9] stille he lay,
Til it was passed undern[10] of the day,
Wayting his tyme on Chauntecleer to falle,
As gladly doon thise homicydes alle,
That in awayt liggen to mordre men.
O false mordrer, lurking in thy den!
O newe Scariot, newe Genilon![1]
False dissimilour, O Greek Sinon,
That broghtest Troye al outrely to sorwe!
O Chauntecleer, acursed be that morwe,
That thou into that yerd flough fro the bemes!
Thou were ful wel y-warned by thy dreme
That thilke day was perilous to thee.
But what that god forwoot mot nedes be,[2]
After the opinioun of certeyn clerkis.
Witnesse on him, that any perfit clerk is,
That in scole is gret altercacioun
In this matere, and greet disputisoun,
And hath ben of an hundred thousand me
But I ne can not bulte it to the bren,
As can the holy doctour Augustyn,
Or Boëce,[3] or the bishop Bradwardyn,[4]
Whether that goddes worthy forwiting
Streyneth[5] me nedely for to doon a thing,
(Nedely clepe I simple necessitee);
Or elles, if free choys be graunted me
To do that same thing, or do it noght,
Though god forwoot it, er that it was wroght;
Or if his witing streyneth nevere a del
But by necessitee condicionel.
I wol not han to do of swich matere;
My tale is of a cok, as ye may here,
That took his counseil of his wyf, with sorwe
To walken in the yerd upon that morwe
That he had met the dreem, that I yow telde.
Wommennes counseils been ful ofte colde;[6]
Wommannes counseil broghte us first to wo,
And made Adam fro paradys to go,
Ther-as he was ful mery, and wel at ese.
But for I noot, to whom it mighte displese,
If I counseil of wommen wolde blame,
Passe over, for I seyde it in my game.
Rede auctours, wher they trete of swich matere,
And what thay seyn of wommen ye may here
Thise been the cokkes wordes, and nat myne;
I can noon harm of no womman divyne.
Faire in the sond, to bathe hir merily,
Lyth Pertelote, and alle hir sustres by,
Agayn the sonne; and Chauntecleer so free
Song merier than the mermayde in the see;
For Phisiologus[7] seith sikerly,
How that they singen wel and merily.
And so bifel that, as he caste his yë,
Among the wortes, on a boterflye,

1 The earth was created at the spring equinox.
2 i.e. it was May 3. 3 nature.
4 nine A.M. 5 master of rhetoric.
6 One of the Arthurian romances.
7 fox with black markings.
8 Predestined by the mind of God.
9 vegetables. 10 middle of the morning.

1 Judas Iscariot, and Ganelon, traitor in the Song of Roland.
2 What God foreknows must needs be. 3 Boethius
4 English theologian of fourteenth century.
5 constraineth. 6 disastrous.
7 A fabulous book on the habits of animals.

was war of this fox that lay ful lowe.
thing ne liste him thanne for to crowe,
cryde anon, "cok, cok," and up he sterte,
man that was affrayed in his herte.
naturelly a beest desyreth flee his contrarie, if he may it see,
ough he never erst had seyn it with his yë.
his Chauntecleer, whan he gan him espye, wolde han fled, but that the fox anon
de, "Gentil sire, allas! wher wol ye gon?
ye affrayed of me that am your freend?
w certes, I were worse than a feend,
to yow wolde harm or vileinye.
n nat come your counseil for t'espye;
trewely, the cause of my cominge
s only for to herkne how that ye singe.
trewely ye have as mery a stevene
eny aungel hath, that is in hevene;
erwith ye han in musik more felinge an hadde Boëce, or any that can singe.
lord your fader (god his soule blesse!)
l eek your moder, of hir gentilesse, n in myn hous y-been, to my gret ese;
l certes, sire, ful fayn wolde I yow plese.
t for men speke of singing, I wol saye,
mote I brouke [1] wel myn eyen tweye,
e yow, I herde never man so singe,
dide your fader in the morweninge;
tes, it was of herte, al that he song.
l for to make his voys the more strong,
wolde so peyne him, that with bothe his yën moste winke, so loude he wolde cryen,
l stonden on his tiptoon ther-with-al, l strecche forth his nekke long and smal. l eek he was of swich discrecioun.
at ther nas no man in no regioun at him in song or wisdom mighte passe.
ave wel rad in daun Burnel the Asse,[2]
ong his vers, how that ther was a cok, that a preestes sone yaf him a knok on his leg, whyl he was yong and nyce,[3] made him for to lese his benefyce.
t certeyn, ther nis no comparisoun wix the wisdom and discrecioun youre fader, and of his subtiltee.
w singeth, sire, for seinte Charitee,
see, conne ye your fader countrefete?'[4]
is Chauntecleer his winges gan to bete, man that coude his tresoun nat espye,
was he ravisshed with his flaterye.
Allas! ye lordes, many a fals flatour in your courtes, and many a losengeour,[5]
at plesen yow wel more, by my feith, an he that soothfastnesse unto yow seith.

have the use of.
A Latin satirical poem of the twelfth century.
foolish. 4 imitate. 5 flatterer.

Redeth Ecclesiaste [1] of flaterye;
Beth war, ye lordes, of hir trecherye.
This Chauntecleer stood hye up-on his toos,
Strecching his nekke, and heeld his eyen cloos,
And gan to crowe loude for the nones;[2]
And daun Russel the fox sterte up at ones,
And by the gargat [3] hente Chauntecleer,
And on his bak toward the wode him beer,
For yet ne was ther no man that him sewed.[4]
O destinee, that mayst nat been eschewed!
Allas, that Chauntecleer fleigh fro the bemes!
Allas, his wyf ne roghte nat of dremes!
And on a Friday fil al this meschaunce.
O Venus, that art goddesse of plesaunce,
Sin that thy servant was this Chauntecleer,
And in thy service dide al his poweer,
More for delyt, than world to multiplye,
Why woldestow suffre him on thy day [5] to dye?
O Gaufred,[6] dere mayster soverayn,
That, whan thy worthy king Richard was slayn
With shot,[7] compleynedest his deth so sore,
Why ne hadde I now thy sentence and thy lore,
The Friday for to chyde, as diden ye?
(For on a Friday soothly slayn was he.)
Than wolde I shewe yow how that I coude pleyne
For Chauntecleres drede, and for his peyne.
Certes, swich cry ne lamentacioun
Was never of ladies maad, whan Ilioun
Was wonne, and Pirrus with his streite swerd,
Whan he hadde hent [8] king Priam by the berd,
And slayn him (as saith us Eneydos),
As maden alle the hennes in the clos,
Whan they had seyn of Chauntecleer the sighte.
But sovereynly dame Pertelote shrighte,
Ful louder than dide Hasdrubales wyf,
Whan that hir housbond hadde lost his lyf,
And that the Romayns hadde brend Cartage;
She was so ful of torment and of rage,
That wilfully into the fyr she sterte,
And brende hir-selven with a stedfast herte.
O woful hennes, right so cryden ye,
As, whan that Nero brende the citee
Of Rome, cryden senatoures wyves,
For that hir housbondes losten alle hir lyves;

1 The book of Ecclesiasticus in the Apocrypha.
2 for the nonce. 3 throat. 4 pursued.
5 Friday is dies Veneris.
6 Geoffrey of Vinsauf, author of a Latin treatise on the art of poetry, which contains a rhetorical lament for Richard I. Chaucer is laughing at his bombastic style.
7 an arrow. 8 seized.

Withouten gilt this Nero hath hem slayn.
Now wol I torne to my tale agayn: —
This sely[1] widwe, and eek hir doghtres two,
Herden thise hennes crye and maken wo,
And out at dores sterten they anoon,
And syen the fox toward the grove goon,
And bar upon his bak the cok away;
And cryden, "Out! harrow! and weyla-way!
Ha, ha, the fox!" and after him they ran,
And eek with staves many another man;
Ran Colle our dogge, and Talbot, and Gerland,
And Malkin, with a distaf in hir hand;
Ran cow and calf, and eek the verray hogges
So were they fered for berking of the dogges
And shouting of the men and wimmen eke,
They ronne so, hem thoughte hir herte breke.
They yelleden as feendes doon in helle;
The dokes cryden as men wolde hem quelle;[2]
The gees for fere flowen over the trees;
Out of the hyve cam the swarm of bees;
So hidous was the noyse, a! benedicite!
Certes, he Jakke Straw,[3] and his meynee,
Ne made never shoutes half so shrille,
Whan that they wolden any Fleming[4] kille,
As thilke day was maad upon the fox.
Of bras thay broghten bemes,[5] and of box,
Of horn, of boon, in whiche they blewe and pouped,
And therwithal thay shryked and they houped;
It semed as that heven sholde falle.
Now, gode men, I pray yow herkneth alle!
Lo, how fortune turneth sodeinly
The hope and pryde eek of hir enemy!
This cok, that lay upon the foxes bak,
In al his drede, un-to the fox he spak,
And seyde, "sire, if that I were as ye,
Yet sholde I seyn (as wis[6] god helpe me),
Turneth agayn, ye proude cherles alle!
A verray pestilence up-on yow falle!
Now am I come un-to this wodes syde,
Maugree[7] your heed, the cok shal heer abyde;
I wol him ete in feith, and that anon." —
The fox answerde, "in feith, it shal be don," —
And as he spak that word, al sodeinly
This cok brak from his mouth deliverly,[8]
And heighe up-on a tree he fleigh anon.
And whan the fox saugh that he was y-gon,
"Allas!" quod he, "O Chauntecleer, allas
I have to yow," quod he, "y-doon trespas,
In-as-muche as I maked yow aferd, Whan I yow hente, and broghte out of yerd;
But, sire, I dide it in no wikke entente;
Com doun, and I shal telle yow what mente.
I shal seye sooth to yow, god help me so."
"Nay than," quod he, "I shrewe[1] us bo
two,
And first I shrewe my-self, bothe blood a bones,
If thou bigyle me ofter than ones.
Thou shalt na-more, thurgh thy flaterye,
Do me to singe and winke with myn yë.
For he that winketh, whan he sholde see,
Al wilfully, god lat him never thee!"[2]
"Nay," quod the fox, "but god yeve h
meschaunce,
That is so undiscreet of governaunce,
That jangleth[3] whan he sholde holde h
pees."
Lo, swich it is for to be recchelees,
And necligent, and truste on flaterye.
But ye that holden this tale a folye,
As of a fox, or of a cok and hen,
Taketh the moralitee, good men.
For seint Paul seith, that al that writen is
To our doctryne it is y-write, y-wis.
Taketh the fruyt, and let the chaf be still
Now, gode god, if that it be thy wille,
As seith my lord, so make us alle go men;
And bringe us to his heighe blisse. Amen

Here is ended the Nonne Preestes Tale.

1 hapless. 2 kill.
3 Leader of the Peasants' Revolt of 1381.
4 Many of the London merchants were natives of Flanders.
5 trumpets. 6 surely. 7 in spite of. 8 nimbly.

1 curse. 2 prosper. 3 talketh.

THE PARDONER'S TALE

The Pardoner's Tale is a sermon on the tex
"The love of money is the root of all evil
The dramatic story, full of tragic irony, whi serves as exemplum for this text, is found varying forms in many languages. It seems have started in India, and to have come Europe via Persia and Arabia. A modern ve sion, brought direct from India, is The King Ankus in Kipling's Second Jungle Book.

In the Prologue to his tale, the shamele
Pardoner, seated in a wayside tavern, cynicall describes to his fellow pilgrims his methods making money by playing on the superstitio credulity of the ignorant. At the end of his se mon-tale, which denounces his own besettin sins of avarice and riotous living, he has th audacity to recommend his spurious relics the very company which has listened to th
exposé.

THE PROLOGUE OF THE PARDONER'S TALE

Here folweth the Prologe of the Pardoners Tale

Radix malorum est Cupiditas: Ad Thimotheum, sexto.

"Lordings," quod he, "in chirches whan I preche,
Peyne me to han an hauteyn speche,[1]
And ringe it out as round as gooth a belle,
For I can al by rote[2] that I telle.
My theme is alwey oon, and ever was —
Radix malorum est Cupiditas.'[3]
First I pronounce whennes that I come,
And than my bulles shewe I, alle and somme.
Our lige lordes seel on my patente,[4]
That shewe I first, my body to warente,
That no man be so bold, ne preest ne clerk,
Me to destourbe of Cristes holy werk;
And after that than telle I forth my tales,
Bulles of popes and of cardinales,
Of patriarkes, and bishoppes I shewe;
And in Latyn I speke a wordes fewe,
To saffron with my predicacioun,[5]
And for to stire men to devocioun.
Than shewe I forth my longe cristal stones,
Ycrammed ful of cloutes and of bones;
Relikes been they, as wenen they echoon.
Than have I in latoun[6] a sholder-boon
Which that was of an holy Jewes shepe.
'Good men,' seye I, 'tak of my wordes kepe;[7]
If that this boon be wasshe in any welle,
If cow, or calf, or sheep, or oxe swelle
That any worm[8] hath ete, or worm y-stonge,
Tak water of that welle, and wash his tonge,
And it is hool anon; and forthermore,
Of pokkes and of scabbe, and every sore
Shal every sheep be hool, that of this welle
Drinketh a draughte; tak kepe eek what I telle.
If that the good-man, that the bestes oweth,[9]
Wol every wike,[10] er that the cok him croweth,
Fastinge, drinken of this welle a draughte,
As thilke holy Jewe our eldres taughte,
His bestes and his stoor shal multiplye.
And, sirs, also it heleth jalousye;
For, though a man be falle in jalous rage,
Let maken with this water his potage,
And never shal he more his wyf mistriste,
Though he the sooth of hir defaute wiste;
Al had she taken preestes two or three.
Heer is a miteyn eek, that ye may see.
He that his hond wol putte in this miteyn,
He shal have multiplying of his greyn,
Whan he hath sowen, be it whete or otes,
So that he offre pens, or elles grotes.
Good men and wommen, o thing warne I yow,
If any wight be in this chirche now,
That hath doon sinne horrible, that he
Dar nat, for shame, of it y-shriven be,
Or any womman, be she yong or old,
That hath y-maad hir housbond cokewold,
Swich folk shul have no power ne no grace
To offren to my reliks in this place.
And who-so findeth him out of swich blame,
He wol com up and offre in goddes name,
And I assoille[1] him by the auctoritee
Which that by bulle y-graunted was to me.'
By this gaude[2] have I wonne, yeer by yeer,
An hundred mark sith I was Pardoner.
I stonde lyk a clerk in my pulpet,
And whan the lewed[3] peple is doun y-set,
I preche, so as ye han herd bifore,
And telle an hundred false japes more.
Than peyne I me to strecche forth the nekke,
And est and west upon the peple I bekke,[4]
As doth a dowve sitting on a berne.
Myn hondes and my tonge goon so yerne,[5]
That it is joye to see my bisinesse.
Of avaryce and of swich cursednesse
Is al my preching, for to make hem free
To yeve her pens, and namely[6] un-to me.
For my entente is nat but for to winne,
And no-thing for correccioun of sinne.
I rekke never, whan that they ben beried,
Though that her soules goon a-blake-beried![7]
For certes, many a predicacioun
Comth ofte tyme of yvel entencioun;
Som for plesaunce of folk and flaterye,
To been avaunced by ipocrisye,
And som for veyne glorie, and som for hate.
For, whan I dar non other weyes debate,[8]
Than wol I stinge him with my tonge smerte
In preching, so that he shal nat asterte[9]
To been defamed falsly, if that he Hath trespased to my brethren or to me.
For, though I telle noght his propre name,
Men shal wel knowe that it is the same
By signes and by othere circumstances.
Thus quyte I folk that doon us displesances;
Thus spitte I out my venim under hewe
Of holynesse, to seme holy and trewe.

1 I take pains to speak in a lofty manner.
2 know all by heart. 3 1 Timothy, VI, 10.
4 letter of authority.
5 To give my preaching more color and flavor.
6 latten, a composition of copper and zinc.
7 heed. 8 snake. 9 owneth 10 week.

1 absolve. 2 trick. 3 ignorant. 4 nod.
5 briskly. 6 especially. 7 go blackberrying.
8 quarrel. 9 escape.

But shortly myn entente I wol devyse;
I preche of no-thing but for coveityse.
Therfor my theme is yet, and ever was —
'Radix malorum est cupiditas.'
Thus can I preche agayn that same vyce
Which that I use, and that is avaryce.
But, though my-self be gilty in that sinne
Yet can I maken other folk to twinne
From avaryce, and sore to repente.
But that is nat my principal entente.
I preche no-thing but for coveityse;
Of this matere it oughte y-nogh suffyse.
Than telle I hem ensamples many oon
Of olde stories, longe tyme agoon:
For lewed peple loven tales olde;
Swich thinges can they wel reporte and holde.
What? trowe ye, the whyles I may preche,
And winne gold and silver for I teche,
That I wol live in povert wilfully?
Nay, nay, I thoghte it never trewely!
For I wol preche and begge in sondry londes;
I wol not do no labour with myn hondes,
Ne make baskettes, and live therby,
Because I wol nat beggen ydelly.
I wol non of the apostles counterfete;[2]
I wol have money, wolle, chese, and whete,
Al were it yeven of the povrest page,
Or of the povrest widwe in a village,
Al sholde hir children sterve for famyne.
Nay! I wol drinke licour of the vyne,
And have a joly wenche in every toun.
But herkneth, lordings, in conclusioun;
Your lyking is that I shal telle a tale.
Now, have I dronke a draughte of corny ale,
By god, I hope I shal yow telle a thing
That shal, by resoun, been at your lyking.
For, though myself be a ful vicious man,
A moral tale yet I yow telle can,
Which I am wont to preche, for to winne.
How holde your pees, my tale I wol beginne."

THE PARDONER'S TALE

Here biginneth the Pardoners Tale

In Flaundres whylom was a companye
Of yonge folk, that haunteden[3] folye,
As ryot, hasard, stewes,[4] and tavernes,
Wher-as, with harpes, lutes, and giternes,
They daunce and pleye at dees bothe day and night,
And ete also and drinken over hir might,
Thurgh which they doon the devel sacrifyse
With-in that develes temple, in cursed wyse,
By superfluitee abhominable;
Hir othes been so grete and so dampnable,
That it is grisly for to here hem swere;
Our blissed lordes body they to-tere;[1]
Hem thoughte Jewes rente him noghy-nough;
And ech of hem at otheres sinne lough.
And right anon than comen tombesteres[2]
Fetys[3] and smale, and yonge fruytesteres,[4]
Singers with harpes, baudes, wafereres,[5]
Whiche been the verray develes officeres
To kindle and blowe the fyr of lecherye,
That is annexed un-to glotonye;
The holy writ take I to my witnesse,
That luxurie is in wyn and dronkenesse.
Lo, how that dronken Loth, unkindely,[6]
Lay by his doghtres two, unwitingly;
So dronke he was, he niste what he wroghte.
Herodes, (who-so wel the stories soghte),
Whan he of wyn was replet at his feste,
Right at his owene table he yaf his heste
To sleen the Baptist John ful giltelees.
Senek seith eek a good word doutelees;
He seith, he can no difference finde
Bitwix a man that is out of his minde
And a man which that is dronkelewe,[7]
But that woodnesse, y-fallen in a shrewe,[8]
Persevereth lenger than doth dronkenesse.
O glotonye, ful of cursednesse,
O cause first of our confusioun,
O original of our dampnacioun,
Til Crist had boght us with his blood agayn!
Lo, how dere, shortly for to sayn,
Aboght was thilke cursed vileinye;
Corrupt was all this world for glotonye!
Adam our fader, and his wyf also,
Fro Paradys to labour and to wo
Were driven for that vyce, it is no drede;[9]
For whyl that Adam fasted, as I rede,
He was in Paradys; and whan that he
Eet of the fruyt defended[10] on the tree,
Anon he was out-cast to wo and peyne.
O glotonye, on thee wel oghte us pleyne!
O, wiste a man how many maladyes
Folwen of excesse and of glotonyes,
He wolde been the more mesurable
Of his diete, sittinge at his table.
Allas! the shorte throte, the tendre mouth,
Maketh that, Est and West, and North and South,
In erthe, in eir, in water men to-swinke[11]
To gete a glotoun deyntee mete and drinke!

1 separate. 2 imitate. 3 practised. 4 brothels.

1 i.e. they swear by various parts of Christ's body.
2 girl acrobats. 3 well shaped.
4 girls who sell fruit. 5 peddlers of cakes.
6 against nature. 7 drunken.
8 insanity, when it attacks a wicked man.
9 without doubt. 10 forbidden. 11 work hard.

this matere, o Paul, wel canstow trete,
Mete un-to wombe, and wombe eek un-to mete,
"ual god destroyen bothe," as Paulus seith.[1]
Alas! a foul thing is it, by my feith,
o seye this word, and fouler is the dede,
han man so drinketh of the whyte and rede,
hat of his throte he maketh his privee,
hurgh thilke cursed superfluitee.
The apostel weping seith ful pitously,
Ther walken many of whiche yow told have I,
seye it now weping with pitous voys,
hat they been enemys of Cristes croys,
f whiche the ende is deeth, wombe is her god." [2] wombe! O bely! O stinking cod,[3] ulfild of donge and of corrupcioun!
t either ende of thee foul is the soun.
ow greet labour and cost is thee to finde! [4]
hise cokes, how they stampe, and streyne, and grinde, nd turnen substance in-to accident,[5]
o fulfille al thy likerous talent! [6] ut of the harde bones knokke they he mary,[7] for they caste noght a-wey hat may go thurgh the golet softe and swote;
f spicerye, of leef, and bark, and rote
hal been his sauce y-maked by delyt,
o make him yet a newer appetyt.
ut certes, he that haunteth swich delyces
s deed, whyl that he liveth in tho vyces.
A lecherous thing is wyn, and dronkenesse
s ful of stryving and of wrecchednesse.
O dronke man, disfigured is thy face,
our is thy breeth, foul artow to embrace,
nd thurgh thy dronke nose semeth the soun
As though thou seydest ay "Sampsoun, Sampsoun";
And yet, god wot, Sampsoun drank never no wyn.
Thou fallest, as it were a stiked swyn;
hy tonge is lost, and al thyn honest cure; [8] or dronkenesse is verray sepulture
f mannes wit and his discrecioun.
n whom that drinke hath dominacioun,
e can no conseil kepe, it is no drede.[9]
Now kepe yow fro the whyte and fro the rede,

And namely [1] fro the whyte wyn of Lepe,[2]
That is to selle in Fish-strete or in Chepe.[3]
This wyn of Spayne crepeth subtilly
In othere wynes, growing faste by,[4]
Of which ther ryseth swich fumositee,[5]
That whan a man hath dronken draughtes three,
And weneth that he be at hoom in Chepe,
He is in Spayne, right at the toune of Lepe,
Nat at the Rochel, ne at Burdeux toun; [6]
And thanne wol he seye, "Sampsoun, Sampsoun."
But herkneth, lordings, o word, I yow preye,
That alle the sovereyn actes, dar I seye,
Of victories in th'olde testament,
Thurgh verray god, that is omnipotent,
Were doon in abstinence and in preyere;
Loketh the Bible, and ther ye may it lere.
Loke, Attila, the grete conquerour,
Deyde in his sleep, with shame and dishonour,
Bledinge ay at his nose in dronkenesse;
A capitayn sholde live in sobrenesse.
And over [7] al this, avyseth yow right wel
What was comaunded un-to Lamuel — [8]
Nat Samuel, but Lamuel, seye I —
Redeth the Bible, and finde it expresly
Of wyn-yeving to hem that han justyse.
Na-more of this, for it may wel suffyse.
And now that I have spoke of glotonye,
Now wol I yow defenden hasardrye.[9]
Hasard is verray moder of lesinges,[10]
And of deceite, and cursed forsweringes,
Blaspheme of Crist, manslaughtre, and wast also
Of catel [11] and of tyme; and forthermo,
It is repreve [12] and contrarie of honour
For to ben holde a commune hasardour.
And ever the hyër he is of estaat,
The more is he holden desolaat.
If that a prince useth hasardrye,
In alle governaunce and policye
He is, as by commune opinioun,
Y-holde the lasse in reputacioun.
Stilbon, that was a wys embassadour,
Was sent to Corinthe, in ful greet honour,
Fro Lacidomie, to make hir alliaunce.
And whan he cam, him happede, par chaunce,
That alle the grettest that were of that lond,
Pleyinge atte hasard he hem fond.

1 1 Corinthians, VI, 13. 2 Philippians, III, 18–19.
3 bag. 4 provide for.
5 In scholastic philosophy, "substance" means essential nature as opposed to the "accidents" of color, taste, etc.
6 luxurious taste. 7 marrow.
8 care about decency. 9 doubt.

1 specially. 2 A town in Spain.
3 Cheapside in London.
4 The light wines of France were adulterated with the heavier Spanish wines.
5 fumes. 6 La Rochelle and Bordeaux in France.
7 in addition to. 8 See Proverbs, XXXI, 4.
9 forbid gambling. 10 lies.
11 property. 12 reproach.

For which, as sone as it mighte be,
He stal him hoom agayn to his contree,
And seyde, "ther wol I nat lese my name;
N' I wol nat take on me so greet defame,
Yow for to allye un-to none hasardours.
Sendeth othere wyse embassadours;
For, by my trouthe, me were lever dye,
Than I yow sholde to hasardours allye.
For ye that been so glorious in honours
Shul nat allyen yow with hasardours
As by my wil, ne as by my tretee."
This wyse philosophre thus seyde he.
Loke eek that, to the king Demetrius
The king of Parthes, as the book seith us,
Sente him a paire of dees [1] of gold in scorn,
For he hadde used hasard ther-biforn;
For which he heeld his glorie or his renoun
At no value or reputacioun.
Lordes may finden other maner pley
Honeste y-nough to dryve the day awey.
Now wol I speke of othes false and grete
A word or two, as olde bokes trete.
Gret swering is a thing abhominable,
And false swering is yet more reprevable.
The heighe god forbad swering at al,
Witnesse on Mathew; [2] but in special
Of swering seith the holy Jeremye,[3]
"Thou shalt seye sooth thyn othes, and nat lye,
And swere in dome, and eek in rightwisnesse;"
But ydel swering is a cursednesse.
Bihold and see, that in the firste table
Of heighe goddes hestes honurable,
How that the seconde [4] heste of him is this —
"Tak nat my name in ydel or amis."
Lo, rather [5] he forbedeth swich swering
Than homicyde or many a cursed thing;
I seye that, as by ordre, thus it stondeth;
This knowen, that his hestes understondeth,
How that the second heste of god is that.
And forther over, I wol thee telle al plat,[6]
That vengeance shal nat parten from his hous,
That of his othes is to outrageous.
"By goddes precious herte, and by his nayles,
And by the blode of Crist, that it is in Hayles,[7]
Seven is my chaunce, and thyn is cink and treye; [8]
By goddes armes, if thou falsly pleye,
This dagger shal thurgh-out thyn herte go" —
This fruyt cometh of the bicched bones two,
Forswering, ire, falsnesse, homicyde.
Now, for the love of Crist that for us dyde,
Leveth your othes, bothe grete and smale;
But, sirs, now wol I telle forth my tale.

Thise ryotoures three, of whiche I telle,
Longe erst er pryme [2] rong of any belle,
Were set hem in a taverne for to drinke;
And as they satte, they herde a belle clinke
Biforn a cors, was caried to his grave;
That oon of hem gan callen to his knave,[3]
"Go bet," [4] quod he, "and axe redily,
What cors is this that passeth heer forby;
And look that thou reporte his name wel."
"Sir," quod this boy, "it nedeth never-a-del.
It was me told, er ye cam heer, two houres;
He was, pardee, an old felawe of youres;
And sodeynly he was y-slayn to-night,[5]
For-dronke,[6] as he sat on his bench upright;
Ther cam a privee theef, men clepeth Deeth,
That in this contree al the peple sleeth,
And with his spere he smoot his herte a-two,
And wente his wey with-outen wordes mo.
He hath a thousand slayn this pestilence:
And, maister, er ye come in his presence,
Me thinketh that it were necessarie
For to be war of swich an adversarie:
Beth redy for to mete him evermore.
Thus taughte me my dame, I sey na-more."
"By seinte Marie," seyde this taverner,
"The child seith sooth, for he hath slayn this yeer,
Henne over a myle, with-in a greet village,
Both man and womman, child and hyne,[7] and page.
I trowe his habitacioun be there;
To been avysed greet wisdom it were,
Er that he dide a man a dishonour."
"Ye, goddes armes," quod this ryotour,
"Is it swich peril with him for to mete?
I shal him seke by wey and eek by strete,
I make avow to goddes digne bones!
Herkneth, felawes, we three been al ones;
Lat ech of us holde up his hond til other,
And ech of us bicomen otheres brother,
And we wol sleen this false traytour Deeth;
He shal be slayn, which that so many sleeth,
By goddes dignitee, er it be night."
Togidres han thise three her trouthes plight,

1 dice. 2 St. Matthew, v, 34. 3 Jeremiah, iv. 2.
4 In the Authorized Version it is the third commandment. The Vulgate has a different arrangement.
5 i.e. in an earlier commandment.
6 And furthermore I say flatly.
7 An abbey in Gloucestershire, at which was shown as a relic a phial containing some of the sacred blood.
8 five and three. The "chance" is a term in the game of "hazard," a more complicated form of the modern "craps."

1 cursed dice. 2 nine A.M. 3 servant.
4 quickly. 5 last night. 6 dead drunk. 7 servant.

live and dyen ech of hem for other,
hough he were his owene y-boren brother.
l up they sterte al dronken, in this rage,
l forth they goon towardes that village,
which the taverner had spoke biforn,
l many a grisly ooth than han they sworn,
l Cristes blessed body they to-rente [1] —
eeth shal be deed, if that they may him hente."
Whan they han goon nat fully half a myle, ht as they wolde han troden over a style,
old man and a povre with hem mette.
s olde man ful mekely hem grette,[2]
l seyde thus, "now, lordes, god yow see!" [3] he proudest of thise ryotoures three swerde agayn, "what? carl,[4] with sory grace, ly artow al forwrapped [5] save thy face?
ly livestow so longe in so greet age?"
his olde man gan loke in his visage, d seyde thus, "for I ne can nat finde nan, though that I walked in-to Inde, ither in citee nor in no village,
at wolde chaunge his youthe for myn age;
d therfore moot I han myn age stille,
longe time as it is goddes wille.
Ne deeth, allas! ne wol nat han my lyf;
us walke I, lyk a restelees caityf,[6] d on the ground, which is my modres gate, nokke with my staf, bothe erly and late,
d seye, 'leve moder, leet me in!
, how I vanish, flesh, and blood, and skin!
as! whan shul my bones been at reste?
oder, with yow wolde I chaunge my cheste,
at in my chambre longe tyme hath be,
! for an heyre clout to wrappe me!' [7]
t yet to me she wol nat do that grace,
r which ful pale and welked [8] is my face.
But, sirs, to yow it is no curteisye speken to an old man vileinye,
t he trespasse in worde, or elles in dede.
holy writ ye may your-self wel rede,
gayns [9] an old man, hoor upon his heed, sholde aryse;' [10] wherfor I yeve yow reed,
e dooth un-to an old man noon harm now,
-more than ye wolde men dide to yow age, if that ye so longe abyde;
d god be with yow, wher ye go [11] or ryde.
noot go thider as I have to go."
"Nay, olde cherl, by god, thou shalt nat so,"

1 tore to pieces. 2 greeted. 3 protect.
4 churl. 5 wrapped up. 6 captive.
7 I would exchange my chest full of money for a hair-th shroud.
8 withered. 9 in presence of.
10 Leviticus, XIX, 32. 11 walk.

Seyde this other hasardour anon;
"Thou partest nat so lightly, by seint John!
Thou spak right now of thilke traitour Deeth,
That in this contree alle our frendes sleeth.
Have heer my trouthe, as thou are his aspye,[1]
Tel wher he is, or thou shalt it abye,[2]
By god, and by the holy sacrament!
For soothly thou art oon of his assent,
To sleen us yonge folk, thou false theef!"
"Now, sirs," quod he, "if that yow be so leef
To finde Deeth, turne up this croked wey,
For in that grove I lafte him, by my fey,
Under a tree, and ther he wol abyde;
Nat for your boost he wol him no-thing hyde.
See ye that ook? right ther ye shul him finde.
God save yow, that boghte agayn mankinde,
And yow amende!" — thus seyde this olde man.
And everich of thise ryotoures ran,
Til he cam to that tree, and ther they founde
Of florins fyne of golde y-coyned rounde
Wel ny an eighte busshels, as hem thoughte.
No lenger thanne after Deeth they soughte,
But ech of hem so glad was of that sighte,
For that the florins been so faire and brighte,
That doun they sette hem by this precious hord.
The worste of hem he spake the firste word.
"Brethren," quod he, "tak kepe what I seye;
My wit is greet, though that I bourde [3] and pleye.
This tresor hath fortune un-to us yiven,
In mirthe and jolitee our lyf to liven,
And lightly as it comth, so wol we spende.
Ey! goddes precious dignitee! who wende
To-day, that we sholde han so fair a grace?
But mighte this gold be caried fro this place
Hoom to myn hous, or elles un-to youres —
For wel ye woot that al this gold is oures —
Than were we in heigh felicitee.
But trewely, by daye it may nat be;
Men wolde seyn that we were theves stronge,
And for our owene tresor doon us honge.[4]
This tresor moste y-caried be by nighte
As wysly and as slyly as it mighte.
Wherfore I rede that cut among us alle
Be drawe, and lat see wher the cut wol falle;
And he that hath the cut with herte blythe
Shal renne to the toune, and that ful swythe,[5]
And bringe us breed and wyn ful prively.
And two of us shul kepen subtilly

1 spy. 2 pay for. 3 jest.
4 have us hanged. 5 quickly.

This tresor wel; and, if he wol nat tarie,
Whan it is night, we wol this tresor carie
By oon assent, wher-as us thinketh best."
That oon of hem the cut broughte in his fest,
And bad hem drawe, and loke wher it wol falle;
And it fil on the yongeste of hem alle;
And forth toward the toun he wente anon.
And al-so sone as that he was gon,
That oon of hem spak thus un-to that other,
"Thou knowest wel thou art my sworne brother,
Thy profit wol I telle thee anon.
Thou woost wel that our felawe is agon;
And heer is gold, and that ful greet plentee,
That shal departed been among us three.
But natheles, if I can shape it so
That it departed were among us two,
Hadde I nat doon a freendes torn to thee?"
That other answerde, "I noot how that may be;
He woot how that the gold is with us tweye,
What shal we doon, what shal we to him seye?"
"Shal it be conseil?"[1] seyde the firste shrewe,[2]
"And I shal tellen thee, in wordes fewe,
What we shal doon, and bringe it wel aboute."
"I graunte," quod that other, "out of doute,
That, by my trouthe, I wol thee nat biwreye."
"Now," quod the firste, "thou woost wel we be tweye,
And two of us shul strenger be than oon.
Look whan that he is set, and right anoon
Arys, as though thou woldest with him pleye;
And I shal ryve him thurgh the sydes tweye
Whyl that thou strogelest with him as in game,
And with thy dagger look thou do the same;
And than shal al this gold departed be,
My dere freend, bitwixen me and thee;
Than may we bothe our lustes al fulfille,
And pleye at dees right at our owene wille."
And thus acorded been thise shrewes tweye
To sleen the thridde, as ye han herd me seye.
This yongest, which that wente un-to the toun,
Ful ofte in herte he rolleth up and doun
The beautee of thise florins newe and brighte.
"O lord!" quod he, "if so were that I mighte
Have al this tresor to my-self allone,
Ther is no man that liveth under the trone
Of god, that sholde live so mery as I!"
And atte laste the feend, our enemy,

1 a secret. 2 rogue.

Putte in his thought that he shold poyse[n] beye,
With which he mighte sleen his felaw[e] tweye;
For-why the feend fond him in swich lyving
That he had leve him to sorwe bringe,
For this was outrely his fulle entente
To sleen hem bothe, and never to repente.
And forth he gooth, no lenger wolde he tarie,
Into the toun, un-to a pothecarie,
And preyed him, that he him wolde selle
Som poyson, that he mighte his rattes quelle.
And eek ther was a polcat in his hawe,[2]
That, as he seyde, his capouns hadde y-slawe
And fayn he wolde wreke him, if he mighte,
On vermin, that destroyed him by nighte.
The pothecarie answerde, "and thou shal have
A thing that, al-so god my soule save,
In al this world there nis no creature,
That ete or dronke hath of this confiture
Noght but the mountance[3] of a corn of whete,
That he ne shal his lyf anon forlete;
Ye, sterve[4] he shal, and that in lasse whyle
Than thou wolt goon a paas nat but a myle
This poyson is so strong and violent."
This cursed man hath in his hond y-hent
This poyson in a box, and sith he ran
In-to the nexte strete, un-to a man,
And borwed of him large botels three;
And in the two his poyson poured he;
The thridde he kepte clene for his drinke.
For al the night he shoop him for to swinke.
In caryinge of the gold out of that place.
And whan this ryotour, with sory grace,
Had filled with wyn his grete botels three,
To his felawes agayn repaireth he.
What nedeth it to sermone of it more?
For right as they had cast his deeth bifore,
Right so they han him slayn, and that anon
And whan that this was doon, thus spak that oon,
"Now lat us sitte and drinke, and make us merie,
And afterward we wol his body berie."
And with that word it happed him, par cas,
To take the botel ther the poyson was,
And drank, and yaf his felawe drinke also,
For which anon they storven[6] bothe two.
But, certes, I suppose that Avicen[7]
Wroot never in no canon, ne in no fen,

1 kill. 2 yard. 3 amount. 4 die.
5 he intended to labor. 6 died.
7 Avicenna, famous Arabian physician of about 1100 A.D., author of a medical treatise called the "Canon," divided into chapters called "fens."

No wonder[1] signes of empoisoning
Than hadde thise wrecches two, er hir ending.
Thus ended been thise homicydes two,
And eek the false empoysoner also.

O cursed sinne, ful of cursednesse!
O traytours homicyde, o wikkednesse!
O glotonye, luxurie, and hasardrye!
Thou blasphemour of Crist with vileinye
And othes grete, of usage and of pryde!
Allas! mankinde, how may it bityde,
That to thy creatour which that thee wroghte,
And with his precious herte-blood thee boghte,
Thou art so fals and so unkinde, allas!
Now, goode men, god foryeve yow your trespas,
And ware yow fro[2] the sinne of avaryce.
Myn holy pardoun may yow alle waryce,[3]
So that ye offre nobles or sterlinges,[4]
Or elles silver broches, spones, ringes.
Boweth your heed under this holy bulle!
Cometh up, ye wyves, offreth of your wolle!
Your name I entre heer in my rolle anon;
In-to the blisse of hevene shul ye gon;
I yow assoile,[5] by myn heigh power,
Yow that wol offre, as clene and eek as cleer
As ye were born; and, lo, sirs, thus I preche.
And Jesu Crist, that is our soules leche,
So graunte yow his pardon to receyve;
For that is best; I wol yow nat deceyve.
But sirs,[6] o word forgat I in my tale,
I have relikes and pardon in my male,[7]
As faire as any man in Engelond,
Which were me yeven by the popes hond.
If any of yow wol, of devocioun,
Offren, and han myn absolucioun,
Cometh forth anon, and kneleth heer adoun,
And mekely receyveth my pardoun:
Or elles, taketh pardon as ye wende,
Al newe and fresh, at every tounes ende,
So that ye offren alwey newe and newe
Nobles and pens, which that be gode and trewe.
It is an honour to everich that is heer,
That ye mowe have a suffisant pardoneer
T'assoille yow, in contree as ye ryde,
For aventures which that may bityde.
Peraventure ther may falle oon or two
Doun of his hors, and breke his nekke atwo.
Look which a seuretee is it to yow alle
That I am in your felaweship y-falle,
That may assoille yow, bothe more and lasse,
Whan that the soule shal fro the body passe.
I rede that our hoste heer shal biginne,
For he is most envoluped in sinne.
Com forth, sir hoste, and offre first anon,
And thou shalt kisse the reliks everichon,
Ye, for a grote! unbokel anon thy purs."
"Nay, nay," quod he, "than have I Cristes curs!
Lat be," quod he, "it shall nat be, so thee'ch![1]
Thou woldest make me kisse thyn old breech,[2]
And swere it were a relik of a seint."

. . . . . .

This pardoner answerde nat a word;
So wrooth he was, no word ne wolde he seye.
"Now," quod our host, "I wol no lenger pleye
With thee, ne with noon other angry man."
But right anon the worthy Knight bigan,
Whan that he saugh that all the peple lough,
"Na-more of this, for it is right y-nough;
Sir Pardoner, be glad and mery of chere;
And ye, sir host, that been to me so dere,
I prey yow that ye kisse the Pardoner.
And Pardoner, I prey thee, drawe thee neer,
And, as we diden, lat us laughe and pleye."
Anon they kiste, and riden forth hir weye.

Here is ended the Pardoners Tale

1 wonderful. 2 beware of.
3 cure. 4 silver coins. 5 absolve.
6 The Pardoner now addresses his fellow-pilgrims.
7 bag.

1 so may I prosper. 2 breeches.

THE PRIORESS'S TALE

The pathetic story of the little school-boy murdered by the Jews is a tale of the type, popular in the Middle Ages, known as the miracle. These tales were often, as in this case, told to exemplify the loving care of the Blessed Virgin for those who show her love and honor. While preserving its religious purport, Chaucer has done full justice to the human values of the story. A similar story is found in the ballad of Hugh of Lincoln included in this volume.

The Prologe of the Prioresses Tale
Domine, dominus noster.[3]

O Lord our lord, thy name how merveillous
Is in this large worlde y-sprad — quod she: —
For noght only thy laude precious
Parfourned is by men of dignitee,
But by the mouth of children thy bountee
Parfourned is, for on the brest soukinge
Som tyme shewen they thyn heryinge.[4]

3 The first words of Psalm 8. The first stanza paraphrases verses 1–2 of this Psalm.
4 praise.

Wherefor in laude, as I best can or may,
Of thee, and of the whyte lily flour
Which that thee bar, and is a mayde alway,[10]
To telle a storie I wol do my labour;
Not that I may encresen hir honour;
For she hir-self is honour, and the rote
Of bountee, next hir sone, and soules bote.[1] —

O moder mayde! o mayde moder free!
O bush unbrent,[2] brenninge in Moyses sighte,
That ravisedest doun[3] fro the deitee,
Thurgh thyn humblesse, the goost that in th'alighte,[4]
Of whos vertu, whan he thyn herte lighte,[5]
Conceived was the fadres sapience,
Help me to telle it in thy reverence!

Lady! thy bountee, thy magnificence,
Thy vertu, and thy grete humilitee
Ther may no tonge expresse in no science;
For som-tyme, lady, er men praye to thee,
Thou goost biforn of thy benignitee,
And getest us the light, thurgh thy preyere,
To gyden us un-to thy sone so dere.[6]

My conning is so wayk, o blisful quene,
For to declare thy grete worthinesse,
That I ne may the weighte nat sustene,
But as a child of twelf monthe old, or lesse,
That can unnethes[7] any word expresse,
Right so fare I, and therefor I yow preye,
Gydeth my song that I shal of yow seye.

Explicit

Here biginneth the Prioresses Tale

Ther was in Asie, in a greet citee,
Amonges Cristen folk, a Jewerye,[8]
Sustened by a lord of that contree
For foule usure and lucre of vilanye,
Hateful to Crist and to his companye;
And thurgh the strete men mighte ryde or wende,
For it was free, and open at either ende.

A litel scole of Cristen folk ther stood Doun at the ferther ende, in which ther were Children an heep, y-comen of Cristen blood,
That lerned in that scole yeer by yere
Swich maner doctrine as men used there,
This is to seyn, to singen and to rede,
As smale children doon in hir childhede.

Among thise children was a widwes sone,
A litel clergeon,[1] seven yeer of age,
That day by day to scole was his wone,[2]
And eek also, wher-as he saugh th'image
Of Cristes moder, hadde he in usage,
As him was taught, to knele adoun and seye
His Ave Marie, as he goth by the weye.

Thus hath this widwe hir litel sone y-taught
Our blisful lady, Cristes moder dere,
To worshipe ay, and he forgat it naught,
For sely[3] child wol alday sone lere;[4]
But ay, whan I remembre on this matere,
Seint Nicholas stant ever in my presence,
For he so yong to Crist did reverence.[5]

This litel child, his litel book lerninge,
As he sat in the scole at his prymer,
He Alma redemptoris herde singe,
As children lerned hir antiphoner;[6]
And, as he dorste, he drough him ner and ner,[7]
And herkned ay the wordes and the note,
Til he the firste vers coude al by rote.

Noght wiste he what this Latin was to seye,
For he so yong and tendre was of age;
But on a day his felaw gan he preye
T'expounden him this song in his langage,
Or telle him why this song was in usage;
This preyde he him to construe and declare
Ful ofte tyme upon his knowes[8] bare.

His felaw, which that elder was than he,
Answerde him thus: "this song, I have herd seye,
Was maked of our blisful lady free,[9]
Hir to salue,[10] and eek hir for to preye
To been our help and socour whan we deye.
I can no more expounde in this matere;
I lerne song, I can but smal grammere."

"And is this song maked in reverence
Of Cristes moder?" seyde this innocent;
"Now certes, I wol do my diligence
To conne it al, er Cristemasse is went;[11]
Though that I for my prymer shal be shent,[12]

1 help. 2 unburned. 3 didst draw down.
4 the Holy Ghost that alighted in thee.
5 illuminated.
6 This stanza paraphrases Dante, Paradiso, XXXIII, 13–21.
7 hardly. 8 Jewish quarter.

1 schoolboy. 2 custom. 3 innocent. 4 learn.
5 St. Nicholas, while still an infant, refused to suck on days of abstinence. He is patron-saint of children.
6 book of anthems. 7 nearer and nearer.
8 knees. 9 generous. 10 greet.
11 The anthem, Alma redemptoris mater, was sung for a month before and after Christmas. The Latin means, "fostering mother of the Redeemer."
12 scolded.

ıd shal be beten thryës in an houre,
wol it conne, our lady for to honoure."

s felaw taughte him homward prively,
o day to day, til he coude it by rote, ıd than he song it well and boldely
o word to word, acording with the note;
wyës a day it passed thurgh his throte,
o scoleward and homward whan he wente;
ı Cristes moder set was his entente.

I have seyd, thurgh-out the Jewerye is litel child, as he cam to and fro, ıl merily than wolde he singe, and crye
Alma redemptoris ever-mo.
ıe swetnes hath his herte perced so Cristes moder, that, to hir to preye,
e can nat stinte of singing by the weye.

ır firste fo, the serpent Sathanas,
ıat hath in Jewes herte his waspes nest,
o swal,[1] and seide, "O Hebraik peple, allas!
this to yow a thing that is honest,[2]
ıat swich a boy shal walken as him lest[3] your despyt, and singe of swich sentence, hich is agayn your lawes reverence?"

o thennes forth the Jewes han conspyred is innocent out of this world to chace;
ı homicyde ther-to han they hyred,
ıat in an aley hadde a privee place;
ıd as the child gan for-by for to pace,
his cursed Jew him hente and heeld him faste,
ıd kitte his throte, and in a pit him caste.

I seye that in a wardrobe[4] they him threwe her-as these Jewes purgen hir entraille.
cursed folk of Herodes al newe, ıat may your yvel entente yow availle?
ordre wol out, certein, it wol nat faille,
ıd namely[5] ther th'onour of god shal sprede,
ıe blood out cryeth on your cursed dede.

O martir, souded[6] to virginitee, ow maystow singen, folwing ever in oon ıe whyte lamb celestial," quod she,
Of which the grete evangelist, seint John,
Pathmos wroot, which seith that they that goon
iforn this lamb, and singe a song al newe, ıat never, fleshly, wommen they ne knewe."[7]

1 swelled. 2 decent. 3 as he pleases.
4 privy. 5 specially. 6 firmly attached.
7 Revelation, XIV, 3-4.

This povre widwe awaiteth al that night
After hir litel child, but he cam noght;
For which, as sone as it was dayes light,
With face pale of drede and bisy thoght,
She hath at scole and elles-wher him soght,
Til finally she gan so fer espye
That he last seyn was in the Jewerye.

With modres pitee in hir brest enclosed,
She gooth, as she were half out of hir minde,
To every place wher she hath supposed
By lyklihede hir litel child to finde;
And ever on Cristes moder meke and kinde
She cryde, and atte laste thus she wroghte,
Among the cursed Jewes she him soghte.

She frayneth[1] and she preyeth pitously
To every Jew that dwelte in thilke place,
To telle hir, if hir child wente oght for-by.
They seyde, "nay"; but Jesu, of his grace,
Yaf in hir thought, inwith[2] a litel space,
That in that place after hir sone she cryde,
Wher he was casten in a pit bisyde.

O grete god, that parfournest thy laude
By mouth of innocents, lo heer thy might!
This gemme of chastitee, this emeraude,
And eek of martirdom the ruby bright,
Ther he with throte y-corven[3] lay upright,[4]
He "Alma redemptoris" gan to singe
So lóude, that al the place gan to ringe.

The Cristen folk, that thurgh the strete wente,
In coomen, for to wondre up-on this thing,
And hastily they for the provost sente;
He cam anon with-outen tarying,
And herieth[5] Crist that is of heven king,
And eek his moder, honour of mankinde,
And after that, the Jewes leet he binde.

This child with pitous lamentacioun
Up-taken was, singing his song alway;
And with honour of greet processioun
They carien him un-to the nexte abbay.
His moder swowning by the bere[6] lay;
Unnethe[7] might the peple that was there
This newe Rachel bringe fro his bere.

With torment and with shamful deth echon
This provost dooth thise Jewes for to sterve[8]
That of this mordre wiste, and that anon;
He nolde no swich cursednesse observe.[9]
Yvel shal have, that yvel wol deserve.
Therfor with wilde hors[10] he dide hem drawe,
And after that he heng hem by the lawe.

1 inquires. 2 within. 3 cut.
4 face upwards. 5 praiseth. 6 bier.
7 hardly. 8 die. 9 countenance. 10 horses.

Up-on his bere ay lyth this innocent
Biforn the chief auter,[1] whyl masse laste,
And after that, the abbot with his covent
Han sped hem for to burien him ful faste;
And whan they holy water on him caste,
Yet spak this child, whan spreynd[2] was holy water,
And song — "O Alma redemptoris mater!"

This abbot, which that was an holy man
As monkes been, or elles oghten be,
This yonge child to conjure he bigan,
And seyde, "o dere child, I halse[3] thee,
In vertu of the holy Trinitee,
Tel me what is thy cause for to singe,
Sith that thy throte is cut, to my seminge?"

"My throte is cut un-to my nekke-boon," Seyde this child, "and, as by wey of kinde,[4]
I sholde have deyed, ye, longe tyme agoon,
But Jesu Crist, as ye in bokes finde,
Wil that his glorie laste and be in minde;
And, for the worship of his moder dere,
Yet may I singe 'O Alma' loude and clere.

This welle of mercy, Cristes moder swete,
I lovede alwey, as after my conninge;[5]
And whan that I my lyf sholde forlete,[6]
To me she cam, and bad me for to singe
This antem verraily in my deyinge,
As ye han herd, and, whan that I had songe,
Me thoughte, she leyde a greyn up-on my tonge.

Wherfor I singe, and singe I moot certeyn
In honour of that blisful mayden free,
Til fro my tonge of-taken is the greyn;
And afterward thus seyde she to me,
'My litel child, now wol I fecche thee
Whan that the greyn is fro thy tonge y-take;
Be nat agast, I wol thee nat forsake.'"

This holy monk, this abbot, him mene I,
His tonge out-caughte, and took a-wey the greyn,
And he yaf up the goost ful softely.
And whan this abbot had this wonder seyn,
His salte teres trikled doun as reyn,
And gruf[7] he fil al plat up-on the grounde,
And stille he lay as he had been y-bounde.

The covent eek lay on the pavement
Weping, and herien[8] Cristes moder dere,
And after that they ryse, and forth ben went,
And toke awey this martir fro his bere,
And in a tombe of marbul-stones clere
Enclosen they his litel body swete;
Ther he is now, god leve us for to mete.[1]

O yonge Hugh of Lincoln, slayn also
With cursed Jewes, as it is notable,
For it nis but a litel whyle ago;
Preye eek for us, we sinful folk unstable,
That, of his mercy, god so merciable
On us his grete mercy multiplye,
For reverence of his moder Marye. Amen

Here is ended the Prioresses Tale

1 altar. 2 sprinkled. 3 beseech.
4 nature.
5 as well as I knew how 6 give up.
7 on his face. 8 praise.

THE FRIAR'S TALE

Friar and Summoner are traditional enemi
The Summoner, an officer of the ecclesiastic courts, is a hanger-on of the "secular" clergy the parish priest and his bishop. The Friar belonging to an order outside the bishop's juri diction, were continually meddling throug their own spiritual ministrations in the pastor work of the parish priest, an interference whic
the priest naturally resented. On the Cante bury pilgrimage Chaucer's Summoner ar
Friar get to quarrelling, and each tells a story
the expense of the other. The Friar's Ta applies to a Summoner a popular anecdote pr viously told at the expense of a bailiff or lawyer; but the bare anecdote is developed int a tale of vivid realization and delicious com irony.

THE FRIAR'S PROLOGUE

The Prologe of the Freres Tale

This worthy limitour,[2] this noble Frere,
He made alwey a maner louring chere
Upon the Somnour, but for honestee
No vileyns word as yet to him spak he.
But atte laste he seyde un-to the Wyf,
"Dame," quod he, "god yeve yow rigl good lyf!
Ye han heer touched, al-so mote I thee,[3]
In scole-matere greet difficultee;
Ye han seyd muchel thing right wel, I sey
But dame, here as we ryden by the weye,
Us nedeth nat to speken but of game,
And lete auctoritees, on goddes name,
To preching and to scole eek of clergye.
But if it lyke to this companye,
I wol yow of a somnour telle a game.
Pardee, ye may wel knowe by the name,
That of a somnour may no good be sayd;
I praye that noon of you be yvel apayd.[4]

1 i.e. in heaven.
2 A friar licensed to beg for alms within a certain limit area.
3 prosper. 4 displeased.

somnour is a renner up and doun ith mandements for fornicacioun, id is y-bet at every tounes ende."
Our host tho spak, "a! sire, ye sholde be hende[1]
id curteys, as a man of your estaat;
companye we wol have no debaat.[2] lleth your tale, and lat the Somnour be."
"Nay," quod the Somnour, "lat him seye to me hat so him list; whan it comth to my lot, god, I shal him quyten every grot.
hal him tellen which a greet honour is to be a flateringe limitour;
id his offyce I shal him telle, y-wis."
Our host answerde, "pees, na-more of this."
id after this he seyde un-to the Frere, el forth your tale, leve maister deere."

Here endeth the Prologe of the Frere

THE FRIAR'S TALE

Here biginneth the Freres Tale

hilom ther was dwellinge in my contree erchedeken, a man of heigh degree, hat boldely dide execucioun punisshinge of fornicacioun, wicchecraft, and eek of bauderye, diffamacioun, and avoutrye,[3]
chirche-reves,[4] and of testaments, contractes, and of lakke of sacraments,
id eek of many another maner cryme hich nedeth nat rehercen at this tyme;
usure, and of symonye also.
t certes, lechours dide he grettest wo;
ey sholde singen, if that they were hent;[5]
id smale tytheres weren foule y-shent.
any persone wolde up-on hem pleyne,
er mighte asterte him[6] no pecunial peyne.
r smale tythes and for smal offringe made the peple pitously to singe.
r er the bisshop caughte hem with his hook,
ey weren in the erchedeknes book.
anne hadde he, thurgh his jurisdiccioun,
wer to doon on hem correccioun.
hadde a Somnour redy to his hond,
slyer boy was noon in Engelond;
r subtilly he hadde his espiaille,
at taughte him, wher that him mighte availle.
coude spare of lechours oon or two,
techen him to foure and twenty mo.

For thogh this Somnour wood[1] were as an hare,
To telle his harlotrye I wol nat spare;
For we been out of his correccioun;[2]
They han of us no jurisdiccioun,
Ne never shullen, terme of alle hir lyves,
"Peter! so been the wommen of the styves,"[3]
Quod the Somnour, "y-put out of my cure!"
"Pees, with mischance and with mis-aventure,"
Thus seyde our host, "and lat him telle his tale.
Now telleth forth, thogh that the Somnour gale,[4]
Ne spareth nat, myn owene maister dere."
This false theef, this Somnour, quod the Frere,
Hadde alwey baudes redy to his hond,
As any hauk to lure in Engelond,
That tolde him al the secree that they knewe;
For hir acqueyntance was nat come of-newe.
They weren hise approwours[5] prively;
He took him-self a greet profit therby;
His maister knew nat alwey what he wan.
With-outen mandement, a lewed[6] man
He coude somne, on peyne of Cristes curs,
And they were gladde for to fille his purs,
And make him grete festes atte nale.[7]
And right as Judas hadde purses smale,
And was a theef, right swich a theef was he;
His maister hadde but half his duëtee.[8]
He was, if I shal yeven him his laude,
A theef, and eek a Somnour, and a baude.
He hadde eek wenches at his retenue,
That, whether that sir Robert or sir Huwe,
Or Jakke, or Rauf, or who-so that it were,
That lay by hem, they tolde it in his ere;
Thus was the wenche and he of oon assent.
And he wolde fecche a feyned mandement,
And somne hem to the chapitre[9] bothe two,
And pile[10] the man, and lete the wenche go.
Thanne wolde he seye, "frend, I shal for thy sake
Do stryken hir out of our lettres blake;
Thee thar[11] na-more as in this cas travaille;
I am thy freend, ther I thee may availle."
Certeyn he knew of bryberyes mo
Than possible is to telle in yeres two.
For in this world nis dogge for the bowe,
That can an hurt deer from an hool y-knowe,
Bet than this Somnour knew a sly lechour,
Or an avouter, or a paramour.

1 polite. 2 quarrel. 3 adultery.
4 church wardens. 5 caught.
6 he could avoid.

1 mad.
2 The Friar, as a member of a mendicant order, was not under the jurisdiction of the diocese in which he lived.
3 brothels. 4 exclaim. 5 informers.
6 ignorant. 7 at the ale house. 8 sum due to him.
9 chapter house. 10 plunder. 11 thou needest.

And, for that was the fruit of al his rente,
Therfore on it he sette al his entente.
And so bifel, that ones on a day
This Somnour, ever waiting on his pray,
Rood for to somne a widwe, an old ribybe,[1]
Feyninge a cause, for he wolde brybe.
And happed that he saugh bifore him ryde
A gay yeman,[2] under a forest-syde.
A bowe he bar, and arwes brighte and kene;
He hadde up-on a courtepy[3] of grene;
An hat up-on his heed with frenges blake.
"Sir," quod this Somnour, "hayl! and wel a-take!"
"Wel-come," quod he, "and every good felawe!
Wher rydestow under this grene shawe?"[4]
Seyde this yeman, "wiltow fer to day?"
This Somnour him answerde, and seyde, "nay;
Heer faste by," quod he, "is myn entente
To ryden, for to reysen up a rente
That longeth to my lordes duëtee."
"Artow thanne a bailly?" "Ye!" quod he.
He dorste nat, for verray filthe and shame,
Seye that he was a somnour, for the name.
"Depardieux," quod this yeman, "dere brother,
Thou art a bailly, and I am another.
I am unknowen as in this contree;
Of thyn aqueyntance I wolde praye thee,
And eek of brotherhede, if that yow leste.
I have gold and silver in my cheste;
If that thee happe to comen in our shyre,
Al shal be thyn, right as thou wolt desyre."
"Grantmercy,"[5] quod this Somnour, "by my feith!"
Everich in otheres hand his trouthe leith,
For to be sworne bretheren til they deye.
In daliance they ryden forth hir weye.
This Somnour, which that was as ful of jangles,[6]
As ful of venim been thise wariangles,[7]
And ever enquering up-on every thing,
"Brother," quod he, "where is now your dwelling,
Another day if that I sholde yow seche?"
This yeman him answerde in softe speche,
"Brother," quod he, "fer in the north[8] contree,
Wher, as I hope, som-tyme I shal thee see.
Er we departe, I shal thee so wel wisse,
That of myn hous ne shaltow never misse."
"Now, brother," quod this Somnour, "I yow preye,
Teche me, whyl that we ryden by the weye,
Sin that ye been a baillif as am I,
Som subtiltee, and tel me feithfully
In myn offyce how I may most winne;
And spareth nat for conscience ne sinne,
But as my brother tel me, how do ye?"
"Now, by my trouthe, brother dere, seyde he,
"As I shal tellen thee a feithful tale,
My wages been ful streite[1] and ful smale.
My lord is hard to me and daungerous,[2]
And myn offyce is ful laborous;
And therfore by extorcions I live.
For sothe, I take al that men wol me yive;
Algate, by sleyghte or by violence,
Fro yeer to yeer I winne al my dispence.
I can no bettre telle feithfully."
"Now, certes," quod this Somnour, "so fare I;
I spare nat to taken, god it woot,
But-if it be to hevy or to hoot.
What I may gete in conseil privély,
No maner conscience of that have I;
Nere myn extorcioun, I mighte nat liven,
Ne of swiche japes[3] wol I nat be shriven.
Stomak ne conscience ne knowe I noon;
I shrewe thise shrifte-fadres[4] everichoon.
Wel be we met, by god and by seint Jame!
But, leve brother, tel me than thy name,"
Quod this Somnour; and in this mene whyle
This yeman gan a litel for to smyle.
"Brother," quod he, "wiltow that I the telle?
I am a feend, my dwelling is in helle.
And here I ryde about my purchasing,
To wite wher men wolde yeve me any thing.
My purchas is th'effect of al my rente.[5]
Loke how thou rydest for the same entente
To winne good, thou rekkest never how;
Right so fare I, for ryde wolde I now
Un-to the worldes ende for a preye."
"A," quod this Somnour, "ben'cite, what sey ye?
I wende ye were a yeman trewely.
Ye han a mannes shap as wel as I;
Han ye figure than determinat
In helle, ther ye been in your estat?"
"Nay, certeinly," quod he, "ther have we noon;
But whan us lyketh, we can take us oon,
Or elles make yow seme we ben shape
Som-tyme lyk a man, or lyk an ape;
Or lyk an angel can I ryde or go.
It is no wonder thing thogh it be so;

1 hag. 2 yeoman. 3 short jacket. 4 forest.
5 many thanks. 6 idle talk. 7 butcher-birds.
8 The north, as the region of darkness, was believed to be the home of devils.

1 restricted. 2 overbearing. 3 jokes.
4 I curse these father-confessors.
5 what I get is the sum-total of my income.

lousy jogelour can deceyve thee, nd pardee, yet can[1] I more craft than he."
"Why," quod the Somnour, "ryde ye thanne or goon n sondry shap, and nat alwey in oon?"
"For we," quod he, "wol us swich formes make s most able is our preyes for to take."
"What maketh yow to han al this labour?"
"Ful many a cause, leve sir Somnour," eyde this feend, "but alle thing hath tyme.
he day is short, and it is passed pryme,[2] nd yet ne wan I no-thing in this day.
wol entende to winnen, if I may,
nd nat entende our wittes to declare.
or, brother myn, thy wit is al to bare o understonde, al-thogh I tolde hem thee.
ut, for thou axest why labouren we;
or, som-tyme, we ben goddes instruments,
nd menes to don his comandements,
Vhan that him list, up-on his creatures,
n divers art and in divers figures.
Vith-outen him we have no might, certayn,
f that him list to stonden ther-agayn.
nd som-tyme, at our prayere, han we leve nly the body and nat the soule greve;
Vitnesse on Job, whom that we diden wo.
nd som-tyme han we might of bothe two,
his is to seyn, of soule and body eke.
nd somtyme be we suffred for to seke
p-on a man, and doon his soule unreste, nd nat his body, and al is for the beste.
Vhan he withstandeth our temptacioun,
t is a cause of his savacioun;
l-be-it that it was nat our entente
le sholde be sauf, but that we wolde him hente.[3]
nd som-tyme be we servant un-to man, s to the erchebisshop Seint Dunstan nd to the apostles servant eek was I."
"Yet tel me," quod the Somnour, "feithfully, Make ye yow newe bodies thus alway
f elements?" the feend answerde, "nay;
om-tyme we feyne, and som-tyme we aryse
Vith dede bodies in ful sondry wyse, nd speke as renably[4] and faire and wel
s to the Phitonissa[5] dide Samuel.
nd yet wol som men seye it was nat he;
I do no fors of[6] your divinitee.
But o thing warne I thee, I wol nat jape,
Thou wolt algates wite how we ben shape;
Thou shalt her-afterward, my brother dere,
Com ther thee nedeth nat of me to lere.

For thou shalt by thyn owene experience
Conne in a chayer rede[1] of this sentence
Bet than Virgyle, whyl he was on lyve,
Or Dant also; now lat us ryde blyve.
For I wol holde companye with thee
Til it be so, that thou forsake me."
"Nay," quod this Somnour, "that shal nat bityde;
I am a yeman, knowen is ful wyde;
My trouthe wol I holde as in this cas.
For though thou were the devel Sathanas,
My trouthe wol I holde to my brother,
As I am sworn, and ech of us til other
For to be trewe brother in this cas;
And bothe we goon abouten our purchas.
Tak thou thy part, what that men wol thee yive,
And I shall myn; thus may we bothe live.
And if that any of us have more than other,
Lat him be trewe, and parte it with his brother."
"I graunte," quod the devel, "by my fey."
And with that word they ryden forth hir wey.
And right at the entring of the tounes ende,
To which this Somnour shoop him[2] for to wende,
They saugh a cart, that charged was with hey,
Which that a carter droof forth in his wey.
Deep was the wey, for which the carte stood
The carter smoot, and cryde, as he were wood.
"Hayt, Brok! hayt, Scot! what spare ye for the stones?
The feend," quod he, "yow fecche body and bones,
As ferforthly as ever were ye foled!
So muche wo as I have with yow tholed![3]
The devel have al, bothe hors and cart and hey!"
This Somnour seyde, "heer shal we have a pley;"
And neer the feend he drough, as noght ne were,
Ful prively, and rouned[4] in his ere:
"Herkne, my brother, herkne, by thy feith;
Herestow nat how that the carter seith?
Hent[5] it anon, for he hath yeve it thee,
Bothe hey and cart, and eek hise caples[6] three."
"Nay," quod the devel, "god wot, never a deel;
It is nat his entente, trust me weel.
Axe him thy-self, if thou nat trowest me,
Or elles stint[7] a while, and thou shalt see."

1 know. 2 nine A.M. 3 catch. 4 reasonably. 5 The Witch of Endor. 6 I take no stock in.

1 lecture. 2 made his plans. 3 suffered. 4 whispered. 5 take. 6 cart-horses. 7 stop.

This carter thakketh[1] his hors upon the croupe,
And they bigonne drawen and to-stoupe,[2]
"Heyt, now!" quod he, "ther Jesu Crist yow blesse,
And al his handwerk, bothe more and lesse!
That was wel twight,[3] myn owene lyard[4] boy!
I pray god save thee and sëynt Loy!
Now is my cart out of the slow, pardee!"
"Lo! brother," quod the feend, "what tolde I thee?
Heer may ye see, myn owene dere brother,
The carl[5] spak oo thing, but he thoghte another.
Lat us go forth abouten our viage;
Heer winne I no-thing up-on cariage." [6]
Whan that they comen som-what out of toune,
This Somnour to his brother gan to roune,
"Brother," quod he, "heer woneth an old rebekke,[7]
That hadde almost as lief to lese hir nekke
As for to yeve a peny of hir good.
I wol han twelf pens, though that she be wood,[8]
Or I wol sompne hir un-to our offyce;
And yet, god woot, of hir knowe I no vyce.
But for thou canst nat, as in this contree,
Winne thy cost, tak heer ensample of me."
This Somnour clappeth at the widwes gate.
"Com out," quod he, "thou olde viritrate![9]
I trowe thou hast som frere or preest with thee!"
"Who clappeth?" seyde this widwe, "ben'cite!
God save you, sire, what is your swete wille?"
"I have," quod he, "of somonce here a bille;
Up peyne of cursing,[10] loke that thou be
To-morn bifore the archedeknes knee
T'answere to the court of certeyn thinges."
"Now, lord," quod she, "Crist Jesu, king of kinges,
So wisly[11] helpe me, as I ne may.
I have been syk, and that ful many a day.
I may nat go so fer," quod she, "ne ryde,
But I be deed, so priketh it in my syde.
May I nat axe a libel,[12] sir Somnour,
And answere there, by my procutour,[13]
To swich thing as men wol opposen me?"
"Yis," quod this Somnour, "pay anon, lat se,
Twelf pens to me, and I wol thee acquyte.
I shall no profit han ther-by but lyte;
My maister hath the profit, and nat I.
Com of, and lat me ryden hastily;
Yif me twelf pens, I may no lenger tarie."
"Twelf pens," quod she, "now lad Seinte Marie
So wisly help me out of care and sinne,
This wyde world thogh that I sholde winne
Ne have I nat twelf pens with-inne myn hold.
Ye knowen wel that I am povre and old;
Kythe[1] your almesse on me povre wrecche."
"Nay than," quod he, "the foule feend me fecche
If I th'excuse, though thou shul be spilt!"
"Alas," quod she, "god woot, I have no gilt."
"Pay me," quod he, "or by the swete seinte Anne,
As I wol bere awey thy newe panne
For dette, which that thou owest me of old,
Whan that thou madest thyn housbond cokewold,
I payde at hoom for thy correccioun."
"Thou lixt,[2] quod she, "by my savacioun!
Ne was I never er now, widwe ne wyf,
Somoned un-to your court in al my lyf;
Ne never I nas but of my body trewe!
Un-to the devel blak and rough of hewe Yeve I thy body and my panne also!"
And whan the devel herde hir cursen so
Up-on hir knees, he seyde in this manere,
"Now Mabely, myn owene moder dere,
Is this your wil in ernest, that ye seye?"
"The devel," quod she, "so fecche him ere he deye,
And panne and al, but he wol him repente!"
"Nay, olde stot,[3] that is nat myn entente," Quod this Somnour, "for to repente me,
For any thing that I have had of thee;
I wolde I hadde thy smok and every clooth!"
"Now, brother," quod the devel, "be nat wrooth;
Thy body and this panne ben myne by right.
Thou shalt with me to helle yet to-night,
Where thou shalt knowen of our privetee
More than a maister of divinitee:"
And with that word this foule feend hente;[4]
Body and soule, he with the devel wente
Wher-as that somnours han hir heritage.
And god, that maked after his image

1 beateth. 2 lean forwards. 3 pulled.
4 gray. 5 churl.
6 on account of the peasant's cart and horses — a technical term in feudal law.
7 dame. 8 mad. 9 hag. 10 excommunication.
11 certainly. 12 ask for a copy of the indictment.
13 legal representative.

1 show. 2 liest. 3 beast. 4 seized.

ankinde, save and gyde us alle and some;
d leve[1] this Somnour good man to bicome!
Lordinges, I coude han told yow, quod this Frere, dde I had leyser for this Somnour here,
ter the text of Crist and Poul and John,
d of our othere doctours many oon,
viche peynes, that your hertes mighte agryse,[2]
-be-it so, no tonge may devyse,
ogh that I mighte a thousand winter telle,
e peyne of thilke cursed hous of helle.
t, for to kepe us fro that cursed place,
aketh, and preyeth Jesu for his grace
kepe us fro the temptour Sathanas.
rketh this word, beth war as in this cas; e leoun sit in his await[3] alway slee the innocent, if that he may.
isposeth ay your hertes to withstonde
e feend, that yow wolde make thral and bonde.
e may nat tempten yow over your might;
r Crist wol be your champion and knight.
d prayeth that thise Somnours hem repente hir misdedes, er that the feend hem hente.

Here endeth the Freres Tale.

THE FRANKLIN'S TALE

The scene is Brittany; the time is, for Chaucer as well as for us, long ago in the days of gan antiquity. The story is of courtly love, agic, and quixotic loyalty to one's spoken rd. The tale is a beautiful example of the ort romance, built about a single episode, of e type known in Old French literature as the . One may read the lais of Marie de France the prose translation of Eugene Mason veryman's Library).

THE FRANKLIN'S PROLOGUE

The Prologe of the Frankeleyns Tale

hise olde gentil Britons in hir dayes
f diverse aventures maden layes,[4] ymeyed in hir firste Briton tonge;
hich layes with hir instruments they songe,
r elles redden hem for hir plesaunce;
nd oon of hem have I in remembraunce, hich I shal seyn with good wil as I can.
But, sires, by-cause I am a burel[5] man,
t my biginning first I yow biseche ave me excused of my rude speche;
lerned never rethoryk certeyn;
hing that I speke, it moot be bare and pleyn.

I sleep never on the mount of Pernaso,[1]
No lerned Marcus Tullius Cithero.
Colours[2] ne knowe I none, with-outen drede,
But swiche colours as growen in the mede,
Or elles swiche as men dye or peynte.
Colours of rethoryk ben me to queynte;[3]
My spirit feleth noght of swich matere.
But if yow list, my tale shul ye here.

THE FRANKLIN'S TALE

Here biginneth the Frankeleyns Tale

In Armorik, that called is Britayne,[4]
Ther was a knight that loved and dide his payne
To serve a lady in his beste wyse;
And many a labour, many a greet empryse[5]
He for his lady wroghte, er she were wonne.
For she was oon, the faireste under sonne,
And eek therto come of so heigh kinrede,
That wel unnethes dorste this knight, for drede,
Telle hir his wo, his peyne, and his distresse.
But atte laste, she, for his worthinesse,
And namely[6] for his meke obeysaunce,
Hath swich a pitee caught of his penaunce,
That prively she fil of his accord[7]
To take him for hir housbonde and hir lord,
Of swich lordshipe as men han over hir wyves;
And for to lede the more in blisse hir lyves,
Of his free wil he swoor hir as a knight,
That never in al his lyf he, day ne night,
Ne sholde up-on him take no maistrye
Agayn hir wil, ne kythe[8] hir jalousye,
But hir obeye, and folwe hir wil in al
As any lovere to his lady shal;
Save that the name of soveraynetee,
That wolde he have for shame of his degree.
She thanked him, and with ful greet humblesse
She seyde, "sire, sith of your gentillesse
Ye profre me to have so large a reyne,[9]
Ne wolde never god bitwixe us tweyne,
As in my gilt, were outher werre or stryf.
Sir, I wol be your humble trewe wyf,
Have heer my trouthe, til that myn herte breste."
Thus been they bothe in quiete and in reste.
For o thing, sires, saufly dar I seye,
That frendes everich other moot obeye,
If they wol longe holden companye.
Love wol nat ben constreyned by maistrye;

1 permit. 2 shudder. 3 watch.
4 short romances. 5 unlettered.

1 Parnassus. 2 rhetorical figures.
3 elaborate. 4 Brittany. 5 undertaking.
6 particularly. 7 she agreed with him.
8 show. 9 so generous a control.

Whan maistrie comth, the god of love anon
Beteth hise winges, and farewel! he is gon!
Love is a thing as any spirit free;
Wommen of kinde[1] desiren libertee,
And nat to ben constreyned as a thral;
And so don men, if I soth seyen shal.
Loke who that is most pacient in love,
He is at his avantage al above.
Pacience is an heigh vertu certeyn;
For it venquisseth, as thise clerkes seyn,
Thinges that rigour sholde never atteyne.
For every word men may nat chyde or pleyne.[2]
Lerneth to suffre, or elles, so moot I goon,
Ye shul it lerne, wher-so ye wole or noon.
For in this world, certein, ther no wight is,
That he ne dooth or seith som-tyme amis.
Ire, siknesse, or constellacioun,[3]
Wyn, wo, or chaunginge of complexioun[4]
Causeth ful ofte to doon amis or speken.
On every wrong a man may nat be wreken;[5]
After the tyme, moste be temperaunce
To every wight that can on[6] governaunce.
And therfore hath this wyse worthy knight,
To live in ese, suffrance hir bihight,
And she to him ful wisly gan to swere
That never sholde ther be defaute in here.

Heer may men seen an humble wys accord;
Thus hath she take hir servant and hir lord,
Servant in love, and lord in mariage;
Than was he bothe in lordship and servage;
Servage? nay, but in lordshipe above,
Sith he hath bothe his lady and his love;
His lady, certes, and his wyf also,
The which that lawe of love acordeth to.
And whan he was in this prosperitee,
Hoom with his wyf he gooth to his contree,
Nat fer fro Penmark,[7] ther his dwelling was,
Wher-as he liveth in blisse and in solas.

Who coude telle, but he had wedded be,
The joye, the ese, and the prosperitee
That is bitwixe an housbonde and his wyf?
A yeer and more lasted this blisful lyf,
Til that the knight of which I speke of thus,
That of Kayrrud was cleped Arveragus,[8]
Shoop him[9] to goon, and dwelle a yeer or tweyne
In Engelond, that cleped was eek Briteyne,
To seke in armes worship and honour;
For al his lust[10] he sette in swich labour;
And dwelleth ther two yeer, the book seith thus.

Now wol I stinte[11] of this Arveragus,

1 nature. 2 complain. 3 influence of the stars.
4 change of bodily constitution.
5 avenged. 6 knows about.
7 A headland on the west coast of Brittany.
8 was called Arveragus of Kayrrud.
9 made his plans. 10 desire. 11 cease.

And speken I wole of Dorigene his wyf,
That loveth hir housbonde as hir hertes ly
For his absence wepeth she and syketh,[1]
As doon thise noble wyves whan hem lyket
She moorneth, waketh, wayleth, fasteth pleyneth;
Desyr of his presence hir so distreyneth,
That al this wyde world she sette at noght
Hir frendes, whiche that knewe hir hev thoght,
Conforten hir in al that ever they may;
They prechen hir, they telle hir night and day
That causelees she sleeth hir-self, allas!
And every confort possible in this cas
They doon to hir with al hir bisinesse,
Al for to make hir leve hir hevinesse.

By proces, as ye knowen everichoon,
Men may so longe graven in a stoon,
Til som figure ther-inne emprented be.
So longe han they conforted hir, til she
Receyved hath, by hope and by resoun,
Th'emprenting of hir consolacioun,
Thurgh which hir grete sorwe gan aswage;
She may nat alwey duren[2] in swich rage.

And eek Arveragus, in al this care,
Hath sent hir lettres hoom of his welfare,
And that he wol come hastily agayn;
Or elles hadde this sorwe hir herte slayn.

Hir freendes sawe hir sorwe gan to slake,
And preyede hir on knees, for goddes sake
To come and romen hir[3] in companye,
Awey to dryve hir derke fantasye.
And finally, she graunted that requeste;
For wel she saugh that it was for the beste.

Now stood hir castel faste by the see,
And often with hir freendes walketh she
Hir to disporte up-on the bank an heigh,
Wher-as she many a ship and barge seigh[4]
Seilinge hir cours, wher-as hem liste go;
But than was that a parcel of hir wo.
For to hir-self ful ofte "allas!" seith she,
"Is ther no ship, of so manye as I see,
Wol bringen hom my lord? than were myn herte
Al warisshed[5] of his bittre peynes smerte."

Another tyme ther wolde she sitte and thinke,
And caste hir eyen dounward fro the brinke.
But whan she saugh the grisly rokkes blake
For verray fere so wolde hir herte quake,
That on hir feet she mighte hir noght sustene
Than wolde she sitte adoun upon the grene
And pitously in-to the see biholde,
And seyn right thus, with sorweful sykes colde:

1 sigheth. 2 continue. 3 take a walk.
4 saw. 5 cured. 6 sighs.

"Eterne god, that thurgh thy purveyaunce[1]
lest the world by certein governaunce, ydel,[2] as men seyn, ye no-thing make;
t, lord, thise grisly feendly rokkes blake,
at semen rather a foul confusioun werk than any fair creacioun swich a parfit wys god and a stable,
y han ye wroght this werk unresonable?
by this werk, south, north, ne west, ne eest,
er nis y-fostred man, ne brid, ne beest;
looth no good, to my wit, but anoyeth.[3]
ye nat, lord, how mankinde it destroyeth?
hundred thousand bodies of mankinde
n rokkes slayn, al be they nat in minde, hich mankinde is so fair part of thy werk at thou it madest lyk to thyn owene merk.[4] an semed it ye hadde a greet chiertee[5] ward mankinde; but how than may it be at ye swiche menes[6] make it to destroyen, hiche menes do no good, but ever anoyen?
root wel clerkes wol seyn, as hem leste,
arguments, that al is for the beste,
ough I ne can the causes nat y-knowe.
t thilke god, that made wind to blowe,
kepe my lord! this my conclusioun;
clerkes lete[7] I al disputisoun.
t wolde god that alle thise rokkes blake re sonken in-to helle for his sake!
lise rokkes sleen myn herte for the fere."
us wolde she seyn, with many a pitous tere.
Hir freendes sawe that it was no disport romen by the see, but disconfort;
d shopen[8] for to pleyen somwher elles.
ey leden hir by riveres and by welles,
d eek in othere places delitables;
ey dauncen, and they pleyen at ches and tables.[9]
So on a day, right in the morwe-tyde,
-to a gardin that was ther bisyde, which that they had maad hir ordinaunce vitaille and of other purveyaunce,[10]
ey goon and pleye hem al the longe day.
d this was on the sixte morwe of May,
hich May had peynted with his softe shoures is gardin ful of leves and of floures;
d craft of mannes hand so curiously rayed hadde this gardin, trewely, at never was ther gardin of swich prys,[11]
t-if it were the verray paradys.

Th' odour of floures and the fresshe sighte
Wolde han maad any herte for to lighte
That ever was born, but-if to gret siknesse,
Or to gret sorwe helde it in distresse;
So ful it was of beautee with plesaunce.
At-after diner gonne they to daunce,
And singe also, save Dorigen allone,
Which made alwey hir compleint and hir mone;
For she ne saugh him on the daunce go,
That was hir housbonde and hir love also.
But nathelees she moste a tyme abyde,
And with good hope lete hir sorwe slyde.
Up-on this daunce, amonges othere men,
Daunced a squyer biforen Dorigen,
That fressher was and jolyer of array,
As to my doom,[1] than is the monthe of May.
He singeth, daunceth, passinge any man
That is, or was, sith that the world bigan.
Ther-with he was, if men sholde him discryve,
Oon of the beste faringe man on-lyve;
Yong, strong, right vertuous, and riche and wys,
And wel biloved, and holden in gret prys.
And shortly, if the sothe I tellen shal,
Unwiting of this Dorigen at al,
This lusty squyer, servant to Venus,
Which that y-cleped was Aurelius,
Had loved hir best of any creature
Two yeer and more, as was his aventure,
But never dorste he telle hir his grevaunce;
With-outen coppe[2] he drank al his penaunce.
He was despeyred, no-thing dorste he seye,
Save in his songes somwhat wolde he wreye[3]
His wo, as in a general compleyning;
He seyde he lovede, and was biloved nothing.
Of swich matere made he manye layes,
Songes, compleintes, roundels, virelayes,
How that he dorste nat his sorwe telle,
But languissheth, as a furie dooth in helle;
And dye he moste, he seyde, as dide Ekko
For Narcisus, that dorste nat telle hir wo.
In other manere than ye here me seye,
Ne dorste he nat to hir his wo biwreye;[4]
Save that, paraventure, som-tyme at daunces,
Ther yonge folk kepen hir observaunces,
It may wel be he loked on hir face
In swich a wyse, as man that asketh grace;
But no-thing wiste she of his entente.
Nathelees, it happed, er they thennes wente,
By-cause that he was hir neighebour,
And was a man of worship and honour, providence. 2 vain. 3 injures. 4 image.

love. 6 instruments. 7 leave. 8 arranged.
backgammon. 10 provision. 11 esteem.

1 judgment.
2 without cup, i.e. not in small quantities.
3 reveal. 4 reveal.

And hadde [1] y-knowen him of tyme yore,
They fille in speche; and forth more and more
Un-to his purpos drough [2] Aurelius,
And whan he saugh his tyme, he seyde thus:
"Madame," quod he, "by god that this world made,
So that I wiste it mighte your herte glade,
I wolde, that day that your Arveragus
Wente over the see, that I, Aurelius,
Had went ther never I sholde have come agayn;
For wel I woot my service is in vayn.
My guerdon is but bresting [3] of myn herte;
Madame, reweth upon my peynes smerte;
For with a word ye may me sleen or save,
Heer at your feet god wolde that I were grave! [4]
I ne have as now no leyser more to seye;
Have mercy, swete, or ye wol do me deye!"
She gan to loke up-on Aurelius:
"Is this your wil," quod she, "and sey ye thus?
Never erst," quod she, "ne wiste I what ye mente.
But now, Aurelie, I knowe your entente,
By thilke god that yaf me soule and lyf,
Ne shal I never been untrewe wyf
In word ne werk, as fer as I have wit:
I wol ben his to whom that I am knit;
Tak this for fynal answer as of me."
But after that in pley thus seyde she:
"Aurelie," quod she, "by heighe god above,
Yet wolde I graunte yow to been your love,
Sin I yow see so pitously complayne;
Loke what day that, endelong [5] Britayne,
Ye remoeve alle the rokkes, stoon by stoon,
That they ne lette ship ne boot to goon —
I seye, whan ye han maad the coost so clene
Of rokkes, that ther nis no stoon y-sene,
Than wol I love yow best of any man;
Have heer my trouthe in al that ever I can."
"Is ther non other grace in yow?" quod he.
"No, by that lord," quod she, "that maked me!
For wel I woot that it shal never bityde.
Lat swiche folies out of your herte slyde.
What deyntee [6] sholde a man han in his lyf
For to go love another mannes wyf,

1 The subject is Dorigen. 2 drew.
3 breaking. 4 buried. 5 all along. 6 pleasure.

That hath hir body whan so that h lyketh?"
Aurelius ful ofte sore syketh; [1]
Wo was Aurelie, whan that he this herde,
And with a sorweful herte he thus a swerde:
"Madame," quod he, "this were an possible!
Than moot I dye of sodein deth horrible."
And with that word he turned him anoon.
Tho come hir othere freendes many oon,
And in the aleyes romeden up and doun,
And no-thing wiste of this conclusioun,
But sodeinly bigonne revel newe
Til that the brighte sonne loste his hewe;
For th'orisonte [2] hath reft the sonne his ligh
This is as muche to seye as it was night.
And hoom they goon in joye and in solas,
Save only wrecche Aurelius, allas!
He to his hous is goon with sorweful herte
He seeth he may nat fro his deeth asterte.
Him semed that he felte his herte colde;
Up to the hevene his handes he gan holde
And on his knowes [4] bare he sette him dou
And in his raving seyde his orisoun.
For verray wo out of his wit he breyde.[5]
He niste what he spak, but thus he seyde;
With pitous herte his pleynt hath he bigon
Un-to the goddes, and first un-to the sonn
He seyde, "Appollo, god and governour
Of every plaunte, herbe, tree and flour,
That yevest, after they declinacioun,[6]
To ech of hem his tyme and his sesoun,
As thyn herberwe [7] chaungeth lowe or hye
Lord Phebus, cast thy merciable yë
On wrecche Aurelie, which that am but lor
Lo, lord! my lady hath my deeth y-sworn
With-oute gilt, but [8] thy benignitee
Upon my dedly herte have som pitee!
For wel I woot, lord Phebus, if yow lest,
Ye may me helpen, save my lady, best.
Now voucheth sauf that I may yow d vyse
How that I may been holpe and in wh wyse.
Your blisful suster, Lucina [9] the shene,[10]
That of the see is chief goddesse and quene
Though Neptunus have deitee in the see,
Yet emperesse aboven him is she:
Ye knowen wel, lord, that right as hir des
Is to be quiked [12] and lightned of your fyr,
For which she folweth yow ful busily,
Right so the see desyreth naturelly

1 sigheth. 2 the horizon. 3 escape.
4 knees. 5 he went out of his wits.
6 according to thy height in the sky (at different se sons of the year).
7 dwelling place. 8 unless. 9 Diana, the Moo
10 bright. 11 Because she controls the tide
12 endowed with life.

folwen hir, as she that is goddesse
he in the see and riveres more and lesse.
erfore, lord Phebus, this is my requeste —
this miracle, or do myn herte breste — at now, next at this opposicioun,[1] ich in the signe shal be of the Leoun, preyeth hir so greet a flood to bringe,
at fyve fadme at the leeste it overspringe
e hyeste rokke in Armorik Briteyne;
d lat this flood endure yeres tweyne;
an certes to my lady may I seye:
oldeth your heste,[2] the rokkes been aweye.'
Lord Phebus, dooth this miracle for me;
ye hir she go no faster cours than ye;
ye, preyeth your suster that she go faster cours than ye thise yeres two.[3] an shal she been evene atte fulle alway,
d spring-flood laste bothe night and day.
d, but she vouche-sauf in swiche manere graunte me my sovereyn lady dere,
y hir to sinken every rok adoun to hir owene derke regioun[4]
der the ground, ther Pluto dwelleth inne, never-mo shal I my lady winne.
y temple in Delphos wol I barefoot seke;
rd Phebus, see the teres on my cheke,
d of my peyne have som compassioun."
d with that word in swowne he fil adoun,
d longe tyme he lay forth in a traunce.
His brother, which that knew of his penaunce,
caughte him and to bedde he hath him broght.
speyred in this torment and this thoght
te I this woful creature lye;
ese he, for me, whether he wol live or dye.
Arveragus, with hele[5] and greet honour,
he that was of chivalrye the flour,
comen hoom, and othere worthy men.
blisful artow now, thou Dorigen,
at hast thy lusty housbonde in thyne armes,
e fresshe knight, the worthy man of armes,
at loveth thee, as his owene hertes lyf.
-thing list him to been imaginatyf[6]
any wight had spoke, whyl he was oute, hire of love; he hadde of it no doute.[7] noght entendeth to no swich matere,
t daunceth, justeth, maketh hir good chere;
d thus in joye and blisse I lete hem dwelle,
d of the syke Aurelius wol I telle.

1 i.e. at the full moon. 2 promise.
3 i.e. that the moon remain full continuously for two years.
4 Under the name of Hecate, Diana is goddess of hades.
5 health. 6 It never occurred to him to guess.
7 fear.

In langour and in torment furious
Two yeer and more lay wrecche Aurelius,
Er any foot he mighte on erthe goon;
Ne confort in this tyme hadde he noon,
Save of his brother, which that was a clerk;[1]
He knew of al this wo and al this werk.
For to non other creature certeyn
Of this matere he dorste no word seyn.
Under his brest he bar it more secree
Than ever dide Pamphilus[2] for Galathee.
His brest was hool, with-oute for to sene,
But in his herte ay was the arwe kene.
And wel ye knowe that of a sursanure[3]
In surgerye is perilous the cure,
But men mighte touche the arwe, or come therby.
His brother weep and wayled prively,
Til atte laste him fil in remembraunce,
That whyl he was at Orliens in Fraunce,
As yonge clerkes, that been likerous,[4]
To reden artes that been curious,[5]
Seken in every halke and every herne[6]
Particuler sciences for to lerne,
He him remembred that, upon a day,
At Orliens in studie a book he say[7]
Of magik naturel, which his felawe,
That was that tyme a bacheler of lawe,
Al were he[8] ther to lerne another craft,
Had prively upon his desk y-laft;
Which book spak muchel of the operaciouns,
Touchinge the eighte and twenty mansiouns
That longen to[9] the mone, and swich folye,
As in our dayes is nat worth a flye;
For holy chirches feith in our bileve
Ne suffreth noon illusion us to greve.
And whan this book was in his remembraunce,
Anon for joye his herte gan to daunce,
And to him-self he seyde prively:
"My brother shal be warisshed[10] hastily;
For I am siker[11] that ther be sciences,
By whiche men make diverse apparences
Swiche as thise subtile tregetoures[12] pleye.
For ofte at festes have I wel herd seye,
That tregetours, with-inne an halle large,
Have maad come in a water and a barge,
And in the halle rowen up and doun.
Somtyme hath semed come a grim leoun;
And somtyme floures springe as in a mede;
Somtyme a vyne, and grapes whyte and rede;

1 scholar.
2 Reputed author of a medieval Latin love-poem in praise of a lady named Galatea.
3 a wound healed outwardly but not inwardly.
4 desirous. 5 magical.
6 in every hiding-place and corner. 7 saw.
8 although he was. 9 belong to. 10 cured.
11 sure. 12 jugglers.

Somtyme a castel, al of lym and stoon;
And whan hem lyked, voyded [1] it anoon.
Thus semed it to every mannes sighte.
Now than conclude I thus, that if I mighte
At Orliens som old felawe y-finde,
That hadde this mones mansions in minde,
Or other magik naturel above,
He sholde wel make my brother han his love.
For with an apparence a clerk may make
To mannes sighte, that alle the rokkes blake
Of Britaigne weren y-voyded everichon,
And shippes by the brinke comen and gon,
And in swich forme endure a day or two;
Than were my brother warisshed of his wo.
Than moste she nedes holden hir beheste,
Or elles he shal shame hir atte leste."
What sholde I make a lenger tale of this?
Un-to his brotheres bed he comen is,
And swich confort he yaf him for to gon
To Orliens, that he up stirte anon,
And on his wey forthward thanne is he fare,
In hope for to ben lissed [2] of his care.
Whan they were come almost to that citee,
But-if it were a two furlong or three,
A yong clerk rominge by him-self they mette,
Which that in Latin thriftily hem grette,[3]
And after that he seyde a wonder thing:
"I knowe," quod he, "the cause of your coming";
And er they ferther any fote wente,
He tolde hem al that was in hir entente.
This Briton clerk him asked of felawes
The whiche that he had knowe in olde dawes; [4]
And he answerde him that they dede were,
For which he weep ful ofte many a tere.
Doun of his hors Aurelius lighte anon,
And forth with this magicien is he gon
Hoom to his hous, and made hem wel at ese.
Hem lakked no vitaille that mighte hem plese;
So wel arrayed hous as ther was oon [5]
Aurelius in his lyf saugh never noon.
He shewed him, er he wente to sopeer,
Forestes, parkes ful of wilde deer;
Ther saugh he hertes [6] with hir hornes hye,
The gretteste that ever were seyn with yë.
He saugh of hem an hondred slayn with houndes,
And somme with arwes blede of bittre woundes.
He saugh, whan voided were thise wilde deer,
Thise fauconers upon a fair river,
That with hir haukes han the heron slayn.
Tho saugh he knightes justing in a playn;
And after this, he dide him swich plesaunce,
That he him shewed his lady on a daunce
On which him-self he daunced, as him thoughte.
And whan this maister, that this magik wroughte,
Saugh it was tyme, he clapte his handes two,
And farewel! al our revel [1] was ago.
And yet remoeved they never out of the hous,
Whyl they saugh al this sighte merveillous,
But in his studie, ther-as his bookes be,
They seten stille, and no wight but they three.
To him this maister called his squyer,
And seyde him thus: "is redy our soper?
Almost an houre it is, I undertake,
Sith I yow bad our soper for to make,
Whan that thise worthy men wenten with me
In-to my studie, ther-as my bookes be."
"Sire," quod this squyer, "whan it lyketh yow,
It is al redy, though ye wol right now."
"Go we than soupe," quod he, "as for the beste;
This amorous folk som-tyme mote han reste."
At-after soper fille they in tretee,[2]
What somme sholde this maistres guerdon be,
To remoeven alle the rokkes of Britayne,
And eek from Gerounde [3] to the mouth of Sayne.
He made it straunge,[4] and swoor, so god him save,
Lasse than a thousand pound he wolde nat have,
Ne gladly for that somme he wolde nat goon.
Aurelius, with blisful herte anoon,
Answerde thus, "fy on a thousand pound!
This wyde world, which that men seye is round,
I wolde it yeve, if I were lord of it.
This bargayn is ful drive,[5] for we ben knit.[6]
Ye shal be payed trewely, by my trouthe!
But loketh now, for no necligence or slouthe,
Ye tarie us heer no lenger than to-morwe."
"Nay," quod this clerk, "have heer my feith to borwe." [7]
To bedde is goon Aurelius whan him leste,
And wel ny al that night he hadde his reste;

1 sent away. 2 relieved. 3 greeted. 4 days.
5 So well furnished a house as that one was.
6 stags

1 entertainment. 2 discussion.
3 the Gironde river. 4 He held off.
5 completed. 6 agreed. 7 as pledge.

What for his labour and his hope of blisse,
His woful herte of penaunce hadde a lisse.[1]
Upon the morwe, whan that it was day,
To Britaigne toke they the righte way,
Aurelius, and this magicien bisyde,
And been descended ther they wolde abyde;
And this was, as the bokes me remembre,
The colde frosty seson of Decembre.
Phebus wex old,[2] and hewed lyk latoun,[3]
That in his hote declinacioun
Shoon as the burned[4] gold with stremes brighte;
But now in Capricorn[5] adoun he lighte,
Wher-as he shoon ful pale, I dar wel seyn.
The bittre frostes, with the sleet and reyn,
Destroyed hath the grene in every yerd.
Janus[6] sit by the fyr, with double berd,
And drinketh of his bugle-horn the wyn.
Biforn him stant braun of the tusked swyn,
And "Nowel"[7] cryeth every lusty man.
Aurelius, in al that ever he can,
Doth to his maister chere and reverence,
And preyeth him to doon his diligence
To bringen him out of his peynes smerte,
Or with a swerd that he wolde slitte his herte.
This subtil clerk swich routhe[8] had of this man,
That night and day he spedde him that he can,
To wayte a tyme of his conclusioun;
This is to seye, to make illusioun,
By swich an apparence or jogelrye,
I ne can no termes of astrologye,
That she and every wight sholde wene and seye,
That of Britaigne the rokkes were aweye,
Or elles they were sonken under grounde.
So atte laste he hath his tyme y-founde
To maken his japes[9] and his wrecchednesse
Of swich a supersticious cursednesse.
His tables Toletanes[10] forth he broght,
Ful wel corrected, ne ther lakked noght,
Neither his collect ne his expans yeres,[11]
Ne his rotes ne his othere geres,
As been his centres and his arguments,
And his proporcionels convenients
For his equacions in every thing.
And, by his eighte spere in his wirking,
He knew ful wel how fer Alnath was shove
Fro the heed of thilke fixe Aries above
That in the ninthe speere considered is;
Ful subtilly he calculed al this.
Whan he had founde his firste mansioun,
He knew the remenant by proporcioun;
And knew the arysing of his mone weel,
And in whos face, and terme, and every-deel;
And knew ful weel the mones mansioun
Acordaunt to his operacioun,
And knew also his othere observaunces
For swiche illusiouns and swiche meschaunces
As hethen folk used in thilke dayes;
For which no lenger maked he delayes,
But thurgh his magik, for a wyke[1] or tweye,
It semed that alle the rokkes were aweye.
Aurelius, which that yet despeired is
Wher[2] he shal han his love or fare amis,
Awaiteth night and day on this miracle;
And whan he knew that ther was noon obstacle,
That voided were thise rokkes everichon,
Doun to his maistres feet he fil[3] anon,
And seyde, "I woful wrecche, Aurelius,
Thanke yow, lord, and lady myn Venus,
That me han holpen fro my cares colde:"
And to the temple his wey forth hath he holde,
Wher-as he knew he sholde his lady see.
And whan he saugh his tyme, anon-right he,
With dredful[4] herte and with ful humble chere,
Salewed[5] hath his sovereyn lady dere:
"My righte lady," quod this woful man,
"Whom I most drede and love as I best can,
And lothest were of al this world displese,
Nere it that I for yow have swich disese,
That I moste dyen heer at your foot anon,
Noght wolde I telle how me is wo bigon;
But certes outher moste I dye or pleyne;
Ye slee me giltelees for verray peyne.
But of my deeth, thogh that ye have no routhe,
Avyseth yow, er that ye breke your trouthe.
Repenteth yow, for thilke god above,
Er ye me sleen by-cause that I yow love.
For, madame, wel ye woot what ye han hight;[6]
Nat that I chalange any thing of right
Of yow my sovereyn lady, but your grace;
But in a gardin yond, at swich a place,
Ye woot right wel what ye bihighten me;
And in myn hand your trouthe plighten ye
To love me best, god woot, ye seyde so,
Al be that I unworthy be therto.

1 relief. 2 The Sun grew old, i.e. it was winter.
3 latten, a composition metal of dull hue.
4 burnished.
5 The Sun enters the Zodiacal Sign of Capricorn in December.
6 The god for whom the month of January is named.
7 Merry Christmas. 8 pity.
9 tricks. 10 astronomical tables.
11 In lines 547–62, we have a series of technical terms from the science of astrology.

1 week. 2 whether. 3 fell.
4 timid. 5 saluted. 6 promised.

Madame, I speke it for the honour of yow,
More than to save myn hertes lyf right now;
I have do so as ye comanded me;
And if ye vouche-sauf, ye may go see.
Doth as yow list, have your biheste in minde,
For quik or deed, right ther ye shul me finde;
In yow lyth al, to do me live or deye; —
But wel I woot the rokkes been aweye!"

He taketh his leve, and she astonied stood,
In al hir face nas a drope of blood;
She wende never han come in swich a trappe:
"Allas!" quod she, "that ever this sholde happe!
For wende I never, by possibilitee,
That swich a monstre or merveille mighte be!
It is agayns the proces of nature:"
And hoom she gooth a sorweful creature.
For verray fere unnethe [1] may she go,[2]
She wepeth, wailleth, al a day or two,
And swowneth, that it routhe was to see;
But why it was, to no wight tolde she;
For out of toune was goon Arveragus.
But to hir-self she spak, and seyde thus,
With face pale and with ful sorweful chere,
In hir compleynt, as ye shul after here:

"Allas," quod she, "on thee, Fortune, I pleyne,
That unwar [3] wrapped hast me in thy cheyne;
For which, t'escape, woot I no socour
Save only deeth or elles dishonour;
Oon of thise two bihoveth me to chese.
But nathelees, yet have I lever lese [4]
My lyf than of my body have a shame,
Or knowe my-selven fals, or lese my name,
And with my deth I may be quit, y-wis.
Hath ther nat many a noble wyf, er this,
And many a mayde y-slayn hir-self, allas!
Rather than with hir body doon trespas?

Yis, certes, lo, thise stories [5] beren witnesse;
Whan thretty tyraunts, ful of cursednesse,
Had slayn Phidoun in Athenes, atte feste,
They comanded his doghtres for t'areste,
And bringen hem biforn hem in despyt
Al naked, to fulfille hir foul delyt,
And in hir fadres blood they made hem daunce
Upon the pavement, god yeve hem mischaunce!
For which thise woful maydens, ful of drede,
Rather than they wolde lese hir maydenhede,
They prively ben stirt [1] in-to a welle,
And dreynte [2] hem-selven, as the bokes telle.

They of Messene lete enquere and seke
Of Lacedomie fifty maydens eke,
On whiche they wolden doon hir lecherye;
But was ther noon of al that companye
That she nas slayn, and with a good entente
Chees rather for to dye than assente
To been oppressed of hir maydenhede.
Why sholde I thanne to dye been in drede?

Lo, eek, the tiraunt Aristoclides
That loved a mayden, heet [3] Stimphalides,
Whan that hir fader slayn was on a night,
Un-to Dianes temple goth she right,
And hente the image in hir handes two,
Fro which image wolde she never go.
No wight ne mighte hir handes of it arace,[4]
Til she was slayn right in the selve place.
Now sith that maydens hadden swich despyt
To been defouled with mannes foul delyt,
Wel oghte a wyf rather hir-selven slee
Than be defouled, as it thinketh me.

What shal I seyn of Hasdrubales wyf,
That at Cartage birafte hir-self hir lyf?
For whan she saugh that Romayns wan the toun,
She took hir children alle, and skipte adoun
In-to the fyr, and chees rather to dye
Than any Romayn dide hir vileinye.

Hath nat Lucresse y-slayn hir-self, allas!
At Rome, whanne she oppressed was
Of Tarquin, for hir thoughte it was a shame
To liven whan she hadde lost hir name?

The sevene maydens of Milesie also
Han slayn hem-self, for verray drede and wo,
Rather than folk of Gaule hem sholde oppresse.
Mo than a thousand stories, as I gesse,
Coude I now telle as touchinge this matere.

Whan Habradate was slayn, his wyf so dere
Hirselven slow, and leet hir blood to glyde
In Habradates woundes depe and wyde,
And seyde, 'my body, at the leeste way,
Ther shal no wight defoulen, if I may.'

What sholde I mo [5] ensamples heer-of sayn,
Sith that so manye han hem-selven slayn
Wel rather than they wolde defouled be?
I wol conclude, that it is bet for me
To sleen my-self, than been defouled thus.
I wol be trewe un-to Arveragus,

1 hardly. 2 walk.
3 without my knowledge. 4 I had rather lose.
5 The stories which follow are all taken from St. Jerome Contra Jovinianum.

1 They secretly jumped. 2 drowned.
3 called. 4 tear away. 5 more.

Or rather sleen my-self in som manere,
As dide Demociones doghter dere,
By-cause that she wolde nat defouled be.
O Cedasus! it is ful greet pitee,
To reden how thy doghtren deyde, allas!
That slowe hem-selven for swich maner cas.[1]
As greet a pitee was it, or wel more,
The Theban mayden, that for Nichanore
Hir-selven slow, right for swich maner wo.
Another Theban mayden dide right so;
For oon of Macedoine hadde hir oppressed,
She with hir deeth hir maydenhede redressed.
What shal I seye of Nicerates wyf,
That for swich cas birafte hir-self hir lyf?
How trewe eek was to Alcebiades
His love, that rather for to dyen chees
Than for to suffre his body unburied be!
Lo which a wyf was Alcestè," quod she.
"What seith Omer of gode Penalopee?
Al Grece knoweth of hir chastitee.
Pardee, of Laodomya is writen thus,
That whan at Troye was slayn Protheselaus,
No lenger wolde she live after his day.
The same of noble Porcia telle I may;
With-oute Brutus coude she nat live,
To whom she hadde al hool hir herte yive.
The parfit wyfhod of Arthemesye
Honoured is thurgh al the Barbarye.[2]
O Teuta, queen! thy wyfly chastitee
To alle wyves may a mirour be.
The same thing I seye of Bilia,
Of Rodogone, and eek Valeria."
Thus pleyned Dorigene a day or tweye,
Purposinge ever that she wolde deye.
But nathelees, upon the thridde night,
Hom cam Arveragus, this worthy knight,
And asked hir, why that she weep so sore?
And she gan wepen ever lenger the more.
"Allas!" quod she, "that ever was I born!
Thus have I seyd," quod she, "thus have I sworn" —
And told him al as ye han herd bifore;
It nedeth nat reherce it yow na-more.
This housbond with glad chere, in freendly wyse,
Answerde and seyde as I shal yow devyse:
"Is ther ought elles, Dorigen, but this?"
"Nay, nay," quod she, "god help me so, as wis;[3]
This is to muche, and it were goddes wille."
"Ye, wyf," quod he, "lat slepen that is stille;[4]
It may be wel, paraventure, yet to-day.
Ye shul your trouthe holden, by my fay!

1 in a case of such sort. 2 land of the barbarians.
3 as (it is) certain. 4 i.e. let sleeping dogs lie.

For god so wisly have mercy on me,
I hadde wel lever y-stiked for to be,[1]
For verray love which that I to yow have,
But-if[2] ye sholde your trouthe kepe and save.
Trouthe is the hyeste thing that man may kepe:" —
But with that word he brast[3] anon to wepe,
And seyde, "I yow forbede, up[4] peyne of deeth,
That never, whyl thee lasteth lyf ne breeth,
To no wight tel thou of this aventure.
As I may best, I wol my wo endure,
Ne make no contenance[5] of hevinesse,
That folk of yow may demen harm or gesse."
And forth he cleped a squyer and a mayde:
"Goth forth anon with Dorigen," he sayde,
"And bringeth hir to swich a place anon."
They take hir leve, and on hir wey they gon;
But they ne wiste why she thider wente.
He nolde no wight tellen his entente.
Paraventure an heep of yow, y-wis,
Wol holden him a lewed[6] man in this,
That he wol putte his wyf in jupartye;[7]
Herkneth the tale, er ye up-on hir crye.
She may have bettre fortune than yow semeth;
And whan that ye han herd the tale, demeth.
This squyer, which that highte Aurelius,
On Dorigen that was so amorous,
Of aventure happed hir to mete
Amidde the toun, right in the quikkest[8] strete,
As she was boun[9] to goon the wey forthright
Toward the gardin ther-as she had hight.[10]
And he was to the gardinward also;
For wel he spyed, whan she wolde go
Out of hir hous to any maner place.
But thus they mette, of aventure or grace;
And he saleweth hir with glad entente,
And asked of hir whiderward she wente?
And she answerde, half as she were mad,
"Un-to the gardin, as myn housbond bad,
My trouthe for to holde, allas! allas!"
Aurelius gan wondren on this cas,
And in his herte had greet compassioun
Of hir and of hir lamentacioun,
And of Arveragus, the worthy knight,
That bad hir holden al that she had hight,

1 I had much rather be stabbed. 2 unless.
3 burst. 4 on. 5 show no appearance.
6 foolish. 7 jeopardy. 8 liveliest.
9 prepared. 10 promised.

So looth him was his wyf sholde breke hir trouthe;
And in his herte he caughte of this greet routhe,
Consideringe the beste on every syde,
That fro his lust yet were him lever abyde
Than doon so heigh a cherlish wrecchednesse
Agayns franchyse [1] and alle gentillesse;
For which in fewe wordes seyde he thus:
"Madame, seyth to your lord Arveragus,
That sith I see his grete gentillesse
To yow, and eek I see wel your distresse,
That him were lever han shame (and that were routhe)
Than ye to me sholde breke thus your trouthe,
I have wel lever ever to suffre wo
Than I departe [2] the love bitwix yow two.
I yow relesse, madame, in-to your hond
Quit every surement [3] and every bond,
That ye han maad to me as heer-biforn,
Sith thilke tyme which that ye were born.
My trouthe I plighte, I shal yow never repreve
Of no biheste, and here I take my leve,
As of the treweste and the beste wyf
That ever yet I knew in al my lyf.
But every wyf be-war of hir biheste,
On Dorigene remembreth atte leste.
Thus can a squyer doon a gentil dede,
As well as can a knight, with-outen drede."
She thonketh him up-on hir knees al bare,
And hoom un-to hir housbond is she fare,
And tolde him al as ye han herd me sayd;[4]
And be ye siker, he was so weel apayd,[5]
That it were inpossible me to wryte;
What sholde I lenger of this cas endyte?
Arveragus and Dorigene his wyf
In sovereyn blisse leden forth hir lyf.
Never eft ne was ther angre hem bitwene;
He cherisseth hir as though she were a quene;
And she was to him trewe for evermore.
Of thise two folk ye gete of me na-more.
Aurelius, that his cost hath al forlorn,[6]
Curseth the tyme that ever he was born:
"Allas," quod he, "allas! that I bihighte
Of pured gold a thousand pound of wighte
Un-to this philosophre![7] how shal I do?
I see na-more but that I am fordo.[8]
Myn heritage moot I nedes selle,
And been a begger; heer may I nat dwelle,
And shamen al my kinrede in this place,
But I of him may gete bettre grace.

1 generosity. 2 put asunder.
3 every pledge discharged. 4 say. 5 pleased.
6 lost. 7 i.e. the magician. 8 ruined.

But nathelees, I wol of him assaye,
At certeyn dayes, yeer by yeer, to paye,
And thanke him of his grete curteisye;
My trouthe wol I kepe, I wol nat lye."
With herte soor he gooth un-to his cofre,
And broghte gold un-to this philosophre,
The value of fyve hundred pound, I gesse,
And him bisecheth, of his gentillesse,
To graunte him dayes of the remenaunt,
And seyde, "maister, I dar wel make avaunt,[1]
I failled never of my trouthe as yit;
For sikerly my dette shal be quit
Towardes yow, how-ever that I fare
To goon a-begged in my kirtle bare.[2]
But wolde ye vouche-sauf, up-on seurtee,
Two yeer or three for to respyten me,
Than were I wel; for elles moot I selle
Myn heritage; ther is na-more to telle."
This philosophre sobrely answerde,
And seyde thus, whan he thise wordes herde:
"Have I nat holden covenant un-to thee?"
"Yes, certes, wel and trewely," quod he.
"Hastow nat had thy lady as thee lyketh?"
"No, no," quod he, and sorwefully he syketh.[3]
"What was the cause? tel me if thou can."
Aurelius his tale anon bigan,
And tolde him al, as ye han herd bifore;
It nedeth nat to yow reherce it more.
He seide, "Arveragus, of gentillesse,
Had lever dye in sorwe and in distresse
Than that his wyf were of hir trouthe fals."
The sorwe of Dorigen he tolde him als,[4]
How looth hir was to been a wikked wyf,
And that she lever had lost that day hir lyf,
And that hir trouthe she swoor, thurgh innocence:
"She never erst herde speke of apparence;[5]
That made me han of hir so greet pitee.
And right as frely as he sente hir me,
As frely sente I hir to him ageyn.
This al and som, ther is na-more to seyn."
This philosophre answerde, "leve brother,
Everich of yow dide gentilly til other.
Thou art a squyer, and he is a knight;
But god forbede, for his blisful might,
But-if a clerk coude doon a gentil dede
As wel as any of yow, it is no drede![6]
Sire, I relesse thee thy thousand pound,
As thou right now were cropen [7] out of the ground,
Ne never er now ne haddest knowen me.
For sire, I wol nat take a peny of thee
For al my craft, ne noght for my travaille.
Thou hast y-payed wel for my vitaille;

1 boast.
2 To go a-begging clothed only in a short coat.
3 sigheth. 4 also. 5 illusion caused by magic.
6 doubt. 7 had crept.

t is y-nogh, and farewel, have good day:"
And took his hors, and forth he gooth his way.
Lordinges,[1] this question wolde I aske now,
Which was the moste free,[1] as thinketh yow?
Now telleth me, er that ye ferther wende.
I can na-more, my tale is at an ende.

Here is ended the Frankeleyns Tale

THE MINOR POEMS

THE PARLIAMENT OF FOWLS

The poem presents under the veil of graceful allegory the courtship by three rival suitors of some great lady of Chaucer's day. Many critics have believed that the lady, the "formel egle," is the Princess Anne of Bohemia, who in January 1382 became the queen of Richard II of England, that the "tercel egle" is Richard, and that the two eagles "of lower kinde" are two continental princes who had been suitors for the hand of Princess Anne. But this identification is far from certain. The form of the poem combines two medieval types, the dream-vision and the "debate," the latter a poem in which an unsolved problem is left to the reader's decision — which of the three suitors deserves the lady? Into the poem Chaucer has put the fruit of much reading. The description of the garden is from the Teseide of Boccaccio; the picture of the goddess Nature is from a writer in medieval Latin, Alanus de Insulis. The parliament itself, where the various classes of birds humorously represent different ranks of society, is, so far as we know, Chaucer's own invention.

The Proem

The lyf so short, the craft so long to lerne,
Th'assay so hard, so sharp the conquering,
The dredful joye, that alwey slit so yerne,[2]
Al this mene I by love, that my feling
Astonyeth with his wonderful worching
So sore y-wis, that whan I on him thinke,
Nat wot I wel wher[3] that I wake or winke.

For al be that I knowe not love in dede,
Ne wot how that he quyteth folk hir hyre,
Yet happeth me ful ofte in bokes rede
Of his miracles, and his cruel yre;
Ther rede I wel he wol be lord and syre,
I dar not seyn, his strokes been so sore,
But god save swich a lord! I can no more.

Of usage, what for luste[4] what for lore,[5]
On bokes rede I ofte, as I yow tolde.
But wherfor that I speke al this? not yore
Agon, hit happed me for to beholde
Upon a boke, was write with lettres olde;
And ther-upon, a certeyn thing to lerne,
The longe day ful faste I radde and yerne.[2]

For out of olde feldes, as men seith,
Cometh al this newe corn fro yeer to yere;
And out of olde bokes, in good feith,
Cometh al this newe science that men lere.
But now to purpos as of this matere —
To rede forth hit gan me so delyte,
That al the day me thoughte but a lyte.

This book of which I make mencioun,
Entitled was al thus, as I shal telle,
"Tullius of the dreme of Scipioun";[3]
Chapitres seven hit hadde, of hevene and helle,
And erthe, and soules that therinne dwelle,
Of whiche, as shortly as I can hit trete,
Of his sentence I wol you seyn the grete.

First telleth hit, whan Scipioun was come
In Afrik, how he mette Massinisse,
That him for joye in armes hath y-nome.
Than telleth hit hir speche and al the blisse
That was betwix hem, til the day gan misse;
And how his auncestre, African so dere,
Gan in his slepe that night to him appere.

Than telleth hit that, fro a sterry place,
How African hath him Cartage shewed,
And warned him before of al his grace,
And seyde him, what man, lered other lewed,[4]
That loveth comun profit, wel y-thewed,[5]
He shal unto a blisful place wende,
Ther as joye is that last withouten ende.
Than asked he, if folk that heer be dede
Have lyf and dwelling in another place;
And African seyde, "ye, withoute drede,"
And that our present worldes lyves space
Nis but a maner deth, what wey we trace,
And rightful folk shal go, after they dye,
To heven; and shewed him the galaxye.

1 The Franklin is addressing his fellow pilgrims.
2 slides away so soon. 3 whether.
4 pleasure. 5 instruction.

1 generous. 2 eagerly.
3 The "Dream of Scipio" is a portion of Cicero's De Republica.
4 learned or ignorant. 5 well conducted

Than shewed he him the litel erthe, that heer is,
At regard of the hevenes quantite;
And after shewed he him the nyne speres,[1]
And after that the melodye herde he
That cometh of thilke speres thryes three,
That welle is of musyke and melodye
In this world heer, and cause of armonye.

Than bad he him, sin erthe was so lyte,
And ful of torment and of harde grace,
That he ne shulde him in the world delyte.
Than tolde he him, in certeyn yeres space,
That every sterre shulde come into his place
Ther hit was first; and al shulde out of minde
That in this worlde is don of al mankinde.

Than prayde him Scipioun to telle him al
The wey to come un-to that hevene blisse;
And he seyde, "know thy-self first immortal,
And loke ay besily thou werke and wisse[2]
To comun profit, and thou shalt nat misse
To comen swiftly to that place dere,
That ful of blisse is and of soules clere.

But brekers of the lawe, soth to seyne,
And lecherous folk, after that they be dede,
Shul alwey whirle aboute th'erthe in peyne,
Til many a world be passed, out of drede,
And than, for-yeven alle hir wikked dede,
Than shul they come unto that blisful place,
To which to comen god thee sende his grace!" —

The day gan failen, and the derke night,
That reveth bestes from hir besinesse,
Berafte me my book for lakke of light,
And to my bedde I gan me for to dresse,
Fulfild of thought and besy hevinesse;
For bothe I hadde thing which that I nolde,
And eek I ne hadde that thing that I wolde.

But fynally my spirit, at the laste,
For-wery of my labour al the day,
Took rest, that made me to slepe faste,
And in my slepe I mette,[3] as I lay,
How African, right in that selfe aray
That Scipioun him saw before that tyde,
Was comen, and stood right at my beddes syde.

The wery hunter, slepinge in his bed,
To wode ayein his minde goth anoon;
The juge dremeth how his plees ben sped;
The carter dremeth how his cartes goon;
The riche, of gold; the knight fight with his foon,
The seke met he drinketh of the tonne;
The lover met he hath his lady wonne.

Can I nat seyn if that the cause were
For I had red of African beforn,
That made me to mete that he stood there;
But thus seyde he, "thou hast thee so wel born
In loking of myn olde book to-torn,
Of which Macrobie roghte nat a lyte,[1]
That somdel of thy labour wolde I quyte!" —

Citherea![2] thou blisful lady swete,
That with thy fyr-brand dauntest whom thee lest,
And madest me this sweven[3] for to mete,
Be thou my help in this, for thou mayst best;
As wisly as I saw thee north-north-west,
When I began my sweven for to wryte,
So yif me might to ryme hit and endyte!

The Story

This forseid African me hente[4] anoon,
And forth with him unto a gate broghte
Right of a parke, walled with grene stoon;
And over the gate, with lettres large y-wroghte,
Ther weren vers y-writen, as me thoghte,
On eyther halfe, of ful gret difference,
Of which I shal yow sey the pleyn sentence.

"Thorgh me men goon in-to that blisful place
Of hertes hele[5] and dedly woundes cure;
Thorgh me men goon unto the welle of Grace,
Ther grene and lusty May shal ever endure;
This is the wey to al good aventure;
Be glad, thou reder, and thy sorwe of-caste,
Al open am I; passe in, and hy the faste!"

"Thorgh me men goon," than spak that other syde,
"Unto the mortal strokes of the spere,
Of which Disdayn and Daunger is the gyde,
Ther tree shal never fruit ne leves bere.
This streem you ledeth to the sorwful were,[6]
Ther as the fish in prison is al drye;
Th'eschewing is only the remedye."

Thise vers of gold and blak y-writen were,
The whiche I gan a stounde[7] to beholde,

1 In the old astronomy, the motion of the heavenly bodies was explained as due to the revolutions of nine concentric transparent spheres about the central earth.
2 point the way. 3 dreamed.

1 Macrobius wrote a famous commentary on the Dream of Scipio.
2 Venus. 3 dream. 4 took.
5 health. 6 weir. 7 while.

For with that oon encresed ay my fere,
And with that other gan myn herte bolde;
That oon me hette, that other did me colde,
No wit had I, for errour, for to chese,
To entre or flee, or me to save or lese.

Right as, betwixen adamauntes [1] two
Of even might, a pece of iren y-set,
That hath no might to meve to ne fro —
For what that on may hale, that other let —
Ferde I, that niste whether me was bet,
To entre or leve, til African my gyde
Me hente, and shoof in at the gates wyde,

And seyde, "hit stondeth writen in thy face,
Thyn errour, though thou telle it not to me;
But dred thee nat to come in-to this place,
For this wryting is no-thing ment by thee,
Ne by noon, but he Loves servant be;
For thou of love hast lost thy tast, I gesse,
As seek man hath of swete and bitternesse.

But natheles, al-though that thou be dulle,
Yit that thou canst not do, yit mayst thou see;
For many a man that may not stonde a pulle,
Yit lyketh him at the wrastling for to be,
And demeth yit wher [2] he do bet or he;
And if thou haddest cunning for t'endyte,
I shal thee shewen mater of to wryte."

With that my hond in his he took anoon,
Of which I comfort caughte, and wente in faste;
But lord! so I was glad and wel begoon!
For over-al, wher that I myn eyen caste,
Were treës clad with leves that ay shal laste,
Eche in his kinde, of colour fresh and grene
As emeraude, that joye was to sene.

The bilder ook, and eek the hardy asshe;
The piler elm, the cofre unto careyne; [3]
The boxtree piper; holm to whippes lasshe;
The sayling firr; the cipres, deth to pleyne;
The sheter [4] ew, the asp for shaftes pleyne;
The olyve of pees, and eek the drunken vyne,
The victor palm, the laurer to devyne.

A garden saw I, ful of blosmy bowes,
Upon a river, in a grene mede,
There as that swetnesse evermore y-now is,
With floures whyte, blewe, yelowe, and rede;
And colde welle-stremes, no-thing dede,
That swommen ful of smale fisshes lighte,
With finnes rede and scales silver-brighte.

On every bough the briddes herde I singe,
With voys of aungel in hir armonye,
Som besyed hem hir briddes [1] forth to bringe;
The litel conyes [2] to hir pley gunne hye,
And further al aboute I gan espye
The dredful roo, the buk, the hert and hinde,
Squerels, and bestes smale of gentil kinde.

Of instruments of strenges in acord
Herde I so pleye a ravisshing swetnesse
That god, that maker is of al and lord,
Ne herde never better, as I gesse;
Therwith a wind, unnethe hit might be lesse,
Made in the leves grene a noise softe
Acordant to the foules songe on-lofte.

The air of that place so attempre was
That never was grevaunce of hoot ne cold;
Ther wex eek every holsom spyce and gras,
Ne no man may ther wexe seek ne old;
Yet was ther joye more a thousand fold
Then man can telle; ne never wolde it nighte,
But ay cleer day to any mannes sighte.

Under a tree, besyde a welle, I say [3]
Cupyde our lord his arwes forge and fyle;
And at his fete his bowe al redy lay,
And Wil [4] his doghter, tempred al the whyle
The hedes in the welle, and with hir wyle
She couched hem after as they shulde serve,
Som for to slee, and som to wounde and kerve.

Tho was I war of Plesaunce anon-right,
And of Aray, and Lust, [5] and Curtesye;
And of the Craft that can and hath the might
To doon by force a wight to do folye —
Disfigurat was she, I nil not lye;
And by him-self, under an oke, I gesse,
Sawe I Delyt, that stood with Gentilnesse.

I saw Beautee, withouten any atyr,
And Youthe, ful of game and Jolyte,
Fool-hardinesse, Flatery, and Desyr,
Messagerye, and Mede, and other three —
Hir names shul noght here be told for me —
And upon pilers grete of jasper longe
I saw a temple of bras y-founded stronge.

Aboute the temple daunceden alway
Wommen y-nowe, of whiche somme ther were

1 magnets. 2 whether.
3 Elm wood was used for coffins. 4 shooter.

1 fledglings. 2 rabbits. 3 saw.
4 desire. 5 pleasure.

Faire of hem-self, and somme of hem were gay;
In kirtels, al dishevele,[1] wente they there —
That was hir office alwey, yeer by yere —
And on the temple, of doves whyte and faire
Saw I sittinge many a hundred paire.

Before the temple-dore ful soberly
Dame Pees sat, with a curteyn in hir hond:
And hir besyde, wonder discretly,
Dame Pacience sitting ther I fond
With face pale, upon an hille of sond;
And alder-next,[2] within and eek withoute,
Behest and Art, and of hir folke a route.

Within the temple, of syghes hote as fyr
I herde a swogh [3] that gan aboute renne;
Which syghes were engendred with desyr,
That maden every auter for to brenne
Of newe flaume; and wel aspyed I thenne
That al the cause of sorwes that they drye [4]
Com of the bitter goddesse Jalousye.

The god Priapus saw I, as I wente,
Within the temple, in soverayn place stonde,
In swich aray as whan the asse him shente
With crye by night, and with his ceptre in honde;
Ful besily men gunne assaye and fonde
Upon his hede to sette, of sondry hewe,
Garlondes ful of fresshe floures newe.

And in a privee corner, in disporte,
Fond I Venus and hir porter Richesse,
That was ful noble and hauteyn of hir porte;
Derk was that place, but afterward lightnesse
I saw a lyte, unnethe hit might be lesse,
And on a bed of golde she lay to reste,
Til that the hote sonne gan to weste.
Hir gilte heres with a golden threde
Y-bounden were, untressed as she lay,
And naked fro the breste unto the hede
Men might hir see; and, sothly for to say,
The remenant wel kevered to my pay [5]
Right with a subtil kerchef of Valence,
Ther was no thikker cloth of no defence.

The place yaf a thousand savours swote,
And Bachus, god of wyn, sat hir besyde,
And Ceres next, that doth of hunger bote; [6]
And, as I seide, amiddes lay Cipryde,
To whom on knees two yonge folkes cryde
To ben hir help; but thus I leet hir lye,
And ferther in the temple I gan espye

That, in dispyte of Diane the chaste,
Ful many a bowe y-broke heng on the wal
Of maydens, suche as gunne hir tymes waste
In hir servyse; and peynted over al
Of many a story, of which I touche shal
A fewe, as of Calixte and Athalaunte,
And many a mayde, of which the name I wante;

Semyramus, Candace, and Ercules,
Biblis, Dido, Tisbe and Piramus,
Tristram, Isoude, Paris, and Achilles,
Eleyne, Cleopatre, and Troilus,
Silla, and eek the moder of Romulus —
Alle these were peynted on that other syde,
And al hir love, and in what plyte they dyde.

Whan I was come ayen into the place
That I of spak, that was so swote and grene,
Forth welk I tho, my-selven to solace.
Tho was I war wher that ther sat a quene
That, as of light the somer-sonne shene
Passeth the sterre, right so over mesure
She fairer was than any creature.

And in a launde,[1] upon an hille of floures,
Was set this noble goddesse Nature;
Of braunches were hir halles and hir boures,
Y-wrought after hir craft and hir mesure;
Ne ther nas foul that cometh of engendrure,
That they ne were prest [2] in hir presence,
To take hir doom and yeve hir audience.

For this was on seynt Valentynes day,
Whan every foul cometh ther to chese his make,[3]
Of every kinde, that men thenke may;
And that so huge a noyse gan they make,
That erthe and see, and tree, and every lake
So ful was, that unnethe was ther space
For me to stonde, so ful was al the place.

And right as Aleyn, in the Pleynt of Kinde,[4]
Devyseth Nature of aray and face,
In swich aray men mighten hir ther finde.
This noble emperesse, ful of grace,
Bad every foul to take his owne place,
As they were wont alwey fro yeer to yere,
Seynt Valentynes day, to stonden there.

That is to sey, the foules of ravyne [5]
Were hyest set; and than the foules smale,
That eten as hem nature wolde enclyne,
As worm, or thing of whiche I telle no tale;

1 with hair loose. 2 next of all. 3 low noise. 4 endure. 5 satisfaction. 6 remedy.

1 open space of grass. 2 ready. 3 mate.
4 Alanus de Insulis was author of a work, De Planctu Naturæ, from which Chaucer has taken hints for his description of the goddess Nature.
5 birds of prey.

But water-foul sat lowest in the dale;
And foul that liveth by seed sat on the grene,
And that so fele,[1] that wonder was to sene.

Ther mighte men the royal egle finde,
That with his sharpe look perceth the sonne;
And other egles of a lower kinde,
Of which that clerkes wel devysen conne.
Ther was the tyraunt with his fethres donne
And greye, I mene the goshauk, that doth pyne[2]
To briddes for his outrageous ravyne.

The gentil faucon, that with his feet distreyneth
The kinges hond; the hardy sperhauk eke,
The quayles foo; the merlion[3] that peyneth
Him-self ful ofte, the larke for to seke;
Ther was the douve, with hir eyen meke;
The jalous swan, ayens his deth that singeth;
The oule eek, that of dethe the bode[4] bringeth;

The crane the geaunt, with his trompes soune;
The theef, the chogh; and eek the jangling pye;
The scorning jay; the eles foo, the heroune;
The false lapwing, ful of trecherye;
The stare,[5] that the counseyl can bewrye;
The tame ruddok; and the coward kyte;
The cok, that orloge is of thorpes[6] lyte;

The sparow, Venus sone; the nightingale,
That clepeth forth the fresshe leves newe;
The swalow, mordrer of the flyës smale
That maken hony of floures fresshe of hewe;
The wedded turtel, with hir herte trewe;
The pecok, with his aungels fethres brighte;
The fesaunt, scorner of the cok by nighte;

The waker goos; the cukkow ever unkinde;
The popinjay, ful of delicasye;
The drake, stroyer of his owne kinde;
The stork, the wreker of avouterye;[7]
The hote cormeraunt of glotonye;
The raven wys, the crow with vois of care;
The throstel olde; the frosty feldefare.

What shulde I seyn? of foules every kinde
That in this worlde han fethres and stature,
Ben mighten in that place assembled finde
Before the noble goddesse Nature.
And everich of hem did his besy cure
Benignely to chese or for to take,
By hir acord, his formel[1] or his make.

But to the poynt — Nature held on hir honde
A formel egle, of shap the gentileste
That ever she among hir werkes fonde,
The most benigne and the goodlieste;
In hir was every vertu at his reste,
So ferforth, that Nature hir-self had blisse
To loke on hir, and ofte hir bek to kisse.

Nature, the vicaire of th'almyghty lorde,
That hoot, cold, hevy, light, and moist and dreye
Hath knit by even noumbre of acorde,
In esy vois began to speke and seye,
"Foules, tak hede of my sentence, I preye,
And, for your ese, in furthering of your nede,
As faste as I may speke, I wol me spede.

Ye know wel how, seynt Valentynes day,
By my statut and through my governaunce,
Ye come for to chese — and flee your way —
Your makes, as I prik yow with plesaunce.
But natheles, my rightful ordenaunce
May I not lete, for al this world to winne,
That he that most is worthy shal beginne.

The tercel egle,[2] as that ye knowen wel,
The foul royal above yow in degree,
The wyse and worthy, secree, trewe as stel,
The which I formed have, as ye may see,
In every part as hit best lyketh me,
Hit nedeth noght his shap yow to devyse,
He shal first chese and speken in his gyse.

And after him, by order shul ye chese,
After your kinde, everich as yow lyketh,
And, as your hap is, shul ye winne or lese;
But which of yow that love most entryketh,[3]
God sende him hir that sorest for him syketh."
And therwith-al the tercel gan she calle,
And seyde, "my sone, the choys is to thee falle.

But natheles, in this condicioun
Mot be the choys of everich that is here,
That she agree to his electioun,
Who-so he be that shulde been hir fere;[4]
This is our usage alwey, fro yeer to yere;
And who so may at this time have his grace,
In blisful tyme he com in-to this place."

With hed enclyned and with ful humble chere
This royal tercel spak and taried nought;

1 many. 2 injury. 3 merlin, small hawk.
4 warning. 5 starling.
6 that time-piece is of little villages.
7 avenger of adultery.

1 companion. 2 male eagle.
3 ensnareth. 4 companion.

"Unto my sovereyn lady, and noght my fere,
I chese, and chese with wille and herte and thought,
The formel on your hond so wel y-wrought,
Whos I am al and ever wol hir serve,
Do what hir list, to do me live or sterve.[1]

Beseching hir of mercy and of grace,
As she that is my lady sovereyne;
Or let me dye present in this place.
For certes, long may I not live in peyne;
For in myn herte is corven[2] every veyne;
Having reward[3] al only to my trouthe,
My dere herte, have on my wo som routhe.

And if that I to hir be founde untrewe,
Disobeysaunt, or wilful negligent,
Avauntour,[4] or in proces love a newe,
I pray to you this be my jugement,
That with these foules I be al to-rent,
That ilke day that ever she me finde
To hir untrewe, or in my gilte unkinde.

And sin that noon loveth hir so wel as I,
Al be she never of love me behette,[5]
Than oghte she be myn thourgh hir mercy,
For other bond can I noon on hir knette.
For never, for no wo, ne shal I lette
To serven hir, how fer so that she wende;
Sey what yow list, my tale is at an ende."

Right as the fresshe, rede rose newe
Ayen the somer-sonne coloured is,
Right so for shame al wexen gan the hewe
Of this formel, whan she herde al this;
She neyther answerde wel, ne seyde amis.
So sore abasshed was she, til that Nature
Seyde, "doghter, drede yow noght, I yow assure."

Another tercel egle spak anoon
Of lower kinde, and seyde, "that shal not be;
I love hir bet than ye do, by seynt John,
Or atte leste I love hir as wel as ye;
And lenger have served hir, in my degree,
And if she shulde have loved for long loving,
To me allone had been the guerdoning.

I dar eek seye, if she me finde fals,
Unkinde, jangler,[6] or rebel any wyse,
Or jalous, do me hongen by the hals![7]
And but I bere me in hir servyse
As wel as that my wit can me suffyse,
Fro poynt to poynt, hir honour for to save,
Tak she my lyf, and al the good I have."

The thridde tercel egle answerde tho,
"Now, sirs, ye seen the litel leyser here;
For every foul cryeth out to been a-go
Forth with his make, or with his lady dere;
And eek Nature hir-self ne wol nought here,
For tarying here, noght half that I wolde seye;
And but I speke, I mot for sorwe deye.

Of long servyse avaunte[1] I me no-thing,
But as possible is me to dye to-day
For wo, as he that hath ben languisshing
Thise twenty winter, and wel happen may
A man may serven bet and more to pay[2]
In half a yere, al-though hit were no more,
Than som man doth that hath served ful yore.

I ne say not this by me, for I ne can
Do no servyse that may my lady plese;
But I dar seyn, I am hir trewest man
As to my dome, and feynest wolde hir ese;
At shorte wordes, til that deth me sese,
I wol ben hires, whether I wake or winke,
And trewe in al that herte may bethinke."

Of al my lyf, sin that day I was born,
So gentil plee in love or other thing
Ne herde never no man me beforn,
Who-so that hadde leyser and cunning
For to reherse hir chere and hir speking;
And from the morwe gan this speche laste
Til dounward drow the sonne wonder faste.

The noyse of foules for to ben delivered
So loude rong, "have doon and let us wende!"
That wel wende I the wode had al to-shivered.
"Come of!" they cryde, "allas! ye wil us shende![3]
Whan shal your cursed pleding have an ende?
How shulde a juge eyther party leve,
For yee or nay, with-outen any preve?"

The goos, the cokkow, and the doke also
So cryden "kek, kek!" "kukkow!" "quek quek!" hye,
That thorgh myn eres the noyse wente tho.
The goos seyde, "al this nis not worth a flye!
But I can shape hereof a remedye,
And I wol sey my verdit faire and swythe[4]
For water-foul, who-so be wrooth or blythe."

1 die. 2 cut. 3 regard. 4 boaster. 5 promised. 6 idle talker. 7 neck.

1 boast. 2 satisfaction. 3 injure. 4 quickly

"And I for worm-foul," seyde the fool cukkow,
"For I wol, of myn owne auctorité,
For comune spede, take the charge now,
For to delivere us is gret charité."
"Ye may abyde a whyle yet, parde!"
Seide the turtel, "if hit be your wille
A wight may speke, him were as good be stille.

I am a seed-foul, oon the unworthieste,
That wot I wel, and litel of kunninge;
But bet is that a wightes tonge reste
Than entremeten [1] him of such doinge
Of which he neyther rede can nor singe.
And who-so doth, ful foule himself acloyeth,[2]
For office uncommitted ofte anoyeth."

Nature, which that alway had an ere
To murmour of the lewednes [3] behinde,
With facound [4] voys seide, "hold your tonges there!
And I shal sone, I hope, a counseyl finde
You to delivere, and fro this noyse unbinde;
I juge, of every folk men shal oon calle
To seyn the verdit for you foules alle."

Assented were to this conclusioun
The briddes alle; and foules of ravyne
Han chosen first, by pleyn electioun,
The tercelet of the faucon, to diffyne
Al hir sentence, and as him list, termyne;
And to Nature him gonnen to presente,
And she accepteth him with glad entente.

The tercelet seide than in this manere:
"Ful hard were hit to preve hit by resoun
Who loveth best this gentil formel here;
For everich hath swich replicacioun,
That noon by skilles [5] may be broght a-doun;
I can not seen that arguments avayle;
Than semeth hit ther moste be batayle."

"Al redy!" quod these egles tercels tho.
"Nay, sirs!" quod he, "if that I dorste it seye,
Ye doon me wrong, my tale is not y-do!
For sirs, ne taketh noght a-gref, I preye,
It may noght gon, as ye wolde, in this weye;
Oure is the voys that han the charge in honde,
And to the juges dome ye moten stonde;

And therfor pees! I seye, as to my wit,
Me wolde thinke how that the worthieste
Of knighthode, and lengest hath used hit,
Moste of estat, of blode the gentileste,
Were sittingest [1] for hir, if that hir leste;
And of these three she wot hir-self, I trowe,
Which that he be, for hit is light to knowe."

The water-foules han her hedes leyd
Togeder, and of short avysement,
Whan everich had his large golee [2] seyd,
They seyden sothly, al by oon assent,
How that "the goos, with hir facounde gent,[3]
That so desyreth to pronounce our nede,
Shal telle our tale," and preyde "god hir spede."

And for these water-foules tho began
The goos to speke, and in hir cakelinge
She seyde, "pees! now tak kepe every man,
And herkeneth which a reson I shal bringe;
My wit is sharp, I love no taryinge;
I seye, I rede him, though he were my brother,
But she wol love him, lat him love another!"

"Lo here! a parfit reson of a goos!"
Quod the sperhauk; [4] "never mot she thee! [5]
Lo, swich hit is to have a tonge loos!
Now parde, fool, yet were hit bet for thee
Have holde thy pees, than shewed thy nycete! [6]
Hit lyth not in his wit nor in his wille,
But sooth is seyd, 'a fool can noght be stille.'"

The laughter aroos of gentil foules alle,
And right anoon the seed-foul chosen hadde
The turtel trewe, and gunne hir to hem calle,
And preyden hir to seye the sothe sadde [7]
Of this matere, and asked what she radde; [8]
And she answerde, that pleynly hir entente
She wolde shewe, and sothly what she mente.

"Nay, god forbede a lover shulde chaunge!"
The turtel seyde, and wex for shame al reed;
"Thogh that his lady ever-more be straunge,
Yet let him serve hir ever, til he be deed;
For sothe, I preyse noght the gooses reed; [9]
For thogh she deyed, I wolde non other make, [10]
I wol ben hires, til that the deth me take."

"Wel bourded!" [11] quod the doke, "by my hat!
That men shulde alwey loven, causeles,
Who can a reson finde or wit in that?
Daunceth he mury that is mirtheles?

1 meddle. 2 overburdens. 3 ignorance.
4 eloquent. 5 reasons.

1 most suitable. 2 mouthful.
3 well-bred eloquence. 4 sparrow-hawk.
5 prosper. 6 foolishness. 7 the sober truth.
8 advised. 9 advice. 10 mate. 11 jested.

Who shulde recche of that is reccheles?
Ye, quek!" yit quod the doke, ful wel and faire,
"There been mo sterres, god wot, than a paire!"

"Now fy, cherl!" quod the gentil tercelet,
"Out of the dunghil com that word ful right,
Thou canst noght see which thing is wel be-set:
Thou farest by love as oules doon by light,
The day hem blent, ful wel they see by night;
Thy kind is of so lowe a wrechednesse,
That what love is, thou canst nat see ne gesse."

Tho gan the cukkow putte him forth in prees [1]
For foul that eteth worm, and seide blyve,[2]
"So I," quod he, "may have my make in pees,
I recche not how longe that ye stryve;
Lat ech of hem be soleyn [3] al hir lyve,
This is my reed, sin they may not acorde;
This shorte lesson nedeth noght recorde."

"Ye! have the glotoun fild ynogh his paunche,
Than are we wel!" seyde the merlioun;
"Thou mordrer of the heysugge [4] on the braunche
That broghte thee forth, thou rewthelees glotoun!
Live thou soleyn, wormes corrupcioun!
For no fors is of lakke of thy nature; [5]
Go, lewed be thou, whyl the world may dure!"

"Now pees," quod Nature, "I comaunde here;
For I have herd al your opinioun,
And in effect yet be we never the nere; [6]
But fynally, this is my conclusioun,
That she hir-self shal han the eleccioun
Of whom hir list, who-so be wrooth or blythe,
Him that she cheest, he shal hir have as swythe.[7]

For sith hit may not here discussed be
Who loveth hir best, as seide the tercelet,
Than wol I doon hir this favour, that she Shal have right him on whom hir herte is set,
And he hir that his herte hath on hir knet.[1]
This juge I, Nature, for I may not lyë;
To noon estat I have non other yë.

But as for counseyl for to chese a make,
If hit were reson, certes, than wolde I
Counseyle yow the royal tercel take,
As seide the tercelet ful skilfully,
As for the gentilest and most worthy,
Which I have wroght so wel to my plesaunce;
That to yow oghte been a suffisaunce."

With dredful [2] vois the formel hir answerde,
"My rightful lady, goddesse of Nature,
Soth is that I am ever under your yerde,
Lyk as is everiche other creature,
And moot be youres whyl my lyf may dure;
And therfor graunteth me my firste bone,[3]
And myn entente I wol yow sey right sone."

"I graunte it you," quod she; and right anoon
This formel egle spak in this degree,
"Almighty quene, unto this yeer be doon
I aske respit for to avysen me.
And after that to have my choys al free;
This al and som, that I wolde speke and seye;
Ye gete no more, al-though ye do me deye.

I wol noght serven Venus ne Cupyde
For sothe as yet, by no manere wey."
"Now sin it may non other wyse betyde,"
Quod tho Nature, "here is no more to sey;
Than wolde I that these foules were a-wey
Ech with his make, for tarying lenger here"—
And seyde hem thus, as ye shul after here.

"To you speke I, ye tercelets," quod Nature,
"Beth of good herte and serveth, alle three;
A yeer is not so longe to endure,
And ech of yow peyne him, in his degree,
For to do wel; for, god wot, quit is she
Fro yow this yeer; what after so befalle,
This entremes [4] is dressed for you alle."

And whan this werk al broght was to an ende,
To every foule Nature yaf his make
By even acorde, and on hir wey they wende.
A! lord! the blisse and joye that they make!
For ech of hem gan other in winges take,
And with hir nekkes ech gan other winde,
Thanking alwey the noble goddesse of kinde.

1 in the crowd. 2 straightway.
3 single. 4 hedge sparrow.
5 It makes no difference if thy race become extinct.
6 nearer. 7 quickly.

1 knitted. 2 timid. 3 boon.
4 intervening course at a dinner.

But first were chosen foules for to singe,
As yeer by yere was alwey hir usaunce
To singe a roundel at hir departinge,
To do Nature honour and plesaunce.
The note, I trowe, maked was in Fraunce;
The wordes were swich as ye may heer finde,
The nexte vers, as I now have in minde.
Qui bien aime a tard oublie.[1]
"Now welcom somer, with thy sonne softe,
That hast this wintres weders over-shake,
And driven awey the longe nightes blake!

Seynt Valentyn, that art ful hy onlofte; —
Thus singen smale foules for thy sake —
Now welcom somer, with thy sonne softe,
That hast this wintres weders over-shake.

Wel han they cause for to gladen ofte,
Sith ech of hem recovered hath his make;
Ful blisful may they singen whan they wake;
Now welcom somer, with thy sonne softe,
That hast this wintres weders over-shake
And driven awey the longe nightes blake."

And with the showting, whan hir song was do,
That foules maden at hir flight a-way,
I wook, and other bokes took me to
To rede upon, and yet I rede alway;
I hope y-wis, to rede so som day
That I shal mete som thing for to fare
The bet; and thus to rede I nil not spare.
Explicit tractatus de congregacione Volucrum die sancti Valentini

TRUTH

Balade de bon conseyl

Flee fro the prees,[2] and dwelle with sothfastnesse,
Suffyce unto thy good,[3] though hit be smal;
For hord hath hate, and climbing tikelnesse,[4]
Prees hath envye, and wele blent overal;[5]
Savour[6] no more than thee bihove shal;
Werk wel thy-self, that other folk canst rede;
And trouthe shal delivere, hit is no drede.

Tempest[7] thee noght al croked to redresse,[8]
In trust of hir that turneth as a bal:[9]
Gret reste stant in litel besinesse;
And eek be war to sporne ageyn an al;[10]
Stryve noght, as doth the crokke with the wal.
Daunte[1] thy-self, that dauntest otheres dede;
And trouthe shal delivere, hit is no drede.

That thee is sent, receyve in buxumnesse,[2]
The wrastling for this worlde axeth a fal.
Her nis non hoom, her nis but wildernesse:
Forth, pilgrim, forth! Forth, beste, out of thy stal!
Know thy contree, look up, thank God of al;
Hold the hye wey, and lat thy gost thee lede:
And trouthe shal delivere, hit is no drede.

Envoy

Therfore, thou Vache,[3] leve thyn old wrecchednesse
Unto the worlde; leve now to be thral;
Crye him mercy, that of his hy goodnesse
Made thee of noght, and in especial
Draw unto him, and pray in general
For thee, and eek for other, hevenlich mede:
And trouthe shal delivere, hit is no drede.
Explicit Le bon counseill de G. Chaucer

1 This indicates the tune, or "note," which "maked was in Fraunce."
2 crowd. 3 be satisfied with your property. 4 ticklish uncertainty. 5 wealth always blinds. 6 relish. 7 vex. 8 set straight again. 9 i.e. Fortune. 10 kick against an awl.

GENTILESSE

Moral Balade of Chaucer

The firste stok, fader of gentilesse —
What man that claymeth gentil for to be,
Must folowe his trace, and alle his wittes dresse
Vertu to sewe,[4] and vyces for to flee.
For unto vertu longeth dignitee,
And noght the revers, saufly dar I deme,
Al were he[5] mytre, croune, or diademe.

This firste stok was ful of rightwisnesse,
Trewe of his word, sobre, pitous, and free,[6]
Clene of his goste, and loved besinesse,
Ageinst the vyce of slouthe, in honestee;
And, but his heir love vertu, as dide he,
He is noght gentil, thogh he riche seme,
Al were he mytre, croune, or diademe.

Vyce may wel be heir to old richesse;
But ther may no man, as men may wel see,
Bequethe his heir his vertuous noblesse
That is appropred unto no degree,[7]
But to the firste fader in magestee,
That maketh him his heir, that can him queme,[8]
Al were he mytre, croune, or diademe.

1 subdue. 2 humility. 3 Sir Philip la Vache, a friend of Chaucer's. 4 follow. 5 although he wear. 6 generous. 7 That belongs to no one social class. 8 please.

THE COMPLEINT OF CHAUCER TO HIS EMPTY PURSE

To you, my purse, and to non other wight
Compleyne I, for ye be my lady dere!
I am so sory, now that ye be light;
For certes, but ye make me hevy chere,
Me were as leef be leyd up-on my bere;[1]
For whiche un-to your mercy thus I crye:
Beth hevy ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Now voucheth sauf this day, or hit be night,
That I of you the blisful soun may here,
Or see your colour lyk the sonne bright,
That of yelownesse hadde never pere.
Ye be my lyf, ye be myn hertes stere,[2]
Quene of comfort and of good companye:
Beth hevy ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

1 bier. 2 steersman.

Now purs, that be to me my lyves light,
And saveour, as doun in this worlde here,
Out of this toune help me through your might,
Sin that ye wole nat been my tresorere;
For I am shave as nye[1] as any frere.
But yit I pray un-to your curtesye:
Beth hevy ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Lenvoy de Chaucer

O conquerour[2] of Brutes[3] Albioun!
Which that by lyne and free eleccioun
Ben verray king, this song to you I sende;
And ye, that mowen al our harm amende,
Have minde up-on my supplicacioun!

1 close.
2 Henry IV, who became king on Sept. 30, 1399. Four days later Chaucer's pension was doubled.
3 Brutus, a refugee from Troy, was the mythical founder of the realm of Albion (Britain).

JOHN GOWER (died 1408)

Of Gower's life almost nothing is known. He died in 1408, apparently at an advanced age, and was buried in the church of St. Mary Overy (now Southwark Cathedral) near the southern end of London Bridge, where his tomb is still to be seen. He was a gentleman of liberal education and substantial wealth, a generous benefactor of the priory of St. Mary Overy, within whose precincts he spent the later years of his life. We know that he was a personal friend of Chaucer. He was married, apparently for the second time, in 1398.

He wrote voluminously in three different languages — the Mirour de l'Omme (about 1377) also known by the Latin title Speculum Meditantis, a didactic poem in French, which discusses in nearly 30,000 lines human virtues and vices and the problems of contemporary society; Vox Clamantis (about 1381), a Latin poem of over 10,000 lines which deals with similar topics; and Confessio Amantis (1390), a poem in English which contains some 34,000 lines. In all his work Gower maintains a high level of literary excellence without ever rising to the heights of great poetry. In Confessio Amantis, a lover confesses to a priest of Venus his shortcomings and disappointments in love, the confession following the medieval formula of the Seven Deadly Sins. After each part of the confession, the priest tells for the lover's guidance a series of tales which are intended to illustrate the point in question. The tale of Florent here printed illustrates the virtue of obedience, as opposed to the deadly sin of pride. The same story is told by the Wife of Bath in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. The Confessio Amantis is really a great collection of stories, gathered by Gower from his wide reading, for which the device of the confession is little more than a literary excuse. The stories are told clearly and entertainingly in graceful octosyllabic verse. As a writer of narrative verse, Gower deserves to rank with William Morris, author of the Earthly Paradise.

Gower's complete works in four volumes are edited by G. C. Macaulay (Oxford University Press); there is also a small volume of selections from Confessio Amantis by the same editor and publisher.

THE TALE OF FLORENT

(Confessio Amantis, bk. 1, lines 1407–1861)

Ther was whilom be daies olde
A worthi knyht, and as men tolde
He was nevoeu to themperour
And of his court a courteour:
Wifles he was, Florent he hihte;
He was a man that mochel myhte;[1]
Of armes he was desirous,
Chivalerous and amorous;

1 who could do great things.

And for the fame of worldes speche,
Strange aventures forto seche,
He rod the Marches al aboute.
And fell a time, as he was oute,
Fortune, which may every thred
Tobreke and knette of mannes sped,[1]
Schop,[2] as this knyht rod in a pas,[3]
That he be strengthe take was,
And to a castell thei him ladde,
Wher that he fewe frendes hadde:

1 break and knit together again of man's prosperity.
2 devised. 3 at a walk.

COALINGA COLLEGE LIBRARY

For so it fell that ilke stounde[1]
That he hath with a dedly wounde
Feihtende his oghne hondes[2] slain
Branchus, which to the Capitain
Was sone and heir, wherof ben wrothe
The fader and the moder bothe.
That knyht Branchus was of his hond
The worthieste of al his lond,
And fain thei wolden do vengance
Upon Florent; bot remembrance
That thei toke of his worthinesse
Of knyhthod and of gentilesse,
And how he stod of cousinage
To themperour, made hem assuage,
And dorsten noght slen him for fere:
In gret desputeisoun thei were Among hemself, what was the beste.
Ther was a lady, the slyheste
Of alle that men knewe tho,
So old sche myhte unethes go,[3]
And was grantdame unto the dede:[4]
And sche with that began to rede,
And seide how sche wol bringe him inne,
That sche schal him to dethe winne
Al only of his oghne grant,
Thurgh strengthe of verray covenant
Withoute blame of eny wiht.
Anon sche sende for this kniht,
And of hire sone sche alleide[5]
The deth, and thus to him sche seide:
"Florent, how so thou be to wyte[6]
Of Branchus deth, men schal respite
As now to take vengement,
Be so thou stonde in juggement
Upon certein condicioun,
That thou unto a questioun
Which I schal axe schalt ansuere;
And over this thou schalt ek swere,
That if thou of the sothe faile,
Ther schal non other thing availe,
That thou ne schalt thi deth receive.
And for men schal the noght deceive,
That thou therof myht ben avised,
Thou schalt have day and tyme assised[7]
And leve saufly forto wende,
Be so that at thi daies ende
Thou come ayein with thin avys."
This knyht, which worthi was and wys,
This lady preith that he may wite,
And have it under seales write,
What questioun it scholde be
For which he schal in that degree
Stonde of his lif in jeupartie.
With that sche feigneth compaignie,[8]
And seith: "Florent, on love it hongeth
Al that to myn axinge longeth:
What alle wommen most desire
This wole I axe, and in thempire
Wher as thou hast most knowlechinge
Tak conseil upon this axinge."
Florent this thing hath undertake,
The day was set, the time take,
Under his seal he wrot his oth,
In such a wise and forth he goth
Home to his emes[1] court ayein;
To whom his aventure plein
He tolde, of that him is befalle.
And upon that thei weren alle
The wiseste of the lond asent,[2]
Bot natheles of on assent
Thei myhte noght acorde plat,
On seide this, an othre that.
After the disposicioun
Of naturel complexioun[3]
To som womman it is plesance,
That to an other is grevance;
Bot such a thing in special,
Which to hem alle in general
Is most plesant, and most desired
Above alle othre and most conspired,[4]
Such o thing conne thei noght finde
Be constellacion ne kinde:
And thus Florent withoute cure
Mot stonde upon his aventure,
And is al schape unto the lere,[5]
As in defalte of his answere.
This knyht hath levere forto dye
Than breke his trowthe and forto lye
In place ther as he was swore,
And schapth him gon ayein therfore.
Whan time cam he tok his leve,
That lengere wolde he noght beleve,
And preith his em he be noght wroth,
For that is a point of his oth,
He seith, that noman schal him wreke,[6]
Thogh afterward men hiere speke
That he par aventure deie.
And thus he wente forth his weie
Alone as knyht aventurous,
And in his thoght was curious
To wite what was best to do:
And as he rod al one so,
And cam nyh ther he wolde be,
In a forest under a tre
He syh wher sat a creature,
A lothly wommannysch figure,
That forto speke of fleisch and bon
So foul yit syh he nevere non.
This knyht behield hir redely,

1 hour. 2 with his own hands.
3 hardly walk. 4 the dead knight.
5 alleged. 6 blame.
7 appointed.
8 friendliness.

1 uncle's. 2 sent for.
3 constitution. 4 agreed upon.
5 prepared for the loss. 6 avenge.

And as he wolde have passed by,
Sche cleped him and bad abide;
And he his horse heved [1] aside
Tho torneth, and to hire he rod,
And there he hoveth [2] and abod,
To wite what she wolde mene.
And sche began him to bemene,[3]
And seide: "Florent be thi name,
Thou hast on honde such a game,
That bot thou be the betre avised,
Thi deth is schapen and devised,
That al the world ne mai the save,
Bot if that thou my conseil have."
Florent, whan he this tale herde,
Unto this olde wyht answerde
And of hir conseil he hir preide.
And sche ayein to him thus seide:
"Florent, if I for the so schape,
That thou thurgh me thi deth ascape
And take worschipe of thi dede,
What schal I have to my mede?"
"What thing," quod he, "that thou wolt axe."
"I bidde nevere a betre taxe," [4]
Quod sche; "bot ferst, er thou be sped,
Thou schalt me leve such a wedd,[5]
That I wol have thi trowthe in honde
That thou schalt be myn housebonde."
"Nay," seith Florent, "that may noght be."
"Ryd thanne forth thi wey," quod sche,
"And if thou go withoute red,
Thou schalt be sekerliche [6] ded."
Florent behihte [7] hire good ynowh
Of lond, of rente, of park. of plowh,
Bot al that compteth sche at noght.
Tho fell this knyht in mochel thoght;
Now goth he forth, now comth ayein,
He wot noght what is best to sein,
And thoghte, as he rode to and fro,
That chese he mot on of the tuo —
Or forto take hire to his wif
Or elles forto lese his lif.
And thanne he caste his avantage,
That sche was of so gret an age,
That sche mai live bot a while,
And thoghte put hire in an ile,[8]
Wher that noman hire scholde knowe,
Til sche with deth were overthrowe.
And thus this yonge lusti knyht
Unto this olde lothly wiht
Tho seide: "If that non other chance
Mai make my deliverance,
Bot only thilke same speche
Which, as thou seist, thou schalt me teche,
Have hier myn hond, I schal thee wedde."
And thus his trowthe he leith to wedde.[1]
With that sche frounceth [2] up the browe:
"This covenant I wol allowe,"
Sche seith: "if eny other thing
Bot that thou hast of my techyng
Fro deth thi body mai respite,
I woll thee of thi trowthe acquite,
And elles be non other weie.
Now herkne me what I schal seie.
Whan thou art come into the place,
Wher now thei maken gret manace
And upon thi comynge abyde,
Thei wole anon the same tide
Oppose [3] thee of thin answere.
I wot thou wolt nothing forbere
Of that thou wenest be thi beste,
And if thou myht so finde reste,
Wel is, for thanne is ther nomore.
And elles this schal be my lore,
That thou schalt seie, upon this molde [4]
That alle wommen lievest wolde
Be soverein of mannes love:
For what womman is so above,
Sche hath, as who seith, al hire wille;
And elles may sche noght fulfille
What thing hir were lievest have.
With this answere thou schalt save
Thiself, and other wise noght.
And whan thou hast thin ende wroght,
Come hier ayein, thou schalt me finde,
And let nothing out of thi minde."
He goth him forth with hevy chiere,
As he that not [5] in what manere
He mai this worldes joie atteigne:
For if he deie, he hath a peine,
And if he live, he mot him binde
To such on which of alle kinde
Of wommen is thunsemlieste:
Thus wot he noght what is the beste:
Bot be him lief or be him loth,
Unto the castell forth he goth
His full answere for to yive,
Or forto deie or forto live.
Forth with his conseil cam the lord,
The thinges stoden of record,
He sende up for the lady sone,
And forth sche cam, that olde mone.[6]
In presence of the remenant
The strengthe of al the covenant
Tho was reherced openly,
And to Florent sche bad forthi
That he schal tellen his avis,
As he that woot what is the pris.
Florent seith al that evere he couthe,
Bot such word cam ther non to mowthe,

1 his horse's head. 2 stays
3 communicate to him. 4 I ask no better promise.
5 pledge. 6 certainly. 7 promised. 8 island.

1 gives as a pledge. 2 wrinkles. 3 interrogate.
4 earth. 5 knows not. 6 companion.

That he for yifte or for beheste
Mihte eny wise his deth areste.[1]
And thus he tarieth longe and late,
Til that this lady bad algate[2]
That he schal for the dom final Yive his answere in special
Of that sche hadde him ferst opposed:
And thanne he hath trewly supposed
That he him may of nothing yelpe,[3]
Bot if so be tho wordes helpe
Whiche as the womman hath him tawht;
Wherof he hath an hope cawht
That he schal ben excused so,
And tolde out plein his wille tho.
And whan that this matrone herde
The manere how this knyht ansuerde,
Sche seide: "Ha treson, wo thee be,
That hast thus told the privite[4]
Which alle wommen most desire!
I wolde that thou were afire."
Bot natheles in such a plit
Florent of his answere is quit.
And tho began his sorwe newe,
For he mot gon, or ben untrewe,
To hire which his trowthe hadde.
Bot he, which alle schame dradde,
Goth forth in stede of his penance,
And takth the fortune of his chance,
As he that was with trowthe affaited.[5]
This olde wyht him hath awaited
In place wher as he hire lefte:
Florent his wofull heved[6] uplefte
And syh this vecke[7] wher sche sat,
Which was the lothlieste what[8]
That evere man caste on his yhe:
Hire nase bass,[9] hire browes hyhe,
Hire yhen smale and depe set,
Hire chekes ben with teres wet,
And rivelen[10] as an emty skyn
Hangende doun unto the chin;
Hire lippes schrunken ben for age,
Ther was no grace in the visage,
Hir front was nargh,[11] hir lockes hore,
Sche loketh forth as doth a More,[12]
Hire necke is schort, hir schuldres courbe,[13]
That myhte a mannes lust destourbe,
Hire body gret and nothing smal,
And schortly to descrive hire al,
Sche hath no lith[14] withoute a lak;
Bot lich unto the wollesak
Sche proferth hire unto this knyht,
And bad him, as he hath behyht,
So as sche hath ben his warant,
That he hire holde covenant,
And be the bridel sche him seseth.
Bot Godd wot how that sche him pleseth
Of suche wordes as sche spekth:
Him thenkth welnyh his herte brekth
For sorwe that he may noght fle,
Bot if he wolde untrewe be.
Loke, how a sek man for his hele
Takth baldemoine with canele,[1]
And with the mirre takth the sucre,
Ryht upon such a maner lucre[2]
Stant Florent, as in this diete:
He drinkth the bitre with the swete,
He medleth sorwe with likynge,
And liveth, as who seith,[3] deyinge;
His youthe schal be cast aweie
Upon such on which as the weie[4]
Is old and lothly overal.
Bot nede he mot that nede schal:[5]
He wolde algate his trowthe holde,
As every knyht therto is holde,[6]
What happ so evere him is befalle:
Thogh sche be the fouleste of alle,
Yet to thonour of wommanhiede
Him thoghte he scholde taken hiede;
So that for pure gentilesse,
As he hire couthe best adresce,
In ragges, as sche was totore,[7]
He set hire on his hors tofore
And forth he takth his weie softe;
No wonder thogh he siketh[8] ofte.
Bot as an oule[9] fleth be nyhte
Out of alle othre briddes syhte,
Riht so this knyht on daies brode
In clos him hield, and schop his rode
On nyhtes time, til the tyde
That he cam there he wolde abide;
And prively withoute noise
He bringth this foule grete coise[10]
To his castell in such a wise
That noman myhte hire schappe avise,
Til sche into the chambre cam:
Wher he his prive conseil nam[11]
Of suche men as he most troste,
And tolde hem that he nedes moste
This beste wedde to his wif,
For elles hadde he lost his lif.
The prive wommen were asent,[12]
That scholden ben of his assent:
Hire ragges thei anon of drawe,
And, as it was that time lawe,
She hadde bath, sche hadde reste,
And was arraied to the beste.
Bot with no craft of combes brode
Thei myhte hire hore lockes schode,[13]

1 stop. 2 in any case. 3 boast.
4 secret. 5 prepared. 6 head.
7 hag. 8 thing. 9 flat.
10 shrivel. 11 Her forehead was narrow.
12 Moor. 13 bent. 14 limb.

1 gentian with cinnamon. 2 compensation.
3 so to speak. 4 highway.
5 But he must, whom fate compels. 6 bound.
7 all torn. 8 sighs. 9 owl. 10 hag.
11 took. 12 sent for. 13 divide, untangle.

And sche ne wolde noght be schore [1]
For no conseil, and thei therfore,
With such atyr as tho was used,
Ordeinen that it was excused,
And hid so crafteliche aboute,
That noman myhte sen hem oute.
Bot when sche was fulliche arraied
And hire atyr was al assaied,
Tho was sche foulere on to se:
Bot yit it may non other be,
Thei were wedded in the nyht;
So wo begon was nevere knyht
As he was thanne of mariage.
And sche began to pleie and rage,
As who seith, I am wel ynowh;
Bot he therof nothing ne lowh,[2]
For sche tok thanne chiere on honde [3]
And clepeth him hire housebonde,
And seith, "My lord, go we to bedde,
For I to that entente wedde,
That thou schalt be my worldes blisse:"
And profreth him with that to kisse,
As sche a lusti lady were.
His body myhte wel be there,
Bot as of thoght and of memoire
His herte was in purgatoire.
Bot yit for strengthe of matrimoine
He myhte make non essoine,[4]
That he ne mot algates plie [5]
To gon to bedde of compaignie:
And whan thei were abedde naked,
Withoute slep he was awaked;
He torneth on that other side,
For that he wolde hise yhen hyde
Fro lokynge on that foule wyht.
The chambre was al full of lyht,
The courtins were of cendal [6] thinne;
This newe bryd which lay withinne,
Thogh it be noght with his acord,
In armes sche beclipte hire lord,
And preide, as he was torned fro,
He wolde him torne ayeinward tho;
"For now," sche seith, "we ben both on."
And he lay still as eny ston,
Bot evere in on [7] sche spak and preide,
And bad him thenke on that he seide,
Whan that he tok hire be the hond.
He herde and understod the bond,
How he was set to his penance,
And as it were a man in trance
He torneth him al sodeinly,
And syh a lady lay him by
Of eyhtetiene [8] wynter age,
Which was the faireste of visage
That evere in al this world he syh:
And as he wolde have take hire nyh,
Sche put hire hand, and be his leve
Besoghte him that he wolde leve,
And seith that for to wynne or lese
He mot on of tuo thinges chese,
Wher [1] he wol have hire such on nyht,
Or elles upon daies lyht,
For he schal noght have bothe tuo.
And he began to sorwe tho,
In many a wise and caste his thoght,
Bot for al that yit cowthe he noght
Devise himself which was the beste.
And sche, that wolde his hertes reste,
Preith that he sholde chese algate,[2]
Til ate laste longe and late
He seide: "O ye, my lyves hele,[3]
Sey what you list in my querele,
I not what ansuere I shal yive:
Bot evere whil that I may live,
I wol that ye be my maistresse,
For I can noght miselve gesse
Which is the beste unto my chois.
Thus grante I yow myn hole vois,
Ches for ous bothen, I you preie;
And what as evere that ye seie,
Riht as ye wole so wol I."
"Mi lord," sche seide, "grant merci,[4]
For of this word that ye now sein,
That ye have mad me soverein,
Mi destine is overpassed,
That never hierafter schal be lassed [5]
Mi beaute, which that I now have,
Til I be take into my grave;
Bot nyht and day as I am now
I schal alwey be such to yow.
The kinges dowhter of Cizile [6]
I am, and fell bot siththe awhile,[7]
As I was with my fader late,
That my stepmoder for an hate,
Which toward me sche hath begonne,
Forschop [8] me, til I hadde wonne
The love and sovereinete
Of what knyht that in his degre
Alle othre passeth of good name:
And, as men sein, ye ben the same,
The dede proeveth it is so;
Thus am I youres evermo."
Tho was plesance and joye ynowh,
Echon with other pleide and lowh;
Thei live longe and wel thei ferde,
And clerkes that this chance herde
Thei writen it in evidence,
To teche how that obedience
Mai wel fortune a man to love
And sette him in his lust above,
As it befell unto this knyht.

1 shorn. 2 laughed. 3 began to be merry. 4 excuse. 5 submit. 6 silk. 7 continually. 8 eighteen.

1 whether. 2 at any rate. 3 health of my life. 4 thank you. 5 lessened 6 Sicily. 7 but a short time since. 8 transformed.

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT

In the British Museum is preserved a manuscript known as Cotton Nero A. X + 4, which contains four poems copied out by one scribe, and written in the English spoken in the latter part of the fourteenth century in the West Midland district. These poems are generally believed to be the work of one poet, as to whose identity we have not even a plausible guess. But he is a very good poet. Had this single manuscript perished, we should never have known the greatest of Chaucer's contemporaries in English poetry; for two of the poems in the manuscript — Pearl, a hauntingly beautiful dream-vision, in which a father sees again in the lovely fields outside the walls of the New Jerusalem the dear daughter whom he had lost, and the romance of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight — are among the noblest poems of the English Middle Ages. Unluckily the West Midland dialect of these poems makes them so difficult to read that most modern readers must be content to know them only in translation.

The third stanza of Sir Gawain runs thus in the original. (The character þ represents th; the character ȝ in the middle of a word represents gh, at the end of a word z.)

Þis kyng lay at Camylot vpon kryst-masse,
With mony luflych lorde, ledeȝ of þe best,
Rekenly of þe rounde table alle þo rich breþer,
With rych reuel oryȝt, & rechles merþes;
Þer tournayed tulkes by-tymeȝ ful mony,
Justed ful Jolilé þyse gentyle kniȝtes,
Syþen kayred to þe court, caroles to make.
For þer þe fest watȝ ilyche ful fiften dayes
With alle þe mete & þe mirþe þat men coupe a-vyse;
Such glaumande gle glorious to here,
Dere dyn vp-on day, daunsyng on nyȝtes,
Al watȝ hap upon heȝe in halleȝ & chambreȝ,
With lordeȝ & ladies, as leuest him þoȝt;
With alle þe wele of þe worlde þay woned þer samen,
Þe most kyd knyȝtes vnder krystes seluen,
& þe louelokkest ladies þat euer lif haden,
& he þe comlokest kyng þat þe court haldes;
For al watȝ þis fayre folk in her first age,
on sille;
Þe hapnest vnder heuen,
Kyng hyȝest mon of wylle,
Hit were now gret nye to neuen
So hardy a here on hille.

Where the nameless poet found the story which he has retold so beautifully, we do not know; but we can recognize in the poem a skilful combination of two originally separate stories which are found in many varying versions — the story of the challenge which is the principal matter of the first and fourth "fyttes," and the story of the temptation which fills "Fytte the Third." (For versions of these stories, see G. L. Kittredge: A Study of Gawain and the Green Knight, Harvard University Press, 1916.)

The poem is an admirable example of medieval romance. The scene is laid at the court of King Arthur, which was already in the long-ago for fourteenth-century readers, a world of magic and marvelous adventure. Sir Gawain is a noble pattern of chivalric virtues — loyalty, courtesy, honor. His one small lapse but serves to make him more credibly human. Unlike many of the old romances, the poem has unity of theme and a nearly faultless narrative form.

The best edition of the poem is that of Tolkien and Gordon (Oxford University Press, 1925). It has been several times translated into modern English. The translation here printed is by Neilson and Webster in Chief British Poets of the 14th and 15th Centuries (Houghton Mifflin), where the student may also find a translation of the Pearl.

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT

FYTTE THE FIRST

1. After the siege and the assault had ceased at Troy, the city been destroyed and burned to brands and ashes, the warrior who wrought there the trains of treason was tried for his treachery, the truest on earth.[1] This was Aeneas the noble; he and his high kindred afterwards conquered provinces, and became patrons of well nigh all the wealth in the

1 Antenor and Aeneas were the traitors who in the medieval story of Troy handed over the city to the Greeks.

West Isles. As soon as rich Romulus turns him to Rome, with great pride he at once builds that city, and names it with his own name, which it now has; Ticius turns to Tuscany and founds dwellings; Longobard raises homes in Lombardy; and, far over the French flood, Felix Brutus establishes Britain joyfully on many broad banks, where war and waste and wonders by turns have since dwelt, and many a swift interchange of bliss and woe.

2. And when this Britain was founded by this great hero, bold men loving strife bred therein, and many a time they wrought destruction. More strange things have happened in this land since these days than in any other that I know; but of all the British kings that built here, Arthur was ever the most courteous, as I have heard tell. Therefore, I mean to tell of an adventure in the world, which some count strange and extraordinary even among the wonders of Arthur. If ye will listen to this lay but a little while, I will tell it forthright as I heard it told in town, as it is set down in story that cannot be changed, long written in the land in true words.

3. This King lay royally at Camelot at Christmas tide with many fine lords, the best of men, all the rich brethren of the Round Table, with right rich revel and careless mirth. There full many heroes tourneyed betimes, jousted full gaily; then returned these gentle knights to the court to make carols.[1] For there the feast was held full fifteen days alike with all the meat and the mirth that men could devise. Such a merry tumult, glorious to hear; joyful din by day, dancing at night. All was high joy in halls and chambers with lords and ladies as pleased them best. With all the weal in the world they dwelt there together, the most famous knights save only Christ, the loveliest ladies that ever had life, and he, the comeliest of kings, who holds the court. For all this fair company were in their prime in the hall, the happiest troop under heaven with the proudest of kings. Truly it would be hard to name anywhere so brave a band.

4. When New Year was fresh and but newly come, the court was served double on the dais. As soon as the king with his knights was come into the hall, the chanting in the chapel came to an end; loud was the cry there of clerks and others. Noel was celebrated anew, shouted full often; and afterwards the great ones ran about to take handsel;[1] called aloud for New Year's gifts, paid them out briskly, busily discussed the gifts; ladies laughed full loud, though they had lost; and he that won was not wroth, that may ye well trow. All this mirth they made till the meat time. When they had washed, worthily they went to their seats, the best man ever above, as it best behoved. Queen Guinevere full beauteous was set in the midst, placed on the rich dais adorned all about. Fine silk at the sides, a canopy over her of precious cloth of Toulouse, and tapestries of Tars,[2] that were embroidered and set with the best gems that money could buy. Truly no man could say that he ever beheld a comelier lady than she, with her dancing gray eyes.

5. But Arthur would not eat till all were served. He was so merry in his mirth, and somewhat childlike in his manner; his life pleased him well; he loved little either to lie long or to sit long, so busied him his young blood and his wild brain. And another custom moved him also, that he through chivalry had taken up; he would never eat upon such a dear day before he was told an uncouth tale of some adventurous thing, of some great marvel that he could believe, of ancient heroes, of arms, or of other adventures; or unless some person demanded of him a sure knight to join with him in jousting, to incur peril, to risk life against life, trusting each in the other, leaving the victory to fortune. This was the king's custom whenever he held court at each goodly feast among his free company in the hall. And so with undaunted face he strides stoutly to his seat on that New Year, making great mirth with everybody.

6. Thus the great king stands waiting before the high table, talking of trifles full courteously. The good Gawain was placed there beside Guinevere, and Agravain of the Hard Hand sat on the other side, both of them the king's sister's sons and full sure knights. Bishop Baldwin at the top begins the table, and Ywain, Urien's son, ate by himself. These were placed on the dais and honorably served, and after them many a good man at the side tables. Then the first course came in with blare of trumpets, which were hung with many a bright banner. A new noise of kettle-drums with the noble pipes, wild and stirring melodies wakened the echoes; that many a heart heaved full high at their tones. Dainties of precious meats

1 dancing and singing in a ring.

1 New Year's gifts of good omen.
2 Oriental figured stuff.

llowed, foison of fresh viands, and on so lany dishes that it was difficult to find place efore the people to set on the cloth the lver that held the several courses. Each an as he himself preferred partook without esitation. Every two [1] had twelve dishes be-veen them, good beer and bright wine both.

7. Now will I tell you no more of their rvice, for everybody must well understand hat there was no lack of opportunity for the eople to take their food. Another noise full ew suddenly drew nigh, for scarcely had the usic ceased a moment, and the first course een properly served in the court, than there urst in at the hall door an awesome being, height one of the tallest men in the world;
om the neck to the waist so square and so ick was he, and his loins and his limbs so ng and so great, that half giant I believed im to have been, or, at any rate, the largest f men, and withal the handsomest in spite f his bulk, that ever rode; for though his ack and breast were so vast, yet his belly nd waist were properly slim; and all his rm according, full fairly shaped. At the ue of his noble face men wondered; he rried himself in hostile fashion and was ntirely green.

8. All green was this man and his clothing; straight coat sat tight to his sides; a fair antle above, adorned within; the lining owed, with costly trimming of shining hite fur; and such his hood also, that was ught back from his locks and lay on his oulders, the hem well stretched; hose of e same green, that clung to his calf; and ean spurs under, of bright gold upon silk ands richly barred, and shoes on his shanks
s the hero rides. And all his vesture verily as clean verdure, both the bars of his belt, nd the other beauteous stones that were
t in fine array about himself and his saddle, orked on silk. It would be too difficult to ell the half of the trifles that were embroidred there, with birds and flies, with gay auds of green, — the gold ever in the middle;
he pendants of the poitrel, the proud cruper, the bits, — and all the metal was namelled; the stirrups that he stood on ere coloured the same, and his saddle bow ikewise, and his fine reins that glimmered nd glinted all of green stones. The horse hat he rode on was of the same colour too, green horse, great and thick, a steed full tiff to guide, in gay embroidered bridle, and ne right dear to his master.

[1] It was extremely sumptuous having only two at a ess; i.e. only two sharing the same cup and platter.

9. This hero was splendidly dressed in green; and the hair of his head matched that of his horse; fair flowing locks enfolded his shoulders; a beard as big as a bush hung over his breast; and it, together with his splendid hair that reached from his head, was trimmed evenly all round above his elbows, so that half his arms were caught thereunder in the manner of a king's hood, that covers his neck. The mane of that great horse was much like it, very curly and combed, with knots full many folded in with gold wire about the fair green, — always one knot of the hair, another of gold. The tail and the forelock were twined in the same way, and both bound with a band of bright green, set with full precious stones the whole length of the dock, and then tied up with a thong in a tight knot; where rang many bells full bright of burnished gold. Such a steed in the world, such a hero as rides him, was never beheld in that hall before that time. His glances were like bright lightning, so said all that saw him. It seemed as if no man could endure under his blows.

10. He had neither helm nor hauberk, nor gorget, armour nor breastplate, nor shaft nor shield to guard or to smite; but in his one hand he had a holly twig, that is greenest when groves are bare, and an axe in his other, a huge and prodigious one, a weapon merciless almost beyond description; the head had the vast length of an ell-yard, the blade all of green steel and of beaten gold; the bit brightly burnished, with a broad edge, as well shaped for cutting as sharp razors. The stern warrior gripped it by the steel of its stout staff, which was wound with iron to the end of the wood and all engraven with green in beauteous work. A lace was lapped about it, that was fastened at the head, and tied up often along the helve, with many precious tassels attached on rich embroidered buttons of the bright green. This hero turns him in and enters the hall, riding straight to the high dais, fearless of mischief. He greeted never a one, but looked loftily about, and the first word that he uttered was: "Where is the governor of this company? Gladly I would see that hero and speak with him."

He cast his eye on the knights and rode fiercely up and down, stopped and gan ponder who was there the most renowned.

11. All gazed fixedly on the man, for everybody marvelled what it might mean, that a knight and a horse could have such a colour: as green grown as the grass, and greener, it seemed; shining brighter than green enamel on gold. All were amazed who stood there, and stalked nearer to him, with all the wonder in the world what he would do; for many marvels had they seen, but such never before. Therefore for phantom and faery the folk there deemed it; and for that reason many a noble warrior was slow to answer, and all were astonished at his voice and sat stone still in a deep silence through the rich hall. Their voices sank as though they had suddenly fallen asleep. I deem, however, that it was not all for fear, but somewhat for courtesy. But now let him to whom all defer undertake the wight.

12. Then Arthur before the high dais beheld that adventure, and saluted the stranger properly, for never was he afraid, and said, "Sir, welcome indeed to this place. I am called Arthur, the head of this hostel. Light courteously down and tarry, I pray thee; and whatso thy will is we shall wit after."

"Nay, so help me he that sits on high," quoth the hero. "To dwell any time in this house was not my errand; but because the fame of this people is lifted up so high, and thy town and thy men are held the best, the stoutest in steel gear on steeds to ride, the wightest and the worthiest of the world's kind, and proved opponents in other proper sports; and here courtesy is known, as I have heard tell, — it is this that has enticed me hither certainly at this time. You may be sure by this branch that I bear here that I pass in peace and seek no quarrel; for if I had set out with a company in fighting fashion, I have a hauberk at home and a helm both, a shield and a sharp spear shining bright, and other weapons to wield, I ween well also; but since I wished no war, my weeds are softer. Now if thou be as bold as all men tell, thou wilt grant me graciously the game that I ask."

Arthur knew how to answer, and said: "Sir courteous knight, if it is battle that thou cravest, thou shalt not fail of a fight here."

13. "Nay, I demand no fight; in faith I tell thee there are but beardless children about on this bench. If I were hasped in arms on a high steed there is no man here to match me, their might is so weak. Therefore I crave in this court a Christmas game, for it is Yule and New Year, and here are many gallants. If there be a man in this house who holds himself so hardy, is so bold in his blood, so rash in his head, that he dares stiffly strike one stroke for another, I shall give him as my gift this rich gisarm, this axe, that is heavy enough, to handle as he likes; and I shall abide the first blow as bare as I sit. If any warrior be wight enough to try what I propose, let him leap lightly to me and take this weapon — I quit-claim it for ever, let him keep it as his own — and I shall stand him a stroke firmly on this floor. At another time, by our Lady, thou wilt grant me the boon of dealing him another blow; I will give him respite of a twelvemonth and a day. Now hie, and let us see quickly if any herein dare say aught."

14. If he had astonished them at first, stiller were then all the retainers in hall, the high and the low. The warrior on his steed settled himself in his saddle, and fiercely his red eyes he reeled about; bent his thick brows, shining green; and waved his beard, awaiting whoso would rise. When none would answer him he coughed aloud, stretched himself haughtily and began to speak; "What! Is this Arthur's house," said the hero then, "that is famous through so many realms? Where is now your pride and your conquests, your fierceness, and your wrath and your great words? Now is the revel and the renown of the Round Table overcome by the word of a single man; for all tremble for dread without a blow shown."

With this he laughed so loud that the lord grieved; the blood shot for shame into his fair face. He waxed as wroth as the wind; and so did all that were there. The king so keen of mood then stood near that proud man.

15. "Sir," said he, "by heaven thy asking is foolish; and as thou hast demanded folly, it behooves thee to find it. I know no man that is aghast of thy great words. Give me now thy gisarm, for God's sake, and I will grant thy boon that thou hast bidden."

Quickly he leaped to him and caught at his hand; and the other alights fiercely on foot. Now Arthur has his axe, and grips the helve; he whirls it sternly about as if he meant to strike with it. The bold stranger stood upright before him, higher than any in the house by a head and more; with stern cheer he stood there, stroked his beard, and with cool countenance drew down his coat, no more afraid or dismayed for Arthur's great strokes than if some one had brought him a drink of wine upon the bench.

Gawain, that sat by the queen, turned to the king: "I beseech now with all courtesy that this affair might be mine."

16. "Would ye, worthy lord," quoth Gawain to the king, "bid me step from this bench and stand by you there, — that I without rudeness might leave this table, and that my liege lady liked it not ill — I would come to your help before your rich court; for methinks it is obviously unseemly that such an asking is made so much of in your hall, even though ye yourself be willing to take it upon you, while so many bold ones sit about you on the bench; than whom, I ween, none under heaven are higher of spirit, nor more mighty on the field where strife is neared. I am the weakest, I know, and feeblest of wit; and to tell the truth there would be the least loss in my life. I am only to praise forasmuch as ye are my uncle; no other nobility than your blood know I in my body. And since this adventure is so foolish, it belongs not to you; I have asked it of you first; give it to me. Let this great court decide if I have not spoken well."

The heroes took counsel together and they all gave the same advice, — to free the crowned king and give the game to Gawain.

17. Then the king commanded Gawain to rise from the table; and he right quickly stood up and made himself ready, kneeled down before the king and took the weapon; and Arthur lovingly left it to him, lifted up his hand and gave him God's blessing, and gladly bade him be hardy both of heart and of hand. "Take care, cousin," quoth the king, "that thou give him a cut; and if thou handle him properly, I readily believe that thou shalt endure the blow which he shall give after."

Gawain goes to the man with gisarm in hand; and he boldly awaits him, shrinking never a whit. Then speaks to Sir Gawain the knight in the green; "Rehearse we our agreement before we go farther. First I conjure thee, hero, how thou art called, that thou tell me it truly, so that I may believe it."

"In good faith," quoth the knight, "Gawain am I called, who give you this buffet, whatever befalls after; and at this time twelvemonth I am to take from thee another with whatever weapon thou wilt, and from no wight else alive."

The other answers again, "Sir Gawain, so thrive I as I am heartily glad that thou shalt give this blow."

18. "By Gog," quoth the green knight, "Sir Gawain, it delights me that I am to get at thy fist what I have requested here; and thou hast readily and truly rehearsed the whole of the covenant that I asked of the king, save that thou shalt assure me, sir, by thy troth, that thou wilt seek me thyself wheresoever thou thinkest I may be found upon the earth, and fetch for thyself such wages as thou dealest me to-day before this rich company."

"Where should I seek thee?" quoth Gawain. "Where is thy place? I know never where thou livest, by him that wrought me; nor do I know thee, knight, thy court, nor thy name. But tell me truly the way and how thou art called, and I will use all my wit to win my way thither, — and that I swear thee, for a sooth, and by my sure troth."

"New Year will suffice for that; no more is needed now," quoth the man in green to Gawain the courteous. "To tell the truth, after I have received thy tap, and thou hast smitten me well, I shall promptly inform thee of my house and my home and mine own name. Then thou mayest inquire about my journey and hold promise; and if I speak no speech, then thou speedest the better, for thou mayest linger at ease in thy land and seek no further. Take now thy grim tool to thee and let us see how thou knockest."

"Gladly, sir, for sooth," quoth Gawain as he strokes his axe.

19. The green knight on the ground prepared himself properly. With the head a little bowed he disclosed the flesh. His long, lovely locks he laid over his crown, and let the naked nape of his neck show for the blow. Gawain gripped his axe and gathered it on high; the left foot he set before on the ground, and let the axe light smartly down on the naked flesh, so that the sharp edge severed the giant's bones, and shrank through the clear flesh and sheared it in twain, till the edge of the brown steel bit into the ground. The fair head fell from the neck to the earth, and many pushed it with their feet where it rolled forth. The blood burst from the body and glistened on the green. Yet never faltered nor fell the hero for all that; but stoutly he started up with firm steps, and fiercely he rushed forth where the heroes stood, caught his lovely head, and lifted it up straightway. Then he turned to his steed, seized the bridle, stepped into the steel bow and strode aloft, holding the head in his hand by the hair; and as soberly the man sat in his saddle as if no mishap had ailed him, though he was headless on the spot. He turned his trunk about — that ugly body that bled. Many a one of them thought that he had lost his reason.

20. For he held the head straight up in his hand; turned the face toward the highest on the dais; and it lifted up the eyelids and looked straight out, and spoke thus much with its mouth, as ye may now hear: — "Look Gawain, that thou be ready to go as thou hast promised, and seek loyally, hero, till thou find me; as thou hast promised in this hall in the hearing of these knights. To the green chapel go thou, I charge thee, to receive such a blow as thou hast dealt. Thou deservest to be promptly paid on New Year's morn. As the knight of the green chapel many men know me; therefore, if thou strivest to find me, thou shalt never fail. And so come, or it behooves thee to be called recreant."

With a wild rush he turned the reins, and flew out at the hall door — his head in his hand — so that the fire of the flint flew from the foal's hoofs. To what country he vanished knew none there; no more than they wist whence he was come. The king and Gawain roared with laughter at that green man; but this adventure was reckoned a marvel among men.

21. Though the courteous king wondered in his heart, he let no semblance be seen, but said aloud to the comely queen with courteous speech, "Dear dame, to-day be never dismayed; well becoming are such tricks at Christmas, in lack of entertainment, to laugh and sing about among these pleasant carols of knights and ladies. Nevertheless I may well go to my meat, for I can not deny that I have seen a marvel." He glanced at Sir Gawain and said cheerfully, "Now, sir, hang up thine axe; it has hewn enough." And it was put above the dais to hang on the tapestry where all men might marvel at it, and by it avouch the wonderful happening. Then they turned to the board, these heroes together — the king and the good knight — and the keen men served them double of all dainties, as was most fitting; with all manner of meat, and minstrelsy both. They spent that day in joy until it came to an end. Now take care, Sir Gawain, that thou blench not for the pain to prosecute this adventure that thou hast taken on hand.

FYTTE THE SECOND

1. This hansel of adventures had Arthur at the beginning, in the young year, since he yearned to hear boasting. Although there was little news when they went to their seats, now they are provided with stern work, their hands quite full. Gawain was glad to begin those games in the hall; but it would not be surprising if the end were heavy; for though men be merry in mind when they have muc drink, yet a year runs full swiftly, and yield never the same; the beginning full seldo matches the end. And so this Yule went b and the year after it, each season in tur following the other. After Christmas cam the crabbed Lent, that tries the flesh wit fish and more simple food. But then t weather of the world quarrels with winter, an though the cold still clings, the clouds lif copiously descends the rain in warm shower and falls upon the fair earth. Flowers sho there; green are the garments both of fiel and of groves; birds hurry to build, and lustil they sing for the solace of the soft summe that follows thereafter. Blossoms swell int bloom in rows rich and rank; and lovely note are heard in the beauteous wood.

2. After the season of summer with th soft winds, when Zephyrus blows on seed and herbs, happy is the plant that waxe then, when the dank dew drops from th leaves, to await the blissful glance of th bright sun. But then harvest hastens an hardens it soon: warns it to wax full rip against the winter. He drives with drough the dust to rise, — from the face of the eart to fly full high. The wild wind of the welki wrestles with the sun. The leaves fall fro the bough and light on the ground. Th grass becomes all gray that erst was green Then all ripes and rots that which formerl flourished; and thus runs the year in yester days many; and winter returns again withou asking any man, till the Michelmas moon ha come in wintry wise. Then thinks Gawai full soon of his anxious voyage.

3. Yet till Allhallows day with Arthur h lingers; and Arthur made a feast on tha festival for the hero's sake, with great an gay revel of the Round Table. Knights ful courteous and comely ladies all for love o that man were in sorrow; but nevertheles they spoke only of mirth; and many a joyles one there made jests for his gentle sak After meat he mournfully addresses his uncle and speaks of his passage, and openly he say — "Now, liege lord of my life, leave I ask o you. Ye know the cost of this case; I do no care to tell you even a trifle of its dangers but I am ready to start for the fray no late than to-morrow morn, to seek the man in th green, as God will guide me."

Then the best of the castle gathered to gether, Ywain and Erec, and others ful many, Sir Dodinel de Sauvage, the Duke o Clarence, Lancelot and Lyonel and Luca the Good, Sir Bors and Sir Bedever, big me both, and many other proud ones, with Mador de la Port. All this company of court came nearer to the king, to counsel the knight, with care at their hearts. There was much deep grief felt in the hall that so worthy a one as Gawain should go on that errand, to endure a sorry dint and deal none himself with his brand. But the knight ever made good cheer, and said, "Why should I swerve from stern and strange destiny? What can a man do but try?"

4. He lingered there all that day, and on the morn made ready. Early he asked for his arms, and they were all brought. First a carpet of Toulouse was stretched over the floor, and much was the gilt gear that gleamed upon it. The brave man stepped thereon and handled the steel, clad in a doublet of costly Tars, and afterwards a well wrought hood, closed on top and bound within with a glistening white fur. Then they put the sabatons [1] upon the hero's feet, lapped his legs in steel with fair greaves, to which were attached well polished poleynes [2] fastened about his knees with knots of gold. Fine cuisses then, that well enclosed his thick, brawny thighs, they attached with thongs. Next the decorated burnie [3] of bright steel rings upon precious stuff encased the hero, and well burnished braces upon his two arms, with elbow-pieces goodly and gay and gloves of plate, and all the goodly gear that might avail him at that time, with rich coat armour, gold spurs well fastened, and a sure brand girt about his side by a silken sash.

5. When he was hasped in arms his harness was rich; the least latchet or loop gleamed with gold. So, harnessed as he was, he heard his mass, offered and adored at the high altar. Then he came to the king and his court; courteously took his leave of lords and ladies; and they kissed him, and convoyed him, entrusting him to Christ. By that time was Gringolet ready, and girt with a saddle that gleamed full gaily with many gold fringes; everywhere nailed anew, prepared for that emergency. The bridle, barred about, was bound with bright gold; the decoration of the breastplate and of the fine housings, the crupper and caparison, accorded with the saddle-bow, and all was adorned with rich red gold nails, that glittered and gleamed like the gleam of the sun. Then he took the helm and quickly kissed it. It was stoutly stapled and stuffed within; it was high on his head, hasped behind, with a light urison [4] over the ventail,[1] embroidered and bound with the best gems on a broad silken border; and birds on the seams like painted popinjays [2] preening themselves here and there; turtle-doves and true-loves [3] thickly interlaced. As many birds there were as had been in town for seven winters. The circlet that surrounded his crown was even more precious — a device of gleaming diamonds.

6. Then they showed him the shield, that was of sheer gules, with the pentangle painted in pure gold. He took it by the baldric and cast it about his neck; and it became the hero passing fair. And why the pentangle pertains to that noble prince I mean to tell you, though it should delay me. It is a sign that Solomon set formerly as a token of truth, by its own right, for it is a figure that holds five points, and each line overlaps and locks in another; and throughout it is endless; and the English call it everywhere, as I hear, the endless knot. Therefore it suits this knight and his clear arms, forever faithful in five things, and in each of them five ways. Gawain was known for good and as refined gold, devoid of every villainy, adorned with virtues. Therefore, the new pentangle he bore on shield and coat, as the man most true of speech and the knight gentlest of behaviour.

7. First, he was found faultless in his five wits; and again the hero failed never in his five fingers; and all his affiance in this world was in the five wounds that Christ received on the cross, as the creed tells; and wheresoever this man was hard bestead in the mêlée his pious thought was in this above all other things — to take all his strength from the five joys that the courteous Queen of Heaven had of her child. For this cause the knight had her image comely painted in the greater half of his shield, that when he looked down thereupon, his courage never abated. The fifth five that I find that the hero used, were generosity and fellowship above all things, his purity and his courtesy that never swerved, and pity that passes all qualities. These very five were more surely set upon that warrior than upon any other. Now all these [4] were established fivefold in this knight, and each one was fastened in another that had no end, and they were fastened on five points that never failed, nor met anywhere, nor sundered either, but finished always without end at each corner, wherever the game began or concluded.

1 steel shoes. 2 knee pieces. 3 coat of mail. 4 scarf.

1 visor. 2 parrots. 3 true lover's knots 4 these five larger virtues.

Therefore on his fair shield this knot was painted royally with red gold upon red gules. That is the true pentangle as the people properly call it. Now was the gay Gawain armed. He caught up his lance right there, and with a good-day he went for evermore.

8. He spurred his steed with the spurs and sprang on his way so swiftly that the stone struck out fire after him. All who saw the gentle man sighed in heart, and the heroes said all together to each other in their love for that comely knight, "By Christ, it is a shame that thou, hero, must be lost, who art so noble of life. In faith it is not easy to find his match upon the earth. To have acted more warily would have been better counsel; and to have made yon dear one a duke; it would well become him to be a brilliant leader of people here. This would have been better than to have him utterly destroyed, given over to an elvish man for mere boasting pride. Who ever knew any king to take such counsel as to suffer knights to be so tricked for a Christmas game." Much warm water welled from eyes when that seemly sire departed from the dwellings that day. He made no stop, but wightly went his way; many a tiresome path he rode, as I heard the book tell.

9. Now rides this hero, Sir Gawain, through the realm of Logres in God's behalf, though to him it seemed no play. Oft alone companionless he lodged at night in places where he found not before him the fare that he liked. No company had he but his foal by friths and downs, nor nobody but God to talk with by the way; till that he approached nigh unto North Wales. He kept all the isles of Anglesey on the left side, and fared over the fords by the forelands, over at the Holy Head, till he again took land in the wilderness of Wirrel. There dwelt but few that loved either God or man with good heart. And ever as he fared he asked of men that he met if they had heard any talk of a green knight of the green chapel in any spot thereabout, and all nicked him with nay, that never in their life saw they any man of such green hue. The knight took strange roads by many a rough bank. His cheer changed full oft ere he saw that chapel.

10. Many a cliff he overclimbed in strange countries; far sundered from his friends, lonely he rode. At each ford or water where the hero passed it were strange if he found not a foe before him, and that so foul and so fell that it behooved him to fight. So many marvels in the mountains there the man found that it were too tedious to tell of the tenth part. Sometimes he warred with serpents, and with wolves also, sometimes with savages that dwelt in the cliffs; both with bulls and bears, and boars sometimes and giants that assailed him from the high fell. Had he not been doughty and stern and served God, doubtless he had been dead and slain full oft. But the warfare tried him not so much but that the winter was worse when the cold clear water shed from the clouds, and froze ere it might fall to the barren earth. Near slain with the sleet he slept in his iron more nights than enough on naked rocks, where clattering from the crest the cold burn ran, and hung high over his head in hard icicles. Thus in peril and pain and plights full hard through the country wanders this knight all alone till Christmas Eve. At that tide to Mary he made his moan that she might direct his riding and lead him to some dwelling.

11. Merrily on the morn he rides by a mount into a forest full deep, that was strangely wild. High hills were on each side, and woods beneath of hoar oaks full huge, a hundred together. The hazel and the hawthorn were twined all together, covered everywhere with rough ragged moss with many unblithe birds upon bare twigs that piteously piped there for pain of the cold. The knight upon Gringolet rides all alone under the boughs, through many a moss and mire, mourning for his trials, lest he should never survive to see the service of that Sire who on that very night was born of a lady to quell our pain. And therefore sighing he said: "I beseech thee, Lord, and Mary, that is mildest mother so dear, for some harbour where I might properly hear mass and thy matins to-morrow. Meekly I ask it, and thereto earnestly I pray my pater and ave and creed." He rode in his prayer and lamented for his misdeeds. Oft-times he blessed himself, and said, "Christ's cross speed me."

12. The hero had not crossed himself more than thrice ere he was aware in the wood of a dwelling on a hill, above a clearing, on a mount, hidden under the boughs of many a huge tree about the ditches; a castle the comeliest that ever knight owned, set on a prairie, a park all about, with its beautiful palace, pinnacled full thick, and surrounded with many a tree for more than two miles. The hero gazed at the castle on that one side as it shimmered and shone through the fair oaks. Then he humbly doffed his helm and devoutly he thanked Jesus and St. Julian — who are both gentle — who courteously had directed him and harkened to his cry. "Now con hostel," quoth the man, "I beseech you yet!" Then he spurs Gringolet with his gilt heels, and he full fortunately takes the way to the chief road, that soon brought the hero to the bridge-end in haste. The bridge was securely lifted, the gates locked fast; the walls were well arrayed; no wind blast did it fear.

13. The hero that sat on his horse, abode on the bank of the deep double ditch that stretched to the place. The wall sank in the water wondrous deep, and again a full huge height it towered aloft, of hard hewn stone up to the top courses, corbelled under the battlement in the best manner; and above fine watch-towers ranged along, with many good loop-holes that showed full clean. A better barbican that hero never looked upon. And farther within he beheld the high hall, with towers set full thickly about, and fair and wondrous high filioles with carved tops cunningly devised. Chalk-white chimneys enough he saw that gleamed full white on the battlements. So many painted pinnacles were set everywhere, built so thick among the crenellations of the castle, that it verily appeared cut out of paper. Fair enough it seemed to the noble knight on his horse if he could only attain the shelter within, to harbour in that hostel, while the holiday lasted. He called, and soon there appeared on the wall a right pleasant porter who took his message and greeted the knight errant.

14. "Good sir," quoth Gawain, "would you go my errand to the high lord of this house to crave harbour?"

"Yea, by Peter," quoth the porter; "and truly I trow that ye are welcome, sir, to dwell while you like."

Then the man went again quickly, and a crowd of folk with him, to receive the knight. They let down the great draw and eagerly poured out, and kneeled down on their knees upon the cold earth to welcome the hero as it seemed to them proper. They opened up wide the broad gate for him and he raised them courteously, and rode over the bridge. Several attendants held his saddle while he alighted, and afterwards good men enough stabled his steed. Then knights and squires came down to bring this hero joyfully into the hall. When he lifted up his helm people enough hurried to take it at his hand, in order to serve the courteous one; his sword and his shield they took too. Then he greeted full courteously the knights each one; and many a proud man pressed there to honour that prince. All hasped in his high weeds, they led him to the hall, where a fair fire burned fiercely upon the hearth. Then the lord of the people came from his chamber to meet courteously the man on the floor. He said, "Ye are welcome to wield as you like what is here; all is your own to have at your will and commandment." "Gramercy," quoth Gawain. "Christ reward you for it." Like glad heroes either folded the other in his arms.

15. Gawain looked on the man who greeted him so goodly, and thought it a bold hero that owned the castle, a huge warrior for the nonce, and of great age. Broad and bright was his beard, and all beaver-hued. Firm-gaited was he on his stalwart limbs; with a face as fierce as fire, and a free speech; and to the hero he seemed well suited indeed to govern a nation of good people.

The lord turned to a chamber and promptly commanded to give Gawain a retinue to serve him in lowly wise; and there were ready at his bidding men enough, who brought him to a bright bower where the bedding was curtains of pure silk with clear gold hems, and covertures right curious with comely borders, adorned above with bright fur. Curtains running on ropes, red gold rings, tapestries of Toulouse and Tars hung on the wall, and under foot on the floor of the same pattern. There with mirthful speeches the hero was despoiled of his burnie and of his bright weeds. Quickly men brought him rich robes that he might pick and choose the best for his change. As soon as he took one and was wrapped therein, that sat upon him seemly with sailing skirts, the hero by his visage verily seemed to well nigh every man in looks glowing and lovely in all his limbs; it seemed to them that Christ never made a comelier knight. Wherever in the world he were, it seemed as if he might be a prince without peer in the field where fell men fight.

16. A chair before the chimney, where charcoal burned, was prepared for Sir Gawain richly with cloth and cushions, upon counterpanes that were both fine. And then a beauteous mantle was cast on the man, of a brown fabric richly embroidered, and fairly furred within with the best skins, all of ermine; the hood of the same. And he sat on that settle in seemly rich attire, and warmed him thoroughly; and then his cheer mended. Soon a table was raised up on trestles full fair, and set with a clean cloth that showed clear white, napkins, salt-cellar, and silver spoons. The hero washed when he would and went to his meat. Men served him seemly enough, — double fold as was proper — with pottages various and suitable, seasoned in the best manner; and many kinds of fish, some baked in bread, some broiled on the coals, some boiled, some in sauces savoured with spices; and always discourse so pleasant that it pleased the warrior. Full freely and often the hero called it a feast right courteously, when all the retainers together praised him as courteous. "Do this penance now, and soon things will be better!" Right mirthful was he for the wine that went to his head.

17. Then they questioned and inquired sparingly in skilful queries put to the prince himself, till he courteously acknowledged that he was of the court which noble Arthur holds alone, who is the rich, royal king of the Round Table; and that it was Gawain himself that sits in the house, by chance come for that Christmas. When the lord had learned that he had that hero, he laughed aloud, so dear it seemed to him; and all the men in the castle made much joy at appearing promptly in the presence of him who contains in his own person all worth and prowess and gracious traits, and is ever praised; above all the men in the world his renown is the greatest. Each warrior said full softly to his companion — "Now shall we see courteous turns of behaviour, and the blameless forms of noble talking; what profit there is in speech may we learn without asking since we have taken that fine father of nurture. God has indeed given us his grace, who grants us to have such a guest as Gawain, on account of whose birth men sit and sing for joy. This hero will now teach us what distinguished manners are; I think that those who hear him will learn how to make love."

18. When the dinner was done and the dear ones risen, the time was nigh arrived at the night. Chaplains took their way to the chapels, and rang full loudly, as they should, to the melodious evensong of the high time. The lord turns thither, and the lady also. Into a comely closet daintily she enters. Gawain joyfully proceeds, and goes thither straightway. The lord takes him by the mantle and leads him to his seat, recognizes him openly and calls him by his name, and says he is the welcomest wight in the world. And Gawain thanked him thoroughly and either embraced the other, and they sat soberly together during the service. Then the lady desired to look on the knight, and came from her closet with many fair maidens. But she was fairer than all the others in flesh and face, in skin and form, in complexion and demeanour — more beautiful than Guinevere, it seemed to the hero. He walked through the chancel to greet that gracious one. Another lady led her by the left hand, that was older than she; an ancient lady it seemed, and one highly honoured by the knights about her; but unlike to look on were the ladies, for if the younger was fair, yellow was the other. Rich red on the one bloomed everywhere; rough wrinkled cheeks rolled on the other. The kerchiefs of the one broidered with many clear pearls, openly displayed her breast and her bright throat, which shone clearer than snow that falls on the hills. The other covered her neck with a gorget, that wrapped her black chin in milk-white pleats. Her forehead was completely enveloped in silken folds, adorned and tricked with small ornaments; and naught was bare of that lady but the black brows, the two eyes, the nose, and the naked lips; and those were ugly to behold and oddly bleared. A gracious lady in the land one might call her forsooth! Her body was short and thick, her hips round and broad. More pleasant to look on was the being she led.

19. When Gawain looked on that beauteous one who gazed graciously, he took leave of the lord, and went toward them. The elder he saluted, bowing full low; the lovelier he took a little in his arms; he kissed her comely, and knightly he greeted her. They welcomed him, and he quickly asked to be their servant if it pleased them. They took him between them and led him conversing to the fireplace in the parlour; and straightway they called for spices, which men speeded to bring them unsparingly, and the pleasant wine therewith each time. The lord leaped merrily up full often, and saw to it that the mirth never faltered. Gaily he snatched off his hood and hung it on a spear, and exhorted them to win it as a prize — he to have it who could make the most mirth that Christmas tide. "And I shall try, by my faith, with the help of my friends to compete with the best, ere I lose my apparel." Thus with laughing mien the lord makes merry in order to glad Sir Gawain with games in the hall that night. When it came time, the king commanded lights; Sir Gawain took his leave and went to his bed.

20. On the morn when as every man knows

God was born to die for us, joy waxes in every dwelling in the world for his sake. So it did there on that day, with many dainties at meats and meals, right quaint dishes, and brave men on the dais dressed in their best. The old ancient wife sits the highest, the courteous lord placed by her, as I trow; Gawain and the gay lady together just in the middle, as the courses properly come; and afterwards the rest throughout all the hall, as it seemed best to them, each man in his degree was properly served. There was meat, there was mirth, there was much joy, that it were arduous for me to tell thereof, though to note it I took pains belike. But yet I know that Gawain and the lovely lady took comfort in each other's company, in the choice play of their sharp wits, and the pure courtesy of their modest talk; their disport surpassed indeed that of any royal game. Trumps and drums came playing loudly; each man minded his own business, and they two minded theirs.

21. Much delight was taken there that day, and the second; and the third followed as pleasantly. The joy of St. John's day was gentle to hear of; and it was the last of the festival, the people considered. There were guests to go upon the grey morn; therefore wondrous late they sat up and drank the wine, danced full gayly with sweet carols. At the last, when it was late, they took their leave, each good man to wend on his way. Gawain gave his host good day; but the good man takes him, and leads him to his own chamber, by the fireplace; and there he draws him aside and properly thanks him for the great worship that he had granted him in honouring his house on that high tide, in embellishing his castle with his good cheer. 'Indeed, sir, while I live I shall be the better that Gawain has been my guest at God's own feast."

"Gramercy, sir," quoth Gawain, "in good faith the merit is yours; all the honour is your own, — the high King reward you; and I am your man to work your behest in high and in low as I am bound by right."

The lord eagerly strives to hold the knight longer; but Gawain answers him that he can in no wise.

22. Then the hero asked of him full fairly what extraordinary deed had driven him at that dear time from the king's court, to go all alone so boldly, ere the holidays were wholly over.

"For sooth, sir," quoth the hero, "ye say but the truth; a high errand and a hasty had me from these dwellings; for I am summoned to such a place as I know not in the world whitherward to wend to find it. I would not for all the land in Logres fail to reach it on New Year's morn — so our Lord help me. Therefore, sir, this request I require of you here, that ye tell me truly if ever ye heard tale of the green chapel, where in the world it stands, and of the knight green in colour that keeps it. There was established by statute an agreement between us that I should meet that man at that landmark if I could but survive. And of that same New Year there now lacks but little, and by God's Son I would gladlier look on that person — if God would let me — than wield any possession in the world. Therefore, indeed — by your good will — it behooves me to wend; I have now at my disposal barely three days; and I were as fain fall dead as fail of mine errand."

Then laughing quoth the lord, "Now it behooves thee to stay; for I shall direct you to that spot by the time's end — the green chapel upon the ground. Grieve you no more; for ye shall be in your bed, sir, at thine ease some days yet, and set out on the first of the year and come to that place at midmorn, to do what you like. Stay till New Year's day; and rise and go then. One shall set you on your way; it is not two miles hence."

23. Then was Gawain full glad, and merrily he laughed; "Now I thank you especially for this above all other things; now that my quest is achieved, I shall dwell at your will, and do whatever else ye decide."

Then the sire seized him and set him beside him, and let the ladies be fetched to please them the better. Fair entertainment they had quietly among themselves; the lord in his jovial, friendly demeanor behaved as a man out of his wits that knew not what he did. Then he spake to the knight, crying loud, "Ye have agreed to do the deed that I bid. Will ye hold this hest here at once?"

"Yea, sir, forsooth," said the true hero, "while I stay in your castle I shall be obedient to your hest."

"Since ye have travelled from afar," quoth the warrior, "and then have sat late with me, ye are not well nourished, I know, either with sustenance or with sleep. Ye shall linger in your loft and lie at your ease tomorrow till mass time; and go to meat when ye will with my wife, who shall sit with you and comfort you with her company till I return home; and I shall rise early and go hunting." Gawain grants all this, bowing courteously.

24. "Yet further," quoth the hero, "let us make an agreement. Whatsoever I win in the wood, it shall be yours; and whatsoever fortune ye achieve, exchange with me therefor. Sweet sir, swap we so, swear truly, whichever one of us gets the worse or the better."

"By God," quoth Gawain the good, "I consent thereto; and whatever game you like, agreeable it seems to me."

"On this beverage just brought the bargain is made," said the lord of that people; and both laughed.

Then they drank and played and amused themselves, these lords and ladies, so long as it pleased them; and then with polite demeanour and many fair gestures, they stood up and lingered a while, and talked quietly, kissed full comely, and took their leave. With many a gay servant and gleaming torches each hero was brought to his bed full softly at the last. Yet before they went to bed they oft rehearsed the covenants. The old lord of that people knew well how to keep up a jest.

FYTTE THE THIRD

1. Full early before the day the folk arose; the guests that would go called their grooms, and these hastened to saddle the horses, arrange their gear, and truss their mails. The great ones arrayed themselves to ride, leaped up lightly and caught their bridles, each wight on his way where it well pleased him.

The dear lord of the land was not the last; arrayed for the riding, with retainers full many, he ate a sop[1] hastily after he had heard mass, and took his way quickly with his bugle to the field. By the time that any daylight gleamed upon earth, he with his heroes were mounted on their high horses. Then these hunters that understood it, coupled their hounds, unclosed the kennel doors and called them thereout, blew blithely on bugles three simple calls. At this the brachets[2] bayed and made a wild noise, and the hunters chastised and turned back those that wandered off, — a hundred hunters of the best there were, as I have heard tell. To their stations the trackers went; hunters cast off the couples; and then arose for the good blasts great uproar in that forest.

2. At the first noise of the quest the game quaked; the deer moved down into the dale, dazed for dread; hurried to the height; but quickly they were hindered by the beaters, who cried stoutly. They let the harts with the high heads go their way, the wild bucks also with their broad palms,[1] for the generous lord had forbidden that there should any man meddle with the male deer in the close season. But the hinds were held back with "Hay!" and "Ho!" and the does driven with great din to the deep glades. There might one see as they ran the flight of arrows; at each turn under the boughs out flew a shaft, that savagely bit on the brown hide with full broad heads. How they leaped and bled and died by the banks! And ever the hounds with a rush eagerly followed them; hunters with shrill horn hastened after with such a resounding cry as if cliffs had cracked. What game escaped the men who shot was all run down and torn at the stands. The deer were pestered at the heights, and worried at the waters; the people were so alert at the low stations, and the greyhounds so great, that got them quickly and pulled them down as fast as a man could see. The lord, shouting for joy, shot and alighted full oft, and passed the day thus with joy till the dark night.

3. So this lord sports by the eaves of the linden wood, and Gawain the good man lies in his gay bed; reposes till the day light gleams on the walls, under the beautiful coverlets, curtained about. And as he fell into a doze, faintly he heard a little din at the door, then distinctly; and he heaved up his head out of the clothes, caught up a corner of his curtain a little, and watched warily in that direction to see what it might be. It was the lady, loveliest to behold, who drew the door to after her right slyly and quietly, and turned toward the bed. The hero grew bashful and laid himself down cunningly and pretended that he slept. And she stepped quietly, and stole to his bed, cast up the curtain, and crept within, and seated herself full softly on the bedside, and stayed there surprisingly long, to see when he should awake. The man lay pretending a full great while, bothered in his conscience what this affair might mean or amount to. Marvellous it seemed to him. But yet he said to himself, "More seemly would it be to find out by asking what she would." Then he waked, and stretched, and turned to her; unlocked his eyelids, and made believe he was amazed, and crossed himself with his hand, to be the safer for his prayer. With chin and cheek

1 took a light repast.
2 hounds that hunt by scent.

1 The flat, broad part of the horn.

full sweet, of mingled white and red, right lovely she looked, with her small laughing lips.

4. "Good morrow, Sir Gawain!" said that fair lady. "Ye are a careless sleeper when one can enter thus. Now ye are certainly taken; unless we can make a truce I shall bind you in your bed, ye may be sure of that!" All laughing the lady shot those jests.

"Good morrow, fair one," quoth Gawain the blithe. "I shall be at your disposal, and that pleases me well, for I yield me outright and pray for grace, — and that is the best course, I judge, for I am in straits." And thus he returned the jests with many a blithe laugh. "But would ye, lovely lady, grant me leave, free your prisoner and bid him rise, I would leave this bed and dress myself better. Then I could talk with you in more comfort."

"Nay, forsooth, fair sir," said that sweet one, "ye shall not rise from your bed; I shall manage you better. I shall tie you up securely, and afterwards talk with my knight that I have caught; for I ween well, ye are indeed Sir Gawain, whom all the world worships whereso ye ride. Your honour, your courtesy, is heartily praised, by lords, by ladies, by all alive; and now ye are here, forsooth, and we all alone. My lord and his people are gone far away; the other men in their beds, and my maidens also; the door shut and closed with a strong hasp; and since I have in this house him whom all like, I shall make good use of my time while it lasts. Ye are welcome to my person, to do whatever you wish; I am perforce, and must remain, your servant."

5. "In good faith," quoth Gawain, "a great privilege it seems to me — though I be not now he that ye speak of. To reach such reverence as ye rehearse here, I am a man unworthy, I know well. By God, I should be glad — if it seemed good to you — to do what I might in speech or in service to enhance your worship; — it were a pure joy."

"In good faith, Sir Gawain," quoth the gay lady, "if I should speak ill of the fame and the prowess that pleases all others, or esteem it light, it would show but small discernment. But there are ladies enough who were liefer have this courteous one in their power — as I have thee here, — to dally dearly with your dainty words, to comfort themselves and dispel their cares, — than much of the treasure and gold that they have. But I praise the Lord who rules the skies that through his grace I have wholly in my hand that which all desire."

Great cheer she that was so fair of face made him; the knight with discreet speeches answered her every proposal.

6. "Madame," quoth the merry man, "Mary reward you, for in good faith I have found your generosity noble. People judge a person's deeds largely from the accounts of others; but the praise that they accord my deserts is but idle. It is simply your own nobility, who know nothing but good."

"By Mary," quoth the gracious one, "methinks it is otherwise; for were I worth all the store of women alive, and all the wealth of the world were in my hands, and I should bargain and choose to get me a lord, then for the good traits that I have found in the knight here, of beauty and graciousness and gay seeming, and from what I have heard before and hold in this case to be true, there should no hero in the world be chosen before you."

"Indeed, worthy one," quoth the hero, "ye might have chosen much better; but I am proud of the estimation that ye put upon me; and as your devoted servant I hold you my sovereign, and your knight I become; and Christ pay you for it."

Thus they spoke of various things till past the midmorn; and ever the lady behaved as if she loved him much. But the hero fared with caution and made courteous pretences. "Though I were the fairest of women," mused the lady, "little love would he show, because of the danger that he seeks without reproach — the blow that may slay him, but must needs be undergone." The lady then asked leave, and he granted her full soon.

7. Then she gave him good day, and of a sudden laughed; and as she stood there she astonished him with right sharp words: "Now may he that speeds each speech, pay you for this entertainment; but that ye are Gawain, it goes not in my mind."

"Wherefore?" quoth the hero; and eagerly he asks, afraid lest he had failed in the performance of his design. But the lady blessed him and spake in this wise: "A man as good as Gawain is properly held — and courtesy is closed so entirely in him — could not easily have lingered so long with a lady but he had on some trifling excuse or other courteously craved a kiss."

Then said Gawain, "Indeed, be it as you like; I shall kiss at your commandment as becomes a knight, and fear lest he displease you; so urge that plea no more." She comes nearer at that and takes him in her arms; stoops graciously down and kisses the man. They courteously entrust each other to Christ. She goes forth at the door without more ado, and he prepares to rise, and hurries amain; calls to his chamberlain, chooses his weeds, steps forth blithely to mass when he is ready; and then he goes to his meat, behaving always courteously, and makes merry all day till the bright moon rises. Never was a hero fairer entertained by two such worthy dames, the older and the younger. Much disport they make together.

8. And ever the lord of the land is bound on his sport, to hunt in holts and heath at barren hinds. Such a sum of does and of other deer he slew there by the time the sun was low, that it were a marvel to estimate. Then eagerly they all flocked together at the last; and quickly of the slain deer they made a quarry. The leaders hastened thereto with men enough; gathered the greatest of grease,[1] and proceeded properly to undo[2] them as the occasion demands. Some that were there tried them at the assay[3] and found two fingers of fat on the leanest of all. Afterwards they slit the slot,[4] seized the arber,[5] cut it free with a sharp knife, and tied it up. Next they cut down along the four limbs and rent off the hide; then they opened the belly, took out the paunch, cutting eagerly, and laid aside the knot.[6] They began at the throat again and skilfully divided the weasand from the windpipe and threw out the guts. Then they cut out the shoulders with their sharp knives, and pulled them through by a little hole, so as to have whole sides. Next they divided the breast, and cut it in two; and once more they began at the throat, split the beast quickly right up to the crotch, took out the advancers,[7] and immediately severed all the fillets by the ribs, and took them off properly along the backbone even to the haunch, — all of which hung together. Then they heaved it up whole and cut it off there; and that they took for the numbles,[8] as it is rightly called. At the fork of the thighs they cut the flaps behind; hastily they hewed the carcass in two, and severed it along the backbone.

1 The correct hunting term for "the fattest."
2 cut up.
3 Probably at the side of the neck, or on the brisket.
4 Probably at the hollow of the breast bone.
5 The gullet probably.
6 i.e. the entrails, with the gullet knotted to prevent the filth from escaping.
7 This titbit is sometimes called a part of the numbles.
8 A choice cut; hence, capriciously, our humble-pie.

9. Both the head and the neck they hewed off then, and afterwards they sundered the sides swiftly from the chine, and the corbie's fee[1] they cast in a green tree. Then they pierced either thick side through by the rib, and hung them each by the hocks of the haunches — each man for his fee, as it befell him to have it. Upon a skin of a fair beast they fed their hounds with the liver and the lights, the leather of the paunches, and bread bathed in blood mingled thereamong. Loudly they blew the prize, and bayed their hounds; then they started to carry home their meat, blowing full stoutly many loud notes. By the time daylight was done the band had all arrived at the comely castle, where the knight is quietly waiting in comfort beside a bright fire. When the lord arrived and Gawain met him, there was joy enough.

10. Then the lord commanded to gather in the hall all the household, and both the ladies to come down with their maids. Before all the folk on the floor he bade men fetch his venison before him; and all in merry sport he called Gawain, told him the number of the choice beasts, and showed him the fat meat cut from the ribs; "How like you this play? Have I won the prize? Have I properly earned thanks by my woodcraft?"

"Yes, indeed," quoth the other hero; "here is the fairest store that I saw this seven year in the season of winter."

"And all I give you, Gawain," quoth the host, then; "for by our plighted covenant you can claim it as your own."

"That is true," replied the hero, "and I say to you the same; I too have won this worthy thing within doors; and I am sure that with quite as good will it belongs to you." He throws his arms about his fair neck and kisses him as courteously as he knew how. "Take you there my merchandise; I have won no more; though I should give it up willingly even if it were greater."

"It is good," quoth the good man; "gramercy therefor. Perchance it might be better if you would tell me where you won this same favour by your own wit."

"That was not the agreement," said he; "ask me no more, for ye have got all that belongs to you, be sure of that."

They laughed and made merry in low tones; then they went quickly to supper with new dainties enough.

11. And afterwards as they sat by a fireplace in a chamber, servants poured to them

1 A bit of the offal for the crows.

oft the choice wine; and again in their jesting they agreed to make the same bargain on the morning that they made before, — whatsoever chance betide to exchange their winnings at night when they met, whatsoever new they win. They made this agreement before all the court, and the beverage was brought forth merrily at that time.[1] Then at length they politely took leave; and everybody hurried to bed. When the cock had crowed and cackled but thrice, the lord had leaped from his bed; likewise his followers each one, so that the meat and the mass were promptly despatched, and the troop ready for the chase in the wood ere any day sprang. With hunters and horns they passed through the plains, and uncoupled the racing hounds among the thorns.

12. Soon they heard the cry of the dogs by a marsh side. The huntsman encouraged the hounds that first caught the scent, hurled sharp words at them with a great noise. The hounds that heard it hastened thither quickly, and fell immediately to the scent, forty at once. Then there rose such a resounding cry of gathered hounds that the rocks about rang. The hunters cheered them with horn and with mouth; then all together they swung in a troop between a pool in that wood and a wild crag. On a hill, beside a cliff at the side of the bog, where the rough rock was rudely fallen, they fared to the finding, and the hunters after them. The men surrounded both the rock and the hill, because they knew well that he was within them, — the beast that the bloodhounds were proclaiming there. Then they beat on the bushes and bade him rise up, and he savagely rushed out athwart the men, the most formidable of swine. Long since had he left the herd on account of his age, for he was a huge beast, the greatest of boars. His grinders when he grunted grieved many, for at his first burst he thrust three to the earth, and sped hastily forth at great speed without respite. And they hallooed "High!" full loudly, and cried "Hay, hay!" With horns to mouth lustily they blew the recheat.[2] Many were the merry cries of men and of hounds that hastened after this boar with hue and cry to kill him. Full oft he bides at bay, and maims the pack in the mêlée. He hurts many of the hounds and grievously they howl and yell.

13. The hunters pushed forward then to shoot at him, aimed at him with their arrows and hit him often. But the shafts that struck on his shields,[1] give way at the pith, and the barbs would not bite on his brawn though the shaven shafts shivered in pieces; the head hopped out again wheresoever it hit. But when the dints of their keen strokes scared him, then mad for destruction he rushed on the men, did them sore hurt where he hurled forth, and many a one grew wary thereat and gave back a little. But the lord on a light horse hurries after him, blowing his bugle like a bold hero. He winds the recheat as he rides through thick groves, following this wild swine till the sun declined. Thus they drive on the day with such doings while our lovely hero lies comfortably in his bed at home in clothes full rich of hue. The lady did not forget; she came to greet him; full early she was by him to change his mind.

14. She comes to the curtain and peeps at the knight. Sir Gawain at once welcomes her worthily, and she returns his greeting right promptly, seats herself softly by his side, laughs openly, and with a lovely look addresses these words to him: "Sir, if ye be Gawain, it seems to me a very strange thing that a man of such quality should not follow the conventions of good society; and should after making acquaintance with a person cast him utterly from his mind. Thou hast already forgotten what I taught you yesterday in the best language that I knew."

"What is that?" quoth the hero. "Forsooth I know not. If what ye say be true, I am to blame."

"Yet I taught you about kissing," replied the fair lady; "wherever a countenance is known, quickly to claim a kiss; that becomes every knight who practices courtesy."

"Cease such speech, my dear lady," said the ready man. "I durst not claim it lest I should be denied. If I proposed and were refused, I should certainly be wrong in proffering."

"By my faith," quoth the lovely dame, "ye cannot be refused. Ye are strong enough to compel it by strength if ye pleased, supposing any were so ill-bred as to deny you."

"Yea, by God," said Gawain, "your speech is good; but violence is considered discourteous among my people, as is any gift that is not given with a good will. I am at your command to kiss when ye like. Ye may begin when ye please, and leave off whenever it likes you."

The lady stoops down and gracefully kisses his face. They converse long of the fears and joys of love.

1 A drink ratifies the agreement — as before.
2 A call for collecting the hounds.

1 The tough skin of the flanks.

15. "I should like to know from you, sir," said the peerless lady, "if it vexes you not, — what might be the reason that so young and so gallant person as ye now are, one so courteous and so knightly as ye are known everywhere to be, have never spoken of love. For in relating the pains of true knights, the chief thing praised in all of chivalry is the royal sport of love, — and the science of arms: it is the title, token, and text of their works; how heroes for their true love adventured their lives, endured for their sweethearts doleful hours, and afterwards avenged themselves by their valour; dispersed their care, and brought bliss to bower, with plenteous rewards for themselves. And ye are the most renowned knight of your time; your fame and your worship walks everywhere, — and now I have sat by you here two separate times, yet have I never heard from your head a single word that pertained at all to love, less or more. And ye, that are so courteous and so distinguished in your vows, ought willingly to show and teach to a young thing some tokens of the art of true love. Why are ye so rude who are so praised? Is it that ye deem me too dull to hearken to your dalliance? For shame! I came hither all alone to sit and learn from you some accomplishment: do teach me part of your skill while my lord is from home."

16. "In good faith," quoth Gawain, "God reward you! Great is the entertainment, and huge the pleasure to me, that so worthy a one as ye should come hither, and take pains with so poor a man, and play with your knight in any wise; it delights me. But to take upon myself the task of expounding true love, of touching upon the themes of that text, and tales of arms before you, who I wot well have more knowledge of that sort by the half than I or a hundred such have, or ever shall have so long as I live, — that were a manifold folly by my troth, dear one. But I would work your will with all my might, highly beholden to you as I am; and I wish evermore to be your servant, so God save me."

Thus the fair lady besought him, and tried him oft, for to have won him to wrong, — whatever it was she purposed; but he defended himself so fairly that no fault appeared, nor any evil on either side; they knew nought but joy. They laughed and played a long time, till at last she kissed him, took her leave fairly, and went her way.

17. Then the hero bestirred himself and rose to the mass; and afterwards their dinner was dight and splendidly served. The hero sported with the ladies all day, but the lord raced over the land full oft, following his uncouth swine, that rushed along the banks and bit in sunder the backs of his best brachets.[1] There he abode at his bay till bowmen broke it, and maugre his head made him move forth. Many fell arrows there flew when the folk gathered about, but ye at times he made the stoutest to start; till at the last he was so weary he could no more run; but with the haste that he might he won to a hole in a cleft by a rock, where the burn runs. He got the bank at his back and began to scrape; the ugly froth foamed from the corners of his mouth, and he whet his white tusks. It was not pleasant for all the bold hunters that stood about him to approach him even remotely; and to go nigh him durst none for fear of harm. He had hurt so many before, that all seemed them full loath to be more torn with the tusks of that savage and crazed beast.

18. When the knight came himself, reining his steed, and saw him bide at the bay near his men, he lighted nimbly down, left his courser, pulled out a bright brand and boldly strode forth, and hurried fast through the stream where the fell one abode. The wild creature was ware of the wight with weapon in hand, and heaved on high his hairs; so fiercely he snorted that many feared for their lord lest to him befell the worse. The swine rushed directly upon the hero, so that man and boar were both in a heap in the wildest of the water; but the boar had the worse, for the man marked him well as they first met and skilfully set his point exactly in the slot,[2] pierced him up to the hilt so that his heart split, and he gave way squealing and went quickly down the water. A hundred hounds seized him and fiercely bit on him. Men brought him to land and the dog finished him.

19. There was blowing of the prize[3] on many a loud horn, high halloing aloft by mighty hunters; brachets bayed the beast as the masters bade who were the chief huntsmen of that swift chase. Then awight that was wise in woodcraft begins skilfully to unlace[4] this boar. First he hews off its head and sets it on high; and afterwards splits him all down his rough back, and takes out the bowels and singes them on the coals; then with bread mingled with these, he reward

1 hounds. 2 The proper piercing spot in the chest.
3 The horn-blowing for the game's death.
4 cut up.

s hounds. Afterwards he cuts the brawn fine broad shields, and has out the hast-ts [1] in the proper manner. And now they nd the halves all whole together, and after-ards stoutly hang them on a stiff staff. Now ith this same swine they take their way me. The boar's head was borne before e warrior who slew him at the stream rough the force of his own strong hand. seemed long to him until he saw Sir Ga-ain in the hall; then he called, and Gawain me promptly to take his fees there.

20. The lord jested full loudly, and mer-ly he laughed when he saw Sir Gawain; ith pleasure he spoke. The good ladies ere called and the household gathered. He owed them the shields and told them the le of the girth and length of the wild swine; d also of his viciousness in the wood where fled. That other knight full comely com-ended his deeds, and praised it as a great g that he had made; for such a brawn of a ast, the bold man said, nor such sides of a vine, saw he never before. Then they ndled the huge head; the courteous man raised it and made much of it to honour the rd.

"Now Gawain," quoth the good man, this game is your own, by fine and fast reword, truly ye know."

"It is sooth," quoth the hero; "and as uely all my getting I shall give you in turn, my troth." He took the warrior about e neck and courteously kissed him, and nother time he served him the same. "Now e are even," quoth the warrior, "to-night all the covenants that we knit by law nce I came hither."

Said the lord, "By St. Giles, ye are the st that I know! Ye will be rich in a short me, if ye drive such chaffer!"

21. Then they raised tables aloft on tres-es, and cast cloths upon them. The clear ght then appeared along the walls, as men t and distributed waxen torches all about e hall. Much mirth and glee rose up erein, about the fire on the hearth, and various wise at the supper and after. any noble songs they sang, as Christmas rols and new dance tunes, with all the annerly mirth that a man can tell of. And er our lovely knight sat beside the lady. uch seemly cheer she made to the hero, ught with such sly stolen glances to please e stalwart one, that the wight was all mazed, and wroth with himself. But he ould not on account of his breeding reprove her, but responded in all courtesy, howsoever outrageous she might be. When they had played in the hall as long as their will lasted, the lord called to bedwards, and to the room with a fireplace they passed.

22. And there they drank and talked, and the lord proposed again to make the same arrangement for New Year's Eve. But the knight craved leave to depart on the morn, for it was nigh at the term that he must keep. The lord hindered him from that, persuaded him to linger, and said, "As I am true man, I pledge my troth thou shalt reach the green chapel to do thy tasks, sir, by New Year's light, long before prime. Therefore lie in thy loft and take thine ease; and I shall hunt in this holt and keep the covenant — change merchandise with thee when I return hither; for I have tried thee twice, and faithful I find thee; now, 'third time, best time.' Think on the morrow. Make we merry while we may, and be joyful; for a man can catch trouble whensoever he likes."

This was readily granted and Gawain stayed. Drink was quickly brought to them, and to bed they went with lights. Sir Gawain lay and slept full still and soft all night; the lord, mindful of his hunting, was dight full early.

23. After mass he and his men took a morsel. Merry was the morning. He asks for his mount, and all the sportsmen who should accompany him on horse were ready mounted on their steeds before the hall gates. Wondrous fair was the field, for the frost still lingered. The sun rose in a rack of ruddy red, and drove all the clouds from the welkin. The hunters uncoupled by a holt side, and the rocks in the forest rang for the noise of their horns. Some dogs fell on a scent where the fox had loitered; followed it oft obliquely through the cunning of their wiles. A kennet [1] cried upon it; the huntsman encouraged him, and his fellows hastened after, panting thickly. They ran forth in a rabble on Reynard's very track, and he hurried before them. Soon they found him; and when they actually saw him they chased him fast, baying him full fiercely with a huge noise. And he trants [2] and turns through many a rough grove; doubles and hearkens by hedges full often. At the last by a little ditch he leaps over a spinny, and steals out full stilly by a rough rand.[3] Half escaped from the wood he turns with wiles from the hounds; but then he arrived, ere he knew it, at a chosen

1 cutlets.

1 small hound. 2 twists.
3 unploughed strip by woodside.

stand, where in an instant three stout hunters in gray threatened him at once. He blenched again quickly, and bravely started off; with all the woe in the world, he turned away to the wood.

24. Then was it a pure joy to listen to the hounds, when all the gathered mute[1] got view of him. The cry they set on his head at the sight was as if all the resounding cliffs had clattered down in a heap. Here he was halloed when the hunters met him, loudly cried upon with noisy calls; there he was threatened and often called thief; and ever the ticklers were at his tail so that he could not tarry. Oft he was run at when he raked out, and oft he reeled in again, so wily was Reynard. And ever he led the bespattered lord and his troop in this manner among the hills, now in them, now over, now under, while the courteous knight at home slept wholesomely within the comely curtains on the cold morn.

But the lady for love cared not to sleep nor to give up the purpose that bode in her heart; but up she rose quickly and took her way thither in a gay mantle meetly reaching to the earth, and furred full fine with skins of the best. No ornaments of gold on her head; but only the bright stones set about her tressour[2] in clusters of twenty. With her fair face and her lovely throat all naked, her breast bare before and behind too, she comes within the chamber door and closes it after her, throws up a window and calls on the wight, and smartly thus stirred him with her fair cheery words. "Ah man, how can you sleep, this morning is so clear!" Though he was drowsing deep, yet could he hear her.

25. In the dreary depths of a dream the noble was sunk, like a man suffering from many sad thoughts, how destiny should dight him his weird at the green chapel that day when he met the man, and had to abide his buffet without more debate. But when he had fairly recovered his wits, he emerged from his dreams and answered with haste. The lovely lady came laughing sweetly, stooped over his fair face and courteously kissed him. He welcomed her worthily with choice cheer. To see her so glorious, and so gaily attired, so faultless of feature, and so lovely of colour, warmed his heart with welling joy. With smooth and gracious smiling they straightway waxed mirthful. All was bliss and good cheer that passed between them. They exchanged goodly words; much happiness they felt, and great was the peril between them, unless Mary thought of he knight.

26. For that beauteous princess con strained him so sorely, and the dange pressed him so nigh, that of necessity it be hooved him either accept her love or rudel refuse it. He thought much of his courtesy lest he should prove a clown; and more o his villainy if he should do sin, and be traito to the hero who owned the castle. "Go shield!" quoth the warrior, "that shall no befall!" With a little love-dalliance he lai aside all the pointed speeches that spran from her mouth.

Quoth the lady to the hero: "Ye deserv blame if ye love not her who is so near you — of all creatures in the world most wounde in heart; — unless indeed ye have a sweet heart, a dearer being, that pleases you better and ye have plighted faith so firmly to tha gentle one that ye care not to loosen it. — Verily now that is what I believe, and I pra you that you tell me truly; for all the love in the world deny not the truth with guile."

"By St. John!" said the knight, and cour teously he smiled, "I have none, and non will I have."

27. "That is the worst of all!" quot the lady. "I am answered indeed, to m sorrow. Kiss me now comely and I shall g hence. I can only mourn in the world as maid that loved much."

Sighing she stooped down and kissed hir seemly; and then she severed from him, an said as she stood, "Now, dear, at this de parting do me this comfort; give me some what of thy gift, thy glove if it might be that I may think on thee, sir, to lessen m mourning."

"Now in truth," quoth that man, " would I had here for thy love, the deares thing that I wield; for truly ye have righ oft in reason deserved a greater reward tha I could reckon. But to exchange with yo love-tokens, that would profit but little. I is not for your honor to have at this time glove of Gawain's gift for a keepsake; an I am here on an errand in lands uncoutl and have no men with mails full of preciou things for remembrances at this momen and that mislikes me, lady. But every ma must act according to his circumstances, an none should take it ill or repine."

"Now, courteous and honourable one, quoth that lovesome lady, "though I sha have nothing of yours, yet shall ye have mine."

28. She reached him a rich ring of re

1 pack. 2 headdress, caul.

gold work with a gleaming stone standing aloft, that shed blushing beams like the bright sun; know ye well it was worth wealth full huge. But the man refused it, and readily he said: "I desire no great gifts, my gay one, at this time. I have naught to give you, and naught will I take."

She offered it him full pressingly, and he refused her offer, and swore swiftly on his sooth that he would not take it. And she sorrowed that he refused, and said thereafter, 'If ye refuse my ring, since it seems too rich, and ye would not be so highly beholden to me, I shall give you my girdle, that will enrich you less."

She lightly caught a lace that went about her sides, knit upon her kirtle under the bright mantle. It was adorned with green silk, and ornamented with gold, broidered all around, decked with fringes; and that she offered to the hero, and gaily besought that, though it were unworthy, he would take it. And he denied that he would in any wise take either gold or present ere God sent him grace to achieve the chance that he had chosen there. "And therefore, I pray you, be not displeased, and give over your attempt; for I intend never to consent. I am dearly beholden to you because of your entertainment; and ever in hot and in cold I will be your true servant."

29. "Now refuse ye this silk," said the lady then, "because it is simple in itself, as it certainly seems to be? Lo! little it is, and less it is worth; but whoso knew the virtues that are knit therein, he would esteem it at a greater price peradventure; for whatsoever man is girt with this green lace, while he has it fittingly wrapped about him, there is no warrior under heaven that can wound him; for he could not be slain by any device in the world."

Then the knight paused, and it came to his heart that it would be a jewel for the peril that awaited him when he arrived at the chapel to undergo his ordeal. Could he manage to be unslain, that were a noble device. Then he indulged her entreaties and suffered her to speak; and she pressed the belt on him and offered it to him eagerly. And he accepted it, and she gave it him with a good will, and besought him for her sake never to discover it, but to conceal it loyally from her lord. The man agreed that never person should know it indeed but they twain. Full oft he thanked her, right glad in heart and thought. By that she had kissed the stout knight three times.

30. Then she takes her leave and leaves him there, for more entertainment she could not get from that man. When she was gone Sir Gawain bestirs himself, rises and dresses in noble array. He lays up the love-lace the lady had given him, hides it full cleverly where he can find it again. Then promptly he takes his way to the chapel; quietly approaches to the priest and prays him there that he would elevate his life, and teach him better how his soul should be saved when he should go hence. Then he shrives him cleanly and shows his misdeeds, both the more and the less, beseeches mercy, and begs for absolution. And the priest assoils him thoroughly and set him as clean as if doomsday had been due on the morrow. And afterwards Gawain makes more mirth among the fair ladies that day with comely carols and all kinds of joy than ever he did before, till the dark night. Every one had pleasure of him there, and said indeed that he had never been so merry since he came hither.

31. Now let him linger in that place, where may love betide him. The lord is still in the field leading his men. He has overtaken this fox that he followed so long, as he sprinted over a spinny to spy the rascal, where he heard the hounds that hastened fast after him. Reynard came running through a rough grove, and all the rabble in a rout right at his heels. The man was ware of the game, and warily abode; pulled out his bright brand and struck at the beast; and he dodged from the sharp weapon and would have turned; but a dog seized him ere he could, and right before the horse's feet they all fell on him and worried this wily one with a great noise. The lord lighted quickly, and caught him forthwith; pulled him full hastily out of the dogs' mouths, and holding him high over his head, halloed fast; and there many fierce hounds bayed him. Hunters hied them thither with horns full many, ever blowing the recheat[1] till they saw the hero. As soon as his noble company was come, all that bare bugle blew at once, and all the others that had no horns halloed. It was the merriest mute[2] that ever men heard — the rich riot that there was raised for Reynard's soul. They rewarded the hounds there, stroked them and rubbed their heads; and afterwards they took Reynard and turned off his coat.

32. And then they hastened home, for it

1 The note that recalls all the dogs.
2 noise of the whole band.

was nigh night, blowing full stoutly in their great horns. The lord alighted at last at his dear home, found fire on the floor, and the hero beside it, Sir Gawain the good, that glad was withal among the ladies; in their love he had much joy. He wore a mantle of blue that reached to the earth; his surcoat, that was softly furred, became him well; and his hood of the same hung on his shoulder. Trimmed all about with fine fur were both. He met this good man in the middle of the floor, and all joyfully he greeted him, and goodly he said: "Now I shall fulfill our covenant, that we have just made, where no drink was spared." Then he embraces the knight and kisses him thrice with as much gusto and as soberly as he could give them.

"By Christ!" quoth the other knight, "ye get much bliss in the profits of this business — if ye drive good bargains!"

"Of the bargain, no matter," quoth curtly that other, "so long as the debts that I owed are properly paid."

"Mary!" quoth the other man, "my offering is the worse, for I have hunted all this day, and naught have I got but this foul fox-fell; the fiend have the good ones! And that is full poor to pay for such fine things as ye have given me here, three such rare kisses."

"It is enough," quoth Sir Gawain; "I thank you, by the rood." And as they stood there the lord told him how the fox was slain.

33. With mirth and minstrelsy, with meats at their will, they made as merry as any men could. With laughing of ladies, with merry jests, Gawain and the good man were both as glad as if the court were mad, or else drunk. Both the man and his retinue made many jokes till the season arrived when they must sever; the men had to go to their beds at last. Then humbly this gentle man takes his leave of the lord first; and fairly he thanks him. "For such a joyous sojourn as I have had here, for the honor you have shown me at this high feast, the high king reward you! I can only give you myself to be one of your men, if that pleases you. For I must needs, as ye know, proceed, to-morrow, if ye will grant me some men to show, as you promised, the way to the green chapel, as God will suffer me to take on New Year's day the doom of my fate."

"In good faith," quoth the good man, "with a good will! All that ever I promised you, I will perform." Therewith he assigns a servant to set him in the way, and conduct him by the downs, that he should without hesitation travel through the forest and fare at the best in the woods. The lord thanked Gawain for the worship he had been willing to show him. Then the knight took his leave of the beautiful ladies.

34. With care and with kissing he speaks to them, and many earnest thanks he presses upon them. And they returned him the same again promptly; they entrusted him to Christ with sighings full sad. Afterwards he graciously departs from the household; each man that he met he thanked him for his service and his solace, and the various pains with which they had been busy to serve him. And each man was as sad to sever from him there as if they had ever dwelt worthily with that hero. Then with people and with light he was led to his chamber and blithely brought to bed to be at his rest. Whether he slept soundly I dare not say, for he had much to think of on the morrow if he would. Let him lie there; he was near what he sought. If ye will be still a while I shall tell you how they fared.

FYTTE THE FOURTH

1. Now nighs the New Year, and the night passes. The day drives on to the dark, as God bids; but outside wild storms wakened in the world; clouds cast the cold keenly to the earth; with discomfort enough to the naked, the snow from the north flew sharply, and nipped the game. The blustering wind blew from the heights, and drove each dale full of great drifts. The man who lay in his bed heard it right well; though he locks his lids, full little he sleeps. By each cock that crew he knew well the hour. Promptly he leaped up ere the day sprang, for there was the light of a lamp that gleamed in his chamber. He called to his chamberlain, who quickly answered him, and bade him bring his burnie and saddle his horse. The chamberlain gets up and fetches him his weeds, and arrays Sir Gawain in proper fashion. First he dressed him in his clothes to keep out the cold, and then he put on the rest of his harness, that had been well kept, both mail and plate, and brightly polished. The rings of his rich burnie had been rocked from the rust,[1] and all was fresh as at first; and Gawain was fain to give thanks for it. The attendant had wiped each piece well and often. Then the noblest man betwixt here and Greece bade his steed be brought.

2. Meanwhile, he threw upon himself his finest weeds; his surcoat with its cognisance of excellent work, virtuous stones set upon velvet, all wrought about and bound with embroidered seams, and fairly furred within with rare skins. Yet left he not the lace, the lady's gift, — that forgot not Gawain for his own good. When he had belted his brand upon his broad haunches, he dressed his love-token double about him, the knight swathed sweetly about his waist the girdle of green silk, which became him well, upon the royal red cloth that was fair to see. But this hero wore not the girdle for its wealth, for pride of the pendants, though they were polished, and though the glittering gold gleamed on the ends; but to save himself when it behoved him to suffer, to await his doom without resistance, with no brand or knife to defend him. By this the good man is ready and goes out quickly. Full often he thanks the distinguished company.

1 That is, in a barrel of sand.

3. Gringolet the huge and strong was ready, who had been kept skilfully in the safest manner. The proud horse in his splendid condition longed for spurring. The hero approached him, noticed his coat, and said soberly, and by his sooth swore — "Here, in this castle, is a company that are mindful of courtesy. The man who maintains them, joy may he have; the dear lady, love betide her in this life, since they for charity cherish a guest and uphold honor in their hand. May the Being reward them who holds the heaven on high — and also you all. And if I might live any longer in the world I should give you some reward if I could." Then he stepped into stirrup and strode aloft. His servant offered him his shield; he put it on his shoulder. He spurred Gringolet with his gilt heels, and the steed jumped on the stone; no longer he stood still, but pranced. Gawain's servant, who bore his lance and helm, was by then on the horse. "This castle I entrust to Christ; may he give it aye good chance!"

4. The bridge was let down, and the broad gates unbarred and borne open on both sides. The hero crossed himself quickly and passed the boards, praised the porter, who knelt before him giving good day and praying God that he save Gawain. And so he went on his way with his one man that should teach him how to find that dismal place where he should receive the rueful blow. They rode by banks where boughs are bare; they climbed by cliffs where the cold clings; the sky was upheld, but it was ugly beneath; mist hung on the moor and melted on the mount; each hill had a hat, a huge mist-cloak. Brooks boiled and broke from the banks about, shattering sheer on their shores where they showered down. Dreary was the way, where they should travel by the wood, till soon came the season when the sun rises at that time. They were on a hill full high, the white snow about them, when the man that rode beside him bade his master abide.

5. "I have brought you hither, sir, at this time; and now ye are not far from that famous spot that ye have asked and inquired so specially after. But I shall say to you forsooth, since I know you, and ye are a man that I love well, if ye would work by my wit ye should be the better for it. The place that ye press to is held full perilous. There dwells in that waste a wight the worst upon earth; for he is stiff and stern and loves to strike; and greater he is than any man in the world, and his body bigger than the four best that are in Arthur's house, and bigger than Hector or any other. He maintains that adventure at the green chapel. There passes by that place none so proud in arms but he dins him to death with dint of his hand. For he is a man without measure and uses no mercy; for be it churl or chaplain that rides by the chapel, monk or mass-priest, or any man else, he likes as well to kill him as to go alive himself. Therefore I tell ye as truly as ye sit in the saddle, come ye there ye shall be killed — trust me well — though ye had twenty lives to spend. He has dwelt here full long and caused much strife in the land. Against his sore dints ye cannot defend yourself.

6. "Therefore, good Sir Gawain, let the fellow alone, and go away some other road, for God's sake. Repair to some other country, where Christ may speed you; and I shall hie me home again, and promise you further — which I will swear by God and all his good saints, so help me God and the halidom and oaths enough — that I will loyally conceal you, and never tell tale that ever ye fled for any man that I know of."

"Gramercy," quoth Gawain. And sternly he added. "Well worth thee, man, who wishes my good; and I well believe thou wouldst loyally conceal me. But if thou kept promise never so faithfully, and I gave up here, sought for fear to fly as you advise, I were a knight coward; I could not be excused. But I will go to the chapel whatever chance may fall, and talk with that same man the tale that I like, be it good or evil, as it pleases fate to have it. Though he be a stern champion to cope with, and armed with a club, full well can God manage to save his servants."

7. "Mary!" quoth that other man, "now thou sayest as much as that thou wilt take upon thyself thine own destruction; if it pleases thee to lose thy life, I shall not let nor hinder thee. Have here thy helm on thy head, thy spear in thy hand; and ride down this same lane by yon rock-side till thou be brought to the bottom of the rugged valley; then look a little up the grassy slope on thy left hand, and thou shalt see in that ravine the chapel itself, and the burly man on the field who keeps it. Now farewell in God's name, Gawain the noble, for all the gold in the world I would not go with thee nor bear thee fellowship through this wood a foot further."

At that the man turned his bridle in the wood, hit the horse with the heels as hard as he could; leaped over the land, and left the knight there all alone.

"By God's self," quoth Gawain, "I will neither grieve nor groan. To God's will I am full obedient, and to him I have entrusted myself."

8. Then he spurs Gringolet and follows the path; pushes in by a hollow beside a thicket; rides through the rough slope right to the dale; and then he looked about him, and wild it seemed to him. He saw no sign of dwelling anywhere around, but on both sides high steep banks, and rough hunched crags with projecting stones; the shadows of the cliffs seemed to him terrible. Then he paused and held back his horse, and oft changed his cheer while seeking the chapel. He saw none such on any side, and strange it seemed to him. But soon, a little distance off on a grassy spot he descried a mound as it were, a smooth hill by the bank of the stream near a ford of the flood that ran there. The burn bubbled there as if it were boiling. The knight urges his steed, and comes to the hill; lights nimbly down, and ties the rein and his rich bridle to a tree by a rough branch; then he turns to the hill and walks about it, debating with himself what it might be. It had a hole at the end and on either side, and was overgrown with grass in clumps everywhere, and was all hollow within — nothing but an old cave or a crevice of an old crag. He could not understand it at all. "Alas, Lord," quoth the gentle knight, "can this be the green chapel? Here about midnight the devil might tell his matins."

9. "Now," quoth Gawain, "it certainly is mysterious here; this oratory is ugly, overgrown with herbs. Well it beseems the wight clad in green here to do his devotions in the devil's wise. Now I feel in my five wits it is the fiend that has made this bar gain with me, to destroy me here. This is a chapel of mischance; may ill fortune betide it! It is the cursedest kirk that ever I came in!"

With high helm on his head, his lance in his hand, he strides up to the rock of the rude dwelling. Then he heard from that high hill, in a rough cave, on a bank beyond the brook, a marvellously savage noise. Lo, the cliff clattered as though it would split, as if one were grinding a scythe on a grindstone. It whirred and screeched like water at a mill; it rushed and rang that it was ruth to hear.

"By God," quoth Gawain then, "that gear, I fancy, is being prepared to give me a good reception. Yet though I must lose my life, fear shall never make me change colour."

10. Then the knight called full high: "Who dwells in this place to keep covenant with me? For now the good Gawain is passing right here. If any wight wishes ought, let him come hither fast, now or never, to fulfill his need!"

"Abide!" quoth one on the bank over his head. "Thou shalt have in all haste that which I promised thee once."

Yet he kept on with that noise sharply for a while, turning and whetting, ere he would come down. And then he crossed by a crag and came from a hole, whirling out of a dark place with a fell weapon — a Danish axe new dight, to give the blow with. It had fast to the helve a great head, sharpened on the stone. Four feet long was the weapon — no less, by that lace that gleamed full bright. And the man in the green was arrayed as before — both his skin and his limbs, locks, and beard; save that on foot he strides fairly on the earth. He set the steel shaft to the stone and stalked beside it. When he came to the water, where he did not wish to wade, he hopped over on his axe, and fiercely advanced, with savage ferocity pacing the broad snow-covered glade. Sir Gawain met the knight and bowed to him, not at all low. The other said, "Now, sweet sir, in a covenant a man can trust thee."

11. "Gawain," quoth the green warrior, "may God preserve thee. Indeed thou art lcome, hero, to my place; and thou hast ned thy travel as a true man should. And ou knowest the covenants made between ; at this time twelve month, thou tookest at fell to thee, — and I at this New Year is to repay you handsomely. And now we e in this valley entirely alone; here are no en to part us, however we may behave. ave thy helm off thy head, and have here y pay. Make no more debate than I of- red thee then, when thou whipped off my ad at one blow."

"Nay," quoth Gawain, "by God that lent e life, I shall grudge thee not a whit what- er misfortune falls. But arrange thee for y one stroke, and I shall stand still and nder thee not the least from doing the work you like."

He bent the neck and bowed down, show- g the flesh all bare; and behaved as if he red not. For no dread would he flinch.

12. Then the man in the green got ready ickly, gathered up his grim tool to smite awain. With all the might in his body he re it aloft, and aimed a savage blow as ough he wished to kill him. Had it driven wn as earnestly as he feinted, the ever ughty one would have been dead of his nt. But Gawain glanced to one side on e gisarm as it came gliding down to slay m there in the glade, and shrank a little th the shoulders from the sharp iron. The her warrior with a quick motion withheld e bright weapon, and then he reproved the ince with many proud words. "Thou t not Gawain," said the man, "who is ld so good, who never flinched for any my by hill nor by vale; and now thou est for fear before thou feelest any harm. ch cowardice I never heard of that knight. neither winced nor fled, sir, when thou dst strike, nor tried any tricks in King rthur's house. My head flew to my foot, d yet I never budged; and thou, ere any rm taken, art fearful in heart. Wherefore e better man I ought to be called for it."

"I flinched once," quoth Gawain, "and ill do so no more. Yet if my head should ll on the stones, I cannot restore it.

13. "But make ready, sir, by thy faith, d bring me to the point. Deal to me my stiny, and do it promptly; for I shall and thee a stroke, and not start again till ine axe has hit me — have here my troth."

"Have at thee then!" quoth the other, d heaves it aloft, and aims as savagely if he were mad. He strikes at him ightily, but touches the man not; for he withheld his hand cleverly ere it could hurt. Gawain awaits it properly and flinches with no member, but stands still as a stone, or a stump that is twisted into the rocky ground with a hundred roots.

Then merrily spoke the man in the green: "So, now thou hast thy heart whole it behoves me to hit. Now keep back the fine hood that Arthur gave thee, and see if thou canst keep thy neck whole from this stroke."

Said Gawain in great anger: "Why, thrash on, thou wild man! Thou threatenest too long. I guess that thine own heart is timid!"

"Forsooth," quoth the other warrior, "thou speakest so fiercely that I will not delay thine errand a bit longer." Then he takes his stride to strike and knits both brow and lip. No wonder Gawain mislikes it and gives up all thought of escape.

14. Lightly he lifts his axe and lets the edge come down fairly on the bare neck. Yet though he smote rudely, it hurt him but little; only cut him on one side so that it severed the skin. The sharp bit reached the flesh through the fair fat, so that the bright blood shot over his shoulders to the earth. And when the hero saw the blood glint on the snow, he leaped forth more than a spear's length, eagerly seized his helm, cast it on his head, threw his shoulders under his fair shield, pulled out a bright sword and fiercely spoke. Never in this world since he was born of his mother was he half so blithe.

"Cease, sir, of thy blow! Offer me no more. I have without strife taken a stroke in this place; and if thou givest me more, I shall promptly repay and yield quickly again, trust thou that! Only one stroke falls to me here. The covenant which we made in Arthur's halls provided just that; and therefore, courteous sir, now hold!"

15. The warrior turned from him and rested on his axe. He set the shaft on the ground, leaned on the head, and beheld how the doughty hero stood his ground grimly, fully armed and devoid of fear. In his heart it pleased him. Then with a great voice, and a huge laugh, he spoke merrily to the hero: "Bold sir, in this place be not so savage. Nobody has here unmannerly mishandled thee, nor done but according to covenant made at the king's court. I promised thee a stroke and thou hast it; hold thee well paid. I release thee of the remnant, of all other rights. If I had been skilful peradventure I could have given you a worse buffet. First I menaced you merrily with a pure feint, and gave thee no blow; which was but justice, considering the covenant which we made on the first night, and which thou held with me trustily; for truly all the gain thou gave me as a good man should. The second feint this morning, sir, I proffered thee, because thou didst kiss my fair wife and didst hand the kisses over to me; for these two occasions I gave thee here but two bare feints without harm. A true man truly restores; such an one need dread no harm. At the third time thou didst fail; and so take thee that tap.

16. "For it is my weed that thou wearest, that same woven girdle. Mine own wife gave it thee, I know well, forsooth. Now know I well the thy kisses, and thy virtues also. And as for the wooing of my wife, I managed it myself. I sent her to try thee, and truly it seems to me thou art the most faultless hero that ever went on foot. As a pearl is of greater price than white peas, so is Gawain, in good faith, compared with other gay knights. But in this case, sir, you lacked a little, and loyalty failed you. But that was for no amorous work, nor wooing either, but because ye loved your life, — the less I blame you."

That other brave man stood a great while in a study; so stricken was he for grief that he groaned within. All the blood of his breast rushed to his face; and he shrank for shame when the warrior talked. This was the first word that the man spoke — "Cursed be cowardice and covetousness both! In you is villainy and vice, that destroy virtue." Then he caught at the knot and loosed the fastening; fiercely reached the belt to the warrior himself. "Lo! there is the deception, foul may it fall! For fear of thy knock cowardice taught me to make a truce with covetousness, to forsake my nature, which is generosity and loyalty, that belong to knights. Now am I faulty and false, and a coward have ever been. From treachery and untruth ever come sorrow and care. Here I confess to you, knight, that my conduct is all faulty. Let me but please you now, and after I shall beware."

17. Then the other laughed and said courteously: "I hold it quite remedied, the harm that I had. Thou hast made a clean confession, acknowledging all thy misdeeds, and hast received the penance openly from the point of my edge. I hold thee quit of that plight, and purified as clean as if thou hadst never forfeited since thou was first born. And I give thee, sir, the girdle that is gold hemmed. Since it is green, as is my gown, Sir Gawain, ye may think upon this same adventure where thou goest forth among great princes; and this shall be a genuine token among chivalrous knights of the adventure of the green chapel, and ye shall come again this New Year to my dwelling and we shall revel the remnant of this rich feast full well." The lord pressed the invitation and said, "With my wife, who was you great enemy, I think we shall reconcile you."

18. "Nay, forsooth," quoth the hero and seizing his helm, he took it off quickly and thanked the warrior. "I have had a good visit, bliss betide you; and may He pay you well who directs all mercies. Commend me to that courteous one, your comely mate; both the one and the other, my honoured ladies, who have thus with their craft quaintly beguiled their knight. But it is no wonder that a fool should rave, and through wiles of women be won to sorrow. For so was Adam beguiled by one, and Solomon by many, indeed; and Samson also Delilah dealt him his weird; and David thereafter was deceived by Bathsheba, who suffered much sorrow. Since these men were plagued by their wiles, it were a hugegain to love them well and believe them not — if a person but could; for these men were of old the best, and the most fortunate, excellent above all others under the heavens; and all they were beguiled by women whom they had to do with. If I be now deceived, meseems I might be excused."

19. "But your girdle," quoth Gawain "God reward you for it! That will I keep with good will; not for the precious gold nor the samite nor the silk, nor the widependants, for its wealth nor for its beauty nor for its fine work; but in sign of my fault I shall behold it oft; when I ride in renown I shall lament to myself the fault and the deceit of the crabbed flesh, how tender it is to catch stains of filth; and thus when pride shall prick me for prowess of arms, a look on this love-lace shall moderate my heart. But one thing I would pray you — may it displease you not — since ye are lord of the land yonder where I have stayed worshipfully with you — may the Being who upholds the heaven and sits on high repay you for it! — how name ye your right name and then no more."

"That shall I tell thee truly," quoth the other then. "Bernlak de Hautdesert I am called in this land through the might of Morgan la Fay, who dwells in my house She has acquired deep learning, hard-won

:ill, many of the masteries of Merlin; — r she has at times dealt in rare magic with iat renowned clerk, who knows all your ights at home. Morgan the Goddess is nerefore her name; no person is so haughty it she can tame him.

20. "She sent me in this wise to your rich ill to assay its pride and try if it were true iat circulates about the great renown of ie Round Table. She prepared for me this onder to take away your wits, to have ieved Guinevere and caused her to die irough fright of that same man, that ostly speaker with his head in his hand fore the high table. That is she, the ant ent lady at home. She is even thine aunt, rthur's half-sister, the daughter of that uchess of Tintagel upon whom dear Uther terwards begot Arthur, that is now king. herefore, I beg you, sir, to come to thine int; make merry in my house; my people ve thee, and I like thee as well, sir, by my ith as I do any man under God for thy eat truth."

But he answered him nay, he would in no ise. They embraced and kissed, each ntrusted other to the Prince of Paradise, id they parted right there in the cold. Gaain on horse full fair rides boldly to the ng's court, and the knight all in green hithersoever he would.

21. Wild ways in the world Gawain now des on Gringolet, he who had got the boon his life. Oft he harboured in houses, id oft without; and many an adventure in ile he had, and won oft; but that I care ot at this time to mention in my tale. The irt was whole that he had got in his neck; id he bare the glistening belt about him, ossed obliquely like a baldric, the lace stened under his left arm with a knot, in oken that he was taken in a fault. And thus e comes to the court, the knight all sound. here wakened joy in that dwelling when the great ones knew that good Gawain had come; joyous it seemed to them. The king kisses the knight, and the queen also; and afterwards many a sure knight, who sought to embrace him and asked him of his journey. And wondrously he tells it, confessing all the trials that he had, the adventure of the chapel, the behavior of the knight, the love of the lady — and, at the last, the lace. He showed them the nick in his neck that he caught at the lord's hands for his unloyalty. He grieved when he had to tell it; he groaned for sorrow, and the blood rushed to his face for shame when he declared it.

22. "Lo! lord," quoth the hero, as he handled the lace, "this that I bear in my neck is the badge of this blame. This is the evil and the loss that I have got from the cowardice and covetousness that I showed there. This is the token of untruth that I am taken in, and I must needs wear it while I may last; for none may hide this shame without mishap, for where it once is incurred, depart will it never."

The king and all the court comfort the knight. They laugh loud at his tale, and lovingly agree that the lords and ladies that belong to the Table, each knight of the brotherhood, should have a baldric, an oblique band about him of a bright green, and wear that for the sake of the hero. And that emblem was accorded the renown of the Round Table, and he was ever after honoured that had it.

As it is told in the best book of romance, thus in Arthur's day this adventure betid, which the Brutus books bear witness of. After Brutus the bold hero first came hither, when the siege and the assault had ceased at Troy, many adventures of this sort happened. Now may He that bore the crown of thorns bring us to his bliss. Amen.

Hony Soit Qui Mal Pence

THE POPULAR BALLADS

The Popular Ballads are not, in the strict sense of the word, literature at all. They were not written, but composed or improvised about some topic of popular interest to the music of a popular tune. Once started on their way, they passed from generation to generation only by oral tradition. Any singer of them felt quite free to change the wording or to add new stanzas of his own invention, till they became a composite of many minds, the creation not of a single poet but of a whole people. Nor have they any single correct and authentic form; most of them have been preserved to us in several varying versions. Many of them originated as long ago as the fourteenth century, or even earlier; but few of them found their way into printed books before the latter part of the eighteenth century, when their great poetical value was first generally recognized. In 1765, Bishop Percy published a collection of them which he found written down in a manuscript which dates from the middle of the seventeenth century. Others were collected by Sir Walter Scott, who wrote them down from the lips of Scottish peasants to whom they had descended by oral tradition. The standard collection is that of the American scholar, F. J. Child, in five volumes — The English and Scottish Popular Ballads, Boston, 1882–98 — where each ballad is given in many variant versions. An abridgement of this great work by Sargent and Kittredge is published in the Cambridge Poets series by Houghton Mifflin Company. An interesting critical study of the ballads is that of F. B. Gummere: The Popular Ballad, Boston, 1907.

Though the creation and possession of humble peasant folk, the ballads concern themselves usually with the fortunes of lords and ladies and gentlefolk — nearly always with their tragic fortunes. The world of the ballads is filled with battle and murder and sudden death. The story is told — or often not so much told as dramatically revealed — with complete objectivity, with hardly a trace of moralizing or comment. The method of the ballad conforms to certain established conventions. Favorite devices, stock epithets, occur again and again; events happen in threes or sevens or nines. Most characteristic is the use of repetition — a peculiar sort of repetition, which with each iteration of a given phrase or formula adds a new significant element to the situation.

THE DOUGLAS TRAGEDY

1. "Rise up, rise up, now, Lord Douglas," she says,
"And put on your armour so bright,
Let it never be said that a daughter of thine
Was married to a lord under night.

2. "Rise up, rise up, my seven bold sons,
And put on your armour so bright,
And take better care of your youngest sister,
For your eldest's awa the last night."

3. He's mounted her on a milk-white steed,
And himself on a dapple grey,
With a bugelet horn hung down by his side,
And lightly they rode away.

4. Lord William lookit oer his left shoulder,
To see what he could see,
And there he spy'd her seven brethren bold,
Come riding over the lee.

5. "Light down, light down, Lady Margret," he said,
"And hold my steed in your hand,
Until that against your seven brethren bold,
And your father I mak a stand."

6. She held his steed in her milk-white hand,
And never shed one tear,
Until that she saw her seven brethren fa,
And her father hard fighting, who lovd her so dear.

7. "O hold your hand, Lord William!" she said,
"For your strokes they are wondrous sair;
True lovers I can get many a ane,
But a father I can never get mair."

8. O she's taen out her handkerchief,
It was o the holland sae fine,
And aye she dighted[1] her father's bloody wounds,
That were redder than the wine.

9. "O chuse, O chuse, Lady Margret," he said,
"O whether will ye gang or bide?"
"I'll gang, I'll gang, Lord William," she said,
"For ye have left me no other guide."

10. He's lifted her on a milk-white steed,
And himself on a dapple grey,
With a bugelet horn hung down by his side,
And slowly they baith rade away.

11. O they rade on, and on they rade,
And a' by the light of the moon,
Until they came to yon wan water,
And there they lighted down.

12. They lighted down to tak a drink
Of the spring that ran sae clear,
And down the stream ran his gude heart's blood,
And sair she gan to fear.

13. "Hold up, hold up, Lord William," she says,
"For I fear that you are slain;"
"'Tis naething but the shadow of my scarlet cloak,
That shines in the water sae plain."

14. O they rade on, and on they rade,
And a' by the light of the moon,

[1] dressed.

Until they cam to his mother's ha door,
And there they lighted down.

15. "Get up, get up, lady mother," he says,
"Get up, and let me in!
Get up, get up, lady mother," he says,
"For this night my fair lady I've win.

16. "O mak my bed, lady mother," he says,
"O mak it braid and deep,
And lay lady Margret close at my back,
And the sounder I will sleep."

17. Lord William was dead lang ere midnight,
Lady Margret lang ere day,
And all true lovers that go thegither,
May they have mair luck than they!

18. Lord William was buried in St. Mary's kirk,
Lady Margret in Mary's quire;
Out o the lady's grave grew a bonny red rose,
And out o the knight's a brier.

19. And they twa met, and they twa plat,[1]
And fain they wad be near;
And a' the warld might ken right weel
They were twa lovers dear.

20. But bye and rade the Black Douglas,
And wow but he was rough!
For he pulld up the bonny brier,
And flang 't in St. Mary's Loch.

EDWARD

1. "Why dois your brand sae drap wi bluid,
Edward, Edward,
Why dois your brand sae drap wi bluid,
And why sae sad gang yee O?"
"O I hae killed my hauke sae guid,
Mither, mither,
O I hae killed my hauke sae guid,
And I had nae mair bot hee O."

2. "Your haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
Edward, Edward,
Your haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
My deir son I tell thee O."
"O I hae killed my reid-roan steid,
Mither, mither,
O I hae killed my reid-roan steid,
That erst was sae fair and frie O."

1 intertwined.

3. "Your steid was auld, and ye hae gat mair,
Edward, Edward,
Your steid was auld, and ye hae gat mair,
Sum other dule [1] ye drie [2] O."
"O I hae killed my fadir deir,
Mither, mither,
O I hae killed my fadir deir,
Alas, and wae is mee O!"

4. "And whatten penance wul ye drie for that,
Edward, Edward,
And whatten penance wul ye drie for that?
My deir son, now tell me O."
"Ile set my feit in yonder boat,
Mither, mither,
Ile set my feit in yonder boat,
And Ile fare ovir the sea O."

5. "And what wul ye doe wi your towirs and your ha,
Edward, Edward?
And what wul ye doe wi your towirs and your ha,
That were sae fair to see O?"
"Ile let thame stand tul they doun fa,
Mither, mither,
Ile let thame stand tul they down fa,
For here nevir mair maun [3] I bee O."

6. "And what wul ye leive to your bairns and your wife,
Edward, Edward?
And what wul ye leive to your bairns and your wife,
Whan ye gang ovir the sea O?"
"The warldis room, late them beg thrae life,
Mither, mither,
The warldis room, late them beg thrae life,
For thame nevir mair wul I see O."

7. "And what wul ye leive to your ain mither deir,
Edward, Edward?
And what wul ye leive to your ain mither deir?
My deir son, now tell me O."
"The curse of hell frae me sall ye beir,
Mither, mither,
The curse of hell frae me sall ye beir,
Sic counseils ye gave to me O."

1 sorrow. 2 endure.
3 must.

BABYLON; OR, THE BONNIE BANKS O FORDIE

1. There were three ladies lived in a bower,
Eh vow bonnie,
And they went out to pull a flower,
On the bonnie banks o Fordie.

2. They hadna pu'ed a flower but ane,
When up started to them a banisht man.

3. He's taen the first sister by her hand,
And he's turned her round and made her stand.

4. "It's whether will ye be a rank robber's wife,
Or will ye die by my wee pen-knife?"

5. "It's I'll not be a rank robber's wife,
But I'll rather die by your wee pen-knife."

6. He's killed this may,[1] and he's laid her by,
For to bear the red rose company.

7. He's taken the second ane by the hand,
And he's turned her round and made her stand.

8. "It's whether will ye be a rank robber's wife,
Or will ye die by my wee pen-knife?"

9. "I'll not be a rank robber's wife,
But I'll rather die by your wee pen-knife."

10. He's killed this may, and he's laid her by,
For to bear the red rose company.

11. He's taken the youngest ane by the hand,
And he's turned her round and made her stand.

12. Says, "Will ye be a rank robber's wife,
Or will ye die by my wee pen-knife?"

13. "I'll not be a rank robber's wife,
Nor will I die by your wee pen-knife.

14. "For I hae a brother in this wood,
And gin ye kill me, it's he'll kill thee."

15. "What's thy brother's name? come tell to me."
"My brother's name is Baby Lon."

16. "O sister, sister, what have I done!
O have I done this ill to thee!

17. "O since I've done this evil deed,
Good sall never be seen o me."

18. He's taken out his wee pen-knife,
And he's twyned [1] himsel o his ain sweet life.

1 maid

LORD THOMAS AND FAIR ANNET

1. Lord Thomas and Fair Annet
Sate a' day on a hill;
Whan night was cum, and sun was sett,
They had not talkt their fill.

2. Lord Thomas said a word in jest,
Fair Annet took it ill:
"A, I will nevir wed a wife Against my ain friends' will."

3. "Gif ye wull nevir wed a wife,
A wife wull neir wed yee:"
Sae he is hame to tell his mither,
And knelt upon his knee.

4. "O rede,[2] O rede, mither," he says,
"A gude rede gie to mee;
O sall I tak the nut-browne bride,
And let Faire Annet bee?"

5. "The nut-browne bride haes gowd and gear,
Fair Annet she has gat nane;
And the little beauty Fair Annet haes
O it wull soon be gane."

6. And he has till his brother gane:
"Now, brother, rede ye mee;
A, sall I marrie the nut-browne bride,
And let Fair Annet bee?"

7. "The nut-browne bride has oxen, brother,
The nut-browne bride has kye;[3]
I wad hae ye marrie the nut-browne bride,
And cast Fair Annet bye."

8. "Her oxen may dye i the house, billie,
And her kye into the byre,[4]
And I sall hae nothing to mysell
Bot a fat fadge [5] by the fyre."

1 deprived. 2 counsel. 3 kine.
4 cow-barn. 5 clumsy woman

9. And he has till his sister gane:
"Now, sister, rede ye mee;
O sall I marrie the nut-browne bride,
And set Fair Annet free?"

10. "I'se rede ye tak Fair Annet, Thomas,
And let the browne bride alane;
Lest ye sould sigh, and say, Alace,
What is this we brought hame!"

11. "No, I will tak my mither's counsel,
And marrie me owt o hand;
And I will tak the nut-browne bride,
Fair Annet may leive the land."

12. Up then rose Fair Annet's father,
Twa hours or it wer day,
And he is gane into the bower
Wherein Fair Annet lay.

13. "Rise up, rise up, Fair Annet," he says,
"Put on your silken sheene;[1]
Let us gae to St. Marie's kirke,
And see that rich weddeen."

14. "My maides, gae to my dressing-roome,
And dress to me my hair;
Whaireir yee laid a plait before
See yee lay ten times mair.

15. "My maids, gae to my dressing-room,
And dress to me my smock;
The one half is o the holland[2] fine,
The other o needle-work."

16. The horse Fair Annet rade upon,
He amblit like the wind;
Wi siller he was shod before,
Wi burning gowd behind.

17. Four and twanty siller bells
Wer a' tyed till his mane,
And yae tift[3] o the norland wind,
They tinkled ane by ane.

18. Four and twanty gay gude knichts
Rade by Fair Annet's side,
And four and twanty fair ladies,
As gin she had bin a bride.

19. And whan she cam to Marie's kirk,
She sat on Marie's stean:[4]
The cleading[5] that Fair Annet had on
It skinkled[6] in their een.

20. And whan she cam into the kirk,
She shimmerd like the sun;
The belt that was about her waist
Was a' wi pearles bedone.

21. She sat her by the nut-browne bride,
And her een they wer sae clear,
Lord Thomas he clean forgat the bride,
Whan Fair Annet drew near.

22. He had a rose into his hand,
He gae it kisses three,
And reaching by the nut-browne bride,
Laid it on Fair Annet's knee.

23. Up than spak the nut-browne bride,
She spak wi meikle spite:
"And whair gat ye that rose-water,
That does mak yee sae white?"

24. "O I did get the rose-water
Whair ye wull neir get nane,
For I did get that very rose-water
Into my mither's wame."[1]

25. The bride she drew a long bodkin
Frae out her gay head-gear,
And strake Fair Annet unto the heart,
That word spak nevir mair.

26. Lord Thomas he saw Fair Annet wex pale,
And marvelit what mote bee;
But whan he saw her dear heart's blude,
A' wood-wroth[2] wexed hee.

27. He drew his dagger, that was sae sharp,
That was sae sharp and meet,[3]
And drave it into the nut-browne bride,
That fell deid at his feit.

28. "Now stay for me, dear Annet," he sed,
"Now stay, my dear," he cry'd;
Then strake the dagger untill his heart,
And fell deid by her side.

29. Lord Thomas was buried without kirkwa,[4]
Fair Annet within the quiere,
And o the tane thair grew a birk,[5]
The other a bonny briere.

30. And ay they grew, and ay they threw,[6]
As they wad faine be neare;

1 finery. 2 linen. 3 one whiff.
4 stone. 5 clothing. 6 sparkled.

1 womb. 2 mad with anger. 3 straight.
4 As a suicide, he could not be buried in holy ground.
5 birch. 6 twisted.

And by this ye may ken right weil
They were twa luvers deare.

LAMKIN

1. It's Lamkin was a mason good as ever built wi stane;
He built Lord Wearie's castle,
but payment got he nane.

2. "O pay me, Lord Wearie, come, pay me my fee:"
"I canna pay you, Lamkin,
for I maun [1] gang oer the sea."

3. "O pay me now, Lord Wearie, come, pay me out o hand:"
"I canna pay you, Lamkin, unless I sell my land."

4. "O gin ye winna pay me,
I here sall mak a vow,
Before that ye come hame again,
ye sall hae cause to rue."

5. Lord Wearie got a bonny ship, to sail the saut sea faem;
Bade his lady weel the castle keep,
ay till he should come hame.

6. But the nourice [2] was a fause limmer [3]
as eer hung on a tree;
She laid a plot wi Lamkin,
whan her lord was oer the sea.

7. She laid a plot wi Lamkin,
when the servants were awa,
Loot him in at a little shot-window,
and brought him to the ha.

8. "O whare's a' the men o this house,
that ca me Lamkin?"
"They're at the barn-well thrashing;
'twill be lang ere they come in."

9. "And whare's the women o this house,
that ca me Lamkin?"
"They're at the far well washing;
'twill be lang ere they come in."

10. "And whare's the bairns o this house,
that ca me Lamkin?"
"They're at the school reading;
'twill be night or they come hame."

11. "O whare's the lady o this house, that ca's me Lamkin?"
"She's up in her bower sewing,
but we soon can bring her down."

12. Then Lamkin's tane a sharp knife, that hang down by his gaire,[1]
And he has gien the bonny babe a deep wound and a sair.

13. Then Lamkin he rocked, and the fause nourice sang,
Till frae ilkae bore [2] o the cradle
the red blood out sprang.

14. Then out it spak the lady,
as she stood on the stair:
"What ails my bairn, nourice, that he's greeting [3] sae sair?

15. O still my bairn nourice,
O still him with the pap!"
"He winna still, lady,
for this nor for that."

16. "O still my bairn, nourice,
O still him wi the wand!"
"He winna still, lady,
for a' his father's land."

17. "O still my bairn, nourice,
O still him wi the bell!"
"He winna still, lady,
till ye come down yoursel."

18. O the firsten step she steppit, she steppit on a stane;
But the neisten step she steppit,
she met him Lamkin.

19. "O mercy, mercy, Lamkin, hae mercy upon me!
Though you've taen my young son's life,
ye may let mysel be."

20. "O sall I kill her, nourice, or sall I lat her be?"
"O kill her, kill her, Lamkin, for she neer was good to me."

21. "O scour the bason, nourice, and mak it fair and clean,
For to keep this lady's heart's blood,
for she's come o noble kin."

22. "There need nae bason, Lamkin, lat it run through the floor;
What better is the heart's blood
o the rich than o the poor?"

1 must. 2 nurse. 3 rascal.

1 gore. 2 hole. 3 crying.

But ere three months were at an end,
Lord Wearie came again;
But dowie,[1] dowie was his heart
when first he came hame.

"O wha's blood is this," he says,
"that lies in the chamer?" [2]
"It is your lady's heart's blood;
'tis as clear as the lamer." [3]

"And wha's blood is this," he says,
"that lies in my ha?"
"It is your young son's heart's blood;
'tis the clearest ava." [4]

O sweetly sang the black-bird that sat upon the tree;
But sairer grat [5] Lamkin,
when he was condemnd to die.

And bonny sang the mavis,[6]
out o the thorny brake;
But sairer grat the nourice,
when she was tied to the stake.

THE GAY GOSS-HAWK

"O well's me o my gay goss-hawk,
That he can speak and flee;
He'll carry a letter to my love,
Bring back another to me."

"O how can I your true-love ken,
Or how can I her know?
Whan frae her mouth I never heard couth,[7]
Nor wi my eyes her saw."

"O well sal ye my true-love ken,
As soon as you her see;
For, of a' the flowrs in fair Englan,
The fairest flowr is she.

"At even at my love's bowr-door
There grows a bowing birk,[8]
An sit ye down and sing thereon,
As she gangs to the kirk.

"An four-and-twenty ladies fair
Will wash and go to kirk,
But well sal ye my true-love ken,
For she wears goud on her skirt.

"An four and twenty gay ladies
Will to the mass repair,
But well sal ye my true-love ken,
For she wears goud on her hair."

O even at that lady's bowr-door
There grows a bowin birk,
An he set down and sang thereon,
As she ged to the kirk.

"O eet and drink, my marys [1] a',
The wine flows you among,
Till I gang to my shot-window,
An hear yon bonny bird's song.

"Sing on, sing on, my bonny bird,
The song ye sang the streen,[2]
For I ken by your sweet singin
You're frae my true-love sen."

O first he sang a merry song,
An then he sang a grave,
An then he peckd his feathers gray,
To her the letter gave.

"Ha, there's a letter frae your love,
He says he sent you three;
He canna wait your love langer,
But for your sake he'll die.

"He bids you write a letter to him;
He says he's sent you five;
He canna wait your love langer,
Tho you're the fairest woman alive."

"Ye bid him bake his bridal-bread,
And brew his bridal-ale,
An I'll meet him in fair Scotlan
Lang, lang or it be stale."

She's doen her to her father dear,
Fa'n low down on her knee:
"A boon, a boon, my father dear,
I pray you, grant it me."

"Ask on, ask on, my daughter,
An granted it sal be;
Except ae squire in fair Scotlan,
An him you sall never see."

"The only boon, my father dear,
That I do crave of the,
Is, gin I die in southin lands,
In Scotland to bury me.

"An the firstin kirk that ye come till,
Ye gar [3] the bells be rung,
An the nextin kirk that ye come till,
Ye gar the mess be sung.

1 sad. 2 chamber. 3 amber. 4 of all. 5 wept. 6 thrush. 7 sound, word. 8 birch

1 maids 2 yesterday evening. 3 cause.

18. "An the thirdin kirk that ye come till,
You deal gold for my sake,
An the fourthin kirk that ye come till,
You tarry there till night."

19. She is doen her to her bigly [1] bowr,
As fast as she coud fare,
An she has tane a sleepy draught,
That she had mixed wi care.

20. She's laid her down upon her bed,
An soon she's fa'n asleep,
And soon oer every tender limb
Cauld death began to creep.

21. Whan night was flown, an day was come,
Nae ane that did her see
But thought she was as surely dead
As ony lady coud be.

22. Her father an her brothers dear
Gard make to her a bier;
The tae half was o guide red gold,
The tither o silver clear.

23. Her mither an her sisters fair
Gard work for her a sark; [2]
The tae half was o cambrick fine,
The tither o needle wark.

24. The firstin kirk that they came till,
They gard the bells be rung,
An the nextin kirk that they came till,
They gard the mess be sung.

25. The thirdin kirk that they came till,
They dealt gold for her sake,
An the fourthin kirk that they came till,
Lo, there they met her make! [3]

26. "Lay down, lay down the bigly bier.
Lat me the dead look on;"
Wi cherry cheeks and ruby lips
She lay an smil'd on him.

27. "O ae sheave [4] o your bread, true-love,
An ae glass o your wine,
For I hae fasted for your sake
These fully days is nine.

28. "Gang hame, gang hame, my seven bold brothers,
Gang hame and sound your horn;
An ye may boast in southin lans
Your sister's playd you scorn."

1 commodious. 2 shirt. 3 lover. 4 slice.

THE THREE RAVENS

1. There were three ravens sat on a tree,
Downe a downe, hay down, hay downe
There were three ravens sat on a tree,
With a downe
There were three ravens sat on a tree,
They were as blacke as they might be.
With a downe derrie, derrie, derrie downe, downe.

2. The one of them said to his mate,
"Where shall we our breakefast take?"

3. "Downe in yonder greene field,
There lies a knight slain under his shield.

4. "His hounds they lie downe at his feete
So well they can their master keepe.

5. "His haukes they flie so eagerly,
There's no fowle dare him come nie."

6. Downe there comes a fallow doe,
As great with yong as she might goe.

7. She lift up his bloudy hed,
And kist his wounds that were so red.

8. She got him up upon her backe,
And carried him to earthen lake [1]

9. She buried him before the prime,
She was dead herselfe ere even-song time.

10. God send every gentleman,
Such haukes, such hounds, and such a leman.[2]

THE TWA CORBIES

1. As I was walking all alane,
I heard twa corbies [3] making a mane; [4]
The tane unto the t' other say,
"Where sall we gang and dine to-day?"

2. "In behint yon auld fail [5] dyke,
I wot there lies a new slain knight;
And naebody kens that he lies there,
But his hawk, his hound, and lady fair.

3. "His hound is to the hunting gane,
His hawk to fetch the wild-fowl hame,

1 pit. 2 sweetheart. 3 ravens.
4 moan. 5 turf.

His lady's ta'en another mate,
So we may mak our dinner sweet.

4. "Ye'll sit on his white hause-bane,[1]
And I'll pike out his bonny blue een;
Wi ae lock o his gowden hair
We'll theek[2] our nest when it grows bare.

5. "Mony a one for him makes mane,
But nane sall ken where he is gane;
Oer his white banes when they are bare,
The wind sall blaw for evermair."

SIR PATRICK SPENCE

1. The king sits in Dumferling toune,
Drinking the blude-reid wine:
"O whar will I get a guid sailor,
To sail this schip of mine?"

2. Up and spak an eldern knicht,
Sat at the kings richt kne:
"Sir Patrick Spence is the best sailor
That sails upon the se."

3. The king has written a braid[3] letter,
And signd it wi his hand,
And sent it to Sir Patrick Spence,
Was walking on the sand.

4. The first line that Sir Patrick red,
A loud lauch[4] lauched he;
The next line that Sir Patrick red,
The teir blinded his ee.

5. "O wha is this has don this deid,
This ill deid don to me,
To send me out this time o' the yeir,
To sail upon the se!

6. "Mak hast, mak haste, my mirry men all,
Our guid schip sails the morne:"
"O say na sae, my master deir,
For I feir a deadlie storme.

7. "Late late yestreen I saw the new moone,
Wi the auld moone in her arme,
And I feir, I feir, my deir master,
That we will cum to harme."

8. O our Scots nobles wer richt laith[5]
To weet their cork-heild schoone;
Bot lang owre[6] a' the play wer playd,
Thair hats they swam aboone.[7]

9. O lang, lang may their ladies sit,
Wi thair fans into their hand,
Or eir they se Sir Patrick Spence
Cum sailing to the land.

10. O lang, lang may the ladies stand,
Wi thair gold kems[1] in their hair,
Waiting for thair ain deir lords,
For they'll se thame na mair.

11. Haf owre, half owre to Aberdour,
It's fiftie fadom deip,
And thair lies guid Sir Patrick Spence,
Wi the Scots lords at his feit.

1 neck-bone. 2 thatch. 3 broad.
4 laugh. 5 loath. 6 before. 7 above.

THE WIFE OF USHER'S WELL

1. There lived a wife at Usher's Well,
And a wealthy wife was she;
She had three stout and stalwart sons,
And sent them oer the sea.

2. They hadna been a week from her,
A week but barely ane,
Whan word came to the carline wife[2]
That her three sons were gane.

3. They hadna been a week from her,
A week but barely three,
Whan word came to the carlin wife
That her sons she'd never see.

4. "I wish the wind may never cease,
Nor fashes[3] in the flood,
Till my three sons come hame to me,
In earthly flesh and blood."

5. It fell about the Martinmass,[4]
When nights are lang and mirk,[5]
The carlin wife's three sons came hame,
And their hats were o the birk.[6]

6. It neither grew in syke[7] nor ditch,
Nor yet in ony sheugh;[8]
But at the gates o Paradise,
That birk grew fair eneugh.

. . . . . .

7. "Blow up the fire, my maidens,
Bring water from the well;
For a' my house shall feast this night,
Since my three sons are well."

8. And she has made to them a bed,
She's made it large and wide,

1 combs. 2 old woman. 3 troubles.
4 November 11. 5 dark. 6 birch.
7 trench. 8 furrow.

And she's taen her mantle her about,
Sat down at the bed-side.

. . . . . .

9. Up then crew the red, red cock,
And up and crew the gray,
The eldest to the youngest said,
"'Tis time we were away."

10. The cock he hadna crawd but once,
And clappd his wings at a',
When the youngest to the eldest said,
"Brother, we must awa.

11. "The cock doth craw, the day doth daw,
The channerin[1] worm doth chide;
Gin we be mist out o our place,
A sair pain we maun bide.

12. "Fare ye weel, my mother dear!
Fareweel to barn and byre![2]
And fare ye weel, the bonny lass
That kindles my mother's fire!"

THE DÆMON LOVER

1. "O where have you been, my long, long love,
This long seven years and mair?"
"O I'm come to seek my former vows Ye granted me before."

2. "O hold your tongue of your former vows,
For they will breed sad strife;
O hold your tongue of your former vows,
For I am become a wife."

3. He turned him right and round about,
And the tear blinded his ee:
"I wad never hae trodden on Irish ground,
If it had not been for thee.

4. "I might hae had a king's daughter,
Far, far beyond the sea;
I might have had a king's daughter,
Had it not been for love o thee."

5. "If ye might have had a king's daughter,
Yersel ye had to blame;
Ye might have taken the king's daughter,
For ye kend that I was nane.

6. "If I was to leave my husband dear,
And my two babes also,
O what have you to take me to,
If with you I should go?"

7. "I hae seven ships upon the sea —
The eighth brought me to land —
With four-and-twenty bold mariners,
And music on every hand."

8. She has taken up her two little babes,
Kissd them baith cheek and chin:
"O fair ye weel, my ain two babes,
For I'll never see you again."

9. She set her foot upon the ship,
No mariners could she behold;
But the sails were o the taffetie,
And the masts o the beaten gold.

10. She had not saild a league, a league,
A league but barely three,
When dismal grew his countenance,
And drumlie[1] grew his ee.

11. They had not saild a league, a league,
A league but barely three,
Until she espied his cloven foot,
And she wept right bitterlie.

12. "O hold your tongue of your weeping," says he,
"Of your weeping now let me be;
I will shew you how the lilies grow
On the banks of Italy."

13. "O what hills are yon, yon pleasant hills,
That the sun shines sweetly on?"
"O yon are the hills of heaven," he said,
"Where you will never win."

14. "O whaten a mountain is yon," she said,
"All so dreary wi frost and snow?"
"O yon is the mountain of hell," he cried,
"Where you and I will go."

15. He strack the tap-mast wi his hand,
The fore-mast wi his knee,
And he brake that gallant ship in twain,
And sank her in the sea.

HUGH OF LINCOLN

1. Four and twenty bonny boys
Were playing at the ba,
And by it came him sweet Sir Hugh,
And he playd oer them a'.

1 grumbling. 2 cow-barn.

1 gloomy.

2. He kicked the ba with his right foot,
And catchd it wi his knee,
And throuch-and-thro the Jew's window
He gard [1] the bonny ba flee.

3. He's doen him to the Jew's castell,
And walkd it round about;
And there he saw the Jew's daughter,
At the window looking out.

4. "Throw down the ba, ye Jew's daughter, Throw down the ba to me!"
"Never a bit," says the Jew's daughter,
"Till up to me come ye."

5. "How will I come up? How can I come up?
How can I come to thee?
For as ye did to my auld father,
The same ye'll do to me."

6. She's gane till her father's garden,
And pu'd an apple red and green;
'Twas a' to wyle him sweet Sir Hugh,
And to entice him in.

7. She's led him in through ae dark door,
And sae has she thro nine;
She's laid him on a dressing-table,
And stickit him like a swine.

8. And first came out the thick, thick blood,
And syne [2] came out the thin,
And syne came out the bonny heart's blood;
There was nae mair within.

9. She's rowd [3] him in a cake o lead,
Bade him lie still and sleep;
She's thrown him in Our Lady's draw-well,
Was fifty fathom deep.

10. When bells were rung, and mass was sung,
And a' the bairns came hame,
When every lady gat hame her son,
The Lady Maisry gat nane.

11. She's taen her mantle her about,
Her coffer by the hand,
And she's gane out to seek her son,
And wanderd oer the land.

12. She's doen her to the Jew's castell,
Where a' were fast asleep:
"Gin ye be there, my sweet Sir Hugh,
I pray you to me speak."

13. She's doen her to the Jew's garden,
Thought he had been gathering fruit:
"Gin ye be there, my sweet Sir Hugh,
I pray you to me speak."

14. She neard Our Lady's deep draw-well,
Was fifty fathom deep:
"Whareer ye be, my sweet Sir Hugh,
I pray you to me speak."

15. "Gae hame, gae hame, my mither dear,
Prepare my winding sheet,
And at the back o merry Lincoln
The morn [1] I will you meet."

16. Now Lady Maisry is gane hame,
Made him a winding sheet,
And at the back o merry Lincoln
The dead corpse did her meet.

17. And a' the bells o merry Lincoln
Without men's hands were rung,
And a' the books o merry Lincoln
Were read without man's tongue,
And neer was such a burial
Sin Adam's days begun.

[1] made. [2] then. [3] rolled.

CHEVY CHASE

1. God prosper long our noble king, our liffes and saftyes all!
A woefull hunting once there did in Chevy Chase befall.

2. To drive the deere with hound and horne
Erle Pearcy took the way:
The child may rue that is unborne
the hunting of that day!

3. The stout Erle of Northumberland a vow to God did make His pleasure in the Scottish woods three sommers days to take,

4. The cheefest harts in Chevy C[h]ase to kill and beare away:
These tydings to Erle Douglas came in Scottland, where he lay.

5. Who sent Erle Pearcy present word he would prevent his sport;

[1] to-morrow.

The English erle, not fearing that,
did to the woods resort,

6. With fifteen hundred bowmen bold,
All chosen men of might,
Who knew ffull well in time of neede
to ayme their shafts arright.

7. The gallant greyhound[s] swiftly ran to chase the fallow deere;
On Munday they began to hunt,
ere daylight did appeare.

8. And long before high noone the[1] had a hundred fat buckes slaine;
Then having dined, the drovyers went to rouze the deare againe.

9. The bowmen mustered on the hills,
well able to endure;
Theire backsids all with speciall care that day were guarded sure.

10. The hounds ran swiftly through the woods
the nimble deere to take,
That with their cryes the hills and dales an eccho shrill did make.

11. Lord Pearcy to the querry went to view the tender deere;
Quoth he, "Erle Douglas promised once
this day to meete me heere;

12. "But if I thought he wold not come,
noe longer wold I stay."
With that a brave younge gentlman
thus to the erle did say:

13. "Loe, yonder doth Erle Douglas come,
hys men in armour bright;
Full twenty hundred Scottish speres
all marching in our sight.

14. "All men of pleasant Tivydale, fast by the river Tweede:"
"O ceaze your sportts!" Erle Pearcy said,
"and take your bowes with speede.

15. "And now with me, my countrymen, your courage forth advance!
For there was never champion yett,
in Scottland nor in Ffrance,

16. "That ever did on horsbacke come,
[but], and if my hap it were,
I durst encounter man for man,
with him to break a spere."

1 they.

17. Erle Douglas on his milke-white steede, most like a baron bold,
Rode formost of his company,
whose armor shone like gold.

18. "Shew me," sayd hee, "whose men you bee that hunt soe boldly heere,
That without my consent doe chase and kill my fallow deere."

19. The first man that did answer make was noble Pearcy hee,
Who sayd, "Wee list not to declare nor shew whose men wee bee;

20. "Yett wee will spend our deerest blood thy cheefest harts to slay."
Then Douglas swore a solempne oathe,
and thus in rage did say:

21. "Ere thus I will outbraved bee,
one of us tow shall dye;
I know thee well, an erle thou art;
Lord Pearcy, soe am I.

22. "But trust me, Pearcye, pittye it were,
and great offence, to kill
Then any of these our guiltlesse men, for they have done none ill.

23. "Let thou and I the battell trye, and set our men aside:"
"Accurst bee [he!]" Erle Pearcye sayd,
"by whome it is denyed."

24. Then stept a gallant squire forth —
Witherington was his name —
Who said, "I wold not have it told
To Henery our king, for shame,

25. "That ere my captaine fought on foote,
and I stand looking on.
You bee two Erles," quoth Witherington,
"and I a squier alone;

26. "I'le doe the best that doe I may,
while I have power to stand;
While I have power to weeld my sword,
I'le fight with hart and hand."

27. Our English archers bent thier bowes; their harts were good and trew;
Att the first flight of arrowes sent,
full foure score Scotts the slew.

28. To drive the deere with hound and horne,
Douglas bade on the bent;
Two captaines moved with mickle might,
their speres to shivers went.

29. They closed full fast on everye side, noe slacknes there was found,
But many a gallant gentleman lay gasping on the ground.

30. O Christ! it was great greeve to see how eche man chose his spere,
And how the blood out of their brests did gush like water cleare.

31. At last these two stout erles did meet, like captaines of great might;
Like lyons woode [1] they layd on lode; [2]
the made a cruell fight.

32. The fought untill they both did sweat, with swords of tempered steele,
Till blood downe their cheekes like raine
the trickling downe did feele.

33. "O yeeld thee, Pearcye!" Douglas sayd,
"And in faith I will thee bringe
Where thou shall high advanced bee by James our Scottish king.

34. "Thy ransome I will freely give,
and this report of thee,
Thou art the most couragious knight
[that ever I did see.]"

35. "Noe, Douglas!" quoth Erle Percy then,
"thy profer I doe scorne;
I will not yeelde to any Scott that ever yett was borne!"

36. With that there came an arrow keene, out of an English bow,
Which stroke Erle Douglas on the brest
a deepe and deadlye blow.

37. Who never sayd more words than these;
"Fight on, my merry men all!
For why, my life is att [an] end,
lord Pearcy sees my fall."

38. Then leaving liffe, Erle Pearcy tooke
the dead man by the hand;
Who said, "Erle Dowglas, for thy life,
wold I had lost my land!

39. "O Christ! my verry hart doth bleed for sorrow for thy sake,
For sure, a more redoubted knight mischance cold never take."

40. A knight amongst the Scotts there was which saw Erle Douglas dye,
Who streight in hart did vow revenge upon the Lord Pearcye.

41. Sir Hugh Mountgomerye was he called, who, with a spere full bright,
Well mounted on a gallant steed,
ran feircly through the fight,

42. And past the English archers all, without all dread or feare,
And through Erle Percyes body then he thrust his hatfull spere.

43. With such a vehement force and might his body he did gore,
The staff ran through the other side
a large cloth-yard and more.

44. Thus did both those nobles dye, whose courage none cold staine;
An English archer then perceived the noble erle was slaine.

45. He had [a] good bow in his hand, made of a trusty tree;
An arrow of a cloth-yard long to the hard head haled hee.

46. Against Sir Hugh Mountgomerye his shaft full right he sett;
The grey-goose-winge that was there-on in his harts bloode was wett.

47. This fight from breake of day did last till setting of the sun,
For when the rung the evening-bell
the battele scarse was done.

48. With stout Erle Percy there was slaine
Sir John of Egerton,
Sir Robert Harcliffe and Sir William,
Sir James, that bold barron.

49. And with Sir George and Sir James, both knights of good account,
Good Sir Raphe Rebbye there was slaine, whose prowesse did surmount.

50. For Witherington needs must I wayle as one in dolefull dumpes,

1 mad. 2 they laid on heavily.

For when his leggs were smitten of,
he fought upon his stumpes.

51. And with Erle Dowglas there was slaine
Sir Hugh Mountgomerye,
And Sir Charles Morrell, that from feelde
one foote wold never flee;

52. Sir Roger Hever of Harcliffe tow, his sisters sonne was hee;
Sir David Lambwell, well esteemed,
but saved he cold not bee.

53. And the Lord Maxwell, in like case, with Douglas he did dye;
Of twenty hundred Scottish speeres, scarce fifty-five did flye.

54. Of fifteen hundred Englishmen went home but fifty-three;
The rest in Chevy Chase were slaine,
under the greenwoode tree.

55. Next day did many widdowes come their husbands to bewayle;
They washt their wounds in brinish teares,
but all wold not prevayle.

56. Theyr bodyes, bathed in purple blood,
the bore with them away;
They kist them dead a thousand times ere the were cladd in clay.

57. The newes was brought to Eddenborrow, where Scottlands king did rayne,
That brave Erle Douglas soddainlye was with an arrow slaine.

58. "O heavy newes!" King James can say;
"Scottland may wittenesse bee
I have not any captaine more of such account as hee."

59. Like tydings to King Henery came, within as short a space,
That Pearcy of Northumberland was slaine in Chevy Chase.

60. "Now God be with him!" said our king,
"sith it will noe better bee;
I trust I have within my realme five hundred as good as hee.

61. "Yett shall not Scotts nor Scottland say but I will vengeance take,
And be revenged on them all for brave Erle Percyes sake."

62. This vow the king did well performe after on Humble-downe;
In one day fifty knights were slayne,
with lords of great renowne.

63. And of the rest, of small account, did many hundreds dye:
Thus endeth the hunting in Chevy Chase,
made by the Erle Pearcye.

64. God save our king, and blesse this land with plentye, joy, and peace,
And grant hencforth that foule debate
twixt noble men may ceaze!

ROBIN HOOD RESCUING THE WIDOW'S THREE SONS

1. There are twelve months in all the year
As I hear many men say,
But the merriest month in all the year.
Is the merry month of May.

2. Now Robin Hood is to Nottingham gone,
With a link a down and a day,
And there he met a silly old woman,
Was weeping on the way.

3. "What news? what news, thou silly old woman?
What news hast thou for me?"
Said she, "There's three squires in Nottingham town
To-day is condemned to die."

4. "O have they parishes burnt?" he said,
"Or have they ministers slain?
Or have they robbed any virgin,
Or with other men's wives have lain?"

5. "They have no parishes burnt, good sir,
Nor yet have ministers slain,
Nor have they robbed any virgin,
Nor with other men's wives have lain."

6. "O what have they done?" said bold Robin Hood,
"I pray thee tell to me":
"It's for slaying of the king's fallow deer, Bearing their long bows with thee."

7. "Dost thou not mind, old woman," he said,
"Since thou made me sup and dine?
By the truth of my body," quoth bold Robin Hood,
"You could not tell it in better time."

8. Now Robin Hood is to Nottingham gone,
With a link a down and a day,
And there he met with a silly old palmer,
Was walking along the highway.

9. "What news? what news, thou silly old man?
What news, I do thee pray?"
Said he, "Three squires in Nottingham town
Are condemnd to die this day."

10. "Come change thy apparel with me, old man,
Come change thy apparel for mine;
Here is forty shillings in good silver,
Go drink it in beer or wine."

11. "O thine apparel is good," he said,
"And mine is ragged and torn;
Wherever you go, wherever you ride,
Laugh neer an old man to scorn."

12. "Come change thy apparel with me, old churl,
Come change thy apparel with mine;
Here are twenty pieces of good broad gold,
Go feast thy brethren with wine."

13. Then he put on the old man's hat,
It stood full high on the crown:
"The first bold bargain that I come at,
It shall make thee come down."

14. Then he put on the old man's cloak,
Was patchd black, blew, and red;
He thought no shame all the day long
To wear the bags of bread.

15. Then he put on the old man's breeks,[1]
Was patchd from ballup[2] to side;
"By the truth of my body," bold Robin can say,
"This man lovd little pride."

16. Then he put on the old man's hose,
Were patched from knee to wrist;
"By the truth of my body," said bold Robin Hood,
"I'd laugh if I had any list."[3]

17. Then he put on the old man's shoes,
Were patched both beneath and aboon;
Then Robin Hood swore a solemn oath,
"It's good habit that makes a man."

18. Now Robin Hood is to Nottingham gone,
With a link a down and a down,
And there he met with the proud sheriff,
Was walking along the town.

19. "O save, O save, O sheriff," he said,
"O save, and you may see!
And what will you give to a silly old man
To-day will your hangman be?"

20. "Some suits, some suits," the sheriff he said,
"Some suits I'll give to thee;
Some suits, some suits, and pence thirteen
To-day's a hangman's fee."

21. Then Robin he turns him round about,
And jumps from stock to stone;
"By the truth of my body," the sheriff he said,
"That's well jumpt, thou nimble old man."

22. "I was neer a hangman in all my life,
Nor yet intends to trade;
But curst be he," said bold Robin,
"That first a hangman was made.

23. "I've a bag for meal, and a bag for malt,
And a bag for barley and corn;
A bag for bread, and a bag for beef,
And a bag for my little small horn.

24. "I have a horn in my pocket,
I got it from Robin Hood,
And still when I set it to my mouth,
For thee it blows little good."

25. "O wind thy horn, thou proud fellow,
Of thee I have no doubt;[1]
I wish that thou give such a blast
Till both thy eyes fall out."

26. The first loud blast that he did blow,
He blew both loud and shrill;
A hundred and fifty of Robin Hood's men
Came riding over the hill.

27. The next loud blast that he did give,
He blew both loud and amain,

1 breeches. 2 front flap. 3 inclination.

1 fear.

And quickly sixty of Robin Hood's men
Came shining over the plain.

28. "O who are yon," the sheriff he said,
"Come tripping over the lee?"
"The're my attendants," brave Robin did say,
"They'll pay a visit to thee."

29. They took the gallows from the slack,[1]
They set it in the glen,
They hangd the proud sheriff on that,
Releasd their own three men.

ROBIN HOOD'S DEATH AND BURIAL

1. When Robin Hood and Little John
Down a down a down a down
Went oer yon bank of broom,
Said Robin Hood bold to Little John,
"We have shot for many a pound."
Hey down, a down, a down.

2. "But I am not able to shoot one shot more,
My broad arrows will not flee;
But I have a cousin lives down below,
Please God, she will bleed me."

3. Now Robin he is to fair Kirkly gone,
As fast as he can win;[2]
But before he came there, as we do hear,
He was taken very ill.

4. And when he came to fair Kirkly hall,
He knockd all at the ring,
But none was so ready as his cousin herself
For to let bold Robin in.

5. "Will you please to sit down, cousin Robin," she said,
"And drink some beer with me?"
"No, I will neither eat nor drink,
Till I am blooded by thee."

6. "Well, I have a room, cousin Robin," she said,
"Which you did never see,
And if you please to walk therein,
You blooded by me shall be."

7. She took him by the lily-white hand,
And led him to a private room,
And there she blooded bold Robin Hood,
While one drop of blood would run down.

8. She blooded him in a vein of the arm,
And locked him up in the room;
Then did he bleed all the live-long day,
Until the next day at noon.

9. He then bethought him of a casement there,
Thinking for to get down;
But was so weak he could not leap,
He could not get him down.

10. He then bethought him of his bugle-horn,
Which hung low down to his knee;
He set his horn unto his mouth,
And blew out weak blasts three.

11. Then Little John, when hearing him,
As he sat under a tree,
"I fear my master is now near dead,
He blows so wearily."

12. Then Little John to fair Kirkly is gone,
As fast as he can dree;[1]
But when he came to Kirkly-hall,
He broke locks two or three:

13. Until he came bold Robin to see,
Then he fell on his knee;
"A boon, a boon," cries Little John,
"Master, I beg of thee."

14. "What is that boon," said Robin Hood,
"Little John, [thou] begs of me?"
"It is to burn fair Kirkly-hall,
And all their nunnery."

15. "Now nay, now nay," quoth Robin Hood,
"That boon I'll not grant thee;
I never hurt woman in all my life,
Nor men in woman's company.

16. "I never hurt fair maid in all my time,
Nor at mine end shall it be;
But give me my bent bow in my hand,
And a broad arrow I'll let flee;
And where this arrow is taken up,
There shall my grave digged be.

17. "Lay me a green sod under my head,
And another at my feet;

1 low ground. 2 arrive.

1 endure, manage.

And lay my bent bow by my side,
Which was my music sweet;
And make my grave of gravel and green,
Which is most right and meet.

18. "Let me have length and breadth enough,
With a green sod under my head;
That they may say, when I am dead
Here lies bold Robin Hood."

19. These words they readily granted him,
Which did bold Robin please:
And there they buried bold Robin Hood,
Within the fair Kirkleys.

MARY HAMILTON

1. Word's gane to the kitchen,
And word's gane to the ha,
That Marie Hamilton gangs wi bairn [1]
To the hichest Stewart of a'.

2. He's courted her in the kitchen,
He's courted her in the ha,
He's courted her in the laigh [2] cellar,
And that was warst of a'.

3. She's tyed it in her apron
And she's thrown it in the sea;
Says, "Sink ye, swim ye, bonny wee babe!
You'l neer get mair o me."

4. Down then cam the auld queen,
Goud tassels tying her hair:
"O Marie, where's the bonny wee babe
That I heard greet sae sair?"

5. "There was never a babe intill my room,
As little designs to be;
It was but a touch o my sair side,
Come oer my fair bodie."

6. "O Marie, put on your robes o black,
Or else your robes o brown,
For ye maun gang wi me the night,
To see fair Edinbro town."

7. "I winna put on my robes o black,
Nor yet my robes o brown;
But I'll put on my robes o white,
To shine through Edinbro town."

8. When she gaed up the Cannogate,
She laughd loud laughters three;
But whan she cam down the Cannogate
The tear blinded her ee.

9. When she gaed up the Parliament stair,
The heel cam aff her shee;
And lang or she cam down again
She was condemnd to dee.

10. When she cam down the Cannogate,
The Cannogate sae free,
Many a ladie lookd oer her window,
Weeping for this ladie.

11. "Ye need nae weep for me," she says,
"Ye need nae weep for me;
For had I not slain mine own sweet babe,
This death I wadna dee.

12. "Bring me a bottle of wine," she says,
"The best that eer ye hae,
That I may drink to my weil-wishers,
And they may drink to me.

13. "Here's a health to the jolly sailors,
That sail upon the main;
Let them never let on to my father and mother
But what I'm coming hame.

14. "Here's a health to the jolly sailors,
That sail upon the sea;
Let them never let on to my father and mother
That I cam here to dee.

15. "Oh little did my mother think,
The day she cradled me,
What lands I was to travel through,
What death I was to dee.

16. "Oh little did my father think,
The day he held up me,
What lands I was to travel through,
What death I was to dee.

17. "Last night I washd the queen's feet,
And gently laid her down;
And a' the thanks I've gotten the nicht
To be hangd in Edinbro town!

18. "Last nicht there was four Maries,
The nicht there'l be but three;
There was Marie Seton, and Marie Beton,
And Marie Carmichael, and me."

1 is with child. 2 low.

SIR THOMAS MALORY

Of Sir Thomas Malory we know very little. He is probably to be identified with a knight of that name who was born early in the fifteenth century, served in France under the earl of Warwick, and was member of Parliament for Warwickshire in 1445. He tells us himself at the conclusion of Morte Darthur that the book was "ended the ninth year of the reign of king Edward the Fourth," i.e. 1469–70. In the course of the work he frequently refers to a "French book" as his authority. The Morte Darthur, which tells the adventures of Arthur from his birth to his death, is a compilation from a great mass of Old French romances of King Arthur and his Round Table. Whether Malory made the compilation himself, or merely translated a French compilation, we do not know. The work was printed by the famous printer William Caxton in 1485, who divided it into twenty-one books. It is the intermediary through which the romances of King Arthur have been most widely known to English readers, and is one of the great masterpieces of our earlier prose — stately, dignified, yet easy and graceful in movement.

The selection here printed — the first seven chapters of Book XXI — contains the account of Arthur's last battle and death. The love of Sir Launcelot for Queen Guenever has been discovered; Launcelot has fled to his castle; Sir Mordred has gathered to himself many of the discontented and has proclaimed himself king.

The authoritative edition is that of Sommer, which reproduces exactly Caxton's text. In the selection here given the spelling is modernized, but the text is not otherwise changed.

LE MORTE DARTHUR

Book XXI

CHAPTER I

How Sir Mordred presumed and took on him to be King of England, and would have married the Queen, his uncle's wife

As Sir Mordred was ruler of all England, he did do make letters as though that they came from beyond the sea, and the letters specified that King Arthur was slain in battle with Sir Launcelot. Wherefore Sir Mordred made a parliament, and called the lords together, and there he made them to choose him king; and so he was crowned at Canterbury, and held a feast there fifteen days; and afterward he drew him unto Winchester, and there he took the Queen Guenever, and said plainly that he would wed her which was his uncle's wife and his father's wife. And so he made ready for the feast, and a day prefixed that they should be wedded; wherefore Queen Guenever was passing heavy. But she durst not discover her heart, but spake fair, and agreed to Sir Mordred's will. Then she desired of Sir Mordred for to go to London, to buy all manner of things that longed unto the wedding. And because of her fair speech Sir Mordred trusted her well enough, and gave her leave to go. And so when she came to London she took the Tower of London, and suddenly in all haste possible she stuffed it with all manner of victual, and well garnished it with men, and so kept it. Then when Sir Mordred wist and understood how he was beguiled, he was passing wroth out of measure. And a short tale for to make, he went and laid a mighty siege about the Tower of London, and made many great assaults thereat, and threw many great engines unto them, and shot great guns. But all might not prevail Sir Mordred, for Queen Guenever would never for fair speech nor for foul, would never trust to come in his hands again. Then came the Bishop of Canterbury, the which was a noble clerk and an holy man, and thus he said to Sir Mordred: "Sir, what will ye do? will ye first displease God and sithen shame yourself, and all knighthood? Is not King Arthur your uncle, no farther but your mother's brother, and on her himself King Arthur begat you upon his own sister,[1] therefore how may you wed your father's wife?" "Sir," said the noble clerk, "leave this opinion or I shall curse you with book and bell and candle." "Do thou thy worst," said Sir Mordred, "wit thou well I shall defy thee." "Sir," said the Bishop, "and wit you well I shall not fear me to do that me ought to do. Also where ye noise where my lord Arthur is slain, and that is not so, and therefore ye will make a foul work in this land." "Peace, thou false priest," said Sir Mordred, "for an thou chafe me any more I shall make strike off thy head." So the Bishop departed and did the cursing in the most orgulist[2] wise that might be done. And then Sir Mordred sought the Bishop of Canterbury, for to have slain him. Then the Bishop fled, and took part of his goods with him, and went nigh unto Glaston-

1 Mordred was the illegitimate son of Arthur. His mother was Arthur's half-sister, a fact of which Arthur was at the time ignorant (Book I, Chap. xvii).

2 haughtiest.

ury; and there he was as priest hermit in a hapel, and lived in poverty and in holy rayers, for well he understood that mis-hievous war was at hand. Then Sir Mordred ought on Queen Guenever by letters and onds,[1] and by fair means and foul means, or to have her to come out of the Tower of ondon; but all this availed not, for she an-wered him shortly, openly and privily, that e had liefer slay herself than to be married ith him. Then came word to Sir Mordred hat King Arthur had araised the siege for ir Launcelot, and he was coming homeward ith a great host, to be avenged upon Sir Iordred; wherefore Sir Mordred made rite writs to all the barony of this land, and uch people drew to him. For then was the ommon voice among them that with Arthur as none other life but war and strife, and ith Sir Mordred was great joy and bliss. hus was Sir Arthur depraved, and evil said f. And many there were that King Arthur ad made up of nought, and given them nds, might not then say him a good word. o ye all Englishmen, see ye not what a mis-hief here was! for he that was the most king nd knight of the world, and most loved the ellowship of noble knights, and by him they ere all upholden, now might not these nglishmen hold them content with him. o thus was the old custom and usage of his land; and also men say that we of this nd have not yet lost nor forgotten that ustom and usage. Alas, this is a great de-ault of us Englishmen, for there may no hing please us no term. And so fared the eople at that time, they were better pleased ith Sir Mordred than they were with King rthur; and much people drew unto Sir Mor-red, and said they would abide with him or better and for worse. And so Sir Mor-red drew with a great host to Dover, for here he heard say that Sir Arthur would rrive, and so he thought to beat his own ather from his lands; and the most part of ll England held with Sir Mordred, the peo-le were so new-fangle.

CHAPTER II

How after that King Arthur had tidings, he returned and came to Dover, where Sir Mordred met him to let his landing; and of the death of Sir Gawaine

And so as Sir Mordred was at Dover with his host, there came King Arthur with a great navy of ships, and galleys, and carracks. And there was Sir Mordred ready awaiting upon his landing, to let[1] his own father to land upon the land that he was king over. Then there was launching of great boats and small, and full of noble men of arms; and there was much slaughter of gentle knights, and many a full bold baron was laid full low, on both parties. But King Arthur was so courageous that there might no manner of knights let him to land, and his knights fiercely followed him; and so they landed maugre Sir Mordred and all his power, and put Sir Mordred aback, that he fled and all his people. So when this battle was done, King Arthur let bury his people that were dead. And then was noble Sir Gawaine found in a great boat, lying more than half dead. When Sir Arthur wist that Sir Gawaine was laid so low, he went unto him; and there the king made sorrow out of measure, and took Sir Gawaine in his arms, and thrice he there swooned. And then when he awaked, he said: "Alas, Sir Gawaine, my sister's son, here now thou liest, the man in the world that I loved most; and now is my joy gone, for now, my nephew Sir Gawaine, I will discover me unto your person: in Sir Launcelot and you I most had my joy, and mine affiance, and now have I lost my joy of you both; wherefore all mine earthly joy is gone from me." "Mine uncle King Arthur," said Sir Gawaine, "wit you well my death-day is come, and all is through mine own hastiness and wilfulness; for I am smitten upon the old wound the which Sir Launcelot gave me, on the which I feel well I must die; and had Sir Launcelot been with you as he was, this unhappy war had never begun; and of all this am I causer, for Sir Launcelot and his blood, through their prowess, held all your cankered enemies in subjection and daunger. And now," said Sir Gawaine, "ye shall miss Sir Launcelot. But alas, I would not accord with him, and therefore," said Sir Gawaine, "I pray you, fair uncle, that I may have paper, pen, and ink, that I may write to Sir Launcelot a cedle[2] with mine own hands." And then when paper and ink was brought, then Gawaine was set up weakly by King Arthur, for he was shriven a little to-fore; and then he wrote thus, as the French book maketh mention: "Unto Sir Launcelot, flower of all noble knights that ever I heard of or saw by my days, I, Sir Gawaine, King Lot's son of Orkney, sister's son unto the noble King Arthur, send thee greeting, and let thee have knowledge that the tenth day of May I was smitten upon the old wound that thou gavest me afore the city of Benwick, and through the same wound that thou gavest me I am come to my death-day. And I will that all the world wit, that I, Sir Gawaine, knight of the Table Round, sought my death, and not through thy deserving, but it was mine own seeking; wherefore I beseech thee, Sir Launcelot, to return again unto this realm, and see my tomb, and pray some prayer more or less for my soul. And this same day that I wrote this cedle, I was hurt to the death in the same wound, the which I had of thy hand, Sir Launcelot; for of a more nobler man might I not be slain. Also Sir Launcelot, for all the love that ever was betwixt us, make no tarrying, but come over the sea in all haste, that thou mayst with thy noble knights rescue that noble king that made thee knight, that is my lord Arthur; for he is full straightly bestad with a false traitor, that is my half-brother, Sir Mordred; and he hath let crown him king, and would have wedded my lady Queen Guenever, and so had he done had she not put herself in the Tower of London. And so the tenth day of May last past, my lord Arthur and we all landed upon them at Dover; and there we put that false traitor, Sir Mordred, to flight, and there it misfortuned me to be stricken upon thy stroke. And at the date of this letter was written, but two hours and a half afore my death, written with mine own hand, and so subscribed with part of my heart's blood. And I require thee, most famous knight of the world, that thou wilt see my tomb." And then Sir Gawaine wept, and King Arthur wept; and then they swooned both. And when they awaked both, the king made Sir Gawaine to receive his Saviour. And then Sir Gawaine prayed the king for to send for Sir Launcelot, and to cherish him above all other knights. And so at the hour of noon Sir Gawaine yielded up the spirit; and then the king let inter him in a chapel within Dover Castle; and there yet all men may see the skull of him, and the same wound is seen that Sir Launcelot gave him in battle. Then was it told the king that Sir Mordred had pight a new field upon Barham Down. And upon the morn the king rode thither to him, and there was a great battle betwixt them, and much people was slain on both parties; but at the last Sir Arthur's party stood best, and Sir Mordred and his party fled unto Canterbury.

1 messages.

1 hinder. 2 note.

CHAPTER III

How after, Sir Gawaine's ghost appeared to King Arthur, and warned him that he should not fight that day

And then the king let search all the town for his knights that were slain, and interred them; and salved them with soft salves that so sore were wounded. Then much people drew unto King Arthur. And then they said that Sir Mordred warred upon King Arthur with wrong. And then King Arthur drew him with his host down by the seaside westward toward Salisbury; and there was a day assigned betwixt King Arthur and Sir Mordred, that they should meet upon a down beside Salisbury, and not far from the sea side; and this day was assigned on a Monday after Trinity Sunday, whereof King Arthur was passing glad, that he might be avenged upon Sir Mordred. Then Sir Mordred araised much people about London, for the men of Kent, Southsex, and Surrey, Estsex, and of Southfolk, and of Northfolk, held the most part with Sir Mordred; and many a full noble knight drew unto Sir Mordred and to the king: but they that loved Sir Launcelot drew unto Sir Mordred. So upon Trinity Sunday at night, King Arthur dreamed a wonderful dream, and that was this: that him seemed he sat upon a chaflet[1] in a chair, and the chair was fast to a wheel, and there upon sat King Arthur in the richest cloth of gold that might be made; and the king thought there was under him, far from him, an hideous deep black water, and therein were all manner of serpents, and worms, and wild beasts, foul and horrible; and suddenly the king thought the wheel turned up-so-down, and he fell among the serpents, and every beast took him by a limb; and then the king cried as he lay in his bed and slept, "Help." And then knights, squires, and yeomen, awaked the king; and then he was so amazed that he wist not where he was; and then he fell on slumbering again, not sleeping nor thoroughly waking. So the king seemed verily that there came Sir Gawaine unto him with a number of fair ladies with him. And when King Arthur saw him, then he said, "Welcome, my sister's son; I weened thou hadst been dead, and now I see thee alive much am I beholding unto almighty Jesu. O fair nephew and my sister's son, what be these ladies that hither be come with you?" "Sir," said Sir Gawaine, "all these be ladies for whom I have foughten when I was man

1 platform. 2 it seemed to the king.

ving, and all these are those that I did bate for in righteous quarrel; and God hath ven them that grace at their great prayer, ecause I did battle for them, that they ould bring me hither unto you: thus much ith God given me leave, for to warn you of our death; for an ye fight as to-morn with r Mordred, as ye both have assigned, doubt e not ye must be slain, and the most part of our people on both parties. And for the reat grace and goodness that almighty Jesu ath unto you, and for pity of you, and many ore other good men there shall be slain, od hath sent me to you of his special grace,
o give you warning that in no wise ye do attle as to-morn, but that ye take a treaty r a month day; and proffer you largely, so s to-morn to be put in a delay. For within a onth shall come Sir Launcelot with all his oble knights, and rescue you worshipfully, nd slay Sir Mordred, and all that ever will old with him." Then Sir Gawaine and all ne ladies vanished. And anon the king alled upon his knights, squires, and yeomen, nd charged them wightly [1] to fetch his noble rds and wise bishops unto him. And when ney were come, the king told them his vision, what Sir Gawaine had told him, and arned him that if he fought on the morn
e should be slain. Then the king comanded Sir Lucan the Butler, and his brother ir Bedivere, with two bishops with them, nd charged them in any wise, an they might,
Take a treaty for a month day with Sir
Mordred, and spare not, proffer him lands nd goods as much as ye think best." So nen they departed, and came to Sir Morred, where he had a grim host of an hundred housand men. And there they entreated ir Mordred long time; and at the last Sir Mordred was agreed for to have Cornwall nd Kent, by Arthur's days: after, all Eng-and, after the days of King Arthur.

CHAPTER IV

How by misadventure of an adder the battle began, where Mordred was slain, and Arthur hurt to the death

Then were they condescended [2] that King Arthur and Sir Mordred should meet betwixt both their hosts, and everich [3] of them should bring fourteen persons; and they came with this word unto Arthur. Then said he: "I am glad that this is done:" and so he went into the field. And when Arthur should depart, he warned all his host that an they see any sword drawn: "Look ye come on fiercely, and slay that traitor, Sir Mordred, for I in no wise trust him." In like wise Sir Mordred warned his host that: "An ye see any sword drawn, look that ye come on fiercely, and so slay all that ever before you standeth; for in no wise I will not trust for this treaty, for I know well my father will be avenged on me." And so they met as their appointment was, and so they were agreed and accorded thoroughly; and wine was fetched, and they drank. Right soon came an adder out of a little heath bush, and it stung a knight on the foot. And when the knight felt him stung, he looked down and saw the adder, and then he drew his sword to slay the adder, and thought of none other harm. And when the host on both parties saw that sword drawn, then they blew beams,[1] trumpets, and horns, and shouted grimly. And so both hosts dressed them together. And King Arthur took his horse, and said: "Alas this unhappy day!" and so rode to his party. And Sir Mordred in like wise. And never was there seen a more dolefuller battle in no Christian land; for there was but rushing and riding, foining and striking, and many a grim word was there spoken either to other, and many a deadly stroke. But ever King Arthur rode throughout the battle of Sir Mordred many times, and did full nobly as a noble king should,
and at all times he fainted never; and Sir Mordred that day put him in devoir, and in great peril. And thus they fought all the long day, and never stinted till the noble knights were laid to the cold earth; and ever they fought still till it was near night, and by that time was there an hundred thousand laid dead upon the down. Then was Arthur wood [2] wroth out of measure, when he saw his people so slain from him. Then the king looked about him, and then was he ware, of all his host and of all his good knights, were left no more alive but two knights; that one was Sir Lucan the Butler, and his brother Sir Bedivere, and they were full sore wounded. "Jesu mercy," said the king,
"where are all my noble knights become?
Alas that ever I should see this doleful day,
for now," said Arthur, "I am come to mine end. But would to God that I wist where were that traitor Sir Mordred, that hath caused all this mischief." Then was King Arthur ware where Sir Mordred leaned upon his sword among a great heap of dead men. "Now give me my spear," said Arthur

1 swiftly. 2 agreed. 3 each.

1 clarions. 2 mad.

unto Sir Lucan, "for yonder I have espied the traitor that all this woe hath wrought." "Sir, let him be," said Sir Lucan, "for he is unhappy;[1] and if ye pass this unhappy day ye shall be right well revenged upon him. Good lord, remember ye of your night's dream, and what the spirit of Sir Gawaine told you this night, yet God of his great goodness hath preserved you hitherto. Therefore, for God's sake, my lord, leave off by this, for blessed be God ye have won the field, for here we be three alive, and with Sir Mordred is none alive; and if ye leave off now, this wicked day of destiny is past." "Tide me death, betide me life," saith the king, "now I see him yonder alone he shall never escape mine hands, for at a better avail shall I never have him." "God speed you well," said Sir Bedivere. Then the king gat his spear in both his hands, and ran toward Sir Mordred, crying: "Traitor, now is thy death day come." And when Sir Mordred heard Sir Arthur, he ran until him with his sword drawn in his hand. And there King Arthur smote Sir Mordred under the shield, with a foin of his spear, throughout the body, more than a fathom. And when Sir Mordred felt that he had his death wound he thrust himself with the might that he had up to the bur of King Arthur's spear. And right so he smote his father Arthur, with his sword holden in both his hands, on the side of the head, that the sword pierced the helmet and the brain-pan, and therewithal Sir Mordred fell stark dead to the earth; and the noble Arthur fell in a swoon to the earth, and there he swooned ofttimes. And Sir Lucan the Butler and Sir Bedivere ofttimes heaved him up. And so weakly they led him betwixt them both, to a little chapel not far from the seaside. And when the king was there he thought him well eased. Then heard they people cry in the field. "Now go thou, Sir Lucan," said the king, "and do me to wit what betokens that noise in the field." So Sir Lucan departed, for he was grievously wounded in many places. And so as he yede,[2] he saw and hearkened by the moonlight, how that pillers and robbers were come into the field, to pill and to rob many a full noble knight of brooches, and beads, of many a good ring, and of many a rich jewel; and who that were not dead all out, there they slew them for their harness and their riches. When Sir Lucan understood this work, he came to the king as soon as he might, and told him all what he had heard and seen. "Therefore by my rede," sa Sir Lucan, "it is best that we bring you some town." "I would it were so," said t king.

1 of ill omen to you. 2 went.

CHAPTER V

How King Arthur commanded to cast h sword Excalibur into the water, and how was delivered to ladies in a barge

"But I may not stand, mine head wor so. Ah Sir Launcelot," said King Arthu "this day have I sore missed thee: alas, th ever I was against thee, for now have I n death, whereof Sir Gawaine me warned my dream." Then Sir Lucan took up t king the one part, and Sir Bedivere the oth part, and in the lifting the king swoone and Sir Lucan fell in a swoon with the lif that the part of his guts fell out of his bod and therewith the noble knight's hea brast. And when the king awoke, he behel Sir Lucan, how he lay foaming at the mout and part of his guts lay at his feet. "Alas, said the king, "this is to me a full heav sight, to see this noble duke so die for m sake, for he would have holpen me, that ha more need of help than I. Alas, he woul not complain him, his heart was so set to hel me: now Jesu have mercy upon his soul!" Then Sir Bedivere wept for the death of h brother. "Leave this mourning and weep ing," said the king, "for all this will nc avail me, for wit thou well an I might liv myself, the death of Sir Lucan would griev me evermore; but my time hieth fast," sai the king. "Therefore," said Arthur unt Sir Bedivere, "take thou Excalibur, my goo sword, and go with it to yonder water side and when thou comest there I charge the throw my sword in that water, and com again and tell me what thou there seest." "My lord," said Bedivere, "your command ment shall be done, and lightly bring yo word again." So Sir Bedivere departed, an by the way he beheld that noble sword, tha the pommel and the haft was all of precious stones; and then he said to himself: "If throw this rich sword in the water, thereo shall never come good, but harm and loss." And then Sir Bedivere hid Excalibur under a tree. And so, as soon as he might, he came again unto the king, and said he had been a the water, and had thrown the sword in the water. "What saw thou there?" said the king. "Sir," he said, "I saw nothing but waves and winds." "That is untruly said of thee," said the king, "therefore go thou lightly again, nd do my commandment; as thou art to e lief and dear, spare not, but throw it in."

Then Sir Bedivere returned again, and took he sword in his hand; and then him thought in and shame to throw away that noble word, and so eft he hid the sword, and reurned again, and told to the king that he had been at the water, and done his commandment. "What saw thou there?" said the king. "Sir," he said, "I saw nothing but he waters wap[1] and waves wan." "Ah, traitor untrue," said King Arthur, "now hast thou betrayed me twice. Who would have weened that, thou that hast been to me so lief and dear? and thou art named a noble knight, and would betray me for the richness of the sword. But now go again lightly, for thy long tarrying putteth me in great jeopardy of my life, for I have taken cold. And but if thou do now as I bid thee, if ever I may see thee, I shall slay thee with mine own hands; for thou wouldst for my rich sword see me dead." Then Sir Bedivere departed, and went to the sword, and lightly took it up, and went to the water side; and there he bound the girdle about the hilts, and then he threw the sword as far into the water, as he might; and there came an arm and an hand above the water and met it, and caught it, and so shook it thrice and brandished, and then vanished away the hand with the sword in the water. So Sir Bedivere came again to the king, and told him what he saw.
"Alas," said the king, "help me hence, for I dread me I have tarried over long." Then Sir Bedivere took the king upon his back, and so went with him to that water side. And when they were at the water side, even fast by the bank hoved a little barge with many fair ladies in it, and among them all was a queen, and all they had black hoods, and all they wept and shrieked when they saw King Arthur. "Now put me into the barge," said the king. And so he did softly; and there received him three queens with great mourning; and so they set them down, and in one of their laps King Arthur laid his head. And then that queen said: "Ah, dear brother, why have ye tarried so long from me? alas, this wound on your head hath caught over-much cold." And so then they rowed from the land, and Sir Bedivere beheld all those ladies go from him. Then Sir Bedivere cried: "Ah my lord Arthur, what shall become of me, now ye go from me and leave me here alone
among mine enemies?" "Comfort thyself," said the king, "and do as well as thou mayest, for in me is no trust for to trust in; for I will into the vale of Avilion to heal me of my grievous wound: and if thou hear never more of me, pray for my soul." But ever the queens and ladies wept and shrieked, that it was pity to hear. And as soon as Sir Bedivere had lost the sight of the barge, he wept and wailed, and so took the forest; and so he went all that night, and in the morning he was ware betwixt two holts hoar, of a chapel and an hermitage.

[1] ripple.

CHAPTER VI

How Sir Bedivere found him on the morrow dead in an hermitage, and how he abode there with the hermit

Then was Sir Bedivere glad, and thither he went; and when he came into the chapel, he saw where lay an hermit grovelling on all four, there fast by a tomb was new graven.
When the hermit saw Sir Bedivere he knew him well, for he was but little to-fore Bishop of Canterbury, that Sir Mordred flemed.[1]
"Sir," said Bedivere, "what man is there interred that ye pray so fast for?" "Fair son," said the hermit, "I wot not verily, but by deeming. But this night, at midnight, here came a number of ladies, and brought hither a dead corpse, and prayed me to bury him; and here they offered an hundred tapers, and they gave me an hundred besants."
"Alas," said Sir Bedivere, "that was my lord King Arthur, that here lieth buried in this chapel." Then Sir Bedivere swooned; and when he awoke he prayed the hermit he might abide with him still there, to live with fasting and prayers. "For from hence will I never go," said Sir Bedivere, "by my will, but all the days of my life here to pray for my lord Arthur." "Ye are welcome to me," said the hermit, "for I know ye better than ye ween that I do. Ye are the bold Bedivere, and the full noble duke, Sir Lucan the Butler, was your brother." Then Sir Bedivere told the hermit all as ye have heard to-fore. So there bode Sir Bedivere with the hermit that was to-fore Bishop of Canterbury, and there Sir Bedivere put upon him poor clothes, and served the hermit full lowly in fasting and in prayers. Thus of Arthur I find never more written in books that be authorised, nor more of the very certainty of his death heard
I never read, but thus was he led away in a ship wherein were three queens; that one was King Arthur's sister, Queen Morgan le Fay; the other was the Queen of Northalgis;

[1] put to flight.

the third was the Queen of the Waste Lands. Also there was Nimue, the chief lady of the lake, that had wedded Pelleas the good knight; and this lady had done much for King Arthur, for she would never suffer Sir Pelleas to be in no place where he should be in danger of his life; and so he lived to the uttermost of his days with her in great rest. More of the death of King Arthur could I never find, but that ladies brought him to his burials; and such one was buried there, that the hermit bare witness that sometime was Bishop of Canterbury, but yet the hermit knew not in certain that he was verily the body of King Arthur: for this tale Sir Bedivere, knight of the Table Round, made it to be written.

CHAPTER VII

Of the opinion of some men of the death of King Arthur; and how Queen Guenever made her a nun in Almesbury

Yet some men say in many parts of England that King Arthur is not dead, but had by the will of our Lord Jesu into another place; and men say that he shall come again, and he shall win the holy cross. I will not say it shall be so, but rather I will say, here in this world he changed his life. But many men say that there is written upon his tomb this verse: Hic iacet Arthurus, Rex quondam Rexque futurus.[1] Thus leave I here Sir Bedivere with the hermit, that dwelled that time in a chapel beside Glastonbury, and there was his hermitage. And so they lived in their prayers, and fastings, and great abstinence. And when Queen Guenever understood that King Arthur was slain, and all the noble knights, Sir Mordred and all the remnant, then the queen stole away, and five ladies with her, and so she went to Almesbury; and there she let make herself a nun, and ware white clothes and black, and great penance she took, as ever did sinful lady in this land, and never creature could make her merry but lived in fasting, prayers, and alms-deeds, that all manner of people marvelled how virtuously she was changed. Now leave we Queen Guenever in Almesbury, a nun in white clothes and black, and there she was abbess and ruler as reason would; and turn we from her, and speak we of Sir Launcelot du Lake.

1 Here lies Arthur, King aforetime, and King to be

THE ELIZABETHAN PERIOD

THE ELIZABETHAN PERIOD

The age of Elizabeth is England's Renaissance, appearing about a century later than the Renaissance on the Continent. This revival began in Italy at the close of the Middle Ages, after the Crusades and the fall of Constantinople had brought East and West in contact once more; and men of letters and even courtiers were reminded of the splendor of ancient civilization. The classics, especially Greek, which had been forgotten in western Europe, were studied with renewed eagerness. Through Italy and northward spread an enthusiasm for literature, the fine arts, and the joy of living. The invention and development of printing made books more easily accessible, and stimulated public interest in literature and learning. New aids to navigation, like the compass and Mercator's chart, made possible explorations and colonization beyond the seas. The old feudal system had broken up. Nationalism grew. And the claims of the Church were submitted to a close scrutiny, which culminated in the Protestant Reformation.

Like all "ages," the age of Elizabeth has no definite beginning or ending. True enough, Tottel's Miscellany (1557), which introduced two great literary forms into England, is almost coincident with the accession of Elizabeth in 1558; and 1603, the year of her death, saw the publication of Hamlet. For convenience' sake, these dates may be assumed as limits, but the spirit of the age may be found beyond these arbitrary markers.

The dominant figure of the period was Queen Elizabeth, the ablest of English rulers. Like her father, Henry VIII, she was skilled in statecraft, and surrounded herself with able advisers. She restored Protestantism, which Henry VIII had introduced into England and which her predecessor, Queen Mary, had abolished. She stabilized the government and maintained peace throughout most of her long reign. Under her rule, England advanced rapidly in commerce and colonization. Above all, she was the patroness Queen, whom all her courtiers and poets were eager to honor and to please.

It was, we have said, the time of the "revival of learning." Accompanying the enthusiasm for Latin and Greek arose in England a renewed interest in the literatures of France and especially Italy, the two countries which had a pronounced influence upon English letters in this period. Those who knew no foreign language had at their disposal the many splendid Elizabethan translations, like Lord Berners's Froissart (1525) and Marcus Aurelius (1534), Phaer's Æneid (1558–62), Golding's Ovid (1565–75), Paynter's Palace of Pleasure (1566, 1567), North's Plutarch (1579), Harrington's Orlando Furioso of Ariosto (1591), Chapman's Iliad (1598–1611), and Odyssey (1614, 1615), Fairfax's Jerusalem Delivered of Tasso (1600), and Florio's Montaigne (1603).

In England, moreover, it was the age of discovery and a time of national pride. Explorations followed rapidly upon Columbus's success. Names like Frobisher, Raleigh, and Drake became household words. The romantic accounts of these voyages were published by Hakluyt, Purchas, and others, to inspire poets from Shakespeare to Coleridge. Likewise, the stimulating past of England was made easily available in the chronicles of Fabyan, Stowe, and Holinshed, and in turn became the subject-matter of numerous chronicle plays treating the glorious epochs in England's history. National pride received additional inspiration from the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588.

In brief, the imagination of England was aroused. Men were exuberantly conscious of life, proud of individuality, eager to develop personality according to some pattern, to become well-rounded or "complete" gentlemen. There was a universal regard for craftsmanship. Even the ordinary man took delight in splendor, in dress, in pageantry, in elaborate language, in music. England was truly "merry," singing England.

Poetry was the language of the age. Numerous poets appeared, writing for the joy of it, because they had to express their feelings, or for the sake of emulation, often with no thought of publication or lasting fame. Some of the poems of these anonymous poets have been preserved in the various collections of the period, like Tottel's Miscellany (1557), A Paradise of Dainty Devices (1576), the most popular of all, A Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions (1578), and England's Helicon (1600). Many have been lost. Small poet and great poet alike experimented with verse forms. Some tried to establish English verse on classical or quantitative principles. Two noteworthy forms, the sonnet and blank verse, were developed, and in them the great Elizabethans achieved the utmost in artistic skill — extreme flexibility within a fixed form.

Prose developed more slowly. In the early part of the sixteenth century, Latin or even Greek was still the accepted vehicle for expressing thoughts or ideas. Sir Thomas More, in fact, first wrote his Utopia (1516) in Latin. The translators, chroniclers, and writers of books of instruction were the chief employers of prose. Noble passages occur in Berners's translation of Froissart, in Coverdale's and Tyndale's versions of the Bible (1539), in Florio's rendering of Montaigne's Essays, in Hakluyt, and in Raleigh. Sir Thomas Elyot in The Book of the Governor (1531) and Ascham wrote simple, direct prose, which fitted their purpose — education and instruction. The language of The Book of Common Prayer, compiled in 1548, is in itself edifying. In belles-lettres Lyly, Sidney, Nash, and Lodge in his Rosalind (1590) developed individual styles; and they helped to evolve a new literary form — prose fiction.

The glory of the age, however, was its drama, a remarkable literary phenomenon. Foreign influences did much to hasten and to help Elizabethan drama, but its chief characteristics remained essentially English. From abroad came many of its plots. From the classics, especially from Seneca, came the division of plays into five acts (a custom which prevailed until the days of Fielding), and much of the paraphernalia of the tragedy of blood, as well as the use of Latin stage directions, some of which have persisted to this day. These elements appear, for instance, in the first English tragedy in blank verse, Sackville and Norton's Gorboduc (first acted in 1561). They appear also in Shakespeare. From Plautus and Terence were derived such stock characters as the parasite and the miles gloriosus or braggart soldier; likewise, the type of plot that we find in Udall's Ralph Roister Doister and in the Comedy of Errors. In a short space of time the morality play and interlude of the beginning of the century were superseded by a new type of playwriting, to which Lyly, Kyd, Greene, and Peele contributed important and essential features, helping to make possible the astoundingly quick development of England's greatest dramatists, Marlowe and Shakespeare.

For a description of Elizabethan times the reader may consult H. T. Stephenson, Shakespeare's London (New York, 1905), J. D. Wilson, Life in Shakespeare's England (Cambridge, 1911), Stow's contemporary Survey of London (Everyman's Library), and volumes 3 and 4 of H. D. Traill, Social England. For the drama of the period see A. H. Thorndike, Tragedy (Houghton Mifflin Company), C. F. Tucker Brooke, Tudor Drama (Houghton Mifflin Company), and F. E. Schelling, Elizabethan Drama (Houghton Mifflin Company). The representative plays of the age may be found in W. A. Neilson, Chief Elizabethan Dramatists (Houghton Mifflin Company). F. E. Schelling, A Book of Elizabethan Lyrics (Ginn & Co.) contains a good survey of the poetry of the period.

SIR THOMAS WYATT (1503–1542)

The names of Sir Thomas Wyatt, baronet, 1503–1542, and Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey 1517?–1547, are usually connected in literary history, not as collaborators, after the manner of Beaumont and Fletcher, but as the writers who were the first to introduce into England the sonnet form — which was already well known in France, whither it had come from Italy. Surrey also earned the distinction of being the first English author to use blank verse, in his fragmentary translations from the Æneid. The works of both poets, after circulating about the court in manuscript, were printed for the first time in a collection of poems called Tottel's Miscellany, published in 1557, the year before Elizabeth's accession. In this volume, which appeared after the death of the writers, were gathered over ninety of Wyatt's poems and forty of Surrey's.

Of the lives of Wyatt and Surrey, it need only be said that both were well-educated, accomplished gentlemen at the court of Henry VIII. Surrey, the younger of the two, was son and heir of the third Duke of Norfolk. Both were engaged in various diplomatic missions, and both were, at times, imprisoned in the Tower, where Surrey, in 1547, was beheaded, five years after his cousin Catherine Howard, the Queen, had met a similar fate.

The fame of Wyatt and Surrey is due to the fact that they are the first writers to bring the spirit of the Italian Renaissance into English poetry. This influence is most evident in their sonnets, although even in them the English element is strong.

The Italian or Petrarchan sonnet consists of an octave — eight lines in iambic pentameter rhyming abba abba; and a sestet — six lines rhyming in any fashion, provided the last two lines are not a couplet. Both Wyatt and Surrey, however, inclined more to the form of the sonnet used later by Shakespeare and called after him Shakespearian. This consists of three groups of four lines, with a concluding couplet, thus: abab cdcd efef gg. Sometimes a rhyme used in one group might be employed in another also.

The blank verse of Surrey, destined to be the vehicle of expression for the great Elizabethan dramatists, is the same line as in the sonnet or in the couplets of Chaucer, without, of course, the rhyme.

Besides these two forms, Wyatt and Surrey used other verse structures also, as will be seen below.

THE LOVER COMPARETH HIS STATE TO A SHIP IN PERILOUS STORM TOSSED ON THE SEA

My galley charged with forgetfulness
Thorough sharp seas, in winter nights doth pass,
'Tween rock and rock; and eke my foe, alas,
That is my lord, steereth with cruelness,
And every hour, a thought in readiness,
As though that death were light in such a case.
An endless wind doth tear the sail apace
Of forced sighs, and trusty fearfulness.
A rain of tears, a cloud of dark disdain
Hath done the wearied cords great hinderance,
Wreathed with error, and with ignorance.
The stars be hid that led me to this pain;
Drowned is reason that should be my comfort,
And I remain, despairing of the port.

THE LOVER HAVING DREAMED OF ENJOYING OF HIS LOVE, COMPLAINETH THAT THE DREAM IS NOT EITHER LONGER OR TRUER

Unstable dream, according to the place,
Be steadfast once, or else at least be true.
By tasted sweetness make me not to rue
The sudden loss of thy false feigned grace.
By good respect in such a dangerous case
Thou broughtst not her into these tossing seas,
But madest my spirit to live, my care t'encrease,
My body in tempest her delight t'embrace.
The body dead, the spirit had his desire;
Painless was th' one, the other in delight.
Why then, alas! did it not keep it right,
But thus return to leap into the fire,
And where it was at wish, could not remain?
Such mocks of dreams do turn to deadly pain!

A RENOUNCING OF LOVE

Farewell, Love, and all thy laws for ever!
Thy baited hooks shall tangle me no more:
Senec and Plato call me from thy lore
To perfect wealth my wit for to endeavor.
In blind error when I did persever,
Thy sharp repulse, that pricketh aye so sore,
Taught me in trifles that I set no store;
But 'scape forth thence, since liberty is lever.[1]
Therefore, farewell! go trouble younger hearts,
And in me claim no more authority.
With idle youth go use thy property,
And thereon spend thy many brittle darts;
For hitherto though I have lost my time,
Me list no longer rotten boughs to climb.

THE LOVER BESEECHETH HIS MISTRESS NOT TO FORGET HIS STEADFAST FAITH AND TRUE INTENT

Forget not yet the tried intent
Of such a truth as I have meant;
My great travail so gladly spent,
Forget not yet!
Forget not yet when first began
The weary life ye know, since whan
The suit, the service none tell can;
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet the great assays,
The cruel wrong, the scornful ways,
The painful patience in delays,
Forget not yet!

Forget not! O, forget not this,
How long ago hath been, and is,
The mind that never meant amiss —
Forget not yet!

Forget not then thine own approved,
The which so long hath thee so loved,
Whose steadfast faith yet never moved:
Forget not this!

AN EARNEST SUIT TO HIS UNKIND MISTRESS NOT TO FORSAKE HIM

And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay, say nay, for shame!
To save thee from the blame
Of all my grief and grame.[2]
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath loved thee so long

1 dearer. 2 sadness.

In wealth and woe among:
And is thy heart so strong
As for to leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath given thee my heart
Never for to depart
Neither for pain nor smart:
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
And have no more pity
Of him that loveth thee?
Alas, thy cruelty!
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

THE LOVER COMPLAINETH THE UNKINDNESS OF HIS LOVE

My lute, awake, perform the last
Labor that thou and I shall waste,
And end that I have now begun.
And when this song is sung and past,
My lute, be still, for I have done.

As to be heard where ear is none,
As lead to grave [1] in marble stone,
My song may pierce her heart as soon.
Should we then sigh, or sing, or moan?
No, no, my lute, for I have done.

The rocks do not so cruelly
Repulse the waves continually,
As she my suit and affection;
So that I am past remedy,
Whereby [2] my lute and I have done.

Proud of the spoil that thou hast got
Of simple hearts through Lovës shot,
By whom unkind thou hast them won,
Think not he hath his bow forgot,
Although my lute and I have done.

Vengeance shall fall on thy disdain,
That makest but game of earnest pain;
Trow [3] not alone under the sun
Unquit [4] to cause thy lovers plain,
Although my lute and I have done.

May chance thee lie [5] withered and old
In winter nights, that are so cold,
Plaining in vain unto the moon;
Thy wishes then dare not be told:
Care then who list, for I have done.

And then may chance thee to repent
The time that thou hast lost and spent,
To cause thy lovers sigh and swoon:
Then shalt thou know beauty but lent,
And wish and want, as I have done.

Now cease, my lute! This is the last
Labor that thou and I shall waste;
And ended is that we begun:
Now is thy song both sung and past;
My lute, be still, for I have done.

1 cut into, inlay. 2 wherefore. 3 think.
4 without punishment.
5 It may happen that you will lie.

OF THE MEAN AND SURE ESTATE

WRITTEN TO JOHN POINS [1]

My mother's maids, when they did sew and spin,
They sang sometime a song of the field mouse
That, for because her livelihood was but thin,
Would needs go seek her townish sister's house.
She thought herself endured too much pain;
The stormy blasts her cave so sore did souse
That when the furrows swimmed with the rain,
She must lie cold and wet in sorry plight;
And worse than that, bare meat there did remain
To comfort her when she her house had dight; [2]
Sometime a barly corn; sometime a bean,
For which she labored hard both day and night
In harvest time whilst she might go and glean;
And where store [3] was stroyed [4] with the flood,
Then welaway! for she undone was clean.
Then was she fain to take instead of food
Sleep, if she might, her hunger to beguile.
"My sister," quoth she, "hath a living good,
And hence from me she dwelleth not a mile.
In cold and storm she lieth warm and dry
In bed of down, the dirt doth not defile
Her tender foot, she laboreth not as I.
Richly she feedeth and at the richman's cost,
And for her meat she needs not crave nor cry.
By sea, by land, of the delicates, the most

1 A friend of Wyatt's. 2 put in shape.
3 supply. 4 destroyed.

er cater [1] seeks and spareth for no peril,
e feedeth on boiled bacon, meat and roast,
nd hath thereof neither charge nor travail;
nd when she list, the liquor of the grape oth glad her heart till that her belly swell."
And at this journey she maketh but a jape; [2] forth she goeth, trusting of all this wealth ith her sister her part so for to shape, at if she might keep herself in health,
live a lady while her life doth last.
And to the door now is she come by stealth,
nd with her foot anon she scrapeth full fast.
n' other for fear durst not well scarce appear,
every noise so was the wretch aghast.
last she asked softly who was there,
nd in her language as well as she could.
Peep!" quoth the other sister, "I am here."
Peace," quoth the town mouse, "why speakest thou so loud?"
nd by the hand she took her fair and well.
Welcome," quoth she, "my sister, by the Rood!"
She feasted her, that joy it was to tell ne fare they had; they drank the wine so clear, nd as to purpose now and then it fell,
ne cheered her with "Ho, sister, what cheer!"
Amid this joy befell a sorry chance, nat, welaway! the stranger bought full dear
ne fare she had, for, as she looks askance, nder a stool she spied two steaming [3] eyes a round head with sharp ears. In France as never mouse so feared, for, though unwise ad not i-seen such a beast before, et had nature taught her after her guise
o know her foe and dread him evermore.
ne towney mouse fled, she knew whither to go;
n' other had no shift, but wanders sore eard of her life. At home she wished her tho,[4] nd to the door, alas! as she did skip,
he heaven it would, lo! and eke her chance was so,
t the threshold her silly foot did trip;
nd ere she might recover it again,
he traitor cat had caught her by the hip,
nd made her there against her will remain, hat had forgot her poor surety and rest or seeming wealth wherein she thought to reign.

1 caterer. 2 jest. 3 glittering. 4 then.

Alas, my Poins, how men do seek the best
And find the worst by error as they stray!
And no marvel; when sight is so opprest,
And blinds the guide, anon out of the way
Goeth guide and all in seeking quiet life.
O wretched minds, there is no gold that may
Grant that you seek; no war, no peace, no strife.
No, no, although thy head were hooped with gold,
Sergeant with mace, halbred, sword, nor knife,
Cannot repulse the care that follow should.
Each kind of life hath with him his disease.
Live in delight even as thy lust would,
And thou shalt find, when lust doth most thee please,
It irketh straight, and by itself doth fade.
A small thing is it that may thy mind appease.
None of ye all there is that is so mad
To seek for grapes on brambles or on briars;
Nor none, I trow, that hath his wit so bad
To set his hay [1] for conies [2] over rivers,
Nor ye set not a drag-net for an hare;
And yet the thing that most is your desire
Ye do mis-seek with more travail and care.
Make plain thine heart, that it be not knotted
With hope or dread, and see thy will be bare
From all effects whom vice hath ever spotted.
Thyself content with that is thee assigned,
And use it well that is to thee allotted.
Then seek no more out of thyself to find
The thing that thou hast sought so long before,
For thou shalt feel it sticking in thy mind.
Mad, if ye list to continue your sore,
Let present pass and gape on time to come,
And deep yourself in travail more and more.
Henceforth, my Poins, this shall be all and some,
These wretched fools shall have naught else of me;
But to the great God and to his high dome [3]
None other pain pray I for them to be,
But, when the rage doth lead them from the right,
That, looking backward, virtue they may see,
Even as she is so goodly fair and bright,
And whilst they clasp their lusts in arms across,
Grant them, good Lord, as thou mayst of thy might,
To fret inward for losing such a loss.

1 trap. 2 rabbits. 3 judgment.

HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY (1517?–1547)

DESCRIPTION OF SPRING

WHEREIN EACH THING RENEWS, SAVE ONLY THE LOVER

The soote [1] season that bud and bloom forth brings,
With green hath clad the hill and eke the vale;
The nightingale with feathers new she sings;
The turtle [2] to her make [3] hath told her tale:
Summer is come, for every spray now springs;
The hart hath hung his old head on the pale; [4]
The buck in brake his winter coat he flings:
The fishes flete [5] with new repaired scale;
The adder all her slough away she slings;
The swift swallow pursueth the flies smale;
The busy bee her honey now she mings.[6]
Winter is worn, that was the flowers' bale:
And thus I see among these pleasant things
Each care decays, and yet my sorrow springs!

COMPLAINT OF A LOVER REBUKED

Love, that liveth and reigneth in my thought,
That built his seat within my captive breast,
Clad in the arms wherein with me he fought,
Oft in my face he doth his banner rest.
She that me taught to love and suffer pain,
My doubtful hope and eke my hot desire
With shamefast cloak to shadow and refrain,
Her smiling grace converteth straight to ire.
The coward Love then to the heart apace
Taketh his flight, whereas he lurks and plains,[7]
His purpose lost, and dare not show his face.
For my lord's guilt thus faultless bide I pains.
Yet from my lord shall not my foot remove;
Sweet is his death that takes his end by love.

A COMPLAINT BY NIGHT OF THE LOVER NOT BELOVED

Alas, so all things now do hold their peace!
Heaven and earth disturbed in nothing;
The beasts, the air, the birds their song do cease,
The nightës chair the stars about doth brin Calm is the sea; the waves work less a less;
So am not I, whom love, alas, doth wring,
Bringing before my face the great increase
Of my desires, whereat I weep and sing,
In joy and woe, as in a doubtful ease.
For my sweet thoughts sometime do pleasu bring;
But by and by, the cause of my disease
Gives me a pang, that inwardly doth sting
When that I think what grief it is again
To live and lack the thing should rid m pain.

PRISONED IN WINDSOR, HE RECOUNTETH HIS PLEASURE THERE PASSED

So cruel prison how could betide, alas,
As proud Windsor? where I in lust and joy
With a King's son, my childish years did pas
In greater feast than Priam's sons of Troy.
Where each sweet place returns a taste fu sour,
The large green courts, where we were wor
to hove,[1]
With eyes cast up into the maiden's tower,
And easy sighs, such as folk draw in love.
The stately seats, the ladies bright of hue,
The dances short, long tales of great d
light;
With words and looks, that tigers could bu
rue;
When each of us did plead the other's righ
The palme-play [2] where, despoiled for th game,
With dazed eyes oft we by gleams of love
Have missed the ball, and got sight of o
dame,
To bait [3] her eyes, which kept the lea above.
The gravelled ground, with sleeves tied o
the helm,
On foaming horse, with swords and friendl hearts;
With cheer, as though one should anothe
whelm,
When we have fought, and chased oft wit
darts;
With silver drops the mead yet spread fo
ruth,

1 sweet. 2 turtle-dove 3 mate.
4 stake, picket. 5 float. 6 mixes. 7 complains.

1 linger. 2 tennis. 3 allure.

...t active games of nimbleness and strength,
...here we did strain, trained with swarms of youth,
...ur tender limbs, that yet shot up in length.
...he secret groves, which oft we made resound
...f pleasant plaint, and of our ladies' praise;
...ecording oft what grace each one had found,
...hat hope of speed, what dread of long delays.
...he wild forest, the clothed holts with green;
...ith reins availed,[1] and swift ybreathed horse,
...ith cry of hounds, and merry blasts between,
...hen we did chase the fearful hart of force.
...he void walls eke, that harbored us each night:
...herewith, alas! reviveth in my breast
...he sweet accord, such sleeps as yet delight;
...he pleasant dreams, the quiet bed of rest;—
...he secret thoughts, imparted with such trust;
...he wanton talk, the divers change of play;
...he friendship sworn, each promise kept so just,
...herewith we passed the winter night away.
...nd with this thought the blood forsakes the face;
...he tears berain my cheeks of deadly hue:
...he which, as soon as sobbing sighs, alas!
...psupped have, thus I my plaint renew:
...O place of bliss, renewer of my woes!
...ive me account, where is my noble fere,[2]
...hom in thy walls thou dost each night enclose,
...o other lief,[3] but unto me most dear."
...cho, alas! that doth my sorrow rue
...eturns thereat a hollow sound of plaint.
...hus I alone, where all my freedom grew,
...n prison pine, with bondage and restraint;
...nd with remembrance of the greater grief,
...o banish the less, I find my chief relief.

THE MEANS TO ATTAIN HAPPY LIFE

Martial,[4] the things that do attain
  The happy life be these, I find;
The riches left, not got with pain;
  The fruitful ground, the quiet mind.

The equal friend, no grudge, no strife,
  No charge of rule nor governance;
Without disease, the healthful life;
  The household of continuance.

The mean[1] diet, no delicate fare;
  True wisdom joined with simpleness;
The night discharged of all care,
  Where wine the wit may not oppress.

The faithful wife, without debate;
  Such sleeps as may beguile the night;
Contented with thine own estate,
  Ne wish for death, ne fear his might.

1 slackened. 2 companion. 3 dear.
4 The Latin poet, 43–104 A.D.

ON THE DEATH OF SIR T[HOMAS] W[YATT]

W[yatt] resteth here that quick could never rest;
  Whose heavenly gifts increased by disdain
And virtue sank the deeper in his breast;
  Such profit he by envy could obtain.

A head where wisdom mysteries did frame,
  Whose hammers beat still in that lively brain,
As on a stithe[2] where that some work of fame
  Was daily wrought, to turn to Britain's gain.

A visage stern and mild: where both did grow
  Vice to contemn, in virtue to rejoice;
Amid great storms whom grace assured so
  To live upright, and smile at fortune's choice.

A hand that taught what might be said in rhyme;
  That reft Chaucer the glory of his wit;
A mark, the which (unperfected for time)
  Some may approach, but never none shall hit.

A tongue that served in foreign realms his king;
  Whose courteous talk to virtue did inflame
Each noble heart: a worthy guide to bring
  Our English youth by travail unto fame.

An eye whose judgment none affect[3] could blind,
  Friends to allure and foes to reconcile,
Whose piercing look did represent a mind
  With virtue fraught reposed void of guile.

1 moderate. 2 anvil. 3 no affection.

A heart where dread was never so imprest
To hide the thought that might the truth advance;
In neither fortune loft,[1] nor yet represt,
To swell in wealth, or yield unto mischance.

A valiant corpse, where force and beauty met,
Happy alas, too happy but for foes,
Lived, and ran the race that nature set;
Of manhood's shape where she the mould did lose.

But to the heavens that simple soul is fled,
Which left with such as covet Christ to know
Witness of faith that never shall be dead,
Sent for our health, but not received so.

Thus, for our guilt, this jewel have we lost;
The earth his bones, the heavens possess his ghost!

VIRGIL'S ÆNEID

Book II, lines 1–28

They whisted[2] all, with fixed face attent,
When Prince Æneas from the royal seat
Thus 'gan to speak: "O Queen, it is thy will
I should renew a woe cannot be told;
How that the Greeks did spoil and overthrow
The Phrygian[1] wealth and wailful[2] realm of Troy.
Those ruthful things that I myself beheld,
And whereof no small part fell to my share
Which to express, who could refrain from tears?
What Myrmidon?[3] or yet what Dolopes?[3]
What stern Ulysses' waged soldier?
And lo! moist night now from the welkin falls
And stars declining counsel us to rest;
But since so great is thy delight to hear
Of our mishaps and Troyës last decay,
Though to record the same my mind abhors
And plaint eschews,[4] yet thus will I begin:—
The Greekës chieftains, all irked with the war
Wherein they wasted had so many years,
And oft repulsed by fatal destiny,
A huge horse made, high raised like a hill,
By the divine science of Minerva, —
Of cloven fir compacted were his ribs, —
For their return a feigned sacrifice,—
The fame whereof so wandered it at point.[5]
In the dark bulk they closed bodies of men
Chosen by lot, and did enstuff by stealth
The hollow womb with armed soldiers.

ROGER ASCHAM (1515–1568)

Ascham was born in 1515 in Yorkshire. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where later he became a teacher. His great interest was in Greek, the study of which had been fostered by the humanistic revival. Besides his academic duties, he served, in various capacities, Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth. He was Latin Secretary to the last three; and before her accession he was tutor of languages to Queen Elizabeth, the best educated woman of her time. Ascham died in 1568.

Ascham was primarily a scholar and a teacher. In line with his vocation, he wrote three books, two of which have lasted because of their style and subject-matter. They are Toxophilus, 1545, a treatise on the educational and patriotic advantages of archery, and The Schoolmaster, published in 1570 after his death, a plan for a better system for "the bringing up of youth," based upon the new humanism which had arisen during the Renaissance.

In spite of the inspiration that he received from foreign literatures, Ascham remained a thorough Englishman. "I write English, and to Englishmen," he declared in The Schoolmaster. He despised Italianate Englishmen, regretting, like a Puritan, that many of the books "late translated out of Italian" did "harm with enticing men to ill living." Yet he was not stubborn, and could, in the midst of the intellectual arguments of his day, remark with humorous detachment, "I have been a looker-on in the cockpit of learning these many years."

INTRODUCTION TO TOXOPHILUS

To All Gentlemen and Yeomen of England

Bias the wise man came to Crœsus[3] the rich king, on a time when he was making new ships, purposing to have subdued by water the out-isles lying betwixt Greece and Asia Minor. "What news now in Greece?" saith the king to Bias. "None other news but these," saith Bias: "that the isles of Greece have prepared a wonderful company of horsemen to over-run Lydia withal."

1 proud. 2 became silent.
3 King of Lydia, sixth century B.C.

1 Troy was in Phrygia. 2 sorrowful.
3 The Myrmidons and the Dolopes fought for Greece.
4 avoids complaining. 5 fitly.

'There is nothing under heaven," saith the King, "that I would so soon wish, as that they durst be so bold to meet us on the land with horse." "And think you," saith Bias, 'that there is any thing which they would sooner wish, than that you should be so fond [1] to meet them on the water with ships?" And so Crœsus, hearing not the true news, but perceiving the wise man's mind and counsel, both gave then over making of his ships, and left also behind him a wonderful example for all commonwealths to follow: that is, evermore to regard and set most by that thing whereunto nature hath made them most apt, and use hath made them most fit.

By this matter I mean the shooting in the long bow, for Englishmen; which thing with all my heart I do wish, and if I were of authority,[2] I would counsel all the gentlemen and yeomen of England, not to change it with any other thing, how good soever it seems to be; but that still, according to the old wont [3] of England, youth should use it for the most honest pastime in peace, that men might handle it as a most sure weapon in war. Other strong weapons, which both experience doth prove to be good, and the wisdom of the King's Majesty and his council provides to be had, are not ordained to take away shooting; but that both, not compared together whether should be better than the other, but so joined together that the one should be always an aid and help for the other, might so strengthen the realm on all sides, that no kind of enemy, in any kind of weapon, might pass and go beyond us.

For this purpose I, partly provoked by the counsel of some gentlemen, partly moved by the love which I have always borne toward shooting, have written this little treatise; wherein, if I have not satisfied any man, I trust he will the rather be content with my doing, because I am (I suppose) the first which hath said any thing in this matter, (and few beginnings be perfect, saith wise men:) and also because, if I have said amiss, I am content that any man amend it: or, if I have said too little, any man that will, to add what him pleaseth to it.

My mind is, in profiting and pleasing every man, to hurt or displease no man, intending none other purpose, but that youth might be stirred to labor, honest pastime, and virtue, and as much as lieth in me, plucked from idleness, unthrifty games, and vice: which thing I have labored only in this book, showing how fit shooting is for all kinds of men; how honest a pastime for the mind; how wholesome an exercise for the body; not vile for great men to use, not costly for poor men to sustain, not lurking in holes and corners for ill men at their pleasure to misuse it, but abiding in the open sight and face of the world, for good men, if it fault, by their wisdom to correct it.

And here I would desire all gentlemen and yeomen to use this pastime in such a mean, that the outrageousness of great gaming should not hurt the honesty of shooting, which, of his own nature, is always joined with honesty; yet for men's faults oftentimes blamed unworthily, as all good things have been, and evermore shall be.

If any man would blame me, either for taking such a matter in hand, or else for writing it in the English tongue, this answer I may make him, that when the best of the realm think it honest for them to use, I, one of the meanest sort, ought not to suppose it vile for me to write; and though to have written it in another tongue, had been both more profitable for my study, and also more honest for my name, yet I can think my labor well bestowed, if with a little hinderance of my profit and name, may come any furtherance to the pleasure or commodity of the gentlemen and yeomen of England, for whose sake I took this matter in hand. And as for the Latin or Greek tongue, every thing is so excellently done in them, that none can do better: in the English tongue, contrary, every thing in a manner so meanly both for the matter and handling, that no man can do worse. For therein the least learned, for the most part, have been always most ready to write. And they which had least hope in Latin, have been most bold in English: when surely every man that is most ready to talk, is not most able to write. He that will write well in any tongue, must follow this counsel of Aristotle, to speak as the common people do, to think as wise men do: and so should every man understand him, and the judgment of wise men allow [1] him. Many English writers have not done so, but using strange words, as Latin, French, and Italian, do make all things dark and hard. Once I communed [2] with a man which reasoned the English tongue to be enriched and increased thereby, saying, "Who will not praise that feast where a man shall drink at a dinner

1 foolish. 2 influence.

3 An Englishman would recall the battle of Crécy in 1346, when Edward III and the Black Prince defeated the French, largely through the skill of the English bowmen.

1 approve. 2 conversed.

both wine, ale, and beer?" "Truly (quoth I) they be all good, every one taken by himself alone, but if you put malmsey and sack, red wine and white, ale and beer, and all in one pot, you shall make a drink neither easy to be known, nor yet wholesome for the body." Cicero, in following Isocrates, Plato, and Demosthenes, increased the Latin tongue after another sort. This way, because divers men that write do not know, they can neither follow it, because of their ignorance, nor yet will praise it for very arrogancy, two faults, seldom the one out of the other's company.

English writers by diversity of time have taken divers matters in hand. In our fathers' time nothing was read but books of feigned chivalry,[1] wherein a man by reading should be led to none other end, but only to manslaughter and bawdry. If any man suppose they were good enough to pass the time withal, he is deceived. For surely vain words do work no small thing in vain, ignorant, and young minds, especially if they be given any thing thereunto of their own nature. These books (as I have heard say) were made the most part in abbeys and monasteries, — a very likely and fit fruit of such an idle and blind kind of living. In our time now, when every man is given to know, much rather than to live well, very many do write, but after such a fashion as very many do shoot. Some shooters take in hand stronger bows than they be able to maintain.[2] This thing maketh them sometime to outshoot the mark, sometime to shoot far wide, and perchance hurt some that look on. Other that never learned to shoot, nor yet knoweth good shaft nor bow, will be as busy as the best, but such one commonly plucketh[3] down a side, and crafty archers which be against him, will be both glad of him, and also ever ready to lay and bet with him: it were better for such one to sit down than shoot. Other there be, which have very good bow and shafts, and good knowledge in shooting, but they have been brought up in such evil favored shooting, that they can neither shoot fair[4] nor yet near.[5] If any man will apply these things together, he shall not see the one far differ from the other. And I also, amongst all other, in writing this little treatise, have followed some young shooters, which both will begin to shoot, for a little money, and also will use[1] to shoot once or twice about the mark for nought afore they begin a-good. And therefore did I take this little matter in hand, to assay[2] myself, and hereafter, by the Grace of God, if the judgment of wise men, that look on, think that I can do any good, I may perchance cast my shaft among other, for better game. Yet in writing this book, some man will marvel perchance, why that I, being an unperfect shooter, should take in hand to write of making a perfect archer: the same man, peradventure, will marvel how a whetstone, which is blunt, can make the edge of a knife sharp. I would the same man should consider also, that in going about any matter, there be found things to be considered, doing, saying, thinking, and perfectness: first, there is no man that doth so well, but he can say better, or else some men, which be now stark nought,[3] should be too good: again, no man can utter with his tongue so well as he is able to imagine with his mind, and yet perfectness itself is far above all thinking: then, seeing that saying is one step nearer perfectness than doing, let every man leave marvelling why my word shall rather express, than my deed shall perform, perfect shooting.

I trust no man will be offended with this little book, except it be some fletchers[4] and bowyers,[5] thinking hereby that many that love shooting shall be taught to refuse such naughty[6] wares as they would utter.[7] Honest fletchers and bowyers do not so, and they that be unhonest, ought rather to amend themselves for doing ill, than being angry with me for saying well. A fletcher hath even as good a quarrel to be angry with an archer that refuseth an ill shaft, as a blade-smith hath to a fletcher that forsaketh[8] to buy of him a naughty knife: for as an archer must be content that a fletcher know a good shaft in every point for the perfecter making of it, so an honest fletcher will also be content that a shooter know a good shaft in every point, for the perfecter using of it; because the one knoweth like a fletcher how to make it, the other knoweth like an archer how to use it. And seeing the knowledge is one in them both, yet the end divers, surely that fletcher is an enemy to archers and artillery[9] which cannot be content that an archer know a shaft as well for his use in shooting, as he himself should know a shaft

1 e.g., the mediæval romances and Malory.
2 handle easily.
3 A technical term, meaning to shoot in a slovenly manner.
4 gracefully. 5 accurately.

1 make a practice. 2 try.
3 absolutely worthless. 4 arrow-makers.
5 bow makers. 6 worthless. 7 produce.
8 refuses. 9 equipment for shooting.

for his advantage in selling. And the rather, because shafts be not made so much to be sold, but chiefly to be used. And seeing that use and occupying [1] is the end why a shaft is made, the making, as it were, a mean for occupying, surely the knowledge in every point of a good shaft, is more to be required in a shooter than a fletcher.

Yet, as I said before, no honest fletcher will be angry with me, seeing I do not teach how to make a shaft, which belongeth only to a good fletcher, but to know and handle a shaft, which belongeth to an archer. And this little book, I trust, shall please and profit both parties; for good bows and shafts shall be better known to the commodity [1] of all shooters, and good shooting may, perchance, be the more occupied to the profit of all bowyers and fletchers. And thus I pray God that all fletchers, getting their living truly, and all archers using shooting honestly, and all manner of men that favor artillery, may live continually in health and merriness, obeying their prince as they should, and loving God as they ought: to whom, for all things, be all honor and glory for ever. Amen.

[1] employment, use.

[1] advantage.

EDMUND SPENSER (1552?–1599)

The life of Spenser, "the poet's poet," began in obscurity and possibly poverty. He was born in London, in the countryside just outside the walls of the old city, about 1552. At the age of nine he entered the newly established Merchant Taylors' School, and in 1569 was admitted as a sizar, that is, an indigent student, to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, the university that attracted most of England's poets. Aside from the fact that he took his B.A. in 1573 and his M.A. in 1576, the great event in Spenser's life at Cambridge was his friendship with Gabriel Harvey, the critic who later tried to introduce the quantitative scansion of classical verse into English. Through Harvey, in 1578, he met in London Sir Philip Sidney and Sidney's uncle, the Earl of Leicester, who was then the favorite of Queen Elizabeth. Leicester gave Spenser a secretarial position in his household. This enabled the poet to write and publish (anonymously in 1579) the twelve eclogues of The Shepherd's Calendar, dedicated to Sidney, and to begin The Faerie Queene. During this time he belonged to an informal club, the Areopagus, whose members for a while proposed the use of classical metres in English verse. Harvey and Sidney belonged to the coterie, as did Fulke Greville, later Sidney's biographer, and Dyer, the author of the well-known poem, "My Mind to me a Kingdom is."

The following year Spenser was appointed secretary to the Lord Deputy of Ireland. From this time until his death twenty years later the poet lived in Ireland, with the exception of three visits to London. During the next ten years he received several promotions, and a castle and estate in County Cork. The death of Sidney in 1586 affected him deeply. To commemorate his friend he wrote Astrophel.

Spenser had as near neighbor in Ireland, about this time, Sir Walter Raleigh, to whom he read much of The Faerie Queene. With Raleigh in 1590 he went to London on his first leave, and published the first three books of his masterpiece, which he dedicated to the Queen. These were enthusiastically received and brought him a pension from Elizabeth.

After a year he took up again his official position in Ireland. In 1594 he married Elizabeth Boyle, to whom he had addressed his sonnet sequence Amoretti; and for the wedding he wrote his splendid Epithalamium. Both were published in 1595. In the following year he returned to London, published the next three books of The Faerie Queene as well as the Prothalamium, written to celebrate the marriage of the two daughters of the Earl of Worcester. Shortly afterwards he returned to Ireland, where in 1598 his castle was burned during a rebellion. He escaped with his wife and children, went to London, and died there early in the new year, January 16, 1599. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, in the Poets' Corner, near Chaucer.

Spenser is second to Chaucer among all English poets up to his time, surpassed only by Shakespeare, and possibly Marlowe, among poets of the glorious Elizabethan age. He is read less to-day than Chaucer, Shakespeare, or Milton, largely because readers look for qualities in him which he does not possess. He is not great as a narrative or allegorical poet, and students reading for enjoyment will do well, at first, to ignore the story and the symbolism of The Faerie Queene. He is primarily a painter and musician in words, a forerunner of Keats in this respect, as Keats is of the modern imagists. Beauty was his aim, romantic beauty, sensuous, emotional or luxuriant, although often enough it is beauty which the poet could have created only after deep reflection upon the vanity and pain of life. Spenser is not a poet for a reader who seeks realistic verisimilitude even though he did, like all great artists, derive his material from experience. He must, frequently, be read after the manner in which one listens to music. We do not ask, "What does the piece mean?" We feel it, we sense the meaning — a meaning which often could not be expressed in mere words; and above all, we enjoy the contexture of sounds.

Excellent one-volume editions of Spenser, with critical material, are R. E. N. Dodge's in the Cambridge Poets (Houghton Mifflin Company), and The Oxford, with an introduction by E. de Selincourt.

THE FAERIE QUEENE

The plan and general idea of The Faerie Queene is outlined clearly by Spenser in his letter to Raleigh, given below.

In reading the poem, one should bear in mind that the final -e is not regularly pronounced, that the ending -ed is; that all syllables of a word should be given full value, -ion being, for instance, two syllables; that often the meaning of a strange-looking word will be apparent as soon as the word is pronounced; that y- is the prefix of the past participle, like ge- in modern German; and that Spenser often uses inversions and transpositions not common in ordinary English.

For this poem Spenser evolved a new stanza. To a stanza of eight iambic pentameter lines rhyming ababbcbc (which resembles somewhat Chaucer's rime royal), he added an Alexandrine or iambic hexameter, rhyming with the previous line. This stanza, the Spenserian, used later by Thomson in The Castle of Indolence and by Byron in Childe Harold, is the best stanza in the language for word painting. The Alexandrine interrupts the flow of the story, but it makes a unit, as Spenser uses the stanza, exceptional in its descriptive and melodious qualities.

TO

THE MOST HIGH, MIGHTIE, AND MAGNIFICENT

EMPRESSE,

RENOWMED FOR PIETIE, VERTVE, AND ALL GRATIOVS GOVERNMENT,

ELIZABETH,

BY THE GRACE OF GOD,

Qveene of England, Fravnce, and Ireland, and of Virginia, Defendovr of the Faith, &c.

HER MOST HVMBLE SERVAVNT

EDMVND SPENSER,

DOTH, IN ALL HVMILITIE,

DEDICATE, PRESENT, AND CONSECRATE

THESE HIS LABOVRS,

TO LIVE WITH THE ETERNITIE OF HER FAME.

A LETTER OF THE AUTHORS,

EXPOUNDING HIS WHOLE INTENTION IN THE COURSE OF THIS WORKE: WHICH, FOR THAT IT GIVETH GREAT LIGHT TO THE READER, FOR THE BETTER UNDERSTANDING IS HEREUNTO ANNEXED.

TO THE RIGHT NOBLE AND VALOROUS

SIR WALTER RALEIGH, KNIGHT,

LORD WARDEIN OF THE STANNERVES, AND HER MAIESTIES LIEFETENAUNT OF THE COUNTY OF CORNEWAYLL.

SIR, knowing how doubtfully all Allegories may be construed, and this booke of mine, which I have entituled the Faery Queene, being a continued Allegory, or darke conceit, I haue thought good, as well for avoyding of gealous opinions and misconstructions, as also for your better light in reading thereof, (being so by you commanded,) to discover unto you the general intention and meaning, which in the whole course thereof I have fashioned, without expressing of any particular purposes, or by accidents, therein occasioned. The generall end therefore of all the booke is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline: Which for that I conceived shoulde be most plausible and pleasing, being coloured with an historicall fiction, the which the most part of men delight to read, rather for variety of matter then for profite of the ensample, I chose the historye of King Arthure, as most fitte for the excellency of his person, being made famous by many mens former workes, and also furthest from the daunger of envy, and suspition of present time. In which I have followed all the antique Poets historicall; first Homere, who in the Persons of Agamemnon and Ulysses hath ensampled a good governour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseis: then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Aeneas: after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando: and lately Tasso dissevered them againe, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in Philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a private man, coloured in his Rinaldo; the other named Politice in his Godfredo. By nsample of which excellente Poets, I labour o puortraict in Arthure, before he was king, he image of a brave knight, perfected in the welve private morall vertues, as Aristotle ath devised; the which is the purpose of hese first twelve bookes:[1] which if I finde to e well accepted, I may be perhaps encoraged o frame the other part of polliticke vertues n his person, after that hee came to be king.

To some, I know, this Methode will seeme lispleasaunt, which had rather have good liscipline delivered plainly in way of pre-epts, or sermoned at large, as they use, then hus clowdily enwrapped in Allegoricall de-ises. But such, me seeme, should be satis-ide with the use of these dayes, seeing all hings accounted by their showes, and no-hing esteemed of, that is not delightfull and leasing to commune sence. For this cause s Xenophon preferred before Plato, for that he one, in the exquisite depth of his judge-nent, formed a Commune welth, such as it hould be; but the other in the person of Cyrus, and the Persians, fashioned a governe-nent, such as might best be: So much more profitable and gratious is doctrine by en-sample, then by rule. So haue I laboured to doe in the person of Arthure: whome I con-ceive, after his long education by Timon, to whom he was by Merlin delivered to be brought up, so soone as he was borne of the Lady Igrayne, to have seene in a dream or vision the Faery Queen, with whose excel-lent beauty ravished, he awaking resolved to seeke her out; and so being by Merlin armed, and by Timon throughly instructed, he went to seeke her forth in Faerye land. In that Faery Queene I meane glory in my generall intention, but in my particular I conceive the most excellent and glorious per-son of our soveraine the Queene, and her kingdome in Faery land. And yet, in some places els, I doe otherwise shadow her. For considering she beareth two persons, the one of a most royall Queene or Empresse, the other of a most vertuous and beautiful Lady, this latter part in some places I doe expresse in Belphœbe, fashioning her name according to your owne excellent conceipt of Cynthia, (Phœbe and Cynthia being both names of Diana.) So in the person of Prince Arthure I sette forth magnificence in particular; which vertue, for that (according to Aristotle and the rest) it is the perfection of all the rest, and conteineth in it them all, therefore in the whole course I mention the deedes of Arthure applyable to that vertue, which I write of in that booke. But of the xii. other vertues, I make xii. other knights the patrones, for the more variety of the history: Of which these three bookes contayn three.

The first of the knight of the Redcrosse, in whome I expresse Holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whome I sette forth Temperaunce: The third of Britomartis, a Lady Knight, in whome I picture Chastity. But, because the beginning of the whole worke seemeth abrupte, and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that ye know the occasion of these three knights seuerall adventures. For the Methode of a Poet historical is not such, as of an Historiographer. For an Historiographer discourseth of affayres orderly as they were donne, accounting as well the times as the actions; but a Poet thrusteth into the middest, even where it most concerneth him, and there recoursing to the thinges forepaste, and divining of thinges to come, maketh a pleasing Analysis of all.

The beginning therefore of my history, if it were to be told by an Historiographer should be the twelfth booke, which is the last; where I devise that the Faery Queene kept her Annuall feaste xii. dayes; uppon which xii. severall dayes, the occasions of the xii. severall adventures hapned, which, being undertaken by xii. severall knights, are in these xii. books severally handled and discoursed. The first was this. In the beginning of the feast, there presented him selfe a tall clownishe younge man, who falling before the Queene of Faries desired a boone (as the manner then was) which during that feast she might not refuse; which was that hee might have the atchievement of any adventure, which during that feaste should happen: that being graunted, he rested him on the floore, unfitte through his rusticity for a better place. Soone after entred a faire Ladye in mourning weedes, riding on a white Asse, with a dwarfe behind her leading a warlike steed, that bore the Armes of a knight, and his speare in the dwarfes hand. Shee, falling before the Queene of Faeries, complayned that her father and mother, an ancient King and Queene, had bene by an huge dragon many years shut up in a brasen Castle, who thence suffred them not to yssew; and therefore besought the Faery Queene to assygne her some one of her knights to take on him that exployt. Presently that clownish person, upstarting, desired that adventure: whereat the Queene much wondering, and the Lady much gainesaying, yet he earnestly importuned his desire. In the end the Lady told him, that unlesse that armour which she brought, would serve him (that is, the armour of a Christian man specified by Saint Paul, vi. Ephes.) that he could not succeed in that enterprise; which being forthwith put upon him, with dewe furnitures thereunto, he seemed the goodliest man in al that company, and was well liked of the Lady. And eftesonnes taking on him knighthood, and mounting on that straunge Courser, he went forth with her on that adventure: where beginneth the first booke, viz.

1 Of the twelve books planned Spenser completed only six and part of the seventh.

A gentle knight was pricking on the playne. &c.

The second day ther came in a Palmer, bearing an Infant with bloody hands, whose Parents he complained to have bene slayn by an Enchaunteresse called Acrasia; and therfore craved of the Faery Queene, to appoint him some knight to performe that adventure; which being assigned to Sir Guyon, he presently went forth with that same Palmer: which is the beginning of the second booke, and the whole subject thereof. The third day there came in a Groome, who complained before the Faery Queene, that a vile Enchaunter, called Busirane, had in hand a most faire Lady, called Amoretta, whom he kept in most grievous torment, because she would not yield him the pleasure of her body. Whereupon Sir Scudamour, the lover of that Lady, presently tooke on him that adventure. But being vnable to performe it by reason of the hard Enchauntments, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him, and reskewed his loue.

But by occasion hereof many other adventures are intermedled; but rather as Accidents then intendments: As the love of Britomart, the overthrow of Marinell, the misery of Florimell, the vertuousnes of Belphœbe, the lasciviousnes of Hellenora, and many the like.

Thus much, Sir, I have briefly overronne to direct your understanding to the wel-head of the History; that from thence gathering the whole intention of the conceit, ye may as in a handfull gripe al the discourse, which otherwise may happily seeme tedious and confused. So, humbly craving the continuance of your honorable favour towards me, and th' eternall establishment of your happines, I humbly take leave.

23. Ianuary 1589,

Yours most humbly affectionate,

ED. SPENSER.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE FAERIE QUEENE

CONTAYNING THE LEGEND OF THE KNIGHT OF THE RED CROSSE, OR OF HOLINESSE

I

Lo! I, the man whose Muse whylome [1] did maske,
As time her taught, in lowly Shephards weeds,[2]
Am now enforst, a farre unfitter taske,
For trumpets sterne to chaunge mine Oaten reeds,
And sing of Knights and Ladies gentle deeds;
Whose praises having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred Muse areeds
To blazon broade emongst her learned throng:
Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song.

2

Helpe then, O holy virgin! chiefe of nyne,[4]
Thy weaker Novice to performe thy will;
Lay forth out of thine everlasting scryne [5]
The antique rolles, which there lye hidden still,
Of Faerie knights, and fayrest Tanaquill,[6]
Whom that most noble Briton Prince [7] long Sought through the world, and suffered so much ill,
That I must rue his undeserved wrong:
O, helpe thou my weake wit, and sharpen my dull tong!

3

And thou, most dreaded impe [8] of highest Jove,
Faire Venus sonne, that with thy cruell dart
At that good knight so cunningly didst rove,
That glorious fire it kindled in his hart;
Lay now thy deadly Heben [9] bowe apart,
And with thy mother mylde come to mine ayde;

1 formerly.
2 An obvious reference to Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, published eleven years previously.
3 designates.
4 Clio, the muse of history. 5 desk.
6 Daughter of Oberon, king of the fairies; here, of course, Queen Elizabeth.
7 Arthur; here, possibly, the Earl of Leicester.
8 child; i.e., Cupid. 9 ebon; ebony.

Come, both; and with you bring triumphant Mart,[1]
In loves and gentle jollities arraid,
After his murdrous spoyles and bloudie rage allayd.

4

And with them eke, O Goddesse[2] heavenly bright!
Mirrour of grace and Majestie divine,
Great Ladie of the greatest Isle, whose light
Like Phœbus lampe throughout the world doth shine,
Shed thy faire beames into my feeble eyne,
And raise my thoughtes, too humble and too vile,
To thinke of that true glorious type of thine,
The argument of mine afflicted[3] stile:
The which to heare vouchsafe, O dearest dread,[4] a-while!

CANTO I

The Patrone of true Holinesse
Foule Errour doth defeate:
Hypocrisie, him to entrappe,
Doth to his home entreate.

1

A gentle Knight was pricking[5] on the plaine,
Ycladd in mightie armes and silver shielde,
Wherein old dints of deepe woundes did remaine,
The cruell markes of many a bloody fielde;
Yet armes till that time did he never wield.
His angry steede did chide his foming bitt,
As much disdayning to the curbe to yield:
Full jolly[6] knight he seemd, and faire did sitt,
As one for knightly giusts[7] and fierce encounters fitt.

2

And on his brest a bloodie Crosse he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweete sake that glorious badge he wore,
And dead, as living, ever him ador'd:
Upon his shield the like was also scor'd,
For soveraine hope[8] which in his helpe he had.
Right faithfull true he was in deede and word,
But of his cheere[1] did seeme too solemne sad;
Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.[2]

3

Upon a great adventure he was bond,
That greatest Gloriana[3] to him gave,
(That greatest Glorious Queene of Faery lond)
To winne him worshippe, and her grace to have,
Which of all earthly thinges he most did crave:
And ever as he rode his hart did earne[4]
To prove his puissance in battell brave
Upon his foe, and his new force to learne,
Upon his foe, a Dragon horrible and stearne.

4

A lovely Ladie rode him faire beside,
Upon a lowly Asse more white then snow,
Yet she much whiter; but the same did hide
Under a vele, that wimpled[5] was full low;
And over all a blacke stole shee did throw:
As one that inly mournd, so was she sad,
And heavie sate upon her palfrey slow;
Seemed in heart some hidden care she had,
And by her, in a line, a milkewhite lambe she lad.

5

So pure and innocent, as that same lambe,
She was in life and every vertuous lore;
And by descent from Royall lynage came
Of ancient Kinges and Queenes, that had of yore
Their scepters stretcht from East to Westerne shore,
And all the world in their subjection held;
Till that infernall feend with foule uprore
Forewasted[6] all their land, and them expeld;
Whom to avenge she had this Knight from far compeld.[7]

6

Behind her farre away a Dwarfe did lag,
That lasie seemd, in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his backe. Thus as they past,
The day with cloudes was suddeine overcast,
And angry Jove an hideous storme of raine

1 Mars. 2 Queen Elizabeth. 3 humble.
4 object worshiped. 5 riding, using the spur.
6 handsome. 7 jousts.
8 "to indicate the great hope that he had."

1 countenance. 2 The past participle, dreaded.
3 Queen Elizabeth. 4 yearn. 5 folded.
6 The prefix fore — is intensive. 7 summoned.

Did poure into his Lemans [1] lap [2] so fast,
That everie wight to shrowd [3] it did constrain;
And this faire couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

7

Enforst to seeke some covert nigh at hand,
A shadie grove not farr away they spide,
That promist ayde the tempest to withstand;
Whose loftie trees, yclad with sommers pride,
Did spred so broad, that heavens light did hide,
Not perceable with power of any starr:
And all within were pathes and alleies wide,
With footing worne, and leading inward farr.
Faire harbour that them seems, so in they entred ar.

8

And foorth they passe, with pleasure forward led,
Joying to heare the birdes sweete harmony,
Which, therein shrouded from the tempest dred,
Seemd in their song to scorne the cruell sky.
Much can they praise the trees so straight and hy,
The sayling Pine; the Cedar proud and tall;
The vine-propp Elme; the Poplar never dry;
The builder Oake, sole king of forrests all;
The Aspine good for staves; the Cypresse funerall;

9

The Laurell, meed of mightie Conquerours
And Poets sage; the Firre that weepeth still:
The Willow, worne of forlorne Paramours;
The Eugh, obedient to the benders will;
The Birch for shaftes; the Sallow [4] for the mill;
The Mirrhe sweete-bleeding in the bitter wound;
The warlike Beech; the Ash for nothing ill;
The fruitfull Olive; and the Platane [5] round;
The carver Holme; [6] the Maple seeldom inward sound.

10

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Untill the blustring storme is overblowne;
When, weening [7] to returne whence they did stray,
They cannot finde that path, which first was showne,
But wander too and fro in waies unknowne,
Furthest from end then, when they neeres weene,
That makes them doubt [1] their wits be none their owne:
So many pathes, so many turnings seene,
That which of them to take in diverse doubt they been.

11

At last resolving forward still to fare,
Till that some end they finde, or in or out,
That path they take that beaten seemd most bare,
And like to lead the labyrinth about; [2]
Which when by tract they hunted had throughout,
At length it brought them to a hollowe cave
Amid the thickest woods. The Champion stout
Eftsoones [3] dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the Dwarfe a while his needlesse spere he gave.

12

"Be well aware," quoth then that Ladie milde,
"Least suddaine mischiefe ye too rash provoke:
The danger hid, the place unknowne and wilde,
Breedes dreadfull doubts. Oft fire is without smoke,
And perill without show: therefore your stroke,
Sir Knight, with-hold, till further tryall made."
"Ah Ladie," (sayd he) "shame were to revoke
The forward footing for an hidden shade:
Vertue gives her selfe light through darknesse for to wade."

13

"Yea but" (quoth she) "the perill of this place
I better wot then you: though nowe too late
To wish you backe returne with foule disgrace,
Yet wisedome warnes, whilest foot is in the gate,[4]
To stay the steppe, ere forced to retrate.

1 beloved's. 2 the earth. 3 take cover.
4 broad-leaved willow. 5 plane-tree.
6 oak. 7 supposing.

1 fear. 2 out of. 3 immediately.
4 path.

is is the wandring wood, this Errours den, monster vile, whom God and man does hate:
erefore I read[1] "beware." "Fly, fly!" (quoth then e fearefull Dwarfe) "this is no place for living men."

14

But, full of fire and greedy hardiment, ie youthfull Knight could not for ought be staide;
it forth unto the darksom hole he went,
id looked in: his glistring armoor made ittle glooming light, much like a shade;
which he saw the ugly monster plaine,
alfe like a serpent horribly displaide,
it th'other halfe did womans shape retaine,
ost lothsom, filthie, foule, and full of vile disdaine.

15

And, as she lay upon the durtie ground, er huge long taile her den all overspred, et was in knots and many boughtes[2] upwound, ointed with mortall sting. Of her there bred thousand yong ones, which she dayly fed, icking upon her poisnous dugs; each one sundrie shapes, yet all ill-favored:[3]
one as that uncouth light upon them shone, to her mouth they crept, and suddain all were gone.

16

Their dam upstart out of her den effraide, nd rushed forth, hurling her hideous taile bout her cursed head; whose folds displaid ere stretcht now forth at length without entraile.[4]
e lookt about, and seeing one in mayle, rmed to point, sought backe to turne againe;
or light she hated as the deadly bale,[5]
y wont[6] in desert darknes to remaine, here plain none might her see, nor she see any plaine.

17

Which when the valiant Elfe[7] perceiv'd, he lept
s Lyon fierce upon the flying pray, nd with his trenchand blade her boldly kept rom turning backe, and forced her to stay:

1 advise. 2 coils. 3 of ugly face.
4 coil. 5 destruction. 6 always accustomed.
7 The Redcross Knight was the son of an elf.

Therewith enrag'd she loudly gan to bray,
And turning fierce her speckled taile advaunst,
Threatning her angrie sting, him to dismay;
Who, nought aghast, his mightie hand enhaunst:[1]
The stroke down from her head unto her shoulder glaunst.

18

Much daunted with that dint her sence was dazd;
Yet kindling rage her selfe she gathered round,
And all attonce her beastly bodie raizd
With doubled forces high above the ground:
Tho, wrapping up her wrethed sterne arownd,
Lept fierce upon his shield, and her huge traine
All suddenly about his body wound,
That hand or foot to stirr he strove in vaine.
God helpe the man so wrapt in Errours endlesse traine!

19

His Lady, sad to see his sore constraint,
Cride out, "Now, now, Sir knight, shew what ye bee:
Add faith unto your force, and be not faint;
Strangle her, els she sure will strangle thee."
That when he heard, in great perplexitie,
His gall did grate[2] for griefe[3] and high disdaine;
And, knitting all his force, got one hand free,
Wherewith he grypt her gorge with so great paine,
That soone to loose her wicked bands did her constraine.

20

Therewith she spewd out of her filthie maw[4]
A floud of poyson horrible and blacke,
Full of great lumps of flesh and gobbets[5] raw,
Which stunck so vildly, that it forst him slacke
His grasping hold, and from her turne him backe.
Her vomit full of bookes and papers[6] was,
With loathly frogs and toades, which eyes did lacke,

1 raised. 2 stir. 3 pain. 4 stomach.
5 pieces.
6 The attacks against Queen Elizabeth and the Church of England.

And creeping sought way in the weedy gras:
Her filthie parbreake[1] all the place defiled has.

21

As when old father Nilus gins to swell
With timely pride above the Aegyptian vale
His fattie waves doe fertile slime outwell,
And overflow each plaine and lowly dale:
But, when his later spring gins to avale,[2]
Huge heapes of mudd he leaves, wherin there breed
Ten thousand kindes of creatures, partly male
And partly femall, of his fruitful seed;
Such ugly monstrous shapes elswher may no man reed.[3]

22

The same so sore annoyed has the knight,
That, welnigh choked with the deadly stinke,
His forces faile, ne can no lenger fight
Whose corage when the feend perceivd to shrinke,
She poured forth out of her hellish sinke
Her fruitfull cursed spawne of serpents small,
Deformed monsters, fowle, and blacke as inke,
Which swarming all about his legs did crall,
And him encombred sore, but could not hurt at all.

23

As gentle shepheard in sweete eventide,
When ruddy Phebus gins to welke[4] in west,
High on an hill, his flocke to vewen wide,
Markes which doe byte their hasty supper best;
A cloud of cumbrous gnattes doe him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stinges,
That from their noyance he no where can rest;
But with his clownish hands their tender wings
He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings.

24

Thus ill bestedd,[5] and fearefull more of shame
Then of the certeine perill he stood in Halfe furious unto his foe he came,
Resolvd in minde all suddenly to win,
Or soone to lose, before he once would lin;[6]

1 vomit. 2 moderate. 3 see. 4 wane.
5 placed. 6 stop.

And stroke at her with more then mar force,
That from her body, full of filthie sin,
He raft[1] her hatefull heade without morse:
A streame of cole-black blood forth gush from her corse.

25

Her scattered brood, soone as their Pare deare
They saw so rudely falling to the ground,
Groning full deadly, all with troublous fea
Gathred themselves about her body round,
Weening their wonted entrance to have fou
At her wide mouth; but being there wit stood,
They flocked all about her bleeding woun
And sucked up their dying mothers bloud,
Making her death their life, and eke her hu their good.

26

That detestable sight him much amazde
To see th' unkindly[2] Impes, of heav accurst,
Devoure their dam; on whom while so he gaz
Having all satisfide their bloudy thurst,
Their bellies swolne he saw with fulnes burst,
And bowels gushing forth: well worthy enc
Of such as drunke her life the which the nurst!
Now needeth him no lenger labour spend,
His foes have slaine themselves, with who he should contend.

27

His Lady, seeing all that chaunst fro farre,
Approcht in hast to greet his victorie;
And saide, "Faire knight, borne under happi starre,
Who see your vanquisht foes before you ly
Well worthie be you of that Armory,
Wherein ye have great glory wonne th day,
And proov'd your strength on a stron enimie,
Your first adventure: many such I pray,
And henceforth ever wish that like succe it may!"

28

Then mounted he upon his Steede again
And with the Lady backward sought wend.

1 took away. 2 unnatural.

at path he kept which beaten was most plaine,
ever would to any byway bend,
t still did follow one unto the end,
e which at last out of the wood them
brought.
forward on his way (with God to frend) passed forth, and new adventure sought:
ng way he traveiled before he heard of ought.

29

At length they chaunst to meet upon the way
aged Sire, in long blacke weedes yclad, s feete all bare, his beard all hoarie
gray,
d by his belt his booke he hanging had:
ber he seemde, and very sagely sad,
d to the ground his eyes were lowly bent,
nple in shew, and voide of malice bad;
d all the way he prayed as he went,
d often knockt his brest, as one that did repent.

30

He faire the knight saluted, louting[1] low,
no faire him quited, as that courteous was;
d after asked him, if he did know straunge adventures, which abroad did pas,
h! my dear sonne," (quoth he) "how should, alas!
ly[2] old man, that lives in hidden cell,
lding[3] his beades all day for his trespas,
dings of warre and worldly trouble tell?
th holy father sits not[4] with such thinges to mell.[5]

31

'But if of daunger, which hereby doth dwell,
d homebredd evil ye desire to heare,
a straunge man I can you tidings tell,
at wasteth all this countrie, farre and neare."
f such," (saide he,) "I chiefly doe inquere,
d shall thee well rewarde to shew the
place,
which that wicked wight his dayes doth weare;
r to all knighthood it is foule disgrace, at such a cursed creature lives so long a space."

bending. 2 simple. 3 telling.
is not fitting. 5 meddle.

32

"Far hence" (quoth he) "in wastfull wil-dernesse
His dwelling is, by which no living wight
May ever passe, but thorough great distresse."
"Now," (saide the Ladie,) "draweth toward
night,
And well I wote, that of your later fight
Ye all forwearied be; for what so strong,
But, wanting rest, will also want of might?
The Sunne, that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth baite[1] his steedes the Ocean waves emong.

33

"Then with the Sunne take, Sir, your timely rest,
And with new day new worke at once begin:
Untroubled night, they say, gives counsell best."
"Right well, Sir knight, ye have advised bin,"
Quoth then that aged man: "the way to win
Is wisely to advise; now day is spent:
Therefore with me ye may take up your
In
For this same night." The knight was well content;
So with that godly father to his home they went.

34

A litle lowly Hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forests side,
Far from resort of people that did pas
In traveill to and froe: a litle wyde[2]
There was an holy chappell edifyde,[3]
Wherein the Hermite dewly wont to say
His holy thinges each morne and eventyde:
Thereby a christall streame did gently
play,
Which from a sacred fountaine welled forth
alway.

35

Arrived there, the litle house they fill,
Ne looke for entertainement where none was;
Rest is their feast, and all thinges at their will:
The noblest mind the best contentment has.
With faire discourse the evening so they pas;
For that olde man of pleasing wordes had store,

1 refresh. 2 apart. 3 built.

And well could file his tongue as smooth as glas:
He told of Saintes and Popes,[1] and evermore
He strowd an Ave-Mary after and before.

36

The drouping night thus creepeth on them fast;
And the sad [2] humor [3] loading their eyeliddes,
As messenger of Morpheus on them cast
Sweet slombring deaw, the which to sleep them biddes.
Unto their lodgings then his guestes he riddes: [4]
Where when all drownd in deadly sleepe he findes,
He to his studie goes; and there amiddes
His magick bookes, and artes of sundrie kindes,
He seekes out mighty charmes to trouble sleepy minds.

37

Then choosing out few words most horrible,
(Let none them read) thereof did verses frame;
With which, and other spelles like terrible,
He bad awake blacke Plutoes griesly Dame; [5]
And cursed heven; and spake reprochful shame
Of highest God, the Lord of life and light:
A bold bad man, that dar'd to call by name
Great Gorgon,[6] prince of darknes and dead night;
At which Cocytus [7] quakes, and Styx [7] is put to flight.

38

And forth he cald out of deepe darknes dredd
Legions of Sprights, the which, like litle flyes
Fluttering about his ever-damned hedd,
Awaite whereto their service he applyes,
To aide his friendes, or fray [8] his enimies.
Of those he chose out two, the falsest twoo,
And fittest for to forge true-seeming lyes:
The one of them he gave a message too,
The other by him selfe staide, other worke to doo.

1 The old man, Archimago, who typifies hypocrisy, is also a Catholic.
2 heavy. 3 dampness. 4 dismisses.
5 Proserpine.
6 Demogorgon, a demon magician of the underworld, whose name few dared to mention.
7 Rivers in Hades. 8 frighten.

39

He, making speedy way through sperse ayre,
And through the world of waters wide a deepe,
To Morpheus house doth hastily repaire.
Amid the bowels of the earth full steepe,
And low, where dawning day doth never peepe,
His dwelling is; there Tethys [2] his wet bed
Doth ever wash, and Cynthia [3] still doth steepe
In silver deaw his ever-drouping hed,
Whiles sad Night over him her mantle blacke doth spred

40

Whose double gates he findeth lockt fast,
The one faire fram'd of burnisht Yvory,
The other all with silver overcast;
And wakeful dogges before them farre dely,
Watching to banish Care their enimy,
Who oft is wont to trouble gentle Sleepe.
By them the Sprite doth passe in quietly,
And unto Morpheus comes, whom drowned deepe
In drowsie fit he findes: of nothing he tak keepe.[4]

41

And more to lulle him in his slumber soft
A trickling streame from high rock tumblin downe,
And ever-drizling raine upon the loft,[5]
Mixt with a murmuring winde, much like the sowne
Of swarming Bees, did cast him in swowne.
No other noyse, nor peoples troublous crye
As still are wont t'annoy the walled towne
Might there be heard; but carelesse Quiet lyes
Wrapt in eternall silence farre from enimye

42

The Messenger approching to him spake;
But his waste wordes retournd to him in vaine:
So sound he slept, that nought mought him awake.
Then rudely he him thrust, and pusht with paine,
Whereat he gan to stretch; but he againe

1 dispersed. 2 The ocean. 3 The moon.
4 heed. 5 upper floor.

hooke him so hard, that forced him to speake.

s one then in a dreame, whose dryer[1] braine
s tost with troubled sights and fancies weake,
Ie mumbled soft, but would not all his silence breake.

43

The Sprite then gan more boldly him to wake, nd threatned unto him the dreaded name
f Hecate:[2] whereat he gan to quake, nd, lifting up his lompish[3] head, with blame alfe angrie asked him, for what he came.
Hether" (quoth he,) "me Archimago sent,
Ie that the stubborne Sprites can wisely tame,
Ie bids thee to him send for his intent
A fit false dreame, that can delude the sleepers sent.[4]"

44

The God obayde; and, calling forth straight way
A diverse[5] Dreame out of his prison darke,
Delivered it to him, and downe did lay
His heavie head, devoide of careful carke;[6]
Whose sences all were straight benumbd and starke.
He, backe returning by the Yvorie dore,
Remounted up as light as chearefull Larke;
And on his litle winges the dreame he bore
In hast unto his Lord, where he him left afore.

45

Who all this while, with charmes and hidden artes,
Had made a Lady of that other Spright,
And fram'd of liquid ayre her tender partes,
So lively and so like in all mens sight,
That weaker sence it could have ravisht quight:
The maker selfe, for all his wondrous witt,
Was nigh beguiled with so goodly sight.
Her all in white he clad, and over it
Cast a black stole, most like to seeme for Una fit.

46

Now, when that ydle dreame was to him brought,
Unto that Elfin knight he bad him fly,
Where he slept soundly void of evil thought,
And with false shewes abuse his fantasy,
In sort as[1] he him schooled privily:
And that new creature, borne without her dew,[2]
Full of the makers guyle, with usage sly
He taught to imitate that Lady trew,
Whose semblance she did carrie under feigned hew.

47

Thus well instructed, to their worke they hast,
And comming where the knight in slomber lay,
The one upon his hardy head him plast,
And made him dreame of loves and lustfull play,
That nigh his manly hart did melt away,
Bathed in wanton blis and wicked ioy:
Then seemed him his Lady by him lay,
And to him playnd, how that false winged boy
Her chast hart had subdewd, to learne Dame pleasures toy.

48

And she her selfe of beautie soveraigne Queene,
Faire Venus seemde unto his bed to bring
Her, whom he waking evermore did weene
To be the chastest flowre, that ay did spring
On earthly braunch, the daughter of a king,
Now a loose Leman to vile service bound:
And eke the Graces seemed all to sing,
Hymen iô Hymen, dauncing all around,
Whilst freshest Flora her with Yuie girlond crownd.

49

In this great passion of unwonted lust,
Or wonted feare of doing ought amis,
He started up, as seeming to mistrust
Some secret ill, or hidden foe of his:
Lo there before his face his Lady is,
Under blake stole hyding her bayted hooke,
And as halfe blushing offred him to kis,
With gentle blandishment and lovely looke,
Most like that virgin true, which for her knight him took.

50

All cleane dismayd to see so uncouth sight,
And halfe enraged at her shamelesse guise,
He thought have slaine her in his fierce despight:[3]

1 A damp brain was supposed to be more active.
2 Underworld goddess of magic. 3 heavy.
4 sense. 5 misleading. 6 worry.

1 in the way that.
2 due, i.e., unnaturally. 3 anger.

But hasty heat tempring with sufferance wise,
He stayde his hand, and gan himselfe advise
To prove his sense, and tempt her faigned truth.
Wringing her hands in wemens pitteous wise,
Tho[1] can[2] she weepe, to stirre up gentle ruth,[3]
Both for her noble bloud, and for her tender youth.

51

And said, Ah Sir, my liege Lord and my love,
Shall I accuse the hidden cruell fate,
And mightie causes wrought in heaven above,
Or the blind God, that doth me thus amate,[4]
For hoped love to winne me certaine hate?
Yet thus perforce he bids me do, or die.
Die is my dew: yet rew my wretched state
You, whom my hard avenging destinie
Hath made iudge of my life or death indifferently.

52

Your owne deare sake forst me at first to leave
My Fathers kingdome, There she stopt with teares;
Her swollen hart her speach seemd to bereave,
And then againe begun, My weaker yeares
Captiv'd to fortune and frayle worldly feares,
Fly to your faith for succour and sure ayde:
Let me not dye in languor and long teares.
Why Dame (quoth he) what hath ye thus dismayd?
What frayes ye, that were wont to comfort me affrayd?

53

Love of your selfe, she said, and deare constraint[5]
Lets me not sleepe, but wast the wearie night
In secret anguish and unpittied plaint,
Whiles you in carelesse sleepe are drowned quight.
Her doubtfull words made that redouted knight
Suspect her truth: yet since no'untruth he knew,
Her fawning love with foule disdainefull spight
He would not shend,[6] but said, Deare dame I rew,
That for my sake unknowne such griefe unt
you grew.

54

Assure your selfe, it fell not all to ground
For all so deare as life is to my hart,
I deeme your love, and hold me to yo bound;
Ne let vaine feares procure your needless smart,
Where cause is none, but to your rest depart
Not all content, yet seemd she to appease[1]
Her mournefull plaintes, beguiled of he art,
And fed with words, that could not chuse bu
please,
So slyding softly forth, she turnd as to he ease.

55

Long after lay he musing at her mood,
Much grieu'd to thinke that gentle Dame s light,
For whose defence he was to shed his blood.
At last dull wearinesse of former fight
Having yrockt a sleepe his irkesome spright,
That troublous dreame gan freshly tosse his braine,
With bowres, and beds, and Ladies deare delight:
But when he saw his labour all was vaine,
With that misformed spright he backe returnd againe.

CANTO II

The guilefull great Enchanter parts
The Redcrosse Knight from Truth:
Into whose stead faire falshood steps,
And workes him woefull ruth.

1

By this the Northerne wagoner[2] had set
His sevenfold teme[3] behind the stedfast starre[4]
That was in Ocean waves yet never wet,
But firme is fixt, and sendeth light from farre
To al that in the wide deepe wandring arre;
And chearefull Chaunticlere with his note shrill
Had warned once, that Phoebus fiery carre
In hast was climbing up the Easterne hill,
Full envious that night so long his roome did fill:

1 then. 2 did. 3 pity.
4 discourage. 5 necessity. 6 reproach.

1 cease.
2 The northern constellation of Boötes, which contains the bright star Arcturus.
3 The seven stars of the Dipper or Charles's Wain in Ursa Major.
4 Polaris, the North Star.

2

When those accursed messengers of hell,
That feigning dreame, and that faire-forged Spright,
Came to their wicked maister, and gan tel
Their bootelesse paines, and ill succeeding night:
Who, in all rage to see his skilfull might Deluded so, gan threaten hellish paine,
And sad Proserpines wrath, them to affright:
But, when he saw his threatning was but vaine,
He cast about, and searcht his baleful bokes againe.

3

Eftsoones he tooke that miscreated faire,
And that false other Spright, on whom he spred
A seeming body of the subtile aire,
Like a young Squire, in loves and lusty-hed
His wanton dayes that ever loosely led,
Without regard of armes and dreaded fight:
Those two he tooke, and in a secret bed,
Covered with darknesse and misdeeming[1] night,
Them both together laid, to ioy in vaine delight.

4

Forthwith he runnes with feigned faithfull hast
Unto his guest, who after troublous sights
And dreames, gan now to take more sound repast,
Whom suddenly he wakes with fearefull frights,
As one aghast with feends or damned sprights,
And to him cals, Rise rise unhappy Swaine,
That here wex old in sleepe, whiles wicked wights
Have knit themselves in Venus shamefull chaine;
Come see, where your false Lady doth her honour staine.

5

All in amaze he suddenly up start
With sword in hand, and with the old man went;
Who soone him brought into a secret part,
Where that false couple were full closely ment[2]
In wanton lust and lewd embracement:
Which when he saw, he burnt with gealous fire,
The eye of reason was with rage yblent,[3]
And would have slaine them in his furious ire,
But hardly was restreined of that aged sire.

6

Returning to his bed in torment great,
And bitter anguish of his guiltie sight,
He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And wast his inward gall with deepe despight,
Yrkesome of life, and too long lingring night.
At last faire Hesperus in highest skie
Had spent his lampe, and brought forth dawning light
Then up he rose, and clad him hastily;
The Dwarfe him brought his steed: so both away do fly.

7

Now when the rosy fingred Morning faire,
Weary of aged Tithones[1] saffron bed,
Had spred her purple robe through deawy aire,
And the high hils Titan[2] discovered,
The royall virgin shooke off drousy-hed;[3]
And, rising forth out of her baser bowre,
Lookt for her knight, who far away was fled,
And for her dwarfe, that wont to wait each howre:
Then gan she wail and weepe to see that woeful stowre.[4]

8

And after him she rode with so much speede
As her slowe beast could make; but all in vaine,
For him so far had borne his light-foot steede,
Pricked with wrath and fiery fierce disdaine,
That him to follow was but fruitlesse paine:
Yet she her weary limbes would never rest;
But every hil and dale, each wood and plaine,
Did search, sore grieved in her gentle brest,
He so ungently left her, whome she loved best.

9

But subtill Archimago, when his guests
He saw divided into double parts,
And Una wandring in woods and forrests,

1 misleading. 2 mingled. 3 blinded.

1 Tithonus, beloved of Morning (Aurora), who gave him immortality, forgetting eternal youth.
2 the sun.
3 The suffix -hed = -ness or -hood
4 affliction.

Th' end of his drift, he praisd his divelish arts
That had such might over true meaning harts;
Yet rests not so, but other meanes doth make,
How he may worke unto her further smarts;
For her he hated as the hissing snake,
And in her many troubles did most pleasure take.

10

He then devisde himselfe how to disguise;
For by his mighty science he could take
As many formes and shapes in seeming wise,
As ever Proteus [1] to himselfe could make:
Sometime a fowle, sometime a fish in lake,
Now like a foxe, now like a dragon fell;
That of himselfe he ofte for feare would quake,
And oft would flie away. O! who can tell
The hidden powre of herbes, and might of Magick spel?

11

But now seemde best the person to put on
Of that good knight, his late beguiled guest:
In mighty armes he was yclad anon,
And silver shield; upon his coward brest
A bloody crosse, and on his craven crest
A bounch of heares discolourd diversly.
Full jolly knight he seemde, and wel addrest;
And when he sate upon his courser free,
Saint George [2] himselfe ye would have deemed him to be.

12

But he, the knight whose semblaunt he did beare,
The true Saint George, was wandred far away,
Still flying from his thoughts and gealous feare:
Will was his guide, and griefe led him astray.
At last him chaunst to meete upon the way
A faithlesse Sarazin,[3] all armde to point,
In whose great shield was writ with letters gay
Sans foy; full large of limbe and every joint
He was, and cared not for God or man a point.[4]

13

Hee had a faire companion [5] of his way,
A goodly Lady clad in scarlot red,
Purfled [6] with gold and pearle of rich assay;
And like a Persian mitre on her hed
Shee wore, with crowns and owches [1] garnished,
The which her lavish lovers to her gave.
Her wanton palfrey all was overspred
With tinsell trappings, woven like a wave,
Whose bridle rung with golden bels and bosses [2] brave.

14

With faire disport, and courting dalliaunce,
She intertainde her lover all the way;
But, when she saw the knight his speare advaunce,
She soone left off her mirth and wanton play,
And bad her knight addresse him to the fray,
His foe was nigh at hand. He, prickte with pride
And hope to winne his Ladies hearte that day,
Forth spurred fast: adowne his coursers side
The red bloud trickling staind the way, as he did ride.

15

The knight of the Redcrosse, when him he spide
Spurring so hote with rage dispiteous,
Gan fairely couch his speare, and towards ride.
Soone meete they both, both fell and furious,
That, daunted with theyr forces hideous,
Their steeds doe stagger, and amazed stand;
And eke themselves, too rudely rigorous,
Astonied with the stroke of their owne hand,
Doe backe rebutte,[3] and ech to other yealdeth land.

16

As when two rams, stird with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flocke,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Doe meete, that, with the terror of the shocke,
Astonied, both stand sencelesse as a blocke,
Forgetfull of the hanging victory:
So stood these twaine, unmoved as a rocke,
Both staring fierce, and holding idely
The broken reliques of their former cruelty.

17

The Sarazin, sore daunted with the buffe,
Snatcheth his sword, and fiercely to him flies;

1 The sea-god who could change his shape at will.
2 Patron saint of England.
3 i.e., a heathen. 4 whit.
5 Duessa or Fidessa, representing Falsehood.
6 embroidered along the edge.

1 jewels. 2 ornamental protuberances. 3 recoil.

Who well it wards, and quyteth [1] cuff with cuff:
Each others equall puissaunce envies,
And through their iron sides with cruell spies
Does seeke to perce; [2] repining courage yields
To foote to foe: the flashing fier flies,
As from a forge, out of their burning shields;
And streams of purple bloud new die the verdant fields.

18

"Curse on that Cross," (quoth then the Sarazin,)
That keepes thy body from the bitter fitt! [3]
Dead long ygoe, I wote, thou haddest bin,
Had not that charme from thee forwarned itt:
But yet I warne thee now assured sitt,
And hide thy head." [4] Therewith upon his crest
With rigor so outrageous he smitt,
That a large share it hewd out of the rest,
And glauncing downe his shield from blame [5] him fairly blest. [6]

19

Who, thereat wondrous wroth, the sleeping spark
Of native vertue gan eftsoones revive;
And at his haughty helmet making mark,
So hugely stroke, that it the steele did rive,
And cleft his head. He, tumbling downe alive,
With bloudy mouth his mother earth did kis,
Greeting his grave: his grudging [7] ghost did strive
With the fraile flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the soules doe fly of men that live amis.

20

The Lady, when she saw her champion fall
Like the old ruines of a broken towre,
Staid not to waile his woefull funerall, [8]
But from him fled away with all her powre;
Who after her as hastily gan scowre, [9]
Bidding the dwarfe with him to bring away
The Sarazins shield, signe of the conqueroure.
Her soone he overtooke, and bad to stay;
For present cause was none of dread her to dismay.

1 pays. 2 i.e., each "looks for an opening."
3 death blow. 4 i.e., protect it. 5 harm.
6 preserved. 7 murmuring, complaining.
8 death. 9 hurry.

21

Shee turning backe, with ruefull [1] countenaunce,
Cride, "Mercy, mercy, Sir, vouchsafe to show
On silly Dame, subject to hard mischaunce,
And to your mighty wil!" Her humblesse low,
In so ritch weedes, and seeming glorious show,
Did much emmove his stout heroïcke heart;
And said, "Deare dame, your suddein overthrow
Much rueth me; but now put feare apart,
And tel both who ye be, and who that tooke your part."

22

Melting in teares, then gan shee thus lament.
"The wretched woman, whom unhappy howre
Hath now made thrall to your commandement,
Before that angry heavens list [2] to lowre,
And fortune false betraide me to thy powre,
Was (O! what now availeth that I was?)
Borne the sole daughter of an Emperour,
He that the wide West under his rule has,
And high hath set his throne where Tiberis doth pas.

23

"He, in the first flowre of my freshest age,
Betrothed me unto the onely haire
Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage:
Was never Prince so faithfull and so faire,
Was never Prince so meeke and debonaire;
But ere my hoped day of spousall shone,
My dearest Lord fell from high honours staire
Into the hands of hys accursed fone, [3]
And cruelly was slaine; that shall I ever mone.

24

"His blessed body, spoild of lively breath,
Was afterward, I know not how, convaid,
And fro me hid: of whose most innocent death
When tidings came to mee, unhappy maid,
O, how great sorrow my sad soule assaid! [4]
Then forth I went his woefull corse to find,
And many yeares throughout the world I straid,
A virgin widow, whose deepe wounded mind
With love long time did languish, as the stricken hind.

1 sad. 2 pleased. 3 foes. 4 attacked.

25

"At last it chaunced this proud Sarazin
To meete me wandring; who perforce me led
With him away, but yet could never win
The fort that ladies hold in soveraigne dread.
There lies he now with foule dishonour dead,
Who, whiles he livde, was called proud Sans foy,
The eldest of three brethren; all three bred
Of one bad sire, whose youngest is Sans joy;
And twixt them both was born the bloudy bold Sans loy.

26

"In this sad plight, friendlesse, unfortunate,
Now miserable I, Fidessa, dwell,
Craving of you, in pitty of my state,
To doe none ill, if please ye not doe well."
He in great passion al this while did dwell,
More busying his quicke eies her face to view,
Then his dull eares to heare what shee did tell;
And said, "faire lady, hart of flint would rew
The undeserved woes and sorrowes, which ye shew.

27

"Henceforth in safe assuraunce may ye rest,
Having both found a new friend you to aid,
And lost an old foe that did you molest;
Better new friend then an old foe is said."
With chaunge of chear the seeming simple maid
Let fal her eien, as shamefast, to the earth,
And yeelding soft, in that she nought gainsaid,
So forth they rode, he feining seemely merth,
And shee coy lookes: so dainty,[1] they say, maketh derth.[2]

28

Long time they thus together traveiled;
Til, weary of their way, they came at last
Where grew two goodly trees, that faire did spred
Their armes abroad, with gray mosse overcast;
And their greene leaves, trembling with every blast,
Made a calme shadowe far in compasse round:
The fearefull shepheard, often there aghast,
Under them never sat, ne wont there sound
His mery oaten pipe, but shund th' unluckie ground.

29

But this good knight, soone as he them can spie,
For the coole shade him thither hastly got:
For golden Phoebus, now ymounted hie,
From fiery wheeles of his faire chariot
Hurled his beame so scorching cruell hot,
That living creature mote it not abide;
And his new Lady it endured not.
There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide.[1]

30

Faire seemely pleasaunce each to other makes,
With goodly purposes, there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yit;
Which to expresse he bends his gentle wit:
And, thinking of those braunches greene to frame
A girlond for her dainty forehead fit,
He pluckt a bough; out of whose rifte there came Smal drops of gory bloud, that trickled down the same.

31

Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard,
Crying, "O! spare with guilty hands to teare
My tender sides in this rough rynd embard;
But fly, ah! fly far hence away, for feare
Least to you hap that happened to me heare,
And to this wretched Lady, my deare love:
O, too deare love, love bought with death too deare!"
Astond he stood, and up his heare did hove;
And with that suddein horror could no member move.

32

At last whenas the dreadfull passion
Was overpast, and manhood well awake,
Yet musing at the straunge occasion,
And doubting much his sence, he thus bespake:
"What voice of damned Ghost from Limbo lake,

1 anything pleasant or desirable. 2 desire.

1 time; cf. Christmas*tide*. 2 confined. 3 rise. 4 the edge of hell.

r guilefull spright wandring in empty aire,
oth which fraile men doe oftentimes mistake,
nds to my doubtful eares these speaches rare,
nd ruefull plaints, me bidding guiltlesse blood to spare?"

33

Then, groning deep; "Nor damned Ghost," (quoth he,) Nor guileful sprite to thee these words doth speake;
ut once a man, Fradubio,[1] now a tree;
retched man, wretched tree! whose nature weake cruell witch, her cursed will to wreake, ath thus transformd, and plast in open plaines,
here Boreas doth blow full bitter bleake, nd scorching Sunne does dry my secret vaines;
or though a tree I seme, yet cold and heat me paines."

34

"Say on, Fradubio, then, or man or tree," uoth then the Knight; "by whose mischievous arts rt thou misshaped thus, as now I see?
e oft finds med'cine who his griefe imparts,
ut double griefs afflict concealing harts,
s raging flames who striveth to suppresse."
The author then," (said he) "of all my smarts,
one Duessa, a false sorceresse,
hat many errant knights hath broght to wretchednesse.

35

"In prime of youthly yeares, when corage hott
he fire of love, and joy of chevalree, irst kindled in my brest, it was my lott o love this gentle Lady, whome ye see ow not a Lady, but a seeming tree;
ith whome, as once I rode accompanyde,
le chaunced of a knight encountred bee, hat had a like faire Lady by his syde;
yke a faire Lady, but did fowle Duessa hyde.

36

"Whose forged beauty he did take in hand[2]
ll other Dames to have exceeded farre:
I in defence of mine did likewise stand,
Mine, that did then shine as the Morning starre.
So both to batteill fierce arraunged arre,
In which his harder fortune was to fall
Under my speare: such is the dye of warre.
His Lady, left as a prise martiall,
Did yield her comely person to be at my call.

37

"So doubly lov'd of ladies, unlike faire,
Th' one seeming such, the other such indeede,
One day in doubt I cast for to compare
Whether [1] in beauties glorie did exceede.
A Rosy girlond was the victors meede.
Both seemde to win, and both seemde won to bee,
So hard the discord was to be agreede.
Frælissa was as faire as faire mote bee,
And ever false Duessa seemde as faire as shee.

38

"The wicked witch, now seeing all this while
The doubtfull ballaunce equally to sway,
What not by right she cast to win by guile:
And by her hellish science raisd streight way
A foggy mist that overcast the day,
And a dull blast, that breathing on her face
Dimmed her former beauties shining ray,
And with foule ugly forme did her disgrace:
Then was she fayre alone, when none was faire in place.

39

"Then cride she out, 'Fye, fye! deformed wight,
Whose borrowed beautie now appeareth plaine
To have before bewitched all mens sight:
O! leave her soone, or let her soone be slaine.'
Her loathly visage viewing with disdaine,
Eftsoones I thought her such as she me told,
And would have kild her; but with faigned paine
The false witch did my wrathfull hand withhold:
So left her, where she now is turnd to treen mould.[2]

40

"Thensforth I tooke Duessa for my Dame,
And in the witch unweeting joyd long time,
Ne ever wist but that she was the same;
Till on a day (that day is everie Prime,[3]

1 Doubt. 2 assert.

1 which of two. 2 shape of a tree.
3 springtime.

When Witches wont do penance for their crime,)
I chaunst to see her in her proper hew,
Bathing her selfe in origane [1] and thyme:
A filthy foule old woman I did vew,
That ever to have toucht her I did deadly rew.

41

Her neather partes misshapen, monstruous,
Were hidd in water, that I could not see,
But they did seeme more foule and hideous,
Then womans shape man would believe to bee.
"Thensforth from her most beastly companie
I gan refraine, in minde to slipp away,
Soone as appeard safe opportunitie:
For danger great, if not assurd decay,
I saw before mine eyes, if I were knowne to stray.

42

"The divelish hag by chaunges of my cheare
Perceiv'd my thought; and, drownd in sleepie night,
With wicked herbes and oyntments did besmeare
My body all, through charmes and magicke might,
That all my senses were bereaved quight:
Then brought she me into this desert waste,
And by my wretched lovers side me pight; [2]
Where now, enclosd in wooden wals full faste,
Banisht from living wights, our wearie daies we waste."

43

"But how long time," said then the Elfin knight,
"Are you in this misformed hous to dwell?"
"We may not chaunge," (quoth he,) "this evill plight,
Till we be bathed in a living [3] well:
That is the terme prescribed by the spell."
"O! how," sayd he, "mote I that well out find,
That may restore you to your wonted well?"
"Time and suffised [4] fates to former kynd [5] Shall us restore; none else from hence may us unbynd."

1 sweet marjoram. 2 placed.
3 running. 4 satisfied. 5 state.

44

The false Duessa, now Fidessa hight,
Heard how in vaine Fradubio did lament,
And knew well all was true. But the goo knight,
Full of sad feare and ghastly dreriment,
When all this speech the living tree ha spent,
The bleeding bough did thrust into th ground,
That from the blood he might be innocent,
And with fresh clay did close the woode wound:
Then, turning to his Lady, dead with fear her fownd.

45

Her seeming dead he fownd with feigne feare,
As all unweeting of that well she knew;
And paynd himselfe with busie care to rear
Her out of carelesse swowne. Her eyelid blew,
And dimmed sight, with pale and deadly hew
At last she up gan lift: with trembling chear
Her up he tooke, (too simple and too trew)
And oft her kist. At length, all passe feare, [1]
He set her on her steede, and forward fort did beare.

CANTO III

Forsaken Truth long seekes her love,
And makes the Lyon mylde;
Marres blind Devotions mart, [2] and fals
In hand of leachour vylde.

1

Nought is there under heav'ns wide ho lownesse,
That moves more deare compassion of mind
Then beautie brought t'unworthie wretched nesse
Through envies snares, or fortunes freake unkind.
I, whether lately through her brightne blynd,
Or through alleageance, and fast fealty,
Which I do owe unto all womankynd,
Feele my hart perst with so great agony,
When such I see, that all for pitty I could dy

2

And now it is empassioned so deepe,
For fairest Unaes sake, of whom I sing,
That my frayle eies these lines with teares d steepe,

1 all fear past. 2 trade.

To thinke how she through guyleful handeling,
Though true as touch,[1] though daughter of a king,
Though faire as ever living wight was fayre,
Though not in word nor deede ill meriting,
Is from her knight divorced in despayre,
And her dew loves deryv'd[2] to that vile witches shayre.

3

Yet she, most faithfull Ladie, all this while Forsaken, wofull, solitarie mayd,
Far from all peoples preace,[3] as in exile,
In wildernesse and wastfull deserts strayd,
To seeke her knight; who, subtily betrayd
Through that late vision which th' Enchaunter wrought,
Had her abandond. She, of nought affrayd,
Through woods and wastnes wide him daily sought;
Yet wished tydinges none of him unto her brought.

4

One day, nigh wearie of the yrkesome way,
From her unhastie beast she did alight;
And on the grasse her dainty limbs did lay
In secrete shadow, far from all mens sight:
From her fayre head her fillet she undight,
And layd her stole aside. Her angels face,
As the great eye of heaven, shyned bright,
And made a sunshine in the shady place;
Did never mortall eye behold such heavenly grace.

5

It fortuned, out of the thickest wood
A ramping Lyon rushed suddeinly,
Hunting full greedy after salvage[4] blood.
Soone as the royall virgin he did spy,
With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
To have attonce devourd her tender corse;
But to the pray when as he drew more ny,
His bloody rage aswaged with remorse,
And, with the sight amazd, forgat his furious forse.

6

In stead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
And lickt her lilly hands with fawning tong,
As he her wronged innocence did weet.[5]
O, how can beautie maister the most strong,
And simple truth subdue avenging wrong!
Whose yielded pryde and proud submission,
Still dreading death, when she had marked long,
Her hart gan melt in great compassion;
And drizling teares did shed for pure affection.

7

"The Lyon, Lord of everie beast in field," Quoth she, "his princely puissance doth abate,
And mightie proud to humble weake does yield,
Forgetfull of the hungry rage, which late
Him prickt, in pittie of my sad estate:
But he, my Lyon, and my noble Lord,
How does he find in cruell hart to hate
Her, that him lov'd, and ever most adord
As the God of my life? why hath he me abhord?"

8

Redounding teares did choke th' end of her plaint,
Which softly ecchoed from the neighbour wood;
And, sad to see her sorrowfull constraint,
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood:
With pittie calmd downe fell his angry mood.
At last, in close hart shutting up her payne,
Arose the virgin, borne of heavenly brood,
And to her snowy Palfrey got agayne,
To seeke her strayed Champion if she might attayne.

9

The Lyon would not leave her desolate,
But with her went along, as a strong gard
Of her chast person, and a faythfull mate
Of her sad troubles and misfortunes hard:
Still, when she slept, he kept both watch and ward;
And, when she wakt, he wayted diligent,
With humble service to her will prepard:
From her fayre eyes he tooke commandement,
And ever by her lookes conceived her intent.

10

Long she thus traveiled through deserts wyde,
By which she thought her wandring knight shold pas,
Yet never shew of living wight espyde;
Till that at length she found the troden gras,
In which the tract of peoples footing was,
Under the steepe foot of a mountaine hore:[1]

1 touchstone. 2 transferred. 3 press, large crowd. 4 savage. 5 know.

1 gray.

The same she followes, till at last she has
A damzel spyde, slow footing her before,
That on her shoulders sad [1] a pot of water bore.

11

To whom approching she to her gan call,
To weet if dwelling place were nigh at hand;
But the rude wench her answerd noght at all:
She could not heare, nor speake, not understand;
Till, seeing by her side the Lyon stand,
With suddeine feare her pitcher downe she threw,
And fled away: for never in that land
Face of fayre Lady she before did vew,
And that dredd Lyons looke her cast in deadly hew.

12

Full fast she fled, ne ever lookt behynd,
As if her life upon the wager lay;
And home she came, whereas [2] her mother blynd
Sate in eternall night: nought could she say;
But, suddeine catching hold, did her dismay
With quaking hands, and other signes of feare:
Who, full of ghastly fright and cold affray,
Gan shut the dore. By this arrived there
Dame Una, weary Dame, and entrance did requere:

13

Which when none yielded, her unruly Page
With his rude clawes the wicket open rent,
And let her in; where, of his cruell rage
Nigh dead with feare, and faint astonishment,
Shee found them both in darksome corner pent;
Where that old woman day and night did pray
Upon her beads, devoutly penitent:
Nine hundred Pater nosters every day,
And thrise nine hundred Aves she was wont to say.

14

And to augment her painefull penaunce more,
Thrise every weeke in ashes shee did sitt,
And next her wrinkled skin rough sackecloth wore,
And thrise three times did fast from any bitt;
But now, for feare her beads she did forgett:

1 weighed down. 2 where.

Whose needlesse dread for to remove away,
Faire Una framed words and count'naunce fitt;
Which hardly doen, at length she gan them pray,
That in their cotage small that night she rest her may.

15

The day is spent; and commeth drowsie night,
When every creature shrowded is in sleepe.
Sad Una downe her laies in weary plight,
And at her feete the Lyon watch doth keepe:
In stead of rest she does lament and weepe,
For the late losse of her deare loved knight,
And sighes, and grones, and evermore does steepe
Her tender brest in bitter teares all night;
All night she thinks too long, and often lookes for light.

16

Now when Aldeboran [1] was mounted hye
Above the shinie Cassiopeias chaire,[2]
And all in deadly sleepe did drowned lye
One knocked at the dore, and in would fare:
He knocked fast, and often curst, and sware,
That ready entraunce was not at his call;
For on his backe a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stelths, and pillage severall,[3]
Which he had got abroad by purchas criminall.

17

He was, to weete,[4] a stout and sturdy thiefe,[5]
Wont to robbe churches of their ornaments,
And poore mens boxes of their due reliefe,
Which given was to them for good intents:
The holy Saints of their rich vestiments
He did disrobe, when all men careless slept,
And spoild the Priests of their habiliments;
Whiles none the holy things in safety kept,
Then he by conning sleights in at the window crept.

18

And all that he by right or wrong could find,
Unto this house he brought, and did bestow

1 Brightest star in Taurus.
2 The stars in the northern constellation of Cassiopeia resemble a chair.
3 various. 4 to wit.
5 Kirkrapine, i.e., Church-Plunder.

pon the daughter of this woman blind,
bessa,[1] daughter of Corceca [2] slow,
ith whom he whoredome used, that few did know,
nd fed her fatt with feast of offerings,
nd plenty, which in all the land did grow:
e spared he to give her gold and rings;
nd now he to her brought part of his stolen things.

19

Thus, long the dore with rage and threats he bett,[3]
et of those fearfull women none durst rize.
he Lyon frayed [4] them, him in to lett.
e would no lenger stay him to advize,
ut open breakes the dore in furious wize,
nd entring is, when that disdainfull beast,
ncountring fierce, him suddein doth surprize;
nd, seizing cruell clawes on trembling brest,
nder his Lordly foot him proudly hath suppress.[5]

20

Him booteth not resist, nor succour call, is bleeding hart is in the vengers hand;
ho streight him rent in thousand peeces small,
nd quite dismembred hath: the thirsty land ronke up his life; his corse left on the strand.
is fearefull freends weare out the wofull night,
e dare to weepe, nor seeme to understand he heavie hap which on them is alight;
ffraid least to themselves the like mishappen might.

21

Now when broad day the world discovered has,
p Una rose, up rose the lyon eke;
nd on their former journey forward pas,
n waies unknowne, her wandring knight to seeke, ith paines far passing that long wandring Greeke,[6] hat for his love refused deitye.
uch were the labours of this Lady meeke,
Still seeking him, that from her still did flye;
Then furthest from her hope, when most she weened nye.

22

Soone as she parted thence, the fearfull twayne,
That blind old woman, and her daughter dear,
Came forth; and, finding Kirkrapine there slayne,
For anguish great they gan to rend their heare,
And beat their brests, and naked flesh to teare:
And when they both had wept and wayld their fill,
Then forth they ran, like two amazed deare,
Halfe mad through malice and revenging will,
To follow her that was the causer of their ill.

23

Whome overtaking, they gan loudly bray,
With hollow houling, and lamenting cry;
Shamefully at her rayling all the way,
And her accusing of dishonesty,
That was the flowre of faith and chastity:
And still, amidst her rayling, she did pray
That plagues, and mischiefes, and long misery,
Might fall on her, and follow all the way,
And that in endlesse error she might ever stray.

24

But, when she saw her prayers nought prevaile,
Shee backe retourned with some labour lost;
And in the way, as shee did weepe and waile,
A knight her mett in mighty armes embost,[1]
Yet knight was not for all his bragging bost,
But subtill Archimag, that Una sought
By traynes [2] into new troubles to have toste;
Of that old woman tidings he besought,
If that of such a Lady shee could tellen ought.

25

Therewith she gan her passion to renew,
And cry, and curse, and raile, and rend her heare.
Saying, that harlott she too lately knew,
That causd her shed so many a bitter teare;
And so forth told the story of her feare.
Much seemed he to mone her haplesse chaunce,

1 symbolizing superstition.
2 typifying blind devotion. 3 beat.
4 "They were afraid of letting him in because of the on." The Lion represents Strength of Mind.
5 overcome. 6 Odysseus.

1 encased. 2 treacheries.

And after for that Lady did inquere;
Which being taught, he forward gan advaunce
His fair enchaunted steed, and eke his charmed launce.

26

Ere long he came where Una traveild slow,
And that wilde champion wayting her besyde;
Whome seeing such, for dread hee durst not show
Him selfe too nigh at hand, but turned wyde
Unto an hil; from whence when she him spyde,
By his like seeming shield her knight by name
She weend it was, and towards him gan ride:
Approaching nigh she wist it was the same;
And with faire fearefull humblesse towards him shee came:

27

And weeping said, "Ah, my long lacked Lord,
Where have ye bene thus long out of my sight?
Much feared I to have been quite abhord,
Or ought[1] have done, that ye displeasen might,
That should as death unto my deare[2] heart light:
For since mine eie your joyous sight did mis,
My chearefull day is turnd to chearelesse night,
And eke my night of death the shadow is;
But welcome now, my light, and shining lampe of blis!"

28

He thereto meeting said, "My dearest Dame,
Far be it from your thought, and fro my wil,
To thinke that knighthood I so much should shame,
As you to leave that have me loved stil,
And chose in Faery court, of meere goodwil,
Where noblest knights were to be found on earth.
The earth shall sooner leave her kindly skil
To bring forth fruit, and make eternal derth,
Then I leave you, my liefe,[3] yborn of hevenly berth.

1 aught. 2 downcast. 3 beloved.

29

"And sooth to say, why I lefte you so long,
Was for to seeke adventure in straunge place
Where, Archimago said, a felon strong
To many knights did daily worke disgrace;
But knight he now shall never more deface:
Good cause of mine excuse,[1] that mote[2] yet please
Well to accept, and evermore embrace
My faithfull service, that by land and seas
Have vowd you to defend. Now then, you plaint appease."

30

His lovely words her seemd due recompence
Of all her passed paines: one loving howre
For many yeares of sorrow can dispence;
A dram of sweete is worth a pound of sowre.
Shee has forgott how many a woeful stowre
For him she late endurd; she speakes no more
Of past: true is, that true love hath no powr
To looken backe; his eies be fixt before.
Before her stands her knight, for whom she toyld so sore.

31

Much like, as when the beaten marinere,
That long hath wandred in the Ocean wide
Ofte soust in swelling Tethys saltish teare;
And long time having tand his tawney hide
With blustring breath of Heaven, that none can bide,
And scorching flames of fierce Orions hound;[4]
Soone as the port from far he has espide,
His chearfull whistle merily doth sound,
And Nereus crownes with cups;[5] his mate him pledg around.

32

Such joy made Una, when her knight she found,
And eke th' enchaunter joyous seemde nolesse
Then the glad marchant, that does vew from ground
His ship far come from watrie wildernesse:
He hurles out vowes, and Neptune oft dot blesse.
So forth they past; and all the way the spent Discoursing of her dreadful late distresse,

1 "good reason for excusing me."
2 may. 3 danger.
4 Sirius, the dog-star; Orion was a mighty hunter.
5 "drinks to Nereus, the sea-god."

n which he askt her, what the Lyon ment;
Who told her all that fell,[1] in journey as she went.

33

They had not ridden far, when they might see
One pricking towards them with hastie heat,
Full strongly armd, and on a courser free
That through his fiersnesse fomed all with sweat,
And the sharpe yron did for anger eat,
When his hot ryder spurd his chaufted[2] side:
His looke was sterne, and seemed still to threat
Cruell revenge, which he in hart did hyde;
And on his shield Sansloy in bloody lines was dyde.

34

When nigh he drew unto this gentle payre,
And saw the Red-crosse which the knight did beare,
He burnt in fire; and gan eftsoones prepare
Himselfe to batteill with his couched speare.
Loth was that other, and did faint through feare,
To taste th' untryed dint of deadly steele:
But yet his Lady did so well him cheare,
That hope of new good hap he gan to feele;
So bent[3] his speare, and spurd his horse with yron heele.

35

But that proud Paynim forward came so ferce
And full of wrath, that, with his sharphead speare,
Through vainly[4] crossed shield he quite did perce;
And, had his staggering steed not shronke for feare,
Through shield and body eke he should him beare:
Yet, so great was the puissance of his push,
That from his sadle quite he did him beare.
He, tombling rudely downe, to ground did rush,
And from his gored wound a well of bloud did gush.

36

Dismounting lightly from his loftie steed,
He to him lept, in minde to reave his life,
And proudly said: "Lo! there the worthie meed
Of him that slew Sansfoy with bloody knife.
Henceforth his ghost, freed from repining strife,
In peace may passen over Lethe[1] lake;
When mourning altars, purgd with enimies life,
The black infernall Furies doen aslake:[2]
Life from Sansfoy thou tookst, Sansloy shall from thee take."

37

Therewith in haste his helmet gan unlace,
Till Una cride, "O! hold that heavie hand,
Deare Sir, what ever that thou be in place:[3]
Enough is, that thy foe doth vanquisht stand
Now at thy mercy: Mercy not withstand;
For he is one the truest knight alive,
Though conquered now he lye on lowly land;
And, whilest him fortune favourd, fayre did thrive
In bloudy field; therefore, of life him not deprive."

38

Her piteous wordes might not abate his rage,
But, rudely rending up his helmet, would
Have slayne him streight; but when he sees his age,
And hoarie head of Archimago old,
His hasty hand he doth amased hold,
And halfe ashamed wondred at the sight:
For the old man well knew he, though untold,
In charmes and magick to have wondrous might,
Ne ever wont in field, ne in round lists,[4] to fight:

39

And said, "Why Archimago, lucklesse syre,
What doe I see? what hard mishap is this,
That hath thee hether brought to taste mine yre?
Or thine the fault, or mine the error is,
In stead of foe to wound my friend amis?"
He answered nought, but in a traunce still lay,
And on those guilefull dazed eyes of his
The cloude of death did sit. Which doen away,[5]
He left him lying so, ne would no lenger stay:

1 "She told all that befell her." 2 chafed.
3 braced. 4 i.e., the cross did not help.

1 The river of forgetfulness in Hades.
2 assuage. 3 rank.
4 i.e., in tournaments, in circular arenas.
5 done away, i.e., removed.

40

But to the virgin comes; who all this while Amased stands, her selfe so mockt to see
By him, who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to bee:
Yet is she now in more perplexitie,
Left in the hand of that same Paynim bold,
From whom her booteth not at all to flie:
Who, by her cleanly garment catching hold,
Her from her Palfrey pluckt, her visage to behold.

41

But her fiers servant, full of kingly aw
And high disdaine, whenas his soveraine Dame
So rudely handled by her foe he saw,
With gaping jawes full greedy at him came,
And, ramping on his shield, did weene the same
Have reft away with his sharp rending clawes:
But he[1] was stout, and lust did now inflame
His corage more, that from his griping pawes
He hath his shield redeemd, and forth his swerd he drawes.

42

O! then, too weake and feeble was the forse
Of salvage beast his puissance to withstand;
For he was strong, and of so mightie corse,
As ever wielded speare in warlike hand,
And feates of armes did wisely understand.
Eft soones he perced through his chaufed chest
With thrilling[2] point of deadly yron brand,
And launcht[3] his Lordly hart: with death opprest
He ror'd aloud, whiles life forsooke his stub-borne brest.

43

Who now is left to keepe the forlorne maid
From raging spoile of lawlesse victors will?
Her faithfull gard remov'd, her hope dismaid,
Her selfe a yielded pray to save or spill:[4]
He now, Lord of the field, his pride to fill,
With foule reproches and disdaineful spight
Her vildly[5] entertaines; and, will or nill,
Beares her away upon his courser light:
Her prayers nought prevaile, his rage is more of might.

44

And all the way, with great lamenting paine,
And piteous plaintes, she filleth his dull eares,
That stony hart could riven have in twaine;
And all the way she wetts with flowing teares;
But he, enrag'd with rancor, nothing heares.
Her servile beast yet would not leave her so,
But followes her far off, ne ought he feares
To be partaker of her wandring woe;
More mild in beastly kind then that her beastly foe.

CANTO IV

To sinfull hous of Pryde Duessa
Guydes the faithfull knight;
Where, brothers death to wreak, Sansjoy
Doth chaleng him to fight.

1

Young knight whatever, that dost armes professe,
And through long labours huntest after fame,
Beware of fraud, beware of ficklenesse,
In choice, and chaunge of thy deare-loved Dame;
Least thou of her believe too lightly blame,
And rash misweening doe thy hart remove:
For unto knight there is no greater shame
Than lightnesse and inconstancie in love:
That doth this Redcrosse knights ensample plainly prove.

2

Who, after that he had faire Una lorne,[1]
Through light misdeeming of her loialtie;
And false Duessa in her sted had borne,
Called Fidess', and so supposd to be,
Long with her traveild; till at last they see
A goodly building bravely garnished;
The house of mightie Prince it seemd to be,
And towards it a broad high way that led,
All bare through peoples feet which thether traveiled.

3

Great troupes of people traveild thetherward
Both day and night, of each degree and place;
But few returned, having scaped hard,
With balefull beggery, or foule disgrace;
Which ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay.
Thether Duessa badd him bend his pace,

1 lost; here, forsaken.

1 Sansloy. 2 piercing. 3 pierced. 4 destroy. 5 vilely.

For she is wearie of the toilsom way,
And also nigh consumed is the lingring day.

4

A stately Pallace built of squared bricke,
Which cunningly was without morter laid,
Whose wals were high, but nothing strong nor thick,
And golden foile all over them displaid,
That purest skye with brightnesse they dismaid:
High lifted up were many loftie towres,
And goodly galleries far over laid,
Full of faire windowes and delightful bowres:
And on the top a Diall told the timely howres.

5

It was a goodly heape for to behould,
And spake the praises of the workmans witt;
But full great pittie, that so faire a mould
Did on so weake foundation ever sitt:
For on a sandie hill, that still did flitt[1]
And fall away, it mounted was full hie,
That every breath of heaven shaked itt:
And all the hinder partes, that few could spie,
Were ruinous and old, but painted cunningly.

6

Arrived there, they passed in forth right;
For still to all the gates stood open wide:
Yet charge of them was to a Porter hight,[2]
Cald Malvenú, who entrance none denide:
Thence to the hall, which was on every side
With rich array and costly arras dight.
Infinite sortes of people did abide
There waiting long, to win the wished sight
Of her, that was the Lady of that Pallace bright.

7

By them they passe, all gazing on them round,
And to the Presence mount; whose glorious vew
Their frayle amazed senses did confound:
In living Princes court none ever knew
Such endlesse richesse, and so sumpteous shew;
Ne Persia selfe, the nourse[3] of pompous pride,
Like ever saw. And there a noble crew
Of Lords and Ladies stood on every side,
Which with their presence fayre the place much beautifide.

1 shift. 2 here, given. 3 nurse.

8

High above all a cloth of State was spred,
And a rich throne, as bright as sunny day;
On which there sate, most brave embellished
With royall robes and gorgeous array,
A mayden Queene that shone as Titans ray,
In glistring gold and perelesse pretious stone;
Yet her bright blazing beautie did assay
To dim the brightnesse of her glorious throne,
As envying her selfe, that too exceeding shone:

9

Exceeding shone, like Phœbus fayrest childe,[1]
That did presume his fathers fyrie wayne,
And flaming mouthes of steedes, unwonted wilde,
Through highest heaven with weaker hand to rayne,
Proud of such glory and advancement vayne,
While flashing beames do daze his feeble eyen,
He leaves the welkin way most beaten playne,[2]
And, rapt with whirling wheeles, inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burne, but fayrely for to shyne.

10

So proud she shyned in her princely state,
Looking to heaven, for earth she did disdayne,
And sitting high, for lowly she did hate:
Lo! underneath her scornefull feete was layne
A dreadfull Dragon with an hideous trayne;
And in her hand she held a mirrhour bright,
Wherein her face she often vewed fayne,[3]
And in her selfe-lov'd semblance took delight;
For she was wondrous faire, as any living wight.

11

Of griesly Pluto she the daughter was,
And sad Proserpina, the Queene of hell;
Yet did she thinke her pearelesse worth to pas
That parentage, with pride so did she swell;
And thundring Jove, that high in heaven doth dwell
And wield the world, she claymed for her syre,
Or if that any else did Jove excell;

1 Phaethon, who tried to drive his father's sun-horses across the heavens.
2 i.e., beaten path. 3 gladly.

For to the highest she did still aspyre,
Or, if ought higher were than that, did it desyre.

12

And proud Lucifera [1] men did her call,
That made her selfe a Queene, and crownd to be;
Yet rightfull kingdome she had none at all,
Ne heritage of native soveraintie;
But did usurpe with wrong and tyrannie
Upon the scepter which she now did hold:
Ne ruld her Realme with lawes, but pollicie,
And strong advizement of six wisards [2] old,
That, with their counsels bad, her kingdome did uphold.

13

Soone as the Elfin knight in presence came,
And false Duessa, seeming Lady fayre,
A gentle Husher, Vanitie by name,
Made rowme, and passage for them did prepaire:
So goodly brought them to the lowest stayre
Of her high throne; where they, on humble knee
Making obeysaunce, did the cause declare,
Why they were come her roiall state to see,
To prove the wide report of her great Majestee.

14

With loftie eyes, halfe loth to looke so lowe,
She thancked them in her disdainefull wise;
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to showe
Of Princesse worthy; scarse them bad arise.
Her Lordes and Ladies all this while devise Themselves to setten forth to straungers sight:
Some frounce [3] their curled heare in courtly guise;
Some prancke [4] their ruffes; and others trimly dight
Their gay attyre; each others greater pride does spight.

15

Goodly they all that knight doe entertayne,
Right glad with him to have increast their crew;
But to Duess' each one himselfe did payne
All kindnesse and faire courtesie to shew,

1 symbolizing pride. 2 wizards, wise men.
3 frizzle. 4 dress up.

For in that court whylome [1] her well they knew:
Yet the stout Faery mongst the middest crowd
Thought all their glorie vaine in knightly vew,
And that great Princesse too exceeding prowd,
That to strange knight no better countenance allowd.

16

Suddein upriseth from her stately place
The roiall Dame, and for her coche doth call:
All hurtlen [2] forth; and she, with princely pace,
As faire Aurora in her purple pall
Out of the East the dawning day doth call.
So forth she comes; her brightnes brode doth blaze.
The heapes of people, thronging in the hall,
Doe ride each other upon her to gaze:
Her glorious glitterand light doth all mens eies amaze.

17

So forth she comes, and to her coche does clyme,
Adorned all with gold and girlonds gay,
That seemd as fresh as Flora in her prime;
And strove to match, in roiall rich array,
Great Junoes golden chayre; the which, they say,
The gods stand gazing on, when she does ride
To Joves high hous through heavens braspaved way,
Drawne of fayre Pecocks, that excell in pride,
And full of Argus [3] eyes their tayles dispredden wide.

18

But this was drawne of six unequall beasts,
On which her six sage Counsellours did ryde,
Taught to obay their bestiall beheasts,
With like conditions to their kindes applyde:
Of which the first, that all the rest did guyde,
Was sluggish Idlenesse, the nourse of sin;
Upon a slouthfull Asse he chose to ryde,
Arayd in habit blacke, and amis [4] thin,
Like to an holy Monck, the service to begin.

1 formerly. 2 hurry.
3 After Argus's death Hera put his many eyes into the peacock's tail.
4 amice, a priest's white neck-piece.

19

And in his hand his Portesse [1] still he bare,
That much was worne, but therein little redd;
For of devotion he had little care,
Still drownd in sleepe, and most of his daies dedd:
Scarse could he once uphold his heavie hedd,
To looken whether it were night or day.
May seeme the wayne [2] was very evill ledd,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not whether right he went, or else astray.

20

From worldly cares himselfe he did esloyne,[3]
And greatly shunned manly exercise;
From everie worke he chalenged essoyne,[4]
For contemplation sake: yet otherwise
His life he led in lawlesse riotise,
By which he grew to grievous malady;
For in his lustlesse limbs, through evill guise,
A shaking fever raignd continually.
Such one was Idlenesse, first of this company.

21

And by his side rode loathsome Gluttony,
Deformed creature, on a filthie swyne.
His belly was upblowne with luxury,
And eke with fatnesse swollen were his eyne;
And like a Crane his necke was long and fyne
With which he swallowed up excessive feast,
For want whereof poore people oft did pyne:
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spued up his gorge, that all did him deteast.

22

In greene vine leaves he was right fitly clad,
For other clothes he could not weare for heate;
And on his head an yvie girland had,
From under which fast trickled downe the sweat.
Still as he rode he somewhat still did eat,
And in his hand did beare a bouzing [5] can,
Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat
His dronken corse he scarse upholden can:
In shape and life more like a monster then a man.

23

Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unhable once to stirre or go;
Not meet to be of counsell to a king,
Whose mind in meat and drinke was drowned so,
That from his frend he seeldome knew his fo.
Full of diseases was his carcas blew,
And a dry dropsie through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew.
Such one was Gluttony, the second of that crew.

24

And next to him rode lustfull Lechery,
Upon a bearded Goat, whose rugged haire,
And whally [1] eyes (the signe of gelosy,)
Was like the person selfe, whom he did beare:
Who rough, and blacke, and filthy did appeare,
Unseemely man to please faire Ladies eye;
Yet he of Ladies oft was loved deare,
When fairer faces were bid standen by:
O who does know the bent of womens fantasy?

25

In a greene gowne he clothed was full faire,
Which underneath did hide his filthinesse,
And in his hand a burning hart he bare,
Full of vaine follies, and new fanglenesse:
For he was false, and fraught with ficklenesse,
And learned had to love with secret lookes,
And well could daunce, and sing with ruefulnesse,
And fortunes tell, and read in loving bookes,
And thousand other wayes, to bait his fleshly hookes.

26

Inconstant man, that loved all he saw,
And lusted after all, that he did love,
Ne would his looser life be tide to law,
But joyd weake wemens hearts to tempt and prove
If from their loyall loves he might then move;
Which lewdnesse fild him with reprochfull paine
Of that fowle evill, which all men reprove,
That rots the marrow, and consumes the braine:
Such one was Lecherie, the third of all this traine.

27

And greedy Avarice by him did ride,
Upon a Camell loaden all with gold;

1 prayer book. 2 wain, chariot. 3 withdraw.
4 excuse. 5 boozing, drinking.

1 greenish.

Two iron coffers hong on either side,
With precious metall full as they might hold;
And in his lap an heap of coine he told; [1]
For of his wicked pelfe his God he made,
And unto hell him selfe for money sold:
Accursed usury was all his trade,
And right and wrong ylike in equall ballaunce waide.

28

His life was nigh unto deaths dore yplaste;
And thred-bare cote, and cobled shoes, hee ware;
Ne scarse good morsell all his life did taste,
But both from backe and belly still did spare,
To fill his bags, and richesse to compare: [2]
Yet childe ne kinsman living had he none
To leave them to; but thorough daily care
To get, and nightly feare to lose his owne,
He led a wretched life, unto himselfe unknowne.

29

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffise;
Whose greedy lust did lacke in greatest store;
Whose need had end, but no end covetise; [3]
Whose welth was want, whose plenty made him pore;
Who had enough, yett wished ever more;
A vile disease: and eke in foote and hand
A grievous gout tormented him full sore,
That well he could not touch, nor goe, nor stand.
Such one was Avarice, the fourth of this faire band.

30

And next to him malicious Envy rode
Upon a ravenous wolfe, and still did chaw
Between his cankred teeth a venemous tode,
That all the poison ran about his chaw,[4]
But inwardly he chawed his owne maw [5]
At neighbours welth, that made him ever sad,
For death it was, when any good he saw;
And wept, that cause of weeping none he had;
But when he heard of harme he wexed [6] wondrous glad.

31

All in a kirtle of discolourd say [7]
He clothed was, ypaynted full of eies;
And in his bosome secretly there lay
An hatefull Snake, the which his taile uptyes
In many folds, and mortall sting implyes.[8]

Still as he rode he gnasht his teeth to see
Those heapes of gold with griple [1] Covetyse
And grudged at the great felicitee
Of proud Lucifera, and his owne companee.

32

He hated all good workes and vertuous deeds,
And him no lesse, that any like did use;
And who with gratious bread the hungr feeds,
His almes for want of faith he doth accuse.
So every good to bad he doth abuse;
And eke the verse of famous Poets witt
He does backebite, and spightfull poison spues
From leprous mouth on all that ever writt.
Such one vile Envy was, that fifte in row dic sitt.

33

And him beside rides fierce revenging Wrath,[2]
Upon a Lion, loth for to be led;
And in his hand a burning brond he hath,
The which he brandisheth about his hed:
His eies did hurle forth sparcles fiery red,
And stared sterne on all that him beheld;
As ashes pale of hew, and seeming ded;
And on his dagger still his hand he held,
Trembling through hasty rage when chole in him sweld.

34

His ruffin [3] raiment all was staind with blood
Which he had spilt, and all to rags yrent,
Through unadvized rashnes woxen [4] wood; [5]
For of his hands he had no governement,
Ne car'd for blood in his avengement:
But, when the furious fitt was overpast,
His cruel facts [6] he often would repent;
Yet, wilfull man, he never would forecast
How many mischieves should ensue his heedlesse hast.

35

Full many mischiefes follow cruell Wrath.
Abhorred bloodshed, and tumultuous strife,
Unmanly murder, and unthrifty scath,[7]
Bitter despight, with rancours rusty knife,
And fretting griefe, the enemy of life:
All these, and many evils moe haunt ire,

1 counted. 2 acquire. 3 avarice. 4 jaw.
5 stomach. 6 waxed, grew. 7 fine serge.
8 wraps up.

1 grasping, greedy.
2 The six counsellors and Lucifera or Pride are, of course, the seven deadly sins.
3 ruffian. 4 grown. 5 mad.
6 acts. 7 harm.

he swelling Splene, and Frenzy raging rife,
he shaking Palsey, and Saint Fraunces fire.[1] ich one was Wrath, the last of this ungodly tire.[2]

36

And, after all, upon the wagon beame, ode Sathan with a smarting whip in hand,
Vith which he forward lasht the laesy teme,
o oft as Slowth still in the mire did stand.
uge routs of people did about them
band,
nowting for joy; and still before their way
foggy mist had covered all the land;
nd, underneath their feet, all scattered lay ead sculls and bones of men whose life had gone astray.

37

So forth they marchen in this goodly sort,
o take the solace of the open aire, nd in fresh flowring fields themselves to sport:
mongst the rest rode that false Lady faire,
he foule Duessa, next unto the chaire
f proud Lucifer', as one of the traine:
ut that good knight would not so nigh repaire,
im selfe estraunging from their joyaunce
vaine,
hose fellowship seemd far unfitt for warlike swaine.

38

So, having solaced themselves a space
Vith pleasaunce of the breathing fields
yfed,
hey backe retourned to the princely Place;
Vhereas an errant knight in armes ycled, nd heathnish shield, wherein with letters
red,
Vas writt Sansjoy, they new arrived find:
nflam'd with fury and fiers hardy hed,
e seemd in hart to harbour thoughts unkind,
nd nourish bloody vengeaunce in his bitter mind.

39

Who, when the shamed shield of slaine
Sansfoy
e spide with that same Faery champions page, ewraying him that did of late destroy
His eldest brother; burning all with rage,
He to him lept, and that same envious gage[1]
Of victors glory from him snacht away:
But th' Elfin knight, which ought[2] that warlike wage,
Disdaind to loose the meed he wonne in fray;
And, him rencountring fierce, reskewd the noble pray.

40

Therewith they gan to hurtlen greedily,
Redoubted battaile ready to darrayne,[3]
And clash their shields, and shake their swerds on hy,
That with their sturre they troubled all the
traine;
Till that great Queene, upon eternall paine
Of high displeasure that ensewen might,
Commaunded them their fury to refraine;
And, if that either to that shield had right,
In equall lists they should the morrow next it fight.

41

"Ah, dearest Dame," quoth then the Paynim bold,
"Pardon the error of enraged wight,
Whome great griefe made forgett the raines to hold
Of reasons rule, to see this recreaunt knight,
No knight, but treachour full of false de-spight
And shameful treason, who through guile hath slayn
The prowest knight that ever field did fight,
Even stout Sansfoy, (O who can then re-frayn?)
Whose shield he beares renverst,[4] the more to heap disdayn.

42

"And, to augment the glorie of his guile,
His dearest love, the faire Fidessa, loe!
Is there possessed of the traytour vile;
Who reapes the harvest sowen by his foe,
Sowen in bloodie field, and bought with woe!
That brothers hand shall dearely well re-
quight,
So be, O Queene! you equall favour showe."
Him litle answerd th' angry Elfin knight;
He never meant with words, but swords, to plead his right:

1 Saint Anthony's fire, or erysipelas, which Saint Anthony was supposed to cure.
2 band.

1 wage, challenge. 2 owned.
3 to arrange (especially of troops for battle).
4 reversed.

43

But threw his gauntlet, as a sacred pledge
His cause in combat the next day to try:
So been they parted both, with harts on edge
To be aveng'd each on his enimy.
That night they pas in joy and jollity,
Feasting and courting both in bowre and hall;
For Steward was excessive Gluttony,
That of his plenty poured forth to all:
Which doen, the Chamberlain, Slowth, did to rest them call.

44

Now whenas darkesome night had all displayd
Her coleblacke curtein over brightest skye;
The warlike youthes, on dayntie couches layd,
Did chace away sweet sleepe from sluggish eye,
To muse on meanes of hoped victory.
But whenas Morpheus had with leaden mace
Arrested all that courtly company,
Uprose Duessa from her resting place,
And to the Paynims lodging comes with silent pace.

45

Whom broad awake she findes, in troublous fitt,
Fore-casting how his foe he might annoy;
And him amoves with speaches seeming fitt:
"Ah deare Sansjoy, next dearest to Sansfoy,
Cause of my new griefe, cause of my new joy;
Joyous to see his ymage in mine eye,
And greevd to thinke how foe did him destroy,
That was the flowre of grace and chevalrye;
Lo! his Fidessa, to thy secret faith I flye."

46

With gentle wordes he can her fayrely greet,
And bad say on the secrete of her hart:
Then, sighing soft; "I learne that litle sweet
Oft tempred is," (quoth she,) "with muchell smart:
For since my brest was launcht with lovely dart
Of deare Sansfoy, I never joyed howre,
But in eternall woes my weaker hart
Have wasted, loving him with all my powre,
And for his sake have felt full many an heavie stowre.

47

"At last, when perils all I weened past,
And hop'd to reape the crop of all my care,
Into new woes unweeting I was cast
By this false faytor,[1] who unworthie ware
His worthie shield, whom he with guileful snare
Entrapped slew, and brought to shameful grave:
Me, silly maid, away with him he bare,
And ever since hath kept in darksom cave,
For that I would not yeeld that to Sansfoy gave.

48

"But since faire Sunne hath sperst that lowring clowd,
And to my loathed life now shewes some light,
Under your beames I will me safely shrowd
From dreaded storme of his disdainful spight:
To you th' inheritance belonges by right
Of brothers prayse, to you eke longes his love.
Let not his love, let not his restlesse spright,
Be unreveng'd, that calles to you above
From wandring Stygian shores, where it doth endlesse move."

49

Thereto said he, "Faire Dame, be nought dismaid
For sorrowes past; their griefe is with them gone:
Ne yet of present perill be affraid,
For needlesse feare did never vantage none;
And helplesse hap it booteth not to mone.
Dead is Sansfoy, his vitall paines are past,
Though greeved ghost for vengeance deep do grone:
He lives that shall him pay his dewties last
And guiltie Elfin blood shall sacrifice in hast."

50

"O! but I feare the fickle freakes," (quoth shee)
"Of fortune false, and oddes of armes in field."
"Why, dame," (quoth he) "what oddes can ever bee, Where both doe fight alike, to win or yield?"
"Yea, but," (quoth she) "he beares a charmed shield,
And eke enchaunted armes, that none can perce;

[1] impostor.

e none can wound the man that does them wield."
Charmd or enchaunted," answerd he then ferce,
I no whitt reck, ne you the like need to reherce.

51

"But faire Fidessa, sithens[1] fortunes guile,
r enimies powre, hath now captived you, eturne from whence ye came, and rest a while,
'ill morrow next that I the Elfe subdew, nd with Sansfoyes dead dowry you endew."
Ah me! that is a double death," (she said)
With proud foes sight my sorrow to renew, here ever yet I be, my secret aide hall follow you." So, passing forth, she him obaid.

CANTO V

The faithfull knight in equall field
Subdewes his faithlesse foe;
Whom false Duessa saves, and for
His cure to hell does goe.

1

The noble hart that harbours vertuous thought,
nd is with childe of glorious great intent, an never rest, untill it forth have brought h' eternall brood of glorie excellent:
uch restlesse passion did all night torment
he flaming corage of that Faery knight, evizing how that doughtie turnament ith greatest honour he atchieven might:
till did he wake, and still did watch for dawning light.

2

At last, the golden Orientall gate
f greatest heaven gan to open fayre;
nd Phoebus, fresh as brydegrome to his mate,
ame dauncing forth, shaking his deawie hayre,
nd hurld his glistring beams through gloomy ayre.
hich when the wakeful Elfe perceiv'd, streight way,
e started up, and did him selfe prepayre
n sunbright armes, and battailous array;
or with that Pagan proud he combatt will that day.

3

And forth he comes into the commune hall;
Where earely waite him many a gazing eye,
To weet what end to straunger knights may fall.
There many Minstrales maken melody,
To drive away the dull melancholy;
And many Bardes, that to the trembling chord
Can tune their timely voices cunningly;
And many Chroniclers, that can record
Old loves, and warres for Ladies doen by many a Lord.

4

Soone after comes the cruell Sarazin,
In woven maile all armed warily;
And sternly lookes at him, who not a pin
Does care for looke of living creatures eye.
They bring them wines of Greece and Araby,
And daintie spices fetch from furthest Ynd,[1]
To kindle heat of corage privily;
And in the wine a solemne oth they bynd
T' observe the sacred lawes of armes that are assynd.

5

At last forth comes that far renowmed Queene:
With royall pomp and princely majestie
She is ybrought unto a paled[2] greene,
And placed under stately canapee,
The warlike feates of both those knights to see.
On th' other side in all mens open vew
Duessa placed is, and on a tree
Sansfoy his shield is hangd with bloody hew;
Both those the lawrell girlonds to the victor dew.

6

A shrilling trompett sownded from on hye,
And unto battaill bad them selves addresse:
Their shining shieldes about their wrestes they tye,
And burning blades about their heades doe blesse,[3]
The instruments of wrath and heavinesse.
With greedy force each other doth assayle,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impresse
Deepe dinted furrowes in the battred mayle:
The yron walles to ward their blowes are weak and fraile.

1 since.

1 India. 2 enclosed by palings. 3 swing.

7

The Sarazin was stout and wondrous strong,
And heaped blowes like yron hammers great;
For after blood and vengeance he did long:
The knight was fiers, and full of youthly heat,
And doubled strokes, like dreaded thunders threat;
For all for praise and honour he did fight.
Both stricken stryke, and beaten both doe beat,
That from their shields forth flyeth firie light,
And hewen helmets deepe shew marks of eithers might.

8

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right,
As when a Gryfon, seized of his pray,
A Dragon fiers encountreth in his flight,
Through widest ayre making his ydle way,
That would his rightfull ravine [1] rend away:
With hideous horror both together smight,
And souce [2] so sore that they the heavens affray;
The wise Southsayer, seeing so sad sight,
Th' amazed vulgar telles of warres and mortall fight.

9

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right,
And each to deadly shame would drive his foe:
The cruell steele so greedily doth bight
In tender flesh, that streames of blood down flow;
With which the armes, that earst [3] so bright did show,
Into a pure vermillion now are dyde.
Great ruth in all the gazers harts did grow,
Seeing the gored woundes to gape so wyde,
That victory they dare not wish to either side.

10

At last the Paynim chaunst to cast his eye,
His suddein eye flaming with wrathfull fyre,
Upon his brothers shield, which hong thereby:
Therewith redoubled was his raging yre,
And said; "Ah! wretched sonne of wofull syre,
Doest thou sit wayling by blacke Stygian lake,
Whylest here thy shield is hangd for victors hyre?
And, sluggish german,[1] doest thy forces slak
To after-send his foe, that him may over take?

11

"Goe, caytive Elfe, him quickly overtake
And soone redeeme from his long-wandring woe:
Goe, guiltie ghost, to him my message make
That I his shield have quit [2] from dying foe."
Therewith upon his crest he stroke him so,
That twise he reeled, readie twise to fall:
End of the doubtfull battaile deemed tho
The lookers on; and lowd to him gan call
The false Duessa, 'Thine the shield, and I and all!"

12

Soone as the Faerie heard his Ladie speake,
Out of his swowning dreame he gan awake;
And quickning faith, that earst was woxen weake,
The creeping deadly cold away did shake:
Tho mov'd with wrath, and shame, and Ladies sake,
Of all attonce he cast [3] avengd to be,
And with so exceeding furie at him strake,
That forced him to stoupe upon his knee:
Had he not stouped so, he should have clover bee.

13

And to him said; "Goe now, proud Miscreant,
Thyselfe thy message do to german deare;
Alone he, wandring, thee too long doth want:
Goe say, his foe thy shield with his doth beare."
Therewith his heavie hand he high gan reare
Him to have slaine; when lo! a darkesome clowd
Upon him fell: he no where doth appeare,
But vanisht is. The Elfe him calls alowd,
But answer none receives; the darknes him does shrowd.

14

In haste Duessa from her place arose,
And to him running said; "O! prowest knight,
That ever Ladie to her love did chose,
Let now abate the terrour of your might,
And quench the flame of furious despight,
And bloodie vengeance: lo! th' infernal powres,

1 prey. 2 attack suddenly. 3 formerly.

1 relative; here, brother. 2 retrieved.
3 planned how.

overing your foe with cloud of deadly night,
lave borne him hence to Plutoes balefull bowres:
he conquest yours; I yours; the shield, and glory yours."

15

Not all so satisfide, with greedy eye
e sought all round about, his thristy [1] blade
o bathe in blood of faithlesse enimy;
Who all that while lay hid in secret shade.
e standes amazed how he thence should fade:
t last the trumpets Triumph sound on hie;
nd running Heralds humble homage made,
reeting him goodly with new victorie,
nd to him brought the shield, the cause of enmitie.

16

Wherewith he goeth to that soveraine Queene;
nd falling her before on lowly knee,
o her makes present of his service seene:
Which she accepts with thankes and goodly gree,[2]
reatly advaunc ing [3] his gay chevalree:
o marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Vhom all the people followe with great glee, houting, and clapping all their hands on hight, hat all the ayre it fills, and flyes to heaven bright.

17

Home is he brought, and layd in sumptous bed, Vhere many skilfull leaches him abide o salve his hurts, that yet still freshly bled.
n wine and oyle they wash his woundes wide,
nd softly gan embalme on everie side:
nd all the while most heavenly melody bout the bed sweet musicke did divide,[4] im to beguile of griefe and agony;
nd all the while Duessa wept full bitterly.

18

As when a wearie traveiler, that strayes
y muddy shore of broad seven-mouthed Nile, nweeting of the perillous wandring wayes,
oth meete a cruell craftie Crocodile,
Which, in false griefe hyding his harmefull guile,
oth weepe full sore, and sheddeth tender teares;
The foolish man, that pities all this while
His mournefull plight, is swallowed up unwares,
Forgetfull of his owne that mindes an others cares.

19

So wept Duessa untill eventyde,
That shyning lampes in Joves high house were light;
Then forth she rose, ne lenger would abide,
But comes unto the place where th' Hethen knight,
In slombring swownd, nigh voyd of vitall spright,
Lay cover'd with inchaunted cloud all day:
Whom when she found, as she him left in plight,
To wayle his wofull case she would not stay,
But to the Easterne coast of heaven makes speedy way:

20

Where griesly Night, with visage deadly sad,
That Phœbus chearefull face durst never vew,
And in a foule blacke pitchy mantle clad,
She findes forth comming from her darksome mew,[1]
Where she all day did hide her hated hew.
Before the dore her yron charet stood,
Already harnessed for journey new,
And cole blacke steedes yborne of hellish brood,
That on their rusty bits did champ as they were wood.

21

Who when she saw Duessa, sunny bright,
Adornd with gold and jewels shining cleare,
She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And th' unacquainted light began to feare,
For never did such brightnes there appeare;
And would have backe retyred to her cave,
Untill the witches speach she gan to heare,
Saying; "Yet, O thou dreaded Dame! I crave Abyde, till I have told the message which I have."

22

She stayd; and foorth Duessa gan proceede:
"O! thou most auncient Grandmother [2] of all.

1 thirsty. 2 pleasure. 3 praising. 4 play.

1 hiding-place. 2 Night.

More old then Jove, whom thou at first didst breede,
Or that great house of Gods cælestiall,
Which wast begot in Dæmogorgons hall,[1]
And sawst the secrets of the world unmade.
Why suffredst thou thy Nephewes deare to fall,
With Elfin sword most shamefully betrade?
Lo! where the stout Sansjoy doth sleepe in deadly shade.

23

"And him before, I saw with bitter eyes
The bold Sansfoy shrinck underneath his speare:
And now the pray of fowles in field he lyes,
Nor wayld of friends, nor layd on groning beare,
That whylome was to me too dearely deare.
O! what of gods then boots it to be borne,
If old Aveugles[2] sonnes so evill heare?
Or who shall not great Nightes children scorne,
When two of three her Nephewes are so fowle forlorne?

24

"Up, then! up, dreary Dame, of darknes Queene!
Go, gather up the reliques of thy race;
Or else goe them avenge, and let be seene
That dreaded Night in brightest day hath place,
And can the children of fayre light deface."
Her feeling speaches some compassion mov'd
In hart, and chaunge in that great mothers face:
Yet pitty in her hart was never prov'd
Till then, for evermore she hated, never lov'd:

25

And said, "Deare daughter, rightly may I rew
The fall of famous children borne of mee,
And good successes which their foes ensew:
But who can turne the stream of destinee,
Or breake the chayne of strong necessitee,
Which fast is tyde to Joves eternall seat?
The sonnes of Day he favoureth, I see,
And by my ruines thinkes to make them great:
To make one great by others losse is bad excheat.[3]

1 i.e., in darkness. Demogorgon was the master demon in Hades.
2 Aveugle (the Blind Man) is the father of the three paynims.
3 confiscation; here, business.

26

"Yet shall they not escape so freely all,
For some shall pay the price of others guilt
And he the man that made Sansfoy to fall,
Shall with his owne blood price[1] that he hath spilt.
But what art thou, that telst of Nephews kilt?"
"I, that do seeme not I, Duessa ame," Quoth she, "how ever now, in garments gi
And gorgeous gold arayd, I to thee came,
Duessa I, the daughter of Deceipt and Shame."

27

Then, bowing downe her aged backe, she kist
The wicked witch, saying, "In that fayre face
The false resemblaunce of Deceipt, I wist,
Did closely lurke; yet so true-seeming grace
It carried, that I scarse in darksome place
Could it discerne, though I the mother bee
Of falshood, and roote of Duessaes race.
O welcome, child! whom I have longd to see
And now have seene unwares. Lo! now I goe with thee."

28

Then to her yron wagon she betakes,
And with her beares the fowle welfavourd witch.
Through mirkesome aire her ready way she makes:
Her twyfold Teme, of which two blacke as pitch,
And two were browne, yet each to each unlich,[2]
Did softly swim away, ne ever stamp
Unlesse she chaunst their stubborne mouths to twitch;
Then, foming tarre, their bridles they would champ,
And trampling the fine element would fiercely ramp.

29

So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay,
Devoid of outward sence and native strength,
Coverd with charmed cloud from vew of day
And sight of men, since his late luckelesse fray.
His cruell wounds, with cruddy[3] bloud congeald,

1 repay. 2 unlike. 3 curdy.

hey binden up so wisely as they may,
nd handle softly, till they can be heald:
o lay him in her charett, close in night conceald.

30

And, all the while she stood upon the ground,
he wakefull dogs did never cease to bay, s giving warning of th' unwonted sound,
ith which her yron wheeles did them affray,
nd her darke griesly looke them much dismay:
he messenger of death, the ghastly owle,
ith drery shriekes did also her bewray;
nd hungry wolves continually did howle
t her abhorred face, so filthy and so fowle.

31

Thence turning backe in silence softe they stole, nd brought the heavy corse with easy pace
o yawning gulfe of deepe Avernus hole.
y that same hole an entraunce, darke and bace,
ith smoake and sulphur hiding all the place,
escends to hell: there creature never past,
hat backe retourned without heavenly grace;
ut dreadfull Furies, which their chaines have brast,
nd damned sprights sent forth to make ill men aghast.

32

By that same way the direfull dames doe drive heir mournefull charett, fild with rusty blood, nd downe to Plutoes house are come bilive:
hich passing through, on every side them stood he trembling ghosts with sad amazed mood, hattring their iron teeth, and staring wide ith stony eies; and all the hellish brood
f feends infernall flockt on every side,
o gaze on erthly wight that with the Night durst ride.

33

They pas the bitter waves of Acheron,[1]
here many soules sit wailing woefully, nd come to fiery flood of Phlegeton,[1]

1 Rivers in Hades.

Whereas the damned ghosts in torments fry,
And with sharp shrilling shriekes doe bootlesse cry,
Cursing high Jove, the which them thither sent.
The house of endlesse paine is built thereby,
In which ten thousand sorts of punishment
The cursed creatures doe eternally torment.

34

Before the threshold dreadfull Cerberus
His three deformed heads did lay along,
Curled with thousand adders venemous,
And lilled forth his bloody flaming tong:
At them he gan to reare his bristles strong,
And felly [1] gnarre,[2] untill Dayes enemy
Did him appease; then downe his taile he hong,
And suffered them to passen quietly;
For she in hell and heaven had power equally.

35

There was Ixion turned on a wheele,
For daring tempt the Queene of heaven to sin;
And Sisyphus an huge round stone did reele
Against an hill, ne might from labour lin;[3]
There thristy Tantalus hong by the chin;
And Tityus fed a vultur on his maw;
Typhœus joynts were stretched on a gin;
Theseus condemned to endlesse slouth by law;
And fifty sisters[4] water in leke vessels draw.

36

They all, beholding worldly wights in place,
Leave off their worke, unmindfull of their smart,
To gaze on them; who forth by them doe pace,
Till they be come unto the furthest part;
Where was a Cave ywrought by wondrous art.
Deepe, darke, uneasy, dolefull, comfortlesse.
In which sad Æsculapius[5] far apart
Emprisond was in chaines remedilesse;
For that Hippolytus rent corse he did redresse.

37

Hippolytus a jolly huntsman was,
That wont in charett chace the foming bore:

1 fiercely. 2 snarl. 3 cease.
4 The Danaides. 5 God of medicine.

He all his Peeres in beauty did surpas,
But Ladies love as losse of time forbore:
His wanton stepdame loved him the more;
But, when she saw her offred sweets refusd,
Her love she turnd to hate, and him before
His father fierce of treason false accusd,
And with her gealous termes his open eares abusd:

38

Who, all in rage, his Sea-god syre besought
Some cursed vengeaunce on his sonne to cast.
From surging gulf two Monsters streight were brought,
With dread whereof his chacing steedes aghast
Both charett swifte and huntsman overcast:
His goodly corps, on ragged cliffs yrent,
Was quite dismembred, and his members chast
Scattered on every mountaine as he went,
That of Hippolytus was lefte no moniment.

39

His cruell step-dame, seeing what was donne,
Her wicked daies with wretched knife did end,
In death avowing th' innocence of her sonne.
Which hearing, his rash syre began to rend
His heare, and hasty tong that did offend:
Tho, gathering up the reliques of his smart,
By Dianes meanes, who was Hippolyts frend,
Them brought to Æsculape, that by his art
Did heale them all againe, and joyned every part.

40

Such wondrous science in mans witt to rain
When Jove avizd, that could the dead revive,
And fates expired could renew again,
Of endlesse life he might him not deprive,
But unto hell did thrust him downe alive,
With flashing thunderbolt ywounded sore:
Where, long remaining, he did alwaies strive
Himselfe with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that raged evermore.

41

There auncient Night arriving did alight
From her nigh weary wayne, and in her armes
To Aesculapius brought the wounded knight:
Whome having softly disaraid of armes,
Tho gan to him discover all his harmes,
Beseeching him with prayer and with praise
If either salves, or oyles, or herbes, or charmes,
A fordonne wight from dore of death mote raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephews daies.

42

"Ah Dame," (quoth he) "thou temptest me in vaine,
To dare the thing, which daily yet I rew,
And the old cause of my continued paine
With like attempt to like end to renew.
Is not enough, that, thrust from heaven dew,
Here endlesse penaunce for one fault I pay,
But that redoubled crime with vengeaunce new Thou biddest me to eeke? [1] Can Night defray
The wrath of thundring Jove, that rules both night and day?"

43

"Not so," (quoth she) "but, sith that heavens king
From hope of heaven hath thee excluded quight,
Why fearest thou, that canst not hope for thing;
And fearest not that more thee hurten might,
Now in the powre of everlasting Night?
Goe to then, O thou far renowmed sonne
Of great Apollo! shew thy famous might
In medicine, that els hath to thee wonne
Great pains, and greater praise, both never to be donne."

44

Her words prevaild: And then the learned leach
His cunning hand gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things els the which his art did teach:
Which having seene, from thence arose away
The mother of dredd darknesse, and let stay
Aveugles sonne there in the leaches cure;
And, backe retourning, took her wonted way
To ronne her timely race, whilst Phoebus pure
In westerne waves his weary wagon did recure.

45

The false Duessa, leaving noyous Night,
Returnd to stately pallace of Dame Pryde:

1 increase.

Where when she came, she found the Faery knight
Departed thence; albee his woundes wyde
Not throughly heald unready were to ryde.
Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
For on a day his wary Dwarfe had spyde
Where in a dungeon deepe huge nombers lay
Of caytive wretched thralls, that wayled night and day.

46

A ruefull sight as could be seene with eie,
Of whom he learned had in secret wise
The hidden cause of their captivitie;
How mortgaging their lives to Covetise,
Through wastfull Pride and wanton Riotise,
They were by law of that proud Tyrannesse,
Provokt with Wrath and Envyes false surmise,
Condemned to that Dongeon mercilesse,
Where they should live in wo, and dye in wretchednesse.

47

There was that great proud king of Babylon,[1]
That would compell all nations to adore,
And him as onely God to call upon;
Till, through celestial doome thrown out of dore,
Into an Oxe he was transformd of yore.
There also was king Crœsus, that enhaunst
His hart too high through his great richesse store;
And proud Antiochus,[2] the which advaunst
His cursed hand gainst God, and on his altares daunst.

48

And them long time before, great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warrayd;
And after him old Ninus [3] far did pas
In princely pomp, of all the world obayd.
There also was that mightie Monarch [4] layd
Low under all, yet above all in pride,
That name of native syre did fowle upbrayd,
And would as Ammons [5] sonne be magnifide,
Till, scornd of God and man, a shamefull death he dide.

1 Nebuchadnezzar.
2 King of Syria, second century B.C., twice conqueror of Jerusalem.
3 Reputed founder of Nineveh.
4 Alexander the Great. 5 Jupiter Ammon.

49

All these together in one heape were throwne,
Like carkases of beastes in butchers stall.
And in another corner wide were strowne
The Antique ruins of the Romanes fall;
Great Romulus, the Grandsyre of them all;
Proud Tarquin, and too lordly Lentulus;
Stout Scipio, and stubborne Hanniball;
Ambitious Sylla, and sterne Marius;
High Caesar, great Pompey, and fiers Antonius.

50

Amongst these mightie men were wemen mixt,
Proud wemen, vaine, forgetfull of their yoke:
The bold Semiramis,[1] whose sides transfixt
With sonnes own blade her fowle reproches spoke:
Fayre Sthenobœa,[2] that her selfe did choke
With wilfull chord for wanting of her will;
High minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of Aspes sting her selfe did stoutly kill;
And thousands moe the like that did that dongeon fill.

51

Besides the endlesse routes of wretched thralles,
Which thither were assembled day by day
From all the world, after their wofull falles,
Through wicked pride and wasted welthes decay.
But most of all, which in that dongeon lay,
Fell from high Princes courtes, or Ladies bowres,
Where they in ydle pomp, or wanton play,
Consumed had their goods and thriftlesse howres,
And lastly thrown themselves into these heavy stowres.[3]

52

Whose case whenas the careful Dwarfe had tould,
And made ensample of their mournful sight
Unto his Maister, he no lenger would
There dwell in perill of like painefull plight,
But earely rose; and, ere that dawning light
Discovered had the world to heaven wyde,
He by a privy Posterne tooke his flight,
That of no envious eyes he mote be spyde;
For, doubtlesse, death ensewd if any him descryde.

1 Early queen of Assyria.
2 Wife of Prœtus. 3 sorrows.

53

Scarse could he footing find in that fowle way,
For many corses, like a great Lay-stall,[1]
Of murdred men, which therein strowed lay
Without remorse or decent funerall;
Which al through that great Princesse pride did fall,
And came to shamefull end. And them besyde,
Forth ryding underneath the castell wall,
A Donghill of dead carcases he spyde;
The dreadfull spectacle of that sad house of Pryde.

CANTO VI

From lawlesse lust by wondrous grace
Fayre Una is releast:
Whom salvage[2] nation does adore,
And learnes her wise beheast.

1

As when a ship, that flyes fayre under sayle,
An hidden rocke escaped hath unwares,
That lay in waite her wrack for to bewaile,
The Marriner yet halfe amazed stares
At perill past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolhappie oversight:
So doubly is distrest twixt joy and cares
The dreadlesse corage of this Elfin knight,
Having escapt so sad ensamples in his sight.

2

Yet sad he was, that his too hastie speed
The fayre Duess' had forst him leave behind;
And yet more sad, that Una, his deare dreed,[3]
Her truth had staynd with treason so unkind:
Yet cryme in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own selfe sake,
She wandred had from one to other Ynd,
Him for to seeke, ne ever would forsake.
Till her unwares the fiers Sansloy did overtake:

3

Who after Archimagoes fowle defeat,
Led her away into a forrest wilde,
And turning wrathfull fire to lustfull heat,
With beastly sin thought her to have defiled,
And made the vassall of his pleasures vilde.
Yet first he cast by treatie, and by traynes,
Her to perswade, that stubborne fort to yilde:
For greater conquest of hard love he gaynes,
That workes it to his will, then he that it constraines.

1 refuse pile. 2 savage.
3 i.e., object worshiped.

4

With fawning wordes he courted her a while,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant hart did tempt with diverse guile:
But wordes, and lookes, and sighes she did abhore,
As rocke of Diamond stedfast evermore.
Yet for to feed his fyrie lustfull eye,
He snatcht the vele, that hong her face before;
Then gan her beautie shine, as brightest skye,
And burnt his beastly hart t'efforce her chastitye.

5

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fayle,
And subtile engines bet from batteree,
With greedy force he gan the fort assayle,
Whereof he weend possessed soone to bee,
And win rich spoile of ransackt chastetee.
Ah heavens, that do this hideous act behold,
And heavenly virgin thus outraged see,
How can ye vengeance just so long withhold,
And hurle not flashing flames upon that Paynim bold?

6

The pitteous mayden, carefull, comfortlesse,
Does throw out thrilling shriekes, and shrieking cryes,
The last vaine helpe of wemens great distresse,
And with loud plaintes importuneth the skyes,
That molten starres doe drop like weeping eyes;
And Phœbus, flying so most shamefull sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implyes,
And hydes for shame. What witt of mortal wight
Can now devise to quitt a thrall from such a plight?

7

Eternall providence, exceeding thought,
Where none appeares can make her selfe a way.
A wondrous way it for this Lady wrought,
From Lyons clawes to pluck the gryped pray.
Her shrill outcryes and shrieks so loud did bray,
That all the woodes and forestes did resownd:
A troupe of Faunes and Satyres far away

Within the wood were dauncing in a rownd,
Whiles old Sylvanus slept in shady arber sownd:

8

Who, when they heard that pitteous strained voice,
In haste forsooke their rurall meriment,
And ran towardes the far rebownded noyce,
To weet what wight so loudly did lament.
Unto the place they come incontinent: [1]
Whom when the raging Sarazin espyde,
A rude, mishapen, monstrous rablement,
Whose like he never saw, he durst not byde,
But got his ready steed, and fast away gan ryde.

9

The wyld woodgods, arrived in the place,
There find the virgin, doolfull, desolate,
With ruffled rayments, and fayre blubbred face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late;
And trembling yet through feare of former hate.
All stand amazed at so uncouth sight,
And gin to pittie her unhappie state:
All stand astonied at her beautie bright,
In their rude eyes unworthie of so wofull plight.

10

She, more amazd, in double dread doth dwell;
And every tender part for feare does shake.
As when a greedy Wolfe, through honger fell,
A seely Lamb far from the flock does take,
Of whom he meanes his bloody feast to make,
A Lyon spyes fast running towards him,
The innocent pray in hast he does forsake;
Which, quitt from death, yet quakes in every lim
With chaunge of feare, to see the Lyon looke so grim.

11

Such fearefull fitt assaid her trembling hart,
Ne word to speake, ne joynt to move, she had;
The salvage nation feele her secret smart,
And read her sorrow in her count'nance sad;
Their frowning forheades, with rough hornes yclad,
And rustick horror, all asyde doe lay:
And, gently grenning, shew a semblance glad
To comfort her; and, feare to put away,
Their backward bent knees teach her humbly to obay.

1 without delaying.

12

The doubtfull Damzell dare not yet committ
Her single person to their barbarous truth;
But still twixt feare and hope amazd does sitt,
Late learnd what harme to hasty trust ensu'th.
They, in compassion of her tender youth,
And wonder of her beautie soverayne,
Are wonne with pitty and unwonted ruth;
And, all prostrate upon the lowly playne,
Doe kisse her feete, and fawne on her with count'nance fayne.

13

Their harts she ghesseth by their humble guise,
And yieldes her to extremitie of time:
So from the ground she fearelesse doth arise,
And walketh forth without suspect of crime.
They, all as glad as birdes of joyous Pryme,[1]
Thence lead her forth, about her dauncing round,
Shouting, and singing all a shepheards ryme;
And with greene braunches strowing all the ground,
Do worship her as Queene with olive girlond cround.

14

And all the way their merry pipes they sound,
That all the woods with doubled Eccho ring;
And with their horned feet doe weare the ground,
Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant Spring.
So towards old Sylvanus they her bring;
Who, with the noyse awaked, commeth out
To weet the cause, his weake steps governing [2]
And aged limbs on cypresse stadle [3] stout;
And with an yvie twyne his waste is girt about.

15

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad,
Or Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,[4]

1 springtime.
2 This participle is transposed from its normal place before his.
3 staff. 4 discover, find.

Or Cybeles franticke rites have made them mad:
They, drawing nigh, unto their God present
That flowre of fayth and beautie excellent.
The God himselfe, vewing that mirrhour rare,
Stood long amazd, and burnt in his intent:
His owne fayre Dryope [1] now he thinkes not faire,
And Pholoe [2] fowle, when her to this he doth compaire.

16

The woodborne people fall before her flat,
And worship her as Goddesse of the wood;
And old Sylvanus selfe bethinkes not what
To thinke of wight so fayre, but gazing stood
In doubt to deeme her borne of earthly brood:
Sometimes dame Venus selfe he seemes to see;
But Venus never had so sober mood:
Sometimes Diana he her takes to be,
But misseth bow and shaftes, and buskins to her knee.

17

By vew of her he ginneth to revive
His ancient love, and dearest Cyparisse; [3]
And calles to mind his pourtraiture alive,
How fayre he was, and yet not fayre to this;
And how he slew with glaunccing dart amisse
A gentle Hynd, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life, above all worldly blisse;
For griefe whereof the lad n'ould after joy,
But pynd away in anguish and selfe-wild annoy.

18

The wooddy nymphes, faire Hamadryades,
Her to behold do thither runne apace;
And all the troupe of light-foot Naiades
Flocke all about to see her lovely face;
But, when they vewed have her heavenly grace,
They envy her in their malitious mind,
And fly away for feare of fowle disgrace.
But all the Satyres scorne their woody kind,
And henceforth nothing faire but her on earth they find.

19

Glad of such lucke, the luckelesse lucky mayd
Did her content to please their feeble eyes,
And long time with that salvage people stayd,
To gather breath in many miseryes.
During which time her gentle wit she plyes
To teach them truth, which worshipt her in vaine,
And made her th' Image of Idolatryes;
But when their bootlesse zeale she did restrayne
From her own worship, they her Asse would worship fayn.

20

It fortuned, a noble warlike knight
By just occasion to that forrest came
To seeke his kindred, and the lignage right
From whence he tooke his weldeserved name:
He had in armes abroad wonne muchell fame,
And fild far landes with glorie of his might;
Plaine, faithfull, true, and enimy of shame,
And ever lov'd to fight for Ladies right;
But in vaine glorious frayes he litle did delight.

21

A Satyres sonne, yborne in forrest wyld,
By straunge adventure as it did betyde,
And there begotten of a Lady myld,
Fayre Thyamis, the daughter of Labryde;
That was in sacred bandes of wedlocke tyde
To Therion, a loose unruly swayne,
Who had more joy to raunge the forrest wyde,
And chase the salvage beast with busie payne,
Then serve his Ladies love, and waste in pleasures vayne.

22

The forlorne mayd did with loves longing burne,
And could not lacke her lovers company,
But to the wood she goes, to serve her turne,
And seeke her spouse, that from her still does fly,
And followes other game and venery:
A Satyre chaunst her wandring for to find,
And kindling coles of lust in brutish eye,
The loyall links of wedlocke did unbind,
And made her person thrall unto his beastly kind.

23

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensuall desire,

1 His wife. 2 A nymph.
3 Sylvanus loved this youth, who was turned into a cypress at his death.

Till that with timely fruit her belly sweld,
And bore a boy unto that salvage sire:
Then home he suffred her for to retire,
For ransome leaving him the late borne childe;
Whom till to ryper yeares he gan aspire,
He noursled up in life and manners wilde,
Emongst wild beasts and woods, from lawes of men exilde.

24

For all he taught the tender ymp was but
To banish cowardize and bastard feare:
His trembling hand he would him force to put
Upon the Lyon and the rugged Beare;
And from the she Beares teats her whelps to teare;
And eke wyld roring Buls he would him make
To tame, and ryde their backes, not made to beare;
And the Robuckes in flight to overtake,
That everie beast for feare of him did fly, and quake.

25

Thereby so fearlesse and so fell he grew,
That his own syre, and maister of his guise,[1]
Did often tremble at his horrid vew;
And oft, for dread of hurt, would him advise
The angry beastes not rashly to despise,
Nor too much to provoke; for he would learne
The Lyon stoup to him in lowly wise,
(A lesson hard) and make the Libbard[2] sterne
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did earne.

26

And for to make his powre approved more,
Wyld beastes in yron yokes he would compell;
The spotted Panther, and the tusked Bore,
The Pardale[3] swift, and the Tigre cruell,
The Antelope, and Wolfe both fiers and fell;
And them constraine in equall teme to draw.
Such joy he had their stubborne harts to quell,
And sturdie courage tame with dreadfull aw,
That his beheast they feared as a tyrans law.

27

His loving mother came upon a day
Unto the woodes, to see her little sonne;
And chaunst unwares to meet him in the way,
After his sportes and cruell pastime donne;
When after him a Lyonesse did runne,
That roaring all with rage did lowd requere
Her children deare, whom he away had wonne:
The Lyon whelpes she saw how he did beare,
And lull in rugged armes withouten childish feare.

28

The fearefull Dame all quaked at the sight,
And turning backe gan fast to fly away;
Untill, with love revokt from vaine affright,
She hardly yet perswaded was to stay,
And then to him these womanish words gan say:
"Ah Satyrane, my dearling and my joy,
For love of me leave off this dreadfull play;
To dally thus with death is no fit toy:
Go, find some other play-fellowes, mine own sweet boy."

29

In these and like delightes of bloody game
He trayned was, till ryper years he raught;[1]
And there abode, whylst any beast of name
Walkt in that forrest, whom he had not taught
To feare his force: and then his courage haught[2]
Desyrd of forreine foemen to be knowne,
And far abroad for straunge adventures sought;
In which his might was never overthrowne;
But through al Faery lond his famous worth was blown.

30

Yet evermore it was his maner faire,
After long labours and adventures spent,
Unto those native woods for to repaire,
To see his syre and ofspring auncient.
And now he thither came for like intent;
Where he unwares the fairest Una found,
Straunge Lady in so straunge habiliment,
Teaching the Satyres, which her sat around,
Trew sacred lore, which from her sweet lips did redound.

31

He wondred at her wisedome hevenly rare,
Whose like in womens witt he never knew;
And, when her curteous deeds he did compare,

1 manner. 2 leopard. 3 panther.

1 reached. 2 great.

Gan her admire, and her sad sorrowes rew,
Blaming of Fortune, which such troubles threw,
And joyd to make proofe of her cruelty
On gentle Dame, so hurtlesse[1] and so trew:
Thenceforth he kept her goodly company,
And learnd her discipline of faith and verity.

32

But she, all vowd unto the Redcrosse Knight,
His wandring perill closely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintaunce could delight;
But her deare heart with anguish did torment,
And all her witt in secret counsels spent,
How to escape. At last in privy wise
To Satyrane she shewed her intent;
Who, glad to gain such favour, gan devise,
How with that pensive Maid he best might thence arise.

33

So on a day, when Satyres all were gone
To do their service to Sylvanus old,
The gentle virgin, left behinde alone,
He led away with corage stout and bold.
Too late it was to Satyres to be told,
Or ever hope recover her againe:
In vaine he seekes that having cannot hold.
So fast he carried her with carefull paine,
That they the woods are past, and come now to the plaine.

34

The better part now of the lingring day
They traveild had, whenas they far espide
A weary wight forwandring by the way;
And towards him they gan in haste to ride,
To weete of newes that did abroad betide,
Or tidings of her knight of the Redcrosse;
But he them spying gan to turne aside
For feare, as seemd, or for some feigned losse:
More greedy they of newes fast towards him do crosse.

35

A silly[2] man, in simple weeds forworne,
And soild with dust of the long dried way;
His sandales were with toilsome travell torne,
And face all tand with scorching sunny ray,
As he had traveild many a sommers day
Through boyling sands of Arabie and Ynde,
And in his hand a Jacobs staffe,[3] to stay
His weary limbs upon; and eke behind
His scrip did hang, in which his needments he did bind.

36

The knight, approching nigh, of him inquerd
Tidings of warre, and of adventures new;
But warres, nor new adventures, none he herd.
Then Una gan to aske, if ought he knew,
Or heard abroad of that her champion trew,
That in his armour bare a croslet red?
"Ay me! Deare dame," (quoth he) "well may I rew
To tell the sad sight which mine eies have red;
These eies did see that knight both living and eke ded."

37

That cruell word her tender hart so thrild,
That suddein cold did ronne through every vaine,
And stony horrour all her sences fild
With dying fitt, that downe she fell for paine.
The knight her lightly reared up againe,
And comforted with curteous kind reliefe:
Then, wonne from death, she bad him tellen plaine
The further processe of her hidden griefe:
The lesser pangs can beare who hath endur'd the chief.

38

Then gan the Pilgrim thus: "I chaunst this day,
This fatall day that shall I ever rew,
To see two knights, in travell on my way,
(A sory sight) arraung'd in batteill new,
Both breathing vengeaunce, both of wrathfull hew.
My feareful flesh did tremble at their strife,
To see their blades so greedily imbrew,
That, dronke with blood, yet thristed after life:
What more? the Redcrosse knight was slain with Paynim knife."

39

"Ah! dearest Lord," (quoth she) "how might that bee,
And he the stoutest knight that ever wonne?"
"Ah! dearest dame," (quoth hee) "how might I see

1 harmless, innocent. 2 seely, i.e., simple.
3 pilgrim's staff, so called after Saint James or Jacobus.

The thing that might not be, and yet was donne?"
"Where is," (said Satyrane) "that Paynims sonne,
That him of life, and us of joy, hath refte?"
'Not far away," (quoth he) "he hence doth wonne,[1]
Foreby a fountaine, where I late him lefte
Washing his bloody wounds, that through the steele were cleft."

40

Therewith the knight thence marched forth in hast,
Whiles Una, with huge heavinesse opprest,
Could not for sorrow follow him so fast;
And soone he came, as he the place had ghest,
Whereas that Pagan proud him selfe did rest
In secret shadow by a fountaine side:
Even he it was, that earst would have supprest
Faire Una; whom when Satyrane espide,
With foule reprochfull words he boldly him defide.

41

And said; "Arise, thou cursed Miscreaunt,
That hast with knightlesse guile, and trecherous train,
Faire knighthood fowly shamed, and doest vaunt
That good knight of the Redcrosse to have slain:
Arise, and with like treason now maintain
Thy guilty wrong, or els thee guilty yield."
The Sarazin, this hearing, rose amain,
And, catching up in hast his three-square shield
And shining helmet, soone him buckled to the field.

42

And, drawing nigh him, said; "Ah! misborn Elfe,
In evill houre thy foes thee hither sent
Anothers wrongs to wreak upon thy selfe:
Yet ill thou blamest me for having blent
My name with guile and traiterous intent:
That Redcrosse knight, perdie,[2] I never slew;
But had he beene where earst his armes were lent,
Th' enchaunter vaine his errour should not rew:
But thou his errour shalt, I hope, now proven trew."

1 live. 2 in truth.

43

Therewith they gan, both furious and fell,
To thunder blowes, and fiersly to assaile
Each other, bent his enimy to quell,
That with their force they perst both plate and maile,
And made wide furrowes in their fleshes fraile,
That it would pitty any living eie.
Large floods of blood adowne their sides did raile;
But floods of blood could not them satisfie:
Both hongred after death; both chose to win, or die.

44

So long they fight, and full revenge pursue,
That, fainting, each themselves to breathen lett,
And, ofte refreshed, battell oft renue.
As when two Bores, with rancling malice mett,
Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely frett;
Til breathlesse both themselves aside retire,
Where foming wrath their cruell tuskes they whett,
And trample th' earth, the whiles they may respire,
Then backe to fight againe, new breathed and entire.

45

So fiersly, when these knights had breathed once,
They gan to fight retourne, increasing more
Their puissant force, and cruell rage attonce.
With heaped strokes more hugely then before;
That with their drery wounds, and bloody gore,
They both, deformed, scarsely could bee known.
By this, sad Una fraught with anguish sore,
Led with their noise which through the aire was thrown,
Arriv'd wher they in erth their fruitles blood had sown.

46

Whom all so soone as that proud Sarazin
Espide, he gan revive the memory
Of his leud lusts, and late attempted sin,
And lefte the doubtfull battell hastily,
To catch her, newly offred to his eie;
But Satyrane, with strokes him turning, staid,
And sternely bad him other businesse plie,
Then hunt the steps of pure unspotted Maid:
Wherewith he al enrag'd these bitter speaches said.

47

"O foolish faeries sonne! what fury mad
Hath thee incenst to hast thy dolefull fate?
Were it not better I that Lady had
Then that thou hadst repented it too late?
Most sencelesse man he, that himselfe doth hate,
To love another: Lo! then, for thine ayd,
Here take thy lovers token on thy pate."
So they to fight; the whiles the royall Mayd
Fledd farre away, of that proud Paynim sore afrayd.

48

But that false Pilgrim, which that leasing[1] told,
Being in deed old Archimage, did stay
In secret shadow all this to behold;
And much rejoyced in their bloody fray:
But, when he saw the Damsell passe away,
He left his stond, and her pursewd apace,
In hope to bring her to her last decay.
But for to tell her lamentable cace,
And eke this battels end, will need another place.

CANTO VII

The Redcrosse knight is captive made
By Gyaunt proud opprest:
Prince Arthure meets with Una greatly with those newes distrest.

1

What man so wise, what earthly witt so ware,
As to discry the crafty cunning traine,
By which deceipt doth maske in visour[2] faire,
And cast her coulours, died deepe in graine,[3]
To seeme like truth, whose shape she well can faine,
And fitting gestures to her purpose frame,
The guiltlesse man with guile to entertaine?
Great maistresse of her art was that false Dame,
The false Duessa, cloked with Fidessaes name.

2

Who when, returning from the drery Night,
She fownd not in that perilous hous of Pryde,
Where she had left the noble Redcrosse knight,
Her hoped pray, she would no lenger byde,
But forth she went to seeke him far and wide.
Ere long she fownd, whereas he wearie sate
To reste him selfe foreby a fountaine syde,
Disarmed all of yron-coted Plate;
And by his side his steed the grassy forage ate.

3

Hee feedes upon the cooling shade, and bayes[1]
His sweatie forehead in the breathing wynd,
Which through the trembling leaves full gently playes,
Wherein the chearefull birds of sundry kynd
Doe chaunt sweet musick to delight his mynd.
The witch approching gan him fayrely greet,
And with reproch of carelesnes unkynd
Upbrayd, for leaving her in place unmeet,
With fowle words tempring faire, soure gall with hony sweet.

4

Unkindnesse past, they gan of solace treat,
And bathe in pleasaunce of the joyous shade,
Which shielded them against the boyling heat,
And with greene boughes decking a gloomy glade,
About the fountaine like a girlond made;
Whose bubbling wave did ever freshly well,
Ne ever would through fervent sommer fade:
The sacred Nymph, which therein wont to dwell,
Was out of Dianes favor, as it then befell.

5

The cause was this: one day, when Phœbe[2] fayre
With all her band was following the chace,
This nymph, quite tyr'd with heat of scorching ayre,
Satt downe to rest in middest of the race:
The goddesse wroth gan fowly her disgrace,
And badd the waters, which from her did flow,
Be such as she her selfe was then in place.
Thenceforth her waters wexed dull and slow,
And all that drinke thereof do faint and feeble grow.

6

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was;
And lying downe upon the sandie graile,[3]
Dronke of the streame, as cleare as christall glas:

1 falsehood. 2 disguise. 3 fast color.

1 bathes.
2 Diana, goddess of the chase, sister of Phœbus Apollo 3 gravel.

ftsoones his manly forces gan to fayle.
nd mightie strong was turnd to feeble frayle.
is chaunged powres at first them selves not felt;
ill crudled cold his corage gan assayle,
nd cheareful blood in fayntnes chill did melt,
Which like a fever fit through all his bodie swelt.[1]

7

Yet goodly court he made still to his Dame,
ourd out in loosnesse on the grassy grownd,
oth carelesse of his health, and of his fame;
ill at the last he heard a dreadfull sownd,
Which through the wood loud bellowing did rebownd, hat all the earth for terror seemd to shake,
nd trees did tremble. Th' Elfe, therewith astownd, pstarted lightly from his looser make,[2] nd his unready weapons gan in hand to take.

8

But ere he could his armour on him dight,
r gett his shield, his monstrous enimy ith sturdie steps came stalking in his sight, n hideous Geaunt,[3] horrible and hye, hat with his tallnesse seemd to threat the skye;
he ground eke groned under him for dreed:
is living like saw never living eye,
e durst behold: his stature did exceed he hight of three the tallest sonnes of mortall seed.

9

The greatest Earth his uncouth mother was,
nd blustring Æolus his boasted sire,
ho with his breath, which through the world doth pas,
er hollow womb did secretly inspire,
nd fild her hidden caves with stormie yre,
hat she conceiv'd; and trebling the dew time,
n which the wombes of women do expire,
rought forth this monstrous masse of earthly slime,
uft up with emptie wind, and fild with sinfull crime.

1 swelled, burned. 3 companion.
2 Orgoglio, or Pride.

10

So growen great, through arrogant delight
Of th' high descent whereof he was yborne,
And through presumption of his matchlesse might,
All other powres and knighthood he did scorne.
Such now he marcheth to this man forlorne,
And left to losse;[1] his stalking steps are stayde
Upon a snaggy Oke, which he had torne
Out of his mothers bowelles, and it made
His mortall mace, wherewith his foemen he dismayde.

11

That, when the knight he spyde, he gan advaunce
With huge force and insupportable mayne,[2]
And towardes him with dreadfull fury praunce;
Who haplesse, and eke hopelesse, all in vaine
Did to him pace sad battaile to darrayne,
Disarmd, disgraste, and inwardly dismayde;
And eke so faint in every joynt and vayne,
Through that fraile fountain which him feeble made,
That scarsely could he weeld his bootlesse single blade.

12

The Geaunt strooke so maynly mercilesse,
That could have overthrowne a stony towre;
And, were not hevenly grace that did him blesse,
He had beene pouldred [3] all as thin as flowre:
But he was wary of that deadly stowre,
And lightly lept from underneath the blow:
Yet so exceeding was the villeins powre,
That with the winde it did him overthrow,
And all his sences stound that still he lay full low.

13

As when that divelish yron Engin, wrought
In deepest Hell, and framd by Furies skill,
With windy Nitre and quick Sulphur fraught,
And ramd with bollet rownd, ordaind to kill,
Conceiveth fyre, the heavens it doth fill
With thundring noyse, and all the ayre doth choke,
That none can breath, nor see, nor heare at will,

1 destruction. 2 strength.
3 powdered, beaten.

Through smouldry cloud of duskish stincking smoke;
That th' only breath him daunts, who hath escapt the stroke.

14

So daunted [1] when the Geaunt saw the knight,
His heavie hand he heaved up on hye,
And him to dust thought to have battred quight,
Untill Duessa loud to him gan crye,
"O great Orgoglio! greatest under skye,
O! hold thy mortall [2] hand for Ladies sake;
Hold for my sake, and doe him not to dye,
But vanquisht thine eternall bondslave make,
And me, thy worthy meed, unto thy Leman take."

15

He hearkned, and did stay from further harmes,
To gayne so goodly guerdon as she spake: [3]
So willingly she came into his armes,
Who her as willingly to grace did take,
And was possessed of his newfound make.
Then up he tooke the slombred [4] sencelesse corse,
And, ere he could out of his swowne awake,
Him to his castle brought with hastie forse,
And in a Dongeon deepe him threw without remorse.

16

From that day forth Duessa was his deare,
And highly honourd in his haughtie eye:
He gave her gold and purple pall to weare,
And triple crowne set on her head full hye,
And her endowd with royall majestye.
Then, for to make her dreaded more of men,
And peoples hartes with awfull terror tye,
A monstrous beast ybredd in filthy fen
He chose, which he had kept long time in darksom den.

17

Such one it was, as that renowmed Snake
Which great Alcides [5] in Stremona slew,
Long fostred in the filth of Lerna lake:
Whose many heades, out budding ever new,
Did breed him endlesse labor to subdew.
But this same Monster much more ugly was,

1 modifies knight. 2 deadly.
3 "as good a reward as she said it was."
4 unconscious. 5 Hercules.

For seven great heads out of his body grew
An yron brest, and back of scaly bras,
And all embrewd in blood his eyes did shin
as glas.

18

His tayle was stretched out in wondrou length,
That to the hous of hevenly gods
raught: [1]
And with extorted powre, and borrow'
strength,
The everburning lamps from thence braught,
And prowdly threw to ground, as things o
naught:
And underneath his filthy feet did tread
The sacred thinges, and holy heastes [2] fore taught. [3]
Upon this dreadfull Beast with sevenfol head
He sett the false Duessa, for more aw an dread.

19

The wofull Dwarfe, which saw his maister fall
Whiles he had keeping of his grasing steed,
And valiant knight become a caytiv thrall,
When all was past, tooke up his forlorne
weed; [5]
His mightie Armour, missing most at need;
His silver shield, now idle, maisterlesse;
His poynant speare that many made bleed,
The rueful moniments of heavinesse;
And with them all departes to tell his grea distresse.

20

He had not travaild long, when on th
way
He wofull Lady, wofull Una, met,
Fast flying from that Paynims greedy pray,
Whilest Satyrane him from pursuit di
let: [7]
Who when her eyes she on the Dwarf ha set,
And saw the signes that deadly tydinge
spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowfull regret,
And lively [8] breath her sad brest did forsake
Yet might her pitteous hart be seene to pan and quake.

1 reached. 2 behests.
3 taught before or previously. 4 abandoned.
5 attire. 6 plunder. 7 hinder.
8 life-supporting.

21

The messenger of so unhappie newes
Would faine have dyde: dead was his hart within,
Yet outwardly some little comfort shewes.
At last, recovering hart, he does begin
To rubb her temples, and to chaufe her chin,
And everie tender part does tosse and turne:
So hardly he the flitted life does win
Into her native prison to retourne;
Then gins her grieved ghost thus to lament and mourne:

22

"Ye dreary instruments of dolefull sight,
That doe this deadly spectacle behold,
Why doe ye lenger feed on loathed light,
Or liking find to gaze on earthly mould,
With cruell fates the carefull threds unfould,
Sithe which my life and love together tyde?
Now let the stony dart of sencelesse cold
Perce to my hart, and pas through everie side,
And let eternall night so sad sight fro me hyde.

23

"O lightsome day! the lampe of highest Jove,
First made by him mens wandring wayes to guyde,
When darknesse he in deepest dongeon drove,
Henceforth thy hated face for ever hyde,
And shut up heavens windowes shyning wyde;
For earthly sight can nought but sorrow breed,
And late repentance which shall long abyde:
Fine eyes no more on vanitie shall feed,
But seeled up with death shall have their deadly meed."

24

Then downe againe she fell unto the ground,
But he her quickly reared up againe:
Thrise did she sinke adowne in deadly swownd,
And thrise he her reviv'd with busie paine.
At last when life recover'd had the raine,
And over-wrestled his strong enimy,
With foltring tong, and trembling everie vaine,

"Tell on," (quoth she) "the wofull Tragedy,
The which these reliques sad present unto mine eye.

25

"Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her spight,
And thrilling sorrow throwne his utmost dart:
Thy sad tong cannot tell more heavy plight
Then that I feele, and harbour in mine hart:
Who hath endur'd the whole can beare ech part.
If death it be, it is not the first wound
That launched hath my brest with bleeding smart.
Begin, and end the bitter balefull stound;[1]
If lesse then that I feare, more favour I have found."

26

Then gan the Dwarfe the whole discourse declare;
The subtile traines of Archimago old;
The wanton loves of false Fidessa fayre,
Bought with the blood of vanquisht Paynim bold;
The wretched payre transformd to treën mould;
The house of Pryde, and perilles round about;
The combat which he with Sansjoy did hould;
The lucklesse conflict with the Gyaunt stout,
Wherein captiv'd, of life or death he stood in doubt.

27

She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to maister sorrowfull assay,[2]
Which greater grew the more she did contend,
And almost rent her tender hart in tway,
And love fresh coles unto her fire did lay;
For greater love, the greater is the losse.
Was never Lady loved dearer day[3]
Then she did love the knight of the Red-crosse,
For whose deare sake so many troubles her did tosse.

28

At last when fervent sorrow slaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find

1 moment. 2 attack of sorrow.
3 "No lady ever loved daylight dearer."

Alive or dead; and forward forth doth pas,
All as the Dwarfe the way to her assynd;
And evermore, in constant carefull mind,
She fedd her wound with fresh renewed bale.
Long tost with stormes, and bet with bitter wind,
High over hills, and lowe adowne the dale,
She wandred many a wood, and measurd many a vale.

29

At last she chaunced by good hap to meet
A goodly knight, faire marching by the way,
Together with his Squyre, arayed meet:
His glitterand armour shined far away,
Like glauncing light of Phœbus brightest ray;
From top to toe no place appeared bare,
That deadly dint of steele endanger may.
Athwart his brest a bauldrick[1] brave he ware,
That shind, like twinkling stars, with stones most pretious rare.

30

And in the midst thereof one pretious stone
Of wondrous worth, and eke of wondrous mights,
Shapt like a Ladies head, exceeding shone,
Like Hesperus emongst the lesser lights,
And strove for to amaze the weaker sights:
Thereby his mortall blade full comely hong
In yvory sheath, ycarv'd with curious slights,[2]
Whose hilts were burnisht gold, and handle strong
Of mother perle; and buckled with a golden tong.

31

His haughtie Helmet, horrid[3] all with gold,
Both glorious brightnesse and great terrour bredd:
For all the crest a Dragon did enfold
With greedie pawes, and over all did spredd
His golden winges: his dreadfull hideous hedd,
Close couched on the bever,[4] seemd to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparckles fiery redd,
That suddeine horrour to faint hartes did show;
And scaly tayle was stretcht adowne his back full low.

32

Upon the top of all his loftie crest,
A bounch of heares discolourd diversly,
With sprincled pearle and gold full richly drest,
Did shake, and seemd to daunce for jollity,
Like to an almond tree ymounted hye
On top of greene Selinis[1] all alone,
With blossoms brave bedecked daintily;
Whose tender locks do tremble every one
At everie little breath that under heaven is blowne.

33

His warlike shield all closely cover'd was,
Ne might of mortall eye be ever seene;
Not made of steele, nor of enduring bras,
Such earthly mettals soon consumed beene:
But all of Diamond perfect pure and cleene
It framed was, one massy entire mould,
Hewen out of Adamant rocke with engine keene,
That point of speare it never percen could,
Ne dint of direfull sword divide the substance would.

34

The same to wight he never wont[2] disclose
But whenas monsters huge he would dismay,
Or daunt unequall armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray:
For so exceeding shone his glistring ray,
That Phœbus golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beames doth over-lay;
And silver Cynthia[3] wexed pale and faynt,
As when her face is staynd with magicke art constraint.

35

No magicke arts hereof had any might,
Nor bloody wordes of bold Enchaunters call'd,
But all that was not such as seemd in sight
Before that shield did fade, and suddein fall;
And when him list[4] the raskall routes appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all;
And, when him list the prouder lookes subdew,
He would them gazing blind,[5] or turne to other hew.

36

Ne let it seeme that credence this exceedes
For he that made the same was knowne righ well
To have done much more admirable deedes

1 belt. 2 designs. 3 bristling.
4 the lower, movable part of a helmet.

1 In Sicily. 2 was wont to. 3 the moon.
4 pleased. 5 "blind them as they gazed."

Merlin [1] was, which whylome did excell
l living wightes in might of magicke spell:
oth shield and sword, and armour all he wrought
r this young Prince, when first to armes he fell; [2] ut, when he dyde, the Faery Queene it brought o Faerie lond, where yet it may be seene, if sought:

37

A gentle youth, his dearely loved Squire, is speare of heben wood behind him bare,
hose harmeful head, thrise heated in the fire,
ad riven many a brest with pikehead square:
goodly person, and could menage faire is stubborne steed with curbed canon [3] bitt, ho under him did trample as the aire,
nd chauft that any on his backe should sitt:
ne yron rowels into frothy fome he bitt.

38

Whenas this knight nigh to the Lady drew,
ith lovely court he gan her entertaine;
ut, when he heard her answers loth, he knew me secret sorrow did her heart distraine; [4] hich to allay, and calme her storming paine, ire feeling words he wisely gan display,
nd for her humor fitting purpose [5] faine,
o tempt the cause it selfe for to bewray,
herewith enmovd, these bleeding words she gan to say.

39

"What worlds delight, or joy of living speach, n hart, so plungd in sea of sorrowes deep,
nd heaped with so huge misfortunes, reach?
he carefull cold beginneth for to creep,
nd in my heart his yron arrow steep,
one as I thinke upon my bitter bale.
ich helplesse harmes yts better hidden keep,
nen rip up griefe where it may not availe:
y last left comfort is my woes to weepe and waile."

[1] The great magician in the stories of the Round Table.
[2] took. [3] smooth. [4] tear. [5] conversation.

40

"Ah Lady deare," quoth then the gentle knight,
"Well may I ween your griefe is wondrous great;
For wondrous great griefe groneth in my spright,
Whiles thus I heare you of your sorrowes treat.
But, woefull Lady, let me you intrete,
For to unfold the anguish of your hart:
Mishaps are maistred by advice discrete,
And counsell mitigates the greatest smart:
Found never help who never would his hurts impart."

41

"O, but," (quoth she) "great griefe will not be tould,
And can more easily be thought then said."
"Right so," (quoth he) "but he that never would Could never: will to might gives greatest aid."
"But griefe," (quoth she) "does greater grow displaid,
If then it find not helpe, and breeds despaire."
"Despaire breeds not," (quoth he) "where faith is staid."
"No faith so fast," (quoth she) "but flesh does paire." [1]
"Flesh may empaire," (quoth he) "but reason can repaire."

42

His goodly reason, and well-guided speach,
So deepe did settle in her gracious thought,
That her perswaded to disclose the breach
Which love and fortune in her heart had wrought;
And said; "Faire Sir, I hope good hap hath brought
You to inquere the secrets of my griefe,
Or that your wisedome will direct my thought,
Or that your prowesse can me yield reliefe:
Then, heare the story sad, which I shall tell you briefe.

43

"The forlorne Maiden, whom your eies have seene
The laughing stocke of fortunes mockeries,
Am th' onely daughter of a King and Queene,
Whose parents deare, whiles equal destinies
Did ronne about, and their felicities
The favourable heavens did not envy,

[1] impair.

Did spred their rule through all the territories,
Which Phison [1] and Euphrates floweth by,
And Gehons golden waves doe wash continually:

44

"Till that their cruell cursed enemy,
An huge great Dragon, horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,[2]
With murdrous ravine, and devouring might,
Their kingdome spoild, and countrey wasted quight:
Themselves, for feare into his jawes to fall,
He forst to castle strong to take their flight;
Where, fast embard in mighty brasen wall,
He has them now fowr years besiegd to make them thrall.

45

"Full many knights, adventurous and stout,
Have enterpriz'd that Monster to subdew.
From every coast that heaven walks about
Have thither come the noble Martial crew
That famous harde atchievements still pursew;
Yet never any could that girlond win,
But all still shronke, and still he greater grew:
All they, for want of faith, or guilt of sin,
The pitteous pray of his fiers cruelty have bin.

46

"At last, yled with far reported praise,
Which flying fame throughout the world had spred,
Of doughty knights, whom Faery land did raise,
That noble order hight of maidenhed,
Forthwith to court of Gloriane I sped,
Of Gloriane, great Queene of glory bright,
Whose kingdomes seat Cleopolis [3] is red; [4]
There to obtaine some such redoubted knight,
That Parents deare from tyrants powre deliver might.

47

"Yt was my chaunce (my chaunce was faire and good)
There for to find a fresh unproved knight;
Whose manly hands imbrewd in guilty bloc
Had never beene, ne ever by his might Had throwne to ground the unregarde right:
Yet of his prowesse proofe he since hat made
(I witnes am) in many a cruell fight;
The groning ghosts of many one dismaide
Have felt the bitter dint of his avengin blade.

48

"And ye, the forlorne reliques of his powr
His biting sword, and his devouring speare
Which have endured many a dreadfu stowre,
Can speake his prowesse that did earst yo beare,
And well could rule; now he hath left yo heare
To be the record of his ruefull losse,
And of my dolefull disaventurous deare.[1]
O! heavie record of the good Redcrosse,
Where have yee left your lord that could s well you tosse?

49

"Well hoped I, and faire beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeeme
Till, all unweeting, an Enchaunter bad
His sence abusd, and made him to mis
deeme
My loyalty, not such as it did seeme,
That rather death desire then such despight.
Be judge, ye heavens, that all things righ
esteeme,
How I him lov'd, and love with all my might.
So thought I eke of him, and think I though aright.

50

"Thenceforth me desolate he quite for sooke,
To wander where wilde fortune would me
lead,
And other bywaies he himselfe betooke,
Where never foote of living wight did tread,
That brought not backe the balefull body dead:
In which him chaunced false Duessa meete,
Mine onely [3] foe, mine onely deadly dread;
Who with her witchcraft, and misseeming
sweete,
Inveigled him to follow her desires unmeete.

1 The three rivers mentioned are in Paradise.
2 Hades.
3 "The city of glory"; i.e., London. 4 called.

1 injury. 2 wrong. 3 particular.

51

"At last, by subtile sleights she him betraid
nto his foe, a Gyaunt huge and tall;
'ho him disarmed, dissolute, dismaid, nwares surprised, and with mighty mall [1]
he monster mercilesse him made to fall,
'hose fall did never foe before behold:
nd now in darkesome dungeon, wretched thrall, emedilesse for aie he doth him hold.
his is my cause of griefe, more great then may be told."

52

Ere she had ended all she gan to faint:
ut he her comforted, and faire bespake:
Certes, Madame, ye have great cause of plaint;
hat stoutest heart, I weene, could cause to quake:
ut be of cheare, and comfort to you take;
or till I have acquitt your captive knight,
ssure your selfe I will you not forsake."
is chearefull words reviv'd her chearelesse spright, forth they went, the Dwarfe them guiding ever right.

CANTO VIII

Faire virgin, to redeeme her deare,
Brings Arthure to the fight:
Who slayes the Gyaunt, wounds the beast,
And strips Duessa quight.

1

Ay me! how many perils doe enfold
he righteous man, to make him daily fall,
'ere not that heavenly grace doth him uphold,
nd stedfast truth acquite him out of all.
er love is firme, her care continuall,
o oft as he, through his own foolish pride
r weaknes, is to sinfull bands made thrall:
ls should this Redcrosse knight in bands have dyde,
or whose deliverance she this Prince doth thither guyd.

2

They sadly traveild thus, untill they came igh to a castle builded strong and hye:
hen cryde the Dwarfe, "Lo! yonder is the same,
n which my Lord, my liege, doth lucklesse ly
hrall to that Gyaunts hatefull tyranny:
Therefore, deare Sir, your mightie powres assay."
The noble knight alighted by and by
From loftie steed, and badd the Ladie stay,
To see what end of fight should him befall that day.

3

So with his Squire, th' admirer of his might,
He marched forth towardes that castle wall,
Whose gates he fownd fast shutt, ne living wight
To warde the same, nor answere commers call.
Then tooke that Squire an horne of bugle [1] small,
Which hong adowne his side in twisted gold
And tasselles gay. Wyde wonders over all
Of that same hornes great virtues weren told,
Which had approved bene in uses manifold.

4

Was never wight that heard that shrilling sownd,
But trembling feare did feel in every vaine:
Three miles it might be easy heard arownd,
And Ecchoes three aunswer'd it selfe againe:
No false enchauntment, nor deceiptfull traine,
Might once abide the terror of that blast,
But presently was void and wholly vaine:
No gate so strong, no locke so firme and fast,
But with that percing noise flew open quite, or brast.

5

The same before the Geaunts gate he blew,
That all the castle quaked from the grownd,
And every dore of freewill open flew.
The Gyaunt selfe, dismaied with that sownd,
Where he with his Duessa dalliaunce fownd,
In hast came rushing forth from inner bowre,
With staring countenance sterne, as one astownd,
And staggering steps, to weet what suddein stowre
Had wrought that horror strange, and dar'd his dreaded powre.

6

And after him the proud Duessa came,
High mounted on her many headed beast,
And every head with fyrie tongue did flame,

[1] club.

[1] ox.

And every head was crowned on his creast,
And bloody mouthed with late cruell feast.
That when the knight beheld, his mightie shild
Upon his manly arme he soone addrest,
And at him fiersly flew, with corage fild,
And eger greedinesse through every member thrild.

7

Therewith the Gyant buckled him to fight,
Inflamd with scornefull wrath and high disdaine,
And lifting up his dreadfull club on hight,
All armd with ragged snubbes [1] and knottie graine,
Him thought at first encounter to have slaine.
But wise and wary was that noble Pere;
And, lightly leaping from so monstrous maine,
Did fayre avoide the violence him nere:
It booted nought to thinke such thunderbolts to beare.

8

Ne shame he thought to shonne so hideous might:
The ydle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the marke of his misaymed sight,
Did fall to ground, and with his heavy sway
So deepely dinted in the driven clay,
That three yardes deepe a furrow up did throw.
The sad earth, wounded with so sore assay,
Did grone full grievous underneath the blow,
And trembling with strange feare did like an erthquake show.

9

As when almightie Jove, in wrathfull mood,
To wreake the guilt of mortall sins is bent,
Hurles forth his thundring dart with deadly food [2]
Enrold in flames, and smouldring dreriment,
Through riven cloudes and molten firmament;
The fiers threeforked engin, making way,
Both loftie towres and highest trees hath rent,
And all that might his angry passage stay;
And, shooting in the earth, castes up a mount of clay.

10

His boystrous [3] club, so buried in the grownd,
He could not rearen up againe so light,
But that the Knight him at advantag
fownd;
And, whiles he strove his combred clubbe t
quight
Out of the earth, with blade all burnin bright
He smott off his left arme, which like block
Did fall to ground, depriv'd of native might Large streames of blood out of the truncke stock
Forth gushed, like fresh water streame fron riven rocke.

11

Dismayed with so desperate deadly wound
And eke impatient of unwonted payne,
He loudly brayd with beastly yelling sownd
That all the fieldes rebellowed againe.
As great a noyse, as when in Cymbria
plaine
An heard of Bulles, whom kindly [1] rage doth sting,
Doe for the milky mothers want complaine,
And fill the fieldes with troublous bellowing
The neighbor woods arownd with hollow murmur ring.

12

That when his deare Duessa heard, and saw
The evil stownd that daungerd her estate,
Unto his aide she hastily did draw
Her dreadfull beast; who, swolne with blood of late,
Came ramping forth with proud presumpte-
ous gate,
And threatned all his heades like flaming brandes.
But him the Squire made quickly to retrate
Encountring fiers with single sword in hand
And twixt him and his Lord did like a bulwarke stand.

13

The proud Duessa, full of wrathfull spight
And fiers disdaine to be affronted so,
Enforst her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthroe,
Scorning the let of so unequall foe:
But nathemore would that corageous swayne
To her yeeld passage gainst his Lord to goe,
But with outrageous strokes did him restraine,
And with his body bard the way atwixt them twaine.

1 knobs. 2 feud. 3 crude.

1 natural.

14

Then tooke the angrie witch her golden cup,
Which still she bore, replete with magick artes;
Death and despeyre did many thereof sup,
And secret poyson through their inner partes,
Th' eternall bale of heavie wounded harts;
Which, after charmes and some enchauntments said,
She lightly sprinkled on his weaker partes:
Therewith his sturdie corage soon was quayd,[1]
And all his sences were with suddein dread dismayd.

15

So downe he fell before the cruell beast,
Who on his neck his bloody clawes did seize,
That life nigh crusht out of his panting brest:
No powre he had to stirre, nor will to rize.
That when the carefull knight gan well avise,
He lightly left the foe with whom he fought,
And to the beast gan turne his enterprise;
For wondrous anguish in his hart it wrought,
To see his loved Squyre into such thraldom brought:

16

And, high advauncing his blood-thirstie blade,
Stroke one of those deformed heades so sore,
That of his puissaunce proud ensample made:
His monstrous scalpe downe to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape misshaped more.
A sea of blood gusht from the gaping wownd,
That her gay garments staynd with filthy gore,
And overflowed all the field arownd,
That over shoes in blood he waded on the grownd.

17

Thereat he rored for exceeding paine,
That to have heard great horror would have bred;
And scourging th' emptie ayre with his long trayne,
Through great impatience of his grieved hed,
His gorgeous ryder from her loftie sted
Would have cast downe, and trodd in durty myre,
Had not the Gyaunt soone her succoured;
Who, all enrag'd with smart and frantick yre,
Came hurtling in full fiers, and forst the knight retyre.

1 subdued.

18

The force, which wont in two to be disperst,
In one alone left hand he now unites,
Which is through rage more strong then both were erst;
With which his hideous club aloft he dites,[1]
And at his foe with furious rigor smites,
That strongest Oake might seeme to overthrow.
The stroke upon his shield so heavie lites,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low:
What mortall wight could ever beare so monstrous blow?

19

And in his fall his shield, that covered was,
Did loose his vele[2] by chaunce, and open flew;
The light whereof, that hevens light did pas,
Such blazing brightnesse through the ayer threw,
That eye mote not the same endure to vew.
Which when the Gyaunt spyde with staring eye,
He downe let fall his arme, and soft withdrew
His weapon huge, that heaved was on hye
For to have slain the man, that on the ground did lye.

20

And eke the fruitfull-headed[3] beast, amazd
At flashing beames of that sunshiny shield,
Became stark blind, and all his sences dazd,
That downe he tumbled on the durtie field,
And seemd himselfe as conquered to yield.
Whom when his maistresse proud perceiv'd to fall,
Whiles yet his feeble feet for faintnesse reeld,
Unto the Gyaunt lowdly she gan call;
"O! helpe, Orgoglio; helpe! or els we perish all."

21

At her so pitteous cry was much amoov'd
Her champion stout; and for to ayde his frend,
Againe his wonted angry weapon proov'd,
But all in vaine, for he has redd his end
In that bright shield, and all their forces spend Them selves in vaine: for, since that glauncing sight,
He hath no powre to hurt, nor to defend.

1 lifts. 2 its cover.
3 bounteously supplied with heads.

As where th' Almighties lightning brond does light,
It dimmes the dazed eyen, and daunts the sences quight.

22

Whom when the Prince, to batteill new addrest
And threatning high his dreadfull stroke, did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,
And smote off quite his right leg by the knee,
That downe he tombled; as an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift,
Whose hartstrings with keene steele nigh hewen be;
The mightie trunck, halfe rent with ragged rift,
Doth roll adowne the rocks, and fall with fearefull drift.

23

Or as a Castle, reared high and round,
By subtile engins and malitious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forst, and feebled quight,
At last downe falles; and with her heaped hight
Her hastie ruine does more heavie make,
And yields it selfe unto the victours might.
Such was this Gyaunts fall, that seemd to shake
The stedfast globe of earth, as it for feare did quake.

24

The knight, then lightly leaping to the pray,
With mortall steele him smot againe so sore,
That headlesse his unweldy bodie lay,
All wallowd in his owne fowle bloody gore,
Which flowed from his wounds in wondrous store.
But, soone as breath out of his brest did pas,
That huge great body, which the Gyaunt bore,
Was vanisht quite; and of that monstrous mas
Was nothing left, but like an emptie blader was.

25

Whose grievous fall when false Duessa spyde,
Her golden cup she cast unto the ground,
And crowned mitre rudely threw asyde:
Such percing griefe her stubborne hart did wound,
That she could not endure that doleful stound
But leaving all behind her fled away:
The light-foot Squyre her quickly turned around,
And, by hard meanes enforcing her to stay,
So brought unto his Lord as his deserved pray.

26

The roiall Virgin which beheld from farre
In pensive plight and sad perplexitie,
The whole atchievement of this doubtful warre,
Came running fast to greet his victorie,
With sober gladnesse and myld modestie;
And with sweet joyous cheare him thus bespake:
"Fayre braunch of noblesse, flowre of chevalrie,
That with your worth the world amazed make,
How shall I quite the paynes ye suffer for my sake?

27

"And you, fresh budd of vertue springing fast,
Whom these sad eyes saw nigh unto deaths dore,
What hath poore Virgin for such perill past Wherewith you to reward? Accept therefore
My simple selfe, and service evermore:
And he that high does sit, and all things see
With equall eye, their merites to restore,
Behold what ye this day have done for mee,
And what I cannot quite requite with usuree.

28

"But sith the heavens, and your faire handeling,
Have made you master of the field this day,
Your fortune maister eke with governing,
And, well begonne, end all so well, I pray!
Ne let that wicked woman scape away;
For she it is, that did my Lord bethrall,
My dearest Lord, and deepe in dongeon lay,
Where he his better dayes hath wasted all:
O heare, how piteous he to you for ayd does call!"

29

Forthwith he gave in charge unto his Squyre,
That scarlot whore to keepen carefully;

hyles he himselfe with greedie great desyre to the Castle entred forcibly, here living creature none he did espye,
hen gan he lowdly through the house to call,
ut no man car'd to answere to his crye:
here raignd a solemne silence over all;
or voice was heard, nor wight was seene in bowre or hall.

30

At last, with creeping crooked pace forth came n old old man,[1] with beard as white as snow, hat on a staffe his feeble steps did frame,
nd guyde his wearie gate both too and fro,
or his eye sight him fayled long ygo;
nd on his arme a bounch of keyes he bore,
he which unused rust did overgrow:
hose were the keyes of every inner dore;
ut he could not them use, but kept them still in store.

31

But very uncouth sight was to behold, ow he did fashion his untoward pace;
or as he forward moovd his footing old,
backward still was turnd his wrincled face:
nlike to men, who ever, as they trace,
oth feet and face one way are wont to lead.
his was the auncient keeper of that place,
nd foster father of the Gyaunt dead;
is name Ignaro did his nature right aread.

32

His reverend heares and holy gravitee
he knight much honord, as beseemed well;
nd gently askt, where all the people bee,
hich in that stately building wont to dwell:
ho answerd him full soft, he could not tell.
gain he askt, where that same knight was layd, hom great Orgoglio with his puissaunce fell ad made his caytive thrall: againe he sayde,
e could not tell; ne ever other answere made.

33

Then asked he, which way he in might pas?
e could not tell, againe he answered.
hereat the courteous knight displeased was,
nd said; "Old syre, it seemes thou hast not red[2]
ow ill it sits with that same silver hed, vaine to mocke, or mockt in vaine to bee:
ut if thou be, as thou art pourtrahed
With natures pen, in ages grave degree,
Aread in graver wise what I demaund of thee."

34

His answere likewise was, he could not tell:
Whose sencelesse speach, and doted ignorance,
Whenas the noble Prince had marked well,
He ghest his nature by his countenance,
And calmd his wrath with goodly temperance.
Then, to him stepping, from his arme did reach
Those keyes, and made himselfe free enterance.
Each dore he opened without any breach,
There was no barre to stop, nor foe him to empeach.

35

There all within full rich arayd he found,
With royall arras, and resplendent gold,
And did with store of every thing abound,
That greatest Princes presence might behold.
But all the floore (too filthy to be told)
With blood of guiltlesse babes, and innocents trew,
Which there were slaine as sheepe out of the fold,
Defiled was, that dreadfull was to vew;
And sacred ashes over it was strowed new.

36

And there beside of marble stone was built
An Altare, carv'd with cunning ymagery,
On which trew Christians blood was often spilt,
And holy Martyres often doen to dye
With cruell malice and strong tyranny:
Whose blessed sprites, from underneath the stone,
To God for vengeance cryde continually;
And with great griefe were often heard to grone,
That hardest heart would bleede to hear their piteous mone.

37

Through every rowme he sought, and everie bowr,
But no where could he find that wofull thrall:
At last he came unto an yron doore,
That fast was lockt, but key found not at all
Emongst that bounch to open it withall;

[1] Ignorance. [2] observed.

But in the same a little grate was pight,
Through which he sent his voyce, and lowd did call
With all his powre, to weet if living wight
Were housed therewithin, whom he enlargen might.

38

Therewith an hollow, dreary, murmuring voyce
These pitteous plaintes and dolours did resound:
"O! who is that, which bringes me happy choyce
Of death, that here lye dying every stound,
Yet live perforce in balefull darkenesse bound?
For now three Moones have changed thrice their hew,[1]
And have been thrice hid underneath the ground,
Since I the heavens chearefull face did vew.
O! welcome thou, that doest of death bring tydings trew."

39

Which when that Champion heard, with percing point
Of pitty deare his hart was thrilled sore;
And trembling horrour ran through every joynt,
For ruth of gentle knight so fowle forlore;
Which shaking off, he rent that yron dore
With furious force and indignation fell;
Where entred in, his foot could find no flore,
But all a deepe descent, as darke as hell,
That breathed ever forth a filthie banefull smell.

40

But nether darkenesse fowle, nor filthy bands,
Nor noyous smell, his purpose could withhold,
(Entire affection hateth nicer hands)
But that with constant zele and corage bold,
After long paines and labors manifold,
He found the meanes that Prisoner up to reare;
Whose feeble thighes, unable to uphold
His pined corse, him scarse to light could beare;
A ruefull spectacle of death and ghastly drere.

41

His sad dull eies, deepe sunck in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sunne to view;
His bare thin cheekes for want of better bits
And empty sides deceived of their dew,
Could make a stony hart his hap to rew;
His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawned bowrs[2]
Were wont to rive[3] steele plates, and helmet hew,
Were clene consum'd; and all his vital powres
Decayd, and al his flesh shronk up like withered flowres.

1 form.

42

Whome when his Lady saw, to him she ran
With hasty joy: to see him made her glad,
And sad to view his visage pale and wan,
Who earst in flowres of freshest youth was clad.
Tho, when her well of teares she wasted had,
She said; "Ah dearest Lord! what evil starre
On you hath frownd, and pourd his influence bad,
That of your selfe ye thus berobbed arre,
And this misseeming hew your manly looks doth marre?

43

"But welcome now, my Lord in wele or woe
Whose presence I have lackt too long a day:
And fie on Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wreakes[4] them selves doe now alay;
And for these wronges shall treble penaunce pay
Of treble good: good growes of evils priefe."
The chearelesse man, whom sorrow did dismay,
Had no delight to treaten of his griefe;
His long endured famine needed more reliefe.

44

"Faire Lady," then said that victorious knight,
The things, that grievous were to doe, or beare,
Them to renew, I wote, breeds no delight;
Best musicke breeds delight in loathing eare
But th' only good that growes of passed feare
Is to be wise, and ware of like agein.
This daies ensample hath this lesson deare
Deepe written in my heart with yron pen,
That blisse may not abide in state of mortall men.

2 muscles. 3 split.
4 punishments. 5 experience.

45

"Henceforth, Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And maister these mishaps with patient might.
Loe! where your foe lies strecht in monstrous length;
And loe! that wicked woman in your sight,
The roote of all your care and wretched plight,
Now in your powre, to let her live, or die."
"To doe her die," (quoth Una) "were despight,
And shame t' avenge so weake an enimy;
But spoile her of her scarlot robe, and let her fly."

46

So, as she bad, that witch they disaraid,
And robd of roiall robes, and purple pall,
And ornaments that richly were displaid;
Ne spared they to strip her naked all.
Then, when they had despoyld her tire and call,[1]
Such as she was their eies might her behold,
That her misshaped parts did them appall:
A loathly, wrinckled hag, ill favoured, old,
Whose secret filth good manners biddeth not be told.

47

Her craftie head was altogether bald,
And as in hate of honorable eld,
Was overgrówne with scurfe and filthy scald;
Her teeth out of her rotten gummes were feld,
And her sowre breath abhominably smeld;
Her dried dugs, like bladders lacking wind,
Long downe, and filthy matter from them weld;
Her wrizled skin as rough, as maple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loathd all womankind.

48

Her neather parts, the shame of all her kind,
My chaster Muse for shame doth blush to write;
But at her rompe she growing had behind
A foxes taile, with dong all fowly dight;
And eke her feete most monstrous were in sight;
For one of them was like an Eagles claw,
With griping talaunts armd to greedy fight,
The other like a Beares uneven paw:
More ugly shape yet never living creature saw.

49

Which when the knights beheld amazd they were,
And wondred at so fowle deformed wight.
"Such then," (said Una,) "as she seemeth here,
Such is the face of falshood: such the sight
Of fowle Duessa, when her borrowed light
Is laid away, and counterfesaunce knowne."
Thus when they had the witch disrobed quight,
And all her filthy feature open showne,
They let her goe at will, and wander waies unknowne.

50

Shee, flying fast from heavens hated face,
And from the world that her discovered wide,
Fled to the wastfull wildernesse apace,
From living eies her open shame to hide,
And lurkt in rocks and caves, long unespide.
But that faire crew of knights, and Una faire,
Did in that castle afterwards abide,
To rest them selves, and weary powres repaire;
Where store they fownd of al that dainty was and rare.

[1] cap.

CANTO IX

His loves and lignage Arthure tells:
The knights knitt friendly bands:
Sir Trevisan flies from Despeyre,
Whom Redcros knight withstands.

1

O goodly golden chayne, wherewith yfere[1]
The vertues linked are in lovely wize;
And noble mindes of yore allyed were,
In brave poursuitt of chevalrous emprize,
That none did others safety despize,
Nor aid envy to him in need that stands;
But friendly each did others praise devize,
How to advaunce with favourable hands,
As this good Prince redeemd the Redcrosse knight from bands.

2

Who when their powres, empayrd through labor long,
With dew repast they had recured well,
And that weake captive wight now wexed strong,
Them list no lenger there at leasure dwell,

[1] together.

But forward fare as their adventures fell:
But, ere they parted, Una faire besought
That straunger knight his name and nation tell;
Least so great good, as he for her had wrought,
Should die unknown, and buried be in thankles thought.

3

"Faire virgin," (said the Prince,) "yee me require
A thing without the compas of my witt;
For both the lignage, and the certein Sire,
From which I sprong, from mee are hidden yitt
For all so soone as life did me admitt
Into this world, and shewed hevens light,
From mothers pap I taken was unfitt,
And streight deliver'd to a Fary knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thewes[1] and martiall might.

4

"Unto Old Timon he me brought bylive;[2]
Old Timon, who in youthly yeares hath beene
In warlike feates th' expertest man alive,
And is the wisest now on earth I weene:
His dwelling is low in a valley greene,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore,
From whence the river Dee, as silver cleene,
His tombling billowes rolls with gentle rore;
There all my daies he traind mee up in vertuous lore.

5

"Thither the great magicien Merlin came,
As was his use, ofttimes to visitt mee;
For he had charge my discipline to frame,
And Tutors nouriture to oversee.
Him oft and oft I askt in privity,
Of what loines and what lignage I did spring;
Whose aunswere bad he still assured bee,
That I was sonne and heire unto a king,
As time in her just term the truth to light should bring."

6

"Well worthy impe,"[3] said then the Lady gent,[4]
"And Pupill fitt for such a Tutors hand!
But what adventure, or what high intent,
Hath brought you hither into Faery land,
Aread, Prince Arthure, crowne of Martiall band?"

1 habits. 2 immediately.
3 offspring, child. 4 gentle

"Full hard it is," (quoth he) "to read aright
The course of heavenly cause, or understand
The secret meaning of th' eternall might,
That rules mens waies, and rules the thought of living wight.

7

"For whether he, through fatal deepe foresight,
Me hither sent for cause to me unghest;
Or that fresh bleeding wound, which day and night
Whilome doth rancle in my riven brest,
With forced fury following his behest,
Me hither brought by wayes yet never found,
You to have helpt I hold my selfe yet blest."
"Ah! courteous Knight," (quoth she) "what secret wound Could ever find to grieve the gentlest hart on ground?"

8

"Dear Dame," (quoth he) "you sleeping sparkes awake,
Which, troubled once, into huge flames will grow;
Ne ever will their fervent fury slake,
Till living moysture into smoke do flow,
And wasted life doe lye in ashes low:
Yet sithens silence lesseneth not my fire,
But, told, it flames; and, hidden, it does glow,
I will revele what ye so much desire.
Ah. Love! lay down thy bow, the whiles I may respyre.

9

"It was in freshest flowre of youthly yeares,
When corage first does creepe in manly chest,
Then first the cole of kindly heat appeares
To kindle love in every living brest:
But me had warnd old Timons wise behest,
Those creeping flames by reason to subdew,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest,
As miserable lovers use to rew,
Which still wex old in woe, whiles wo stil wexeth new.

10

"That ydle name of love, and lovers life,
As losse of time, and vertues enimy,
I ever scornd, and joyd to stirre up strife,
In middest of their mournfull Tragedy;
Ay wont to laugh when them I heard to cry,
And blow the fire which them to ashes brent:
Their God himselfe, grievd at my libertie,

hott many a dart at me with fiers intent;
ut I them warded all with wary government.

11

"But all in vaine: no fort can be so strong,
le fleshly brest can armed be so sownd,
ut will at last be wonne with battrie long,
r unawares at disavantage fownd.
othing is sure that growes on earthly grownd;
nd who most trustes in arme of fleshly
might,
nd boastes in beauties chaine not to be bownd,
oth soonest fall in disaventrous fight,
nd yeeldes his caytive neck to victours most despight.

12

"Ensample make of him your haplesse
joy,
nd of my selfe now mated,[1] as ye see;
hose prouder vaunt that proud avenging boy
id soone pluck downe, and curbd my lib-ertee.
or on a day, prickt forth with jollitee
f looser life and heat of hardiment, aunging the forest wide on courser free,
he fields, the floods, the heavens, with one consent,
id seeme to laugh on me, and favour mine intent.

13

"Forwearied with my sportes, I did alight rom loftie steed, and downe to sleepe me layd,
he verdant gras my couch did goodly dight,
nd pillow was my helmett fayre displayd;
hiles every sence the humour sweet embayd,[2] nd slombring soft my hart did steale away, le seemed, by my side a royall Mayd er daintie limbes full softly down did lay:
o fayre a creature yet saw never sunny day.

14

"Most goodly glee and lovely blandish-
ment
he to me made, and badd me love her deare;
or dearely sure her love was to me bent,
s, when just time expired, should appeare.
ut whether dreames delude, or true it were,
as never hart so ravisht with delight,
e living man like wordes did ever heare,
As she to me delivered all that night;
And at her parting said, She Queene of Faeries hight.

15

"When I awoke, and found her place de-voyd,
And nought but pressed gras where she had lyen,
I sorrowed all so much as earst I joyd,
And washed all her place with watry
eyen.
From that day forth I lov'd that face divyne;
From that day forth I cast in carefull mynd,
To seek her out with labor and long tyne,[1]
And never vowd to rest till her I fynd:
Nyne monethes I seek in vain, yet ni'll that vow unbynd."

16

Thus as he spake, his visage wexed pale,
And chaunge of hew great passion did bewray;
Yett still he strove to cloke his inward bale,
And hide the smoke that did his fire display,
Till gentle Una thus to him gan say:
"O happy Queene of Faeries! that hast fownd, Mongst many, one that with his prowesse may
Defend thine honour, and thy foes confownd.
True loves are often sown, but seldom grow on grownd."

17

"Thine, O! then," said the gentle Redcrosse knight,
"Next to that Ladies love, shalbe the place,
O fayrest virgin! full of heavenly light,
Whose wondrous faith, exceeding earthly race,
Was firmest fixt in myne extremest case.
And you, my Lord, the Patrone of my life,
Of that great Queene may well gaine worthie
grace,
For onely worthie you through prowes priefe,
Yf living man mote worthie be to be her liefe."[2]

18

So diversly discoursing of their loves,
The golden Sunne his glistring head gan
shew,
And sad remembraunce now the Prince amoves
With fresh desire his voyage to pursew;
Als Una earnd her traveill to renew.

[1] defeated. [2] pervaded.

[1] toil. [2] beloved.

Then those two knights, fast friendship for to bynd,
And love establish each to other trew,
Gave goodly gifts, the signes of gratefull mynd,
And eke, as pledges firme, right hands together joynd.

19

Prince Arthur gave a boxe of Diamond sure,
Embowd with gold and gorgeous ornament,
Wherein were closd few drops of liquor pure,
Of wondrous worth, and vertue excellent,
That any wownd could heale incontinent.
Which to requite, the Redcrosse knight him gave
A booke, wherein his Saveours testament
Was writt with golden letters rich and brave:
A worke of wondrous grace, and hable soules to save.

20

Thus beene they parted; Arthur on his way
To seeke his love, and th' other for to fight
With Unaes foe, that all her realme did pray.[1]
But she, now weighing the decayed plight
And shrunken synewes of her chosen knight,
Would not a while her forward course pursew,
Ne bring him forth in face of dreadfull fight,
Till he recovered had his former hew;
For him to be yet weake and wearie well she knew.

21

So as they traveild, lo! they gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seemed from some feared foe to fly,
Or other griesly thing that him aghast.
Still as he fledd his eye was backward cast,
As if his feare still followed him behynd:
Als flew his steed as he his bandes had brast,
And with his winged heeles did tread the wynd,
As he had beene a fole of Pegasus his kynd.

22

Nigh as he drew, they might perceive his head
To bee unarmd, and curld uncombed heares
Upstaring stiffe, dismaid with uncouth dread:
Nor drop of blood in all his face appeares,
Nor life in limbe; and, to increase his feare,
In fowle reproch of knighthoodes fayre degree,
About his neck an hempen rope he weares,
That with his glistring armes does ill agree
But he of rope or armes has now no memoree.

23

The Redcrosse knight toward him crosse fast,
To weet what mister[1] wight[2] was so dismayd.
There him he findes all sencelesse and aghast
That of him selfe he seemd to be afrayd;
Whom hardly he from flying forward stayd
Till he these wordes to him deliver might:
"Sir knight, aread who hath ye thus arayd,
And eke from whom make ye this hasty flight?
For never knight I saw in such misseeming plight."

24

He answerd nought at all; but adding new Feare to his first amazment, staring wyde
With stony eyes and hartlesse hollow hew,
Astonisht stood, as one that had aspyde
Infernall furies with their chaines untyde.
Him yett againe, and yett againe, bespake
The gentle knight; who nought to him replyde;
But, trembling every joynt, did inly quake,
And foltring tongue, at last, these words seemd forth to shake;

25

"For Gods deare love, Sir knight, doe me not stay;
For loe! he comes, he comes fast after mee."
Eft[3] looking back would faine have runne away;
But he him forst to stay, and tellen free
The secrete cause of his perplexitie:
Yet nathemore by his bold hartie speach
Could his blood frosen hart emboldened bee
But through his boldnes rather feare did reach;
Yett, forst, at last he made through silence suddein breach.

26

"And am I now in safetie sure," (quoth he)
"From him that would have forced me to dye?

1 sort of. 2 person. 3 again.

1 prey on.

nd is the point of death now turnd fro
mee,
hat I may tell this haplesse history?"
Fear nought," (quoth he) "no daunger now is nye."
Then shall I you recount a ruefull cace,"
Said he) "the which with this unlucky eye late beheld; and, had not greater grace le reft from it, had bene partaker of the place.

27

"I lately chaunst (Would I had never chaunst!)
Vith a fayre knight to keepen companee, ir Terwin hight, that well himselfe advaunst
n all affayres, and was both bold and free, ut not so happy as mote happy bee:
le lov'd, as was his lot, a Lady gent,
hat him againe lov'd in the least degree;
or she was proud, and of too high intent, nd joyd to see her lover languish and lament:

28

"From whom retourning sad and comfortlesse,
s on the way together we did fare,
e met that villen, (God from him me blesse!) [1]
hat cursed wight, from whom I scapt whyleare,[2]
man of hell that calls himselfe Despayre:
ho first us greets, and after fayre areedes [3]
f tydinges straunge, and of adventures rare:
o creeping close, as Snake in hidden weedes, nquireth of our states, and of our knightly deedes.

29

"Which when he knew, and felt our feeble harts
mbost [4] with bale, and bitter byting griefe, hich love had launched with his deadly
darts,
ith wounding words, and termes of foule
repriefe,
e pluckt from us all hope of dew reliefe,
hat earst us held in love of lingring life;
hen hopelesse, hartlesse, gan the cunning thiefe erswade us dye, to stint all further strife:
o me he lent this rope, to him a rusty knife.

1 protect. 2 some time before.
3 proclaims, tells. 4 worn out.

30

"With which sad instrument of hasty
death,
That wofull lover, loathing lenger light,
A wyde way made to let forth living breath:
But I, more fearefull or more lucky
wight,
Dismayd with that deformed dismall sight,
Fledd fast away, halfe dead with dying
feare;
Ne yet assur'd of life by you, Sir knight,
Whose like infirmity like chaunce may beare;
But God you never let his charmed speaches
heare!"

31

"How may a man," (said he) "with idle
speach
Be wonne to spoyle the Castle of his health?"
"I wote," (quoth he) "whom tryall late did teach,
That like would not for all this worldes wealth.
His subtile tong like dropping honny
mealt'h
Into the heart, and searcheth every vaine;
That, ere one be aware, by secret stealth
His powre is reft, and weaknes doth remaine.
O! never, Sir, desire to try his guilefull traine."

32

"Certes," (sayd he) "hence [1] shall I never rest,
Till I that treachours art have heard and tryde:
And you, Sir knight, whose name mote I request,
Of grace do me unto his cabin guyde."
"I, that hight Trevisan," (quoth he) "will ryde
Against my liking backe to doe you grace:
But nor for gold nor glee will I abyde
By you, when ye arrive in that same place;
For lever [2] had I die then see his deadly face."

33

Ere long they come where that same wicked
wight
His dwelling has, low in an hollow cave,
For underneath a craggy cliff ypight,
Darke, dolefull, dreary, like a greedy grave,
That still for carrion carcases doth crave:
On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly Owle,
Shrieking his balefull note, which ever drave

1 henceforth. 2 sooner.

Far from that haunt all other chearefull fowle;
And all about it wandring ghostes did wayle and howle.

34

And all about old stockes and stubs of trees,
Whereon nor fruit nor leafe was ever seene,
Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees;
On which had many wretches hanged beene,
Whose carcases were scattred on the greene,
And throwne about the cliffs. Arrived there,
That bare-head knight, for dread and dolefull teene,[1]
Would faine have fled, ne durst approchen neare;
But th' other forst him staye, and comforted in feare.

35

That darkesome cave they enter, where they find
That cursed man, low sitting on the ground,
Musing full sadly in his sullein mind:
His griesie lockes, long growen and unbound,
Disordred hong about his shoulders round,
And hid his face, through which his hollow eyne
Lookt deadly dull, and stared as astound;
His raw-bone cheekes, through penurie and pine,
Were shronke into his jawes, as he did never dyne.

36

His garment, nought but many ragged clouts,
With thornes together pind and patched was,
The which his naked sides he wrapt abouts;
And him beside there lay upon the gras
A dreary corse, whose life away did pas,
All wallowd in his own yet luke-warme blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh, alas!
In which a rusty knife fast fixed stood,
And made an open passage for the gushing flood.

37

Which piteous spectacle, approving trew
The wofull tale that Trevisan had told,
Whenas the gentle Redcrosse knight did vew,
With firie zeale he burnt in courage bold
Him to avenge before his blood were cold,
And to the villein sayd; "Thou damned wight,
The authour of this fact we here behold,
What justice can but judge against thee right,
With thine owne blood to price his blood, here shed in sight?"

38

"What franticke fit," (quoth he) "hath thus distraught
Thee, foolish man, so rash a doome to give?
What justice ever other judgement taught,
But he should dye who merites not to live?
None els to death this man despayring drive
But his owne guiltie mind, deserving death.
Is then unjust to each his dew to give?
Or let him dye, that loatheth living breath,
Or let him die at ease, that liveth here uneath?[1]

39

"Who travailes by the wearie wandring way,
To come unto his wished home in haste,
And meetes a flood that doth his passage stay,
Is not great grace to helpe him over past,
Or free his feet that in the myre sticke fast?
Most envious man, that grieves at neighbours good;
And fond, that joyest in the woe thou hast!
Why wilt not let him passe, that long hath stood
Upon the bancke, yet wilt thy selfe not pas the flood?

40

"He there does now enjoy eternall rest
And happy ease, which thou doest want and crave,
And further from it daily wanderest:
What if some little payne the passage have,
That makes frayle flesh to feare the bitter wave,
Is not short payne well borne, that bringes long ease,
And layes the soule to sleepe in quiet grave?
Sleepe after toyle, port after stormie seas,
Ease after warre, death after life, does greatly please."

41

The knight much wondred at his suddeine wit,
And sayd; "The terme of life is limited,

1 grief.

1 with difficulty.

Ne may a man prolong, nor shorten, it:
The souldier may not move from watchfull sted,
Nor leave his stand untill his Captaine bed."
Who life did limit by almightie doome," Quoth he) "knowes best the termes established;
And he, that points the Centonell his roome,
Doth license him depart at sound of morning droome."

42

"Is not his deed, what ever thing is donne
In heaven and earth? Did not he all create
To die againe? All ends that was begonne:
Their times in his eternall booke of fate
Are written sure, and have their certein date.
Who then can strive with strong necessitie,
That holds the world in his still chaunging state,
Or shunne the death ordaynd by destinie?
When houre of death is come, let none aske whence, nor why.

43

"The lenger life, I wote, the greater sin;
The greater sin, the greater punishment:
All those great battels, which thou boasts to win
Through strife, and blood-shed, and avengement,
Now prayse, hereafter deare thou shalt repent;
For life must life, and blood must blood, repay.
Is not enough thy evill life forespent?
For he that once hath missed the right way,
The further he doth goe, the further he doth stray.

44

"Then doe no further goe, no further stray,
But here ly downe, and to thy rest betake,
Th' ill to prevent, that life ensewen may;
For what hath life that may it loved make,
And gives not rather cause it to forsake?
Feare, sicknesse, age, losse, labour, sorrow, strife,
Payne, hunger, cold that makes the hart to quake,
And ever fickle fortune rageth rife;
All which, and thousands mo, do make a loathsome life.

45

"Thou, wretched man, of death hast greatest need,
If in true ballaunce thou wilt weigh thy state;
For never knight, that dared warlike deed,
More luckless dissaventures did amate: [1]
Witnes the dungeon deepe, wherein of late
Thy life shutt up for death so oft did call;
And though good lucke prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishaps forestall,
Into the which hereafter thou maist happen fall.

46

"Why then doest thou, O man of sin! desire
To draw thy dayes forth to their last degree?
Is not the measure of thy sinfull hire
High heaped up with huge iniquitee,
Against the day of wrath to burden thee?
Is not enough, that to this Lady mild
Thou falsed hast thy faith with perjuree,
And sold thy selfe to serve Duessa vild,
With whom in al abuse thou hast thy selfe defild?

47

"Is not he just, that all this doth behold
From highest heven, and beares an equall eie?
Shall he thy sins up in his knowledge fold,
And guilty be of thine impietie?
Is not his lawe, Let every sinner die;
Die shall all flesh? What then must needs be donne
Is it not better to doe willinglie,
Then linger till the glas be all out ronne?
Death is the end of woes: die soone, O faeries sonne!"

48

The knight was much enmoved with his speach,
That as a swords poynt through his hart did perse,
And in his conscience made a secrete breach,
Well knowing trew all that he did reherse,
And to his fresh remembraunce did reverse,
The ugly vew of his deformed crimes;
That all his manly powres it did disperse,
As he were charmed with inchaunted rimes;
That oftentimes he quakt, and fainted oftentimes.

49

In which amazement when the Miscreaunt
Perceived him to waver, weake and fraile,

[1] dismay.

Whiles trembling horror did his conscience daunt,
And hellish anguish did his soule assaile;
To drive him to despaire, and quite to quaile,
Hee shewd him, painted in a table plaine,
The damned ghosts that doe in torments waile,
And thousand feends that doe them endlesse paine
With fire and brimstone, which for ever shall remaine.

50

The sight whereof so throughly him dismaid,
That nought but death before his eies he saw,
And ever burning wrath before him laid,
By righteous sentence of th' Almighties law.
Then gan the villein him to overcraw,[1]
And brought unto him swords, ropes, poison, fire,
And all that might him to perdition draw;
And bad him choose what death he would desire;
For death was dew to him that had provokt Gods ire.

51

But, whenas none of them he saw him take,
He to him raught a dagger sharpe and keene,
And gave it him in hand: his hand did quake
And tremble like a leafe of Aspin greene,
And troubled blood through his pale face was seene
To come and goe with tidings from the heart,
As it a ronning messenger had beene.
At last, resolv'd to work his finall smart,
He lifted up his hand, that backe againe did start.

52

Which whenas Una saw, through every vaine
The crudled cold ran to her well of life,
As in a swowne: but, soone reliv'd againe,
Out of his hand she snatcht the cursed knife,
And threw it to the ground, enraged rife,
And to him said; "Fie, fie, faint hearted Knight!
What meanest thou by this reprochfull strife?
Is this the battaile which thou vauntst to fight
With that fire-mouthed Dragon, horrible and bright?

1 exult over.

53

"Come; come away, fraile, feeble, fleshly wight,
Ne let vaine words bewitch thy manly hart,
Ne divelish thoughts dismay thy constant spright:
In heavenly mercies hast thou not a part?
Why shouldst thou then despeire, that chosen art?
Where justice growes, there grows eke greater grace,
The which doth quench the brond of hellish smart,
And that accurst hand-writing doth deface.
Arise, sir Knight; arise, and leave this cursed place."

54

So up he rose, and thence amounted streight.
Which when the carle beheld, and saw his guest
Would safe depart, for all his subtile sleight,
He chose an halter from among the rest,
And with it hong him selfe, unbid,[1] unblest.
But death he could not worke himselfe thereby;
For thousand times he so him selfe had drest,[2]
Yet nathelesse it could not doe him die,
Till he should die his last, that is, eternally.

CANTO X

Her faithfull knight faire Una brings
To house of Holinesse;
Where he is taught repentaunce, and
The way to hevenly blesse.

1

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might
And vaine assuraunce of mortality,
Which, all so soone as it doth come to fight Against spirituall foes, yields by and by,
Or from the fielde most cowardly doth fly!
Ne let the man ascribe it to his skill,
That thorough grace hath gained victory:
If any strength we have, it is to ill,
But all the good is Gods, both power and eke will.

2

By that which lately hapned Una saw
That this her knight was feeble, and too faint;
And all his sinewes woxen weake and raw,

1 without prayer. 2 prepared.

Through long enprisonment, and hard constraint,
Which he endured in his late restraint,
That yet he was unfitt for bloody fight.
Therefore, to cherish him with diets daint,
She cast to bring him where he chearen might,
Till he recovered had his late decayed plight.

3

There was an auncient house nor far away,
Renowmd throughout the world for sacred lore
And pure unspotted life: so well, they say,
It governd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisedome of a matrone grave and hore;
Whose onely joy was to relieve the needes
Of wretched soules, and helpe the helpelesse pore:
All night she spent in bidding of her bedes,
And all the day in doing good and godly deedes.

4

Dame Cælia [1] men did her call, as thought
From heaven to come, or thither to arise;
The mother of three daughters, well upbrought
In goodly thewes, and godly exercise:
The eldest two, most sober, chast, and wise,
Fidelia [2] and Speranza,[3] virgins were;
Though spousd, yet wanting wedlocks solemnize;
But faire Charissa [4] to a lovely fere [5]
Was lincked, and by him had many pledges dere.

5

Arrived there, the dore they find fast lockt,
For it was warely watched night and day,
For feare of many foes; but, when they knockt,
The Porter opened unto them streight way.
He was an aged syre, all hory gray,
With lookes full lowly cast, and gate full slow,
Vont on a staffe his feeble steps to stay,
Hight Humiltá. They passe in, stouping low;
For streight and narrow was the way which he did show.

6

Each goodly thing is hardest to begin;
But, entred in, a spatious court they see,
Both plaine and pleasaunt to be walked in;
Where them does meete a francklin [1] faire and free,
And entertaines with comely courteous glee;
His name was Zele, that him right well became:
For in his speaches and behaveour hee
Did labour lively to expresse the same,
And gladly did them guide, till to the Hall they came.

7

There fayrely them receives a gentle Squyre,
Of myld demeanure and rare courtesee,
Right cleanly clad in comely sad attyre;
In word and deede that shewd great modestee,
And knew his good [2] to all of each degree,
Hight Reverence. He them with speaches meet
Does faire entreat; no courting nicetee,
But simple, trew, and eke unfained sweet,
As might become a Squyre so great persons to greet.

8

And afterwardes them to his Dame he leades,
That aged Dame, the Lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beades;
Which doen, she up arose with seemely grace,
And toward them full matronely did pace.
Where, when that fairest Una she beheld,
Whom well she knew to spring from hevenly race,
Her heart with joy unwonted inly sweld,
As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker eld: [3]

9

And, her embracing, said; "O happy earth,
Whereon thy innocent feet doe ever tread!
Most vertuous virgin, borne of hevenly berth,
That, to redeeme thy woefull parents head
From tyrans rage and ever-dying dread,
Hast wandred through the world now long a day,
Yett ceassest not thy weary soles to lead;
What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?
Or doen thy feeble feet unweeting hither stray?

10

"Straunge thing it is an errant knight to see
Here in this place; or any other wight,

1 Heavenly. 2 Faith. 3 Hope. 4 Charity. 5 companion.

1 a man of property. 2 "knew how to act." 3 age.

That hither turnes his steps. So few there bee,
That chose the narrow path, or seeke the right:
All keepe the broad high way, and take delight
With many rather for to goe astray,
And be partakers of their evill plight,
Then with a few to walke the rightest way.
O foolish men! why hast ye to your own decay?"

11

"Thy selfe to see, and tyred limbes to rest,
O matrone sage," (quoth she) "I hither came;
And this good knight his way with me addrest,
Ledd with thy prayses, and broad-blazed fame,
That up to heven is blowne." The auncient Dame
Him goodly greeted in her modest guyse,
And enterteynd them both, as best became,
With all the court'sies that she could devyse,
Ne wanted ought to shew her bounteous or wise.

12

Thus as they gan of sondrie thinges devise,[1]
Loe! two most goodly virgins came in place,
Ylinked arme in arme in lovely wise:
With countenance demure, and modest grace,
They numbred even steps and equall pace;
Of which the eldest, that Fidelia hight,
Like sunny beames threw from her Christall face
That could have dazd the rash beholders sight,
And round about her head did shine like heavens light.

13

She was araied all in lilly white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fild up to the hight,
In which a Serpent did himselfe enfold,
That horrour made to all that did behold;
But she no whitt did chaunge her constant mood:
And in her other hand she fast did hold
A booke, that was both signd and seald with blood;
Wherein darke things were writt, hard to be understood.

1 talk.

14

Her younger sister, that Speranza hight,
Was clad in blew, that her beseemed well:
Not all so chearefull seemed she of sight,
As was her sister; whether dread did dwell
Or anguish in her hart, is hard to tell.
Upon her arme a silver anchor lay,
Whereon she leaned ever, as befell;
And ever up to heven, as she did pray,
Her stedfast eyes were bent, ne swarved other way.

15

They, seeing Una, towardes her gan wend,
Who them encounters with like courtesee;
Many kind speeches they betweene them spend,
And greatly joy each other for to see:
Then to the knight with shamefast modestie
They turne themselves, at Unaes meeke request,
And him salute with well beseeming glee;
Who faire them quites, as him beseemed best,
And goodly gan discourse of many a noble gest.[1]

16

Then Una thus; "But she, your sister deare,
The deare Charissa, where is she become?
Or wants she health, or busie is elswhere?"
"Ah! no," said they, "but forth she may not come;
For she of late is lightned of her wombe,
And hath encreast the world with one sonne more,
That her to see should be but troublesome."
"Indeed," (quoth she) "that should her trouble sore,
But thankt be God, and her encrease so evermore!"

17

Then said the aged Cælia, "Deare dame,
And you, good Sir, I wote that of youre toyle
And labors long, through which ye hither came,
Ye both forwearied be: therefore, a whyle
I read[2] you rest, and to your bowres recoyle."[3]
Then called she a Groome,[4] that forth him ledd
Into a goodly lodge, and gan despoile
Of puissant armes, and laid in easie bedd
His name was meeke Obedience, rightfully aredd.[5]

1 action. 2 advise. 3 retire.
4 servant 5 proclaimed.

18

Now when their wearie limbes with kindly rest,
And bodies were refresht with dew repast,
Fayre Una gan Fidelia fayre request,
To have her knight into her schoolehous plaste,
That of her heavenly learning he might taste,
And heare the wisedom of her wordes divine.
She graunted; and that knight so much agraste,[1]
That she him taught celestiall discipline,
And opened his dull eyes, that light mote in them shine.

19

And that her sacred Booke, with blood ywritt,
That none could reade except she did them teach,
She unto him disclosed every whitt;
And heavenly documents thereout did preach,
That weaker witt of man could never reach;
Of God; of grace; of justice; of free-will;
That wonder was to heare her goodly speach:
For she was hable with her wordes to kill,
And rayse againe to life the hart that she did thrill.[2]

20

And, when she list poure out her larger spright,
She would commaund the hasty Sunne to stay;
Or backward turne his course from hevens hight:
Sometimes great hostes of men she could dismay;
Dry-shod to passe she parts the flouds in tway;
And eke huge mountaines from their native seat
She would commaund themselves to beare away,
And throw in raging sea with roaring threat.
Almightie God her gave such powre and puissaunce great.

21

The faithfull knight now grew in little space,
By hearing her, and by her sisters lore,
To such perfection of all hevenly grace,
That wretched world he gan for to abhore,
And mortall life gan loath as thing forlore,
Greevd with remembrance of his wicked wayes,
And prickt with anguish of his sinnes so sore,
That he desirde to end his wretched dayes:
So much the dart of sinfull guilt the soule dismayes.

1 favored. 2 pierce.

22

But wise Speranza gave him comfort sweet,
And taught him how to take assured hold
Upon her silver anchor, as was meet;
Els had his sinnes, so great and manifold,
Made him forget all that Fidelia told.
In this distressed doubtfull agony,
When him his dearest Una did behold
Disdeining life, desiring leave to dye,
She found her selfe assayld with great perplexity;

23

And came to Cælia to declare her smart;
Who, well acquainted with that commune plight,
Which sinfull horror workes in wounded hart,
Her wisely comforted all that she might,
With goodly counsell and advisement right;
And streightway sent with carefull diligence,
To fetch a Leach[1] the which had great insight
In that disease of grieved conscience,
And well could cure the same: His name was Patience.

24

Who, comming to that sowle-diseased knight,
Could hardly him intreat to tell his grief:
Which knowne, and all that noyd his heavie spright
Well searcht, eftsoones he gan apply relief
Of salves and med'cines, which had passing prief;[2]
And thereto added wordes of wondrous might
By which to ease he him recured brief,
And much aswag'd the passion[3] of his plight,
That he his paine endur'd, as seeming now more light.

25

But yet the cause and root of all his ill,
Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd nor heald, behind remained still,
And festring sore did ranckle yett within,
Close creeping twixt the marow and the skin:
Which to extirpe, he laid him privily
Downe in a darksome lowly place far in,

1 doctor. 2 surpassing power.
3 pain.

Whereas he meant his corrosives to apply,
And with streight diet tame his stubborne malady.

26

In ashes and sackcloth he did array
His daintie corse, proud humors to abate;
And dieted with fasting every day,
The swelling of his woundes to mitigate;
And made him pray both earely and eke late:
And ever, as superfluous flesh did rott,
Amendment readie still at hand did wayt,
To pluck it out with pincers fyrie whott,
That soone in him was lefte no one corrupted jott.[1]

27

And bitter Penaunce, with an yron whip,
Was wont him once to disple every day:
And sharp Remorse his hart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play:
And sad Repentance used to embay
His blamefull body in salt water sore,
The filthy blottes of sin to wash away.
So in short space they did to health restore
The man that would not live, but erst lay at deathes dore.

28

In which his torment often was so great,
That like a Lyon he would cry and rore,
And rend his flesh, and his owne synewes eat.
His owne deare Una, hearing evermore
His ruefull shriekes and gronings, often tore
Her guiltlesse garments and her golden heare,
For pitty of his payne and anguish sore:
Yet all with patience wisely she did beare,
For well she wist his cryme could els be never cleare.

29

Whom, thus recover'd by wise Patience
And trew Repentaunce, they to Una brought;
Who, joyous of his cured conscience,
Him dearely kist, and fayrely eke besought
Himselfe to chearish, and consuming thought
To put away out of his carefull brest.
By this Charissa, late in child-bed brought,
Was woxen strong, and left her fruitfull nest:
To her fayre Una brought this unacquainted guest.

1 smallest fragment.

30

She was a woman in her freshest age,
Of wondrous beauty, and of bounty[1] rare,
With goodly grace and comely personage,
That was on earth not easie to compare;
Full of great love, but Cupids wanton snare
As hell she hated; chaste in worke and will:
Her necke and brests were ever open bare,
That ay thereof her babes might sucke their fill;
The rest was all in yellow robes arayed still.

31

A multitude of babes about her hong,
Playing their sportes, that joyd her to behold;
Whom still she fed whiles they were weake and young
But thrust them forth still as they wexed old:
And on her head she wore a tyre of gold,
Adornd with gemmes and owches wondrous fayre,
Whose passing price uneath was to be told:
And by her syde there sate a gentle payre,
Of turtle doves, she sitting in an yvory chayre.

32

The knight and Una entring fayre her greet,
And bid her joy of that her happy brood;
Who them requites with court'sies seeming meet,
And entertaynes with friendly chearefull mood.
Then Una her besought, to be so good
As in her vertuous rules to schoole her knight,
Now after all his torment well withstood
In that sad house of Penaunce, where his spright
Had past the paines of hell and long-enduring night.

33

She was right joyous of her just request;
And taking by the hand that Faeries sonne,
Gan him instruct in everie good behest,
Of love, and righteousnes, and well to donne;
And wrath and hatred warely to shonne,
That drew on men Gods hatred and his wrath,
And many soules in dolours had fordonne:
In which when him she well instructed hath,
From whence to heaven she teacheth him the ready path.

1 goodness.

34

Wherein his weaker wandring steps to guyde,
An auncient matrone she to her does call,
Whose sober lookes her wisedome well descryde:[1]
Her name was Mercy; well knowne over-all
To be both gratious and eke liberall:
To whom the carefull charge of him she gave,
To leade aright, that he should never fall
In all his waies through this wide worldes wave;
That Mercy in the end his righteous soule might save.

35

The godly Matrone by the hand him beares
Forth from her presence, by a narrow way,
Scattred with bushy thornes and ragged breares,
Which still before him she remov'd away,
That nothing might his ready passage stay:
And ever, when his feet encombred were,
Or gan to shrinke, or from the right to stray,
She held him fast, and firmely did upbeare,
As carefull Nourse her child from falling oft does reare.

36

Eftsoones unto an holy Hospitall,
That was foreby the way, she did him bring;
In which seven Bead-men,[2] that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heavens King,
Did spend their daies in doing godly thing.
Their gates to all were open evermore,
That by the wearie way were traveiling;
And one sate wayting ever them before,
To call in commers-by that needy were and pore.

37

The first of them, that eldest was and best,
Of all the house had charge and governement,
As Guardian and Steward of the rest.
His office was to give entertainement
And lodging unto all that came and went;
Not unto such as could him feast againe,
And double quite for that he on them spent;
But such as want of harbour did constraine:
Those for Gods sake his dewty was to entertaine.

38

The second was an Almner[3] of the place;
His office was the hungry for to feed,
And thirsty give to drinke; a worke of grace,
He feard not once himselfe to be in need,
Ne car'd to hoord for those whom he did breede;
The grace of God he layd up still in store,
Which as a stocke he left unto his seede.
He had enough; what need him care for more?
And had he lesse, yet some he would give to the pore.

39

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tyres, nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and winges of vanity,
But clothes meet to keepe keene cold away,
And naked nature seemely to aray;
With which bare wretched wights he dayly clad,
The images of God in earthly clay;
And, if that no spare clothes to give he had,
His owne cote he would cut, and it distribute glad.

40

The fourth appointed by his office was
Poore prisoners to relieve with gratious ayd,
And captives to redeeme with price of bras
From Turkes and Sarazins, which them had stayd:
And though they faulty were, yet well he wayd,
That God to us forgiveth every howre
Much more then that why they in bands were layd;
And he, that harrowd hell[1] with heavie stowre,
The faulty soules from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.

41

The fift had charge sick persons to attend,
And comfort those in point of death which lay;
For them most needeth comfort in the end,
When sin, and hell, and death, doe most dismay
The feeble soule departing hence away.
All is but lost, that living we bestow,
If not well ended at our dying day.
O man! have mind of that last bitter throw:
For as the tree does fall, so lyes it ever low.

1 revealed. 2 men who pray for others.
3 Almoner, a distributor of charity.

1 The reference is to the "harrowing of hell" by Christ when, after his death, he descended to hell and redeemed worthy souls.

42

The sixt had charge of them now being dead,
In seemely sort their corses to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowres their brydall bed,
That to their heavenly spouse both sweet and brave
They might appeare, when he their soules shall save.
The wondrous workmanship of Gods owne mould,
Whose face he made all beastes to feare, and gave
All in his hand, even dead we honour should.
Ah, dearest God, me graunt, I dead be not defould!

43

The seventh, now after death and buriall done,
Had charge the tender Orphans of the dead
And wydowes ayd, least they should be undone:
In face of judgement he their right would plead,
Ne ought the powre of mighty men did dread
In their defence; nor would for gold or fee
Be wonne their rightfull causes downe to tread;
And, when they stood in most necessitee,
He did supply their want, and gave them ever free.

44

There when the Elfin knight arrived was,
The first and chiefest of the seven, whose care
Was guests to welcome, towardes him did pas;
Where seeing Mercie, that his steps upbare
And alwaies led, to her with reverence rare
He humbly louted [1] in meeke lowlinesse,
And seemely welcome for her did prepare:
For of their order she was Patronesse,
Albe Charissa were their chiefest founderesse.

45

There she awhile him stayes, himselfe to rest,
That to the rest more hable he might bee;
During which time, in every good behest,
And godly worke of Almes and charitee,
Shee him instructed with great industree.
Shortly therein so perfect he became,
That, from the first unto the last degree,
His mortall life he learned had to frame
In holy righteousnesse, without rebuke or blame.

46

Thence forward by that painfull way they pas
Forth to an hill that was both steepe and hy
On top whereof a sacred chappell was,
And eke a litle Hermitage thereby,
Wherein an aged holy man did lie,
That day and night said his devotion,
Ne other worldly busines did apply:
His name was hevenly Contemplation;
Of God and goodnes was his meditation.

47

Great grace that old man to him given had;
For God he often saw from heavens hight:
All [1] were his earthly eien both blunt and bad,
And through great age had lost their kindly sight,
Yet wondrous quick and persaunt [2] was his spright,
As Eagles eie that can behold the Sunne.
That hill they scale with all their powre and might,
That his fraile thighes, nigh weary and fordonne,
Gan faile; but by her helpe the top at last he wonne.

48

There they doe finde that godly aged Sire,
With snowy lockes adowne his shoulders shed;
As hoary frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy braunches of an Oke halfe ded.
Each bone might through his body well be red
And every sinew seene, through his long fast;
For nought he car'd his carcas long unfed;
His mind was full of spiritual repast,
And pyn'd his flesh to keepe his body low and chast.

49

Who, when these two approching he aspide,
At their first presence grew agrieved sore,
That forst him lay his hevenly thoughts aside;
And had he not that Dame respected more,
Whom highly he did reverence and adore,
He would not once have moved for the knight.
They him saluted, standing far afore,

1 bowed.

1 although. 2 piercing.

Who, well them greeting, humbly did requight,
And asked to what end they clomb that tedious hight?

50

"What end," (quoth she) "should cause us take such paine,
But that same end, which every living wight should make his marke high heaven to attaine?
Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glistreth bright
With burning starres and everliving fire,
Whereof the keies are to thy hand behight [1]
By wise Fidelia? Shee doth thee require,
To shew it to this knight, according his desire."

51

"Thrise happy man," said then the father grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shewes the way his sinfull soule to save!
Who better can the way to heaven aread
Then thou thyselfe, that was both borne and bred
In hevenly throne, where thousand Angels shine?
Thou doest the praiers of the righteous sead
Present before the majesty divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemency incline.

52

"Yet, since thou bidst, thy pleasure shalbe donne.
Then come, thou man of earth, and see the way,
That never yet was seene of Faeries sonne;
That never leads the traveiler astray,
But after labors long and sad delay,
Brings them to joyous rest and endlesse blis.
But first thou must a season fast and pray,
Till from her bands the spright assoiled [2] is,
And have her strength recur'd from fraile infirmitis."

53

That done, he leads him to the highest Mount,
Such one as that same mighty man [3] of God,
That blood-red billowes, like a walled front,
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dry-foot through them yod,[1]
Dwelt forty daies upon; where, writt in stone
With bloody letters by the hand of God,
The bitter doome of death and balefull mone
He did receive, whiles flashing fire about him shone:

54

Or like that sacred hill,[2] whose head full hie,
Adornd with fruitfull Olives all arownd,
Is, as it were for endlesse memory
Of that deare Lord who oft thereon was fownd,
For ever with a flowring girlond crownd:
Or like that pleasaunt Mount,[3] that is for ay
Through famous Poets verse each where renownd,
On which the thrise three learned Ladies [4] play
Their hevenly notes, and make full many a lovely lay.

55

From thence, far off he unto him did shew
A little path that was both steepe and long,
Which to a goodly Citty led his vew,
Whose wals and towres were builded high and strong
Of perle and precious stone, that earthly tong
Cannot describe, nor wit of man can tell;
Too high a ditty [5] for my simple song.
The Citty of the greate king hight it well,
Wherein eternall peace and happinesse doth dwell.

56

As he thereon stood gazing, he might see
The blessed Angels to and fro descend
From highest heven in gladsome companee,
And with great joy into that Citty wend,
As commonly as frend does with his frend.
Whereat he wondred much, and gan enquere,
What stately building durst so high extend
Her lofty towres unto the starry sphere,
And what unknowen nation there empeopled were?

57

"Faire Knight," (quoth he) "Hierusalem that is,
The new Hierusalem, that God has built
For those to dwell in that are chosen his,
His chosen people, purg'd from sinful guilt

1 entrusted. 2 released. 3 Moses.
1 went. 2 The Mount of Olives.
3 Parnassus. 4 The Muses. 5 subject.

With pretious blood, which cruelly was spilt
On cursed tree, of that unspotted lam,
That for the sinnes of al the world was kilt:
Now are they Saints all in that Citty sam,[1]
More dear unto their God then younglings to their dam."

58

"Till now," said then the knight, "I weened well,
That great Cleopolis, where I have beene,
In which that fairest Faery Queene doth dwell,
The fairest citty was that might be seene;
And that bright towre, all built of christall clene,
Panthea,[2] seemd the brightest thing that was;
But now by proofe all otherwise I weene,
For this great Citty that does far surpas,
And this bright Angels towre quite dims that towre of glas."

59

"Most trew," then said the holy aged man;
"Yet is Cleopolis, for earthly frame,
The fairest peece that eie beholden can;
And well beseemes all knights of noble name,
That covett in th' immortall booke of fame
To be eternized, that same to haunt,
And doen their service to that soveraigne Dame,
That glory does to them for guerdon graunt:
For she is hevenly borne, and heaven may justly vaunt.

60

"And thou, faire ymp, sprong out from English race,
How ever now accompted Elfins sonne,
Well worthy doest thy service for her grace,
To aide a virgin desolate, foredonne;
But when thou famous victory hast wonne,
And high emongst all knights hast hong thy shield,
Thenceforth the suitt[3] of earthly conquest shonne,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field:
For blood can nought but sin, and wars but sorrows yield.

61

"Then seek this path that I to thee presage,[4]
Which after all to heaven shall thee send;
Then peaceably thy painefull pilgrimage
To yonder same Hierusalem doe bend,
Where is for thee ordaind a blessed end:
For thou, emongst those Saints whom thou doest see,
Shalt be a Saint, and thine owne nations frend
And Patrone: thou Saint George shalt called bee, Saint George of mery England, the signe of victoree."

62

"Unworthy wretch," (quoth he) "of so great grace,
How dare I thinke such glory to attaine?"
"These, that have it attaynd, were in like cace,
As wretched men, and lived in like paine."
"But deeds of armes must I at last be faine
And Ladies love to leave, so dearely bought?"
"What need of armes, where peace doth ay remaine," (Said he) "and bitter battailes all are fought?
As for loose loves, they'are vaine, and vanish into nought."

63

"O! let me not," (quoth he) "then turne againe
Backe to the world, whose joyes so fruitlesse are;
But let me heare for aie in peace remaine,
Or steightway on that last long voiage fare,
That nothing may my present hope empare."
"That may not be," (said he) "ne maist thou yitt
Forgoe that royal maides bequeathed care,
Who did her cause into thy hand committ,
Till from her cursed foe thou have her freely quitt."

64

"Then shall I soone," (quoth he) "so God me grace,
Abett that virgins cause disconsolate,
And shortly back returne unto this place,
To walke this way in Pilgrims poore estate.
But now aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou behight me borne of English blood, Whom all a Faeries sonne doen nominate?"
"That word shall I," (said he) "avouchen good,
Sith to thee is unknowne the cradle of thy brood.

1 together.
2 What building in London this refers to is hard to say.
3 pursuit, 4 indicate.

65

"For, well I wote, thou springst from ancient race
Of Saxon kinges, that have with mightie hand,
And many bloody battailes fought in face,
High reard their royall throne in Britans land,
And vanquisht them, unable to withstand:
From thence a Faery thee unweeting reft,
There as thou slepst in tender swadling band,
And her base Elfin brood there for thee left:
Such, men do Chaungelings call, so chaung'd by Faeries theft.

66

"Thence she thee brought into this Faery lond,
And in an heaped furrow did thee hyde;
Where thee a Ploughman all unweeting fond,
As he his toylesome teme that way did guyde,
And brought thee up in ploughmans state to byde,
Whereof Georgos[1] he thee gave to name;
Till prickt with courage, and thy forces pryde,
To Faery court thou cam'st to seek for fame,
And prove thy puissant armes, as seemes thee best became."

67

"O holy Sire!" (quoth he) "how shall I quight
The many favours I with thee have fownd,
That hast my name and nation redd aright,
And taught the way that does to heaven bownd!"
This saide, adowne he looked to the grownd
To have returnd; but dazed were his eyne
Through passing brightnes, which did quite confound
His feeble sence, and too exceeding shyne.
So darke are earthly thinges compard to things divine.

68

At last, whenas himselfe he gan to fynd,
To Una back he cast him to retyre,
Who him awaited still with pensive mynd.
Great thankes, and goodly meed, to that good syre
He thens departing gave for his paynes hyre
So came to Una, who him joyd to see;
And, after litle rest, gan him desyre
Of her adventure myndfull for to bee.
So leave they take of Cælia and her daughters three.

[1] The Greek word for farmer.

CANTO XI

The knight with that old Dragon fights
Two days incessantly:
The third him overthrowes, and gayns
Most glorious victory.

1

High time now gan it wex for Una fayre
To thinke of those her captive Parents deare,
And their forwasted kingdom to repayre:
Whereto whenas they now approched neare,
With hartie wordes her knight she gan to cheare,
And in her modest maner thus bespake:
"Deare knight, as deare as ever knight was deare,
That all these sorrowes suffer for my sake,
High heven behold the tedious toyle ye for me take!

2

"Now are we come unto my native soyle,
And to the place where all our perilles dwell;
Here hauntes that feend, and does his dayly spoyle;
Therefore, henceforth, bee at your keeping well,
And ever ready for your foeman fell:
The sparke of noble corage now awake,
And strive your excellent selfe to excell:
That shall ye evermore renowmed make Above all knights on earth, that batteill undertake."

3

And pointing forth, "Lo! yonder is," (said she)
"The brasen towre, in which my parents deare
For dread of that huge feend emprisond be;
Whom I from far see on the walles appeare,
Whose sight my feeble soule doth greatly cheare:
And on the top of all I do espye
The watchman wayting tydings glad to heare;
That, (O my Parents!) might I happily
Unto you bring, to ease you of your misery!"

4

With that they heard a roaring hideous sownd,
That all the ayre with terror filled wyde,
And seemd uneath to shake the stedfast ground.
Eftsoones that dreadful Dragon they espyde,
Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side
Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill:
But, all so soone as he from far descryde

Those glistring armes that heven with light did fill,
He rousd himselfe full blyth, and hastned them untill.

5

Then badd the knight his Lady yede[1] aloof,
And to an hill herselfe withdraw asyde;
From whence she might behold that bat-
tailes proof,
And eke be safe from daunger far descryde.
She him obayd, and turnd a little wyde.—
Now, O thou sacred Muse![2] most learned
Dame,
Fayre ympe of Phœbus and his aged bryde,[3]
The Nourse of time and everlasting fame,
That warlike handes ennoblest with im-mortall name;

6

O! gently come into my feeble brest;
Come gently, but not with that mightie rage,
Wherewith the martiall troupes thou doest infest,
And hartes of great Heroës doest enrage,
That nought their kindled corage may aswage:
Soone as thy dreadfull trompe begins to sownd,
The God of warre[4] with his fiers equipage
Thou doest awake, sleepe never he so sownd,
And scared nations doest with horror sterne astownd.

7

Fayre Goddesse, lay that furious fitt[5]
asyde,
Till I of warres and bloody Mars doe sing,
And Bryton fieldes with Sarazin blood bedyde, Twixt that great faery Queene and Paynim king,
That with their horror heven and earth did ring;
A worke of labour long, and endlesse
prayse:
But now a while lett downe that haughtie string,
And to my tunes thy second tenor rayse,
That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.[6]

8

By this, the dreadful Beast drew nigh to hand,
Halfe flying and halfe footing in his haste,
That with his largenesse measured much land,
And made wide shadow under his huge waste,
As mountaine doth the valley overcaste.
Approching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible, and vaste;
Which, to increase his wondrous greatnes more,
Was swoln with wrath and poyson, and with bloody gore;

9

And over all with brasen scales was armd,
Like plated cote of steele, so couched neare
That nought mote perce; ne might his corse bee harmd
With dint of sword, nor push of pointed speare:
Which as an Eagle, seeing pray appeare,
His aery plumes doth rouze,[1] full rudely
dight;
So shaked he, that horror was to heare:
For as the clashing of an Armor bright,
Such noyse his rouzed scales did send unto the knight.

10

His flaggy winges, when forth he did display,
Were like two sayles, in which the hollow
wynd
Is gathered full, and worketh speedy way:
And eke the pennes,[2] that did his pineons
bynd,
Were like mayne-yardes with flying canvas
lynd;
With which whenas him list the ayre to beat,
And there by force unwonted passage fynd,
The cloudes before him fledd for terror great,
And all the hevens stood still amazed with his threat.

11

His huge long tayle, wownd up in hundred foldes,
Does overspred his long bras-scaly back,
Whose wreathed boughtes[3] when ever he unfoldes,
And thick entangled knots adown does slack, Bespotted as with shieldes of red and blacke,
It sweepeth all the land behind him farre,
And of three furlongs does but litle lacke;
And at the point two stinges in fixed arre,
Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steele exceeden farre.

1 go. 2 Clio, Muse of history.
3 Mnemosyne or Memory. 4 Mars.
5 strain of music. 6 praise.

1 ruffle. 2 feathers. 3 coils.

12

But stinges and sharpest steele did far exceed
The sharpnesse of his cruel rending clawes:
Dead was it sure, as sure as death in deed,
What ever thing does touch his ravenous pawes,
Or what within his reach he ever drawes.
But his most hideous head my tongue to tell
Does tremble; for his deepe devouring jawes
Wyde gaped, like the griesly mouth of hell,
Through which into his darke abysse all ravin fell.

13

And, that more wondrous was, in either jaw
Three ranckes of yron teeth enraunged were,
In which yett trickling blood, and gobbets raw,
Of late devoured bodies did appeare,
That sight thereof bredd cold congealed feare;
Which to increase, and all atonce to kill,
A cloud of smoothering smoke, and sulphure seare,
Out of his stinking gorge forth steemed still,
That all the ayre about with smoke and stench did fill.

14

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shieldes,
Did burne with wrath, and sparkled living fyre:
As two broad Beacons, sett in open fieldes,
Send forth their flames far off to every shyre,
And warning give that enimies conspyre
With fire and sword the region to invade:
So flam'd his eyne with rage and rancorous yre;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lampes were sett that made a dreadfull shade.

15

So dreadfully he towardes him did pas,
Forelifting up a-loft his speckled brest,
And often bounding on the brused gras,
As for great joyance of his newcome guest.
Eftsoones he gan advance his haughty crest,
As chauffed[1] Bore his bristles doth upreare;
And shoke his scales to battaile ready drest,
That made the Redcrosse knight nigh quake for feare,
As bidding bold defyaunce to his foeman neare.

16

The knight gan fayrely couch his steady speare,
And fiersely ran at him with rigorous might:
The pointed steele, arriving rudely theare,
His harder hyde would nether perce nor bight,
But, glauncing by, foorth passed forward right.
Yet sore amoved with so puissaunt push,
The wrathfull beast about him turned light,
And him so rudely, passing by, did brush
With his long tayle, that horse and man to ground did rush.

17

Both horse and man up lightly rose againe,
And fresh encounter towardes him addrest;
But th' ydle stroke yet backe recoyld in vaine,
And found no place his deadly point to rest.
Exceeding rage enflam'd the furious Beast,
To be avenged of so great despight;
For never felt his imperceable brest
So wondrous force from hand of living wight;
Yet had he prov'd the powre of many a puissant knight.

18

Then, with his waving wings displayed wyde,
Himselfe up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divyde
The yielding ayre, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting parts, and element unsound,
To beare so great a weight: he, cutting way
With his broad sayles, about him soared round;
At last, low stouping with unweldy sway,
Snatcht up both horse and man, to beare them quite away.

19

Long he them bore above the subject[1] plaine,
So far as Ewghen bow a shaft may send,
Till struggling strong did him at last constraine
To let them downe before his flightes end:

[1] irritated.

[1] lying below.

As hagard [1] hauke, presuming to contend
With hardy fowle above his hable might,
His wearie pounces [2] all in vaine doth spend
To trusse [3] the pray too heavy for his flight;
Which, comming down to ground, does free it selfe by fight.

20

He so disseized [4] of his gryping grosse,[5]
The knight his thrillant speare againe assayd
In his bras-plated body to embosse,
And three mens strength unto the stroake he layd;
Wherewith the stiffe beame quaked as affrayd,
And glauncing from his scaly necke did glyde
Close under his left wing, then broad displayd:
The percing steele there wrought a wound full wyde,
That with the uncouth [6] smart the Monster lowdly cryde.

21

He cryde, as raging seas are wont to rore
When wintry storme his wrathful wreck does threat;
The rolling billowes beate the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat;
And greedy gulfe does gape, as he would eat
His neighbour element in his revenge:
Then gin the blustring brethren [7] boldly threat
To move the world from off his stedfast henge,
And boystrous battaile make, each other to avenge.

22

The steely head stuck fast still in his flesh,
Till with his cruell clawes he snatcht the wood,
And quite a sunder broke. Forth flowed fresh
A gushing river of blacke gory blood,
That drowned all the land whereon he stood;
The streame thereof would drive a water-mill:
Trebly augmented was his furious mood
With bitter sence of his deepe rooted ill,
That flames of fire he threw forth from his large nose-thril.

23

His hideous tayle then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thyes
Of his froth-fomy steed, whose courage stout
Striving to loose the knott that fast him tyes,
Himselfe in streighter bandes too rash implyes,[1]
That to the ground he is perforce constrayned
To throw his ryder; who can [2] quickly ryse
From off the earth, with durty blood disteyned,[3]
For that reprochfull fall right fowly he disdaynd;

24

And fercely tooke his trenchand blade in hand,
With which he stroke so furious and so fell,
That nothing seemd the puissaunce could withstand:
Upon his crest the hardned yron fell,
But his more hardned crest was armd so well
That deeper dint therein it would not make
Yet so extremely did the buffe [4] him quell,
That from thenceforth he shund the like to take,
But when he saw them come he did them still [5] forsake.

25

The knight was wroth to see his stroke beguyld,[6]
And smot againe with more outrageous might
But backe againe the sparcling steele recoyld,
And left not any marke where it did light,
As if in Adamant rocke it had beene pight.
The beast, impatient of his smarting wound
And of so fierce and forcible despight,
Thought with his winges to stye [7] above the ground;
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.

26

Then full of griefe and anguish vehement
He lowdly brayd, that like was never heard
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard
Him all amazd, and almost made afeard:
The scorching flame sore swinged [8] all his face,

1 enfolds. 2 "gan," did. 3 stained. 4 blow.
5 ever. 6 foiled. 7 ascend. 8 singed.

1 wild. 2 claws.
3 To pierce so as to hold a thing together or to get a grip on it.
4 deprived. 5 rough, heavy.
6 unusual. 7 the winds.

And through his armour all his body seard,
That he could not endure so cruell cace,
But thought his armes to leave, and helmet to unlace.

27

Not that great Champion [1] of the antique world,
Whom famous Poetes verse so much doth vaunt,
And hath for twelve huge labours high extold,
So many furies and sharpe fits did haunt,
When him the poysoned garment did enchaunt,
When Centaures blood and bloody verses charmd;
As did this knight twelve thousand dolours daunt,
Whom fyrie steele now burnt, that erst him armd;
That erst him goodly armd, now most of all him harmd.

28

Faynt, wearie, sore, emboyled, grieved, brent,
With heat, toyle, wounds, armes, smart, and inward fire,
That never man such mischiefes did torment:
Death better were; death did he oft desire,
But death will never come when needes require.
Whom so dismayd when that his foe beheld,
He cast to suffer him no more respire,
But gan his sturdy sterne [2] about to weld,
And him so strongly stroke, that to the ground him feld.

29

It fortuned, (as fayre it then befell)
Behynd his backe, unweeting, where he stood,
Of auncient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood,
Full of great vertues, and for med'cine good:
Whylome, before that cursed Dragon got
That happy land, and all with innocent blood
Defyld those sacred waves, it rightly hot [3]
The well of life, ne yet his vertues had forgot:

30

For unto life the dead it could restore,
And guilt of sinfull crimes cleane wash away;
Those that with sicknesse were infected sore
It could recure; and aged long decay
Renew, as one were borne that very day.

1 Hercules. 2 tail. 3 was named.

Both Silo [1] this, and Jordan, did excell,
And th' English Bath, and eke the German Spau:
Ne can Cephise, nor Hebrus, match this well:
Into the same the knight back overthrowen fell.

31

Now gan the golden Phœbus for to steepe
His fierie face in billowes of the west,
And his faint steedes watred in Ocean deepe,
Whiles from their journall [2] labours they did rest;
When that infernall Monster, having kest
His wearie foe into that living well,
Gan high advaunce his broad discoloured brest
Above his wonted pitch, with countenance fell,
And clapt his yron wings as victor he did dwell.

32

Which when his pensive Lady saw from farre,
Great woe and sorrow did her soule assay,
As weening that the sad end of the warre;
And gan to highest God entirely pray
That feared chaunce from her to turne away:
With folded hands, and knees full lowly bent,
All night shee watcht, ne once adowne would lay
Her dainty limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.

33

The morrow next gan earely to appeare,
That Titan rose to runne his daily race;
But earely, ere the morrow next gan reare
Out of the sea faire Titans deawy face,
Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy
Her loved knight to move his manly pace:
For she had great doubt of his safety,
Since late she saw him fall before his enimy.

34

At last she saw where he upstarted brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay:
As Eagle, fresh out of the ocean wave,
Where he hath lefte his plumes all hory gray,
And deckt himselfe with fethers youthly gay,

1 Siloam, the healing pool in the Bible; the rest are famous streams or watering places.
2 daily.

Like eyas[1] hauke up mounts unto the skies,
His newly-budded pineons to assay,
And marveiles at himselfe stil as he flies:
So new this new-borne knight to battell new did rise.

35

Whom when the damned feend so fresh did spy,
No wonder if he wondred at the sight,
And doubted whether his late enimy
It were, or other new supplied knight.
He now, to prove his late-renewed might,
High brandishing his bright deaw-burning[2] blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made:
The deadly dint his dulled sences all dismaid.

36

I wote not whether the revenging steele
Were hardned with that holy water dew
Wherein he fell, or sharper edge did feele,
Or his baptized hands now greater grew,
Or other secret vertue did ensew;
Els never could the force of fleshly arme,
Ne molten mettall, in his blood embrew;[3]
For till that stownd could never wight him harme
But subtilty, nor slight, nor might, nor mighty charme.

37

The cruell wound enraged him so sore,
That loud he yelled for exceeding paine;
As hundred ramping Lions seemd to rore,
Whom ravenous hunger did thereto constraine:
Then gan he tosse aloft his stretched traine,
And therewith scourge the buxome[4] aire so sore,
That to his force to yielden it was faine;
Ne ought his sturdy strokes might stand afore,
That high trees overthrew, and rocks in peeces tore.

38

The same advauncing high above his head,
With sharpe intended[5] sting so rude him smott,
That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead;
Ne living wight would have him life behott:
The mortall sting his angry needle shott
Quite through his shield, and in his shoulde seasd,
Where fast it stucke, ne would thereout b gott:
The griefe thereof him wondrous sore diseasd
Ne might his rancling paine with patienc be appeasd.

39

But yet, more mindfull of his honour dear
Then of the grievous smart which him dic wring,
From loathed soile he can[2] him lightly reare
And strove to loose the far infixed sting:
Which when in vaine he tryde with strug geling,
Inflam'd with wrath, his raging blade he hefte,
And strooke so strongly, that the knotty string
Of his huge taile he quite a sonder clefte;
Five joints thereof he hewd, and but the stump him lefte.

40

Hart cannot thinke what outrage and what cries,
With fowle enfouldred[3] smoake and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies,
That all was covered with darknesse dire:
Then, fraught with rancour and engorged yre,
He cast at once him to avenge for all;
And, gathering up himselfe out of the mire
With his uneven wings, did fiercely fall
Upon his sunne-bright shield, and grypt it fast withall.

41

Much was the man encombred with his hold,
In feare to lose his weapon in his paw,
Ne wist yett how his talaunts[4] to unfold;
Nor harder was from Cerberus greedy jaw
To plucke a bone, then from his cruell claw
To reave[5] by strength the griped gage away:
Thrise he assayd it from his foote to draw,
And thrise in vaine to draw it did assay;
It booted nought to thinke to robbe him of his pray.

1 young. 2 glistening with dew. 3 plunge.
4 bending, unresisting. 5 outstretched.

1 held out hope for. 2 "gan."
3 like a thunder-storm. 4 claws. 5 take.

42

Tho, when he saw no power might prevaile,
His trusty sword he cald to his last aid,
Wherewith he fiersly did his foe assaile,
And double blowes about him stoutly laid,
That glauncing fire out of the yron plaid,
As sparkles from the Andvile use to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid:
Therewith at last he forst him to unty
One of his grasping feete, him to defend thereby.

43

The other foote, fast fixed on his shield,
Whenas no strength nor stroks mote him constraine
To loose, ne yet the warlike pledge to yield,
He smott thereat with all his might and maine,
That nought so wondrous puissaunce might sustaine:
Upon the joint the lucky steele did light,
And made such way that hewd it quite in twaine;
The paw yett missed not his minisht might,
But hong still on the shield, as it at first was pight.

44

For griefe thereof and divelish despight,
From his infernall fournace forth he threw
Huge flames that dimmed all the hevens light,
Enrold in duskish smoke and brimstone blew:
As burning Aetna from his boyling stew
Doth belch out flames, and rockes in peeces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountaines molten new,
Enwrapt in coleblacke clowds and filthy smoke,
That al the land with stench and heven with horror choke.

45

The heate whereof, and harmefull pestilence,
So sore him noyd, that forst him to retire
A little backeward for his best defence,
To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrailes did expire.
It chaunst, (eternall God that chaunce did guide)
As he recoiled backeward, in the mire
His nigh foreweried feeble feet did slide,
And downe he fell, with dread of shame sore terrifide.

46

There grew a goodly tree him faire beside,
Loaden with fruit and apples rosy redd,
As they in pure vermilion had been dide,
Whereof great vertues over-all were redd;[1]
For happy life to all which thereon fedd,
And life eke everlasting did befall:
Great God it planted in that blessed stedd[2]
With his Almighty hand, and did it call
The tree of life, the crime of our first fathers fall.

47

In all the world like was not to be fownd,
Save in that soile, where all good things did grow,
And freely sprong out of the fruitfull grownd,
As incorrupted Nature did them sow,
Till that dredd Dragon all did overthrow.
Another like faire tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof whoso did eat, eftsoones did know
Both good and ill. O mournfull memory!
That tree through one mans fault hath doen us all to dy.

48

From the first tree forth flowd, as from a well,
A trickling streame of Balme, most soveraine
And dainty deare, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plaine,
As it had deawed bene with timely raine:
Life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
And deadly wounds could heale, and reare againe
The sencelesse corse appointed for the grave:
Into that same he fell, which did from death him save.

49

For nigh thereto the ever damned Beast
Durst not approch, for he was deadly made,
And al that life preserved did detest;
Yet he it oft adventur'd to invade.
By this the drouping day-light gan to fade,
And yield his rowme to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle gan to shade
The face of earth and wayes of living wight,
And high her burning torch set up in heaven bright.

50

When gentle Una saw the second fall
Of her deare knight, who, weary of long fight

[1] perceived. [2] place.

And faint through losse of blood, moov'd not at all,
But lay, as in a dreame of deepe delight,
Besmeard with pretious Balme, whose vertuous might
Did heale his woundes, and scorching heat alay;
Againe she stricken was with sore affright,
And for his safetie gan devoutly pray,
And watch the noyous night, and wait for joyous day.

51

The joyous day gan early to appeare;
And fayre Aurora from the deawy bed
Of aged Tithone gan herselfe to reare
With rosy cheekes, for shame as blushing red:
Her golden locks for hast were loosely shed
About her eares, when Una her did marke
Clymbe to her charet, all with flowers spred,
From heven high to chace the chearelesse darke;
With mery note her lowd salutes the mounting larke.

52

Then freshly up arose the doughty knight,
All healed of his hurts and woundes wide,
And did himselfe to battaile ready dight;
Whose early foe awaiting him beside
To have devourd, so soone as day he spyde,
When now he saw himselfe so freshly reare,
As if late fight had nought him damnifyde,
He woxe dismaid, and gan his fate to feare:
Nathlesse with wonted rage he him advaunced neare.

53

And in his first encounter, gaping wyde,
He thought attonce him to have swallowd quight,
And rusht upon him with outragious pryde;
Who him rencountring fierce, as hauke in flight,
Perforce rebutted backe. The weapon bright,
Taking advantage of his open jaw,
Ran through his mouth with so importune might,
That deepe emperst his darksom hollow maw,
And, back retyrd, his life blood forth with all did draw.

54

So downe he fell, and forth his life did breath,
That vanisht into smoke and cloudes swift;
So downe he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did grone, as feeble so great load to lift;
So downe he fell, as an huge rocky clift,
Whose false foundacion waves have washt away,
With dreadfull poyse [1] is from the mayneland rift,
And rolling downe great Neptune doth dismay:
So downe he fell, and like an heaped mountaine lay.

55

The knight him selfe even trembled at his fall,
So huge and horrible a masse it seemd;
And his deare Lady, that beheld it all,
Durst not approch for dread which she misdeemd;
But yet at last, whenas the direfull feend
She saw not stirre, off-shaking vaine affright
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end:
Then God she praysd, and thankt her faithfull knight,
That had atchievde so great a conquest by his might.

CANTO XII

Fayre Una to the Redcrosse Knight
Betrouthed is with joy:
Though false Duessa, it to barre,
Her false sleightes doe imploy.

1

Behold! I see the haven nigh at hand
To which I meane my wearie course to bend;
Vere [2] the maine shete, and beare up with the land,
The which afore [3] is fayrly to be kend,[4]
And seemeth safe from storms that may offend;
There this fayre virgin wearie of her way
Must landed bee, now at her journeyes end;
There eke my feeble barke a while may stay,
Till mery wynd and weather call her thence away.

2

Scarsely had Phoebus in the glooming East
Yett harnessed his fyrie-footed teeme,
Ne reard above the earth his flaming creast,
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steeme,
That signe of last outbreathed life did seeme

1 crash.
2 Trim the mainsheet to swing the bow of the ship to leeward.
3 ahead. 4 recognized.

Unto the watchman on the castle-wall;
Who thereby dead that balefull Beast did deeme,
And to his Lord and Lady lowd gan call,
To tell how he had seene the Dragons fatall fall.

3

Uprose with hasty joy, and feeble speed,
That aged Syre, the Lord of all that land,
And looked forth, to weet if trew indeed
Those tydinges were, as he did understand:
Which whenas trew by tryall he out fond,
He badd to open wyde his brasen gate,
Which long time had beene shut, and out of hond [1]
Proclaymed joy and peace through all his state;
For dead now was their foe, which them forrayed late.

4

Then gan triumphant Trompets sownd on hye,
That sent to heven the ecchoed report
Of their new joy, and happie victory
Gainst him, that had them long opprest with tort,[2]
And fast imprisoned in sieged fort.
Then all the people, as in solemne feast,
To him assembled with one full consort,
Rejoycing at the fall of that great beast,
From whose eternall bondage now they were releast.

5

Forth came that auncient Lord, and aged Queene,
Arayd in antique robes downe to the grownd,
And sad habiliments right well beseene:
A noble crew about them waited rownd
Of sage and sober peres, all gravely gownd;
Whom far before did march a goodly band
Of tall young men, all hable armes to sownd;
But now they laurell braunches bore in hand,
Glad signe of victory and peace in all their land.

6

Unto that doughtie Conquerour they came,
And him before themselves prostrating low,
Their Lord and Patrone loud did him proclame,
And at his feet their lawrell boughes did throw.
Soone after them, all dauncing on a row,
The comely virgins came, with girlands dight,
As fresh as flowres in medow greene doe grow
When morning deaw upon their leaves doth light;
And in their handes sweet Timbrels all upheld on hight.

7

And them before the fry [1] of children yong
Their wanton sportes and childish mirth did play,
And to the Maydens sownding tymbrels song
In well attuned notes a joyous lay,
And made delightfull musick all the way,
Untill they came where that faire virgin stood:
As fayre Diana in fresh sommers day
Beholdes her nymphes enraung'd in shady wood,
Some wrestle, some do run, some bathe in christall flood.

8

So she beheld those maydens meriment
With chearefull vew; who, when to her they came,
Themselves to ground with gracious humblesse bent,
And her ador'd by honorable name,
Lifting to heven her everlasting fame:
Then on her head they sett a girlond greene,
And crowned her twixt earnest and twixt game:
Who, in her self-resemblance well beseene,
Did seeme, such as she was, a goodly maiden Queene.

9

And after all the raskall [2] many [3] ran,
Heaped together in rude rablement,
To see the face of that victorious man,
Whom all admired as from heaven sent,
And gazd upon with gaping wonderment;
But when they came where that dead Dragon lay,
Stretcht on the ground in monstrous large extent,
The sight with ydle feare did them dismay,
Ne durst approch him nigh to touch, or once assay.

10

Some feard, and fledd; some feard, and well it faynd;
One, that would wiser seeme then all the rest,
Warnd him not touch, for yet perhaps remaynd

1 immediately. 2 wrong.

1 swarm. 2 low, common. 3 crowd.

Some lingring life within his hollow brest,
Or in his wombe might lurke some hidden nest
Of many Dragonettes, his fruitfull seede:
Another saide, that in his eyes did rest
Yet sparckling fyre, and badd thereof take heed;
Another said, he saw him move his eyes indeed.

11

One mother, whenas her foolehardy chyld
Did come too neare, and with his talants play,
Halfe dead through feare, her litle babe revyld,
And to her gossibs [1] gan in counsell say;
"How can I tell, but that his talants may Yet scratch my sonne, or rend his tender hand?"
So diversly them selves in vaine they fray; [2]
Whiles some more bold to measure him nigh stand,
To prove how many acres he did spred of land.

12

Thus flocked all the folke him rownd about;
The whiles that hoarie king, with all his traine,
Being arrived where that champion stout
After his foes defeasaunce did remaine,
Him goodly greetes, and fayre does entertayne
With princely gifts of yvory and gold,
And thousand thankes him yeeldes for all his paine.
Then when his daughter deare he does behold,
Her dearely doth imbrace, and kisseth manifold.

13

And after to his Pallace he them bringes,
With shaumes, and trompets, and with Clarions sweet,
And all the way the joyous people singes,
And with their garments strowes the paved street;
Whence mounting up, they fynd purveyaunce [3] meet
Of all, that royall Princes court became;
And all the floore was underneath their feet
Bespredd with costly scarlott of great name,[4]
On which they lowly sitt, and fitting purpose frame.

1 friends. 2 terrify. 3 provision. 4 quality.

14

What needes me tell their feast and goodly guize,
In which was nothing riotous nor vaine?
What needes of dainty dishes to devize,
Of comely services, or courtly trayne?
My narrow leaves cannot in them contayne
The large discourse of roiall Princes state.
Yet was their manner then but bare and playne;
For th' antique world excesse and pryde did hate:
Such proud luxurious pompe is swollen up but late.

15

Then, when with meates and drinkes of every kinde
Their fervent appetites they quenched had,
That auncient Lord gan fit occasion finde,
Of straunge adventures, and of perils sad
Which in his travell him befallen had,
For to demaund of his renowmed guest:
Who then with utt'rance grave, and count'nance sad,
From poynt to poynt, as is before exprest,
Discourst his voyage long, according his request.

16

Great pleasure, mixt with pittiful regard,
That godly King and Queene did passionate,[1]
Whyles they his pittifull adventures heard;
That oft they did lament his lucklesse state,
And often blame the too importune [2] fate
That heapd on him so many wrathfull wreakes; [3]
For never gentle knight, as he of late,
So tossed was in fortunes cruell freakes:
And all the while salt teares bedeawd the hearers cheaks.

17

Then sayd that royall Pere in sober wise;
"Deare Sonne, great beene the evils which ye bore
From first to last in your late enterprise,
That I note [4] whether praise or pitty more;
For never living man, I weene, so sore
In sea of deadly daungers was distrest:
But since now safe ye seised have the shore,
And well arrived are, (high God be blest!)
Let us devize of ease and everlasting rest."

1 express with emotion. 2 harsh.
3 punishments. 4 "ne wot," know not.

18

"Ah dearest Lord!" said then that doughty knight,
Of ease or rest I may not yet devize;
For by the faith which I to armes have plight,
bownden am streight after this emprize,
As that your daughter can ye well advize,
Backe to retourne to that great Faery Queene,
And her to serve sixe yeares in warlike wize,
Gainst that proud Paynim king that works her teene:[1]
Therefore I ought crave pardon, till I there have beene."

19

"Unhappy falls that hard necessity," (Quoth he) "the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity;
Ne I against the same can justly preace:[2]
But since that band ye cannot now release,
Nor doen undo, (for vowes may not be vayne)
Soone as the terme of those six yeares shall cease,
Ye then shall hither backe retourne agayne,
The marriage to accomplish vowd betwixt you twayn.

20

"Which, for my part, I covet to performe
In sort as[3] through the world I did proclame,
That who-so kild that monster most deforme,
And him in hardy battayle overcame,
Should have mine onely daughter to his Dame,[4]
And of my kingdome heyre apparaunt bee:
Therefore, since now to thee perteynes the same
By dew desert of noble chevalree,
Both daughter and eke kingdome lo! I yield to thee."

21

Then forth he called that his daughter fayre,
The fairest Un', his onely daughter deare,
His onely daughter and his only hayre;
Who forth proceeding with sad sober cheare,
As bright as doth the morning starre appeare
Out of the East, with flaming lockes bedight,
To tell that dawning day is drawing neare,
And to the world does bring long-wished light:
So faire and fresh that Lady shewd herselfe in sight.

1 injury. 2 press, contend.
3 just as. 4 as his wife.

22

So faire and fresh, as freshest flowre in May;
For she had layd her mournefull stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimple[1] throwne away,
Wherewith her heavenly beautie she did hide,
Whiles on her wearie journey she did ride;
And on her now a garment she did weare
All lilly white, withoutten spot or pride,
That seemd like silke and silver woven neare;[2]
But neither silke nor silver therein did appeare.

23

The blazing brightnesse of her beauties beame,
And glorious light of her sunshyny face,
To tell were as to strive against the streame:
My ragged rimes are all too rude and bace
Her heavenly lineaments for to enchace.
Ne wonder; for her own deare loved knight,
All were she daily with himselfe in place,
Did wonder much at her celestial sight:
Oft had he seene her faire, but never so faire dight.

24

So fairely dight when she in presence came,
She to her Syre made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence:
Who with great wisedome and grave eloquence
Thus gan to say — But, eare he thus had sayd,
With flying speede, and seeming great pretence,
Came running in, much like a man dismayd,
A Messenger with letters, which his message sayd.

25

All in the open hall amazed stood
At suddeinnesse of that unwary[3] sight,
And wondred at his breathlesse hasty mood:
But he for nought would stay his passage right,
Till fast before the king he did alight;
Where falling flat great humblesse he did make,
And kist the ground whereon his foot was pight;[4]
Then to his handes that writt he did betake,
Which he disclosing[5] read thus, as the paper spake:

1 linen head- and neck-dress. 2 closely.
3 unexpected. 4 placed. 5 unfolding.

26

"To thee, most mighty king of Eden fayre,
Her greeting sends in these sad lines addrest,
The wofull daughter and forsaken heyre
Of that great Emperour of all the West;
And bids thee be advized for the best,
Ere thou thy daughter linck, in holy band
Of wedlocke, to that new unknowen guest:
For he already plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land.

27

"To me, sad mayd, or rather widow sad,
He was affyaunced long time before,
And sacred pledges he both gave, and had,
False erraunt knight, infamous, and forswore!
Witnesse the burning Altars, which he swore,
And guilty heavens of his bold perjury;
Which though he hath polluted oft of yore,
Yet I to them for judgement just doe fly,
And them conjure t' avenge this shamefull injury.

28

"Therefore, since mine he is, or free or bond,
Or false or trew, or living or else dead,
Withhold, O soverayne Prince! your hasty hond
From knitting league with him, I you aread;
Ne weene my right with strength adowne to tread,
Through weaknesse of my widowhed or woe;
For truth is strong her rightfull cause to plead,
And shall finde friends, if need requireth soe.
So bids thee well to fare, Thy neither friend nor foe,

Fidessa."

29

When he these bitter byting wordes had red,
The tydings straunge did him abashed make,
That still he sate long time astonished,
As in great muse, ne word to creature spake.
At last his solemn silence thus he brake,
With doubtfull eyes fast fixed on his guest:
"Redoubted knight, that for myne only sake
Thy life and honour late adventurest,
Let nought be hid from me that ought to be exprest.

30

"What meane these bloody vowes and idle threats,
Throwne out from womanish impatient mynd?
What hevens? what altars? what enraged heates,
Here heaped up with termes of love unkynd,
My conscience cleare with guilty bands would bynd?
High God be witnesse that I guiltlesse ame;
But if yourselfe, Sir knight, ye faulty fynd,
Or wrapped be in loves of former Dame,
With cryme doe not it cover, but disclose the same."

31

To whom the Redcrosse knight this answere sent:
"My Lord, my king, be nought hereat dismayd,
Till well ye wote by grave intendiment,[1]
What woman, and wherefore, doth me upbrayd
With breach of love and loialty betrayd.
It was in my mishaps, as hitherward
I lately traveild, that unwares I strayd
Out of my way, through perils straunge and hard,
That day should faile me ere I had them all declard.

32

"There did I find, or rather I was fownd
Of this false woman that Fidessa hight,
Fidessa hight the falsest Dame on grownd,
Most false Duessa, royall richly dight,
That easy was t' inveigle weaker sight:
Who by her wicked arts and wylie skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will,
And to my foe betrayd when least I feared ill."

33

Then stepped forth the goodly royall Mayd,
And on the ground herselfe prostrating low,
With sober countenance thus to him sayd:
"O! pardon[2] me, my soveraine Lord, to sheow
The secret treasons, which of late I know
To have bene wrought by that false sorceresse:
Shee, onely she, it is, that earst did throw
This gentle knight into so great distresse,
That death him did awaite in daily wretchednesse.

1 attention. 2 allow.

34

"And now it seemes, that she suborned hath
This crafty messenger with letters vaine,
To worke new woe and improvided[1] scath,
By breaking of the band betwixt us twaine;
Wherein she used hath the practicke[2] paine
Of this false footman, clokt with simplenesse,
Whome if ye please for to discover plaine,
Ye shall him Archimago find, I ghesse,
The falsest man alive: who tries, shall find no lesse."

35

The king was greatly moved at her speach;
And, all with suddein indignation fraight,[3]
Bad on that Messenger rude hands to reach.
Eftsoones the Gard, which on his state did wait,
Attacht that faytor[4] false, and bound him strait;
Who seeming sorely chauffed at his band,
As chained beare whom cruell dogs doe bait,
With ydle force did faine them to withstand,
And often semblaunce made to scape out of their hand.

36

But they him layd full low in dungeon
deepe,
And bound him hand and foote with yron chains;
And with continual watch did warely keepe.
Who then would thinke that by his subtile trains
He could escape fowle death or deadly pains?
Thus, when that Princes wrath was pacifide,
He gan renew the late forbidden bains,[5]
And to the knight his daughter deare he tyde
With sacred rites and vowes for ever to abyde.

37

His owne two hands the holy knotts did knitt,
That none but death for ever can divide;
His owne two hands, for such a turne most fitt,
The housling[6] fire did kindle and provide,
And holy water thereon sprinckled wide;
At which the bushy teade[7] a groome did
light,
And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide,
Where it should not be quenched day nor
night,
For feare of evil fates, but burnen ever bright.

38

Then gan they sprinckle all the posts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day:
They all perfumde with frankincense divine,
And precious odours fetcht from far away,
That all the house did sweat with great aray:
And all the while sweete Musicke did apply
Her curious skill the warbling notes to play,
To drive away the dull Melancholy;
The whiles one sung a song of love and jollity.

39

During the which there was an heavenly noise
Heard sownd through all the Pallace pleasantly,
Like as it had bene many an Angels voice
Singing before th' eternall majesty,
In their trinall[1] triplicities[2] on hye:
Yett wist no creature whence that hevenly sweet
Proceeded, yet each one felt secretly
Himselfe thereby refte of his sences meet,
And ravished with rare impression in his sprite.

40

Great joy was made that day of young and old,
And solemne feast proclaymd throughout
the land,
That their exceeding merth may not be told:
Suffice it heare by signes to understand
The usuall joyes at knitting of loves band.
Thrise happy man the knight himselfe did hold,
Possessed of his Ladies hart and hand;
And ever, when his eie did her behold,
His heart did seeme to melt in pleasures manifold.

41

Her joyous presence, and sweet company,
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, ne vile gealosy,
His deare delights were hable to annoy:
Yet, swimming in that sea of blisfull joy,
He nought forgott how he whilome had sworne,
In case he could that monstrous beast destroy,
Unto his Faery Queene backe to retourne;
The which he shortly did, and Una left to mourne.

1 unforeseen. 2 crafty. 3 fraught.
4 impostor. 5 banns. 6 sacramental.
7 torch.

1 threefold.
2 trinities, referring to the nine orders of angels.

42

Now, strike your sailes, yee jolly Mariners,
For we be come unto a quiet rode,[1]
Where we must land some of our passengers,
And light this weary vessell of her lode:
Here she a while may make her safe abode,
Till she repaired have her tackles spent,
And wants supplide; And then againe abroad
On the long voiage whereto she is bent:
Well may she speede, and fairely finish her intent!

AMORETTI

1

Happy ye leaves! when as those lilly hands,
Which hold my life in their dead doing[2] might,
Shall handle you, and hold in loves soft bands,
Lyke captives trembling at the victors sight.
And happy lines! on which, with starry light,
Those lamping[3] eyes will deigne sometimes to look,
And reade the sorrowes of my dying spright,[4]
Written with teares in harts close bleeding book.
And happy rymes! bath'd in the sacred brooke
Of Helicon,[5] whence she derived is,
When ye behold that angels blessed looke,
My soules long lacked foode, my heavens blis.
Leaves, lines, and rymes, seeke her to please alone,
Whom if ye please, I care for other none.

34

Lyke as a ship, that through the Ocean wyde,
By conduct of some star doth make her way;
Whenas a storme hath dimd her trusty guyde,
Out of her course doth wander far astray!
So I, whose star, that wont with her bright ray
Me to direct, with cloudes is over cast,
Doe wander now, in darknesse and dismay,
Through hidden perils round about me plast.
Yet hope I well that, when this storme is past,
My Helice,[6] the lodestar of my lyfe,
Will shine again, and looke on me at last,
With lovely light to cleare my cloudy grief.
Till then I wander carefull, comfortlesse,
In secret sorow, and sad pensivenesse.

1 roadstead, anchorage. 2 death-dealing.
3 flashing. 4 spirit.
5 Hill in Greece dedicated to the Muses.
6 Constellation of the Great Bear.

79

Men call you fayre, and you doe credit it,
For that your selfe ye dayly such doe see:
But the trew fayre, that is the gentle wit
And vertuous mind, is much more praysd of me.
For all the rest, how ever fayre it be,
Shall turne to nought and loose that glorious hew:
But onely that is permanent and free
From frayle corruption, that doth flesh ensew.
That is true beautie: that doth argue you
To be divine and borne of heavenly seed:
Deriv'd from that fayre Spirit from whom al true
And perfect beauty did at first proceed.
He onely fayre, and what he fayre hath made:
All other fayre, lyke flowres, untymely fade.

82

Joy of my life! full oft for loving you
I blesse my lot, that was so lucky placed:
But then the more your owne mishap I rew,
That are so much by so meane love embased.
For, had the equall hevens so much you graced
In this as in the rest, ye mote invent
Som hevenly wit, whose verse could have enchased
Your glorious name in golden moniment.
But since ye deignd so goodly to relent
To me your thrall, in whom is little worth,
That little, that I am, shall all be spent
In setting your immortall prayses forth:
Whose lofty argument, uplifting me,
Shall lift you up unto an high degree.

1594

PROTHALAMION;

OR A SPOUSAL VERSE MADE IN HONOUR OF THE DOUBLE MARRIAGE OF THE LADIE ELIZABETH AND THE LADIE KATHERINE SOMERSET

I

Calme was the day, and through the trembling ayre
Sweete breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did delay
Hot Titans[1] beames, which then did glyster fayre:

1 the sun's.

When I, whom sullein care,
Through discontent of my long fruitlesse stay
In princes court, and expectation vayne
Of idle hopes, which still doe fly away,
Like empty shaddowes, did aflict my brayne,
Walkt forth to ease my payne
Along the shoare of silver streaming Themmes,
Whose rutty[1] bancke, the which his river hemmes,
Was paynted all with variable flowers,
And all the meades adornd with daintie gemmes,
Fit to decke maydens bowres,
And crowne their paramours,
Against the brydale day, which is not long:
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end my song.

2

There, in a meadow, by the rivers side,
A flocke of nymphes I chaunced to espy,
All lovely daughters of the flood thereby,
With goodly greenish locks all loose untyde,
As each had bene a bryde,
And each one had a little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs entrayled curiously,
In which they gathered flowers to fill their flasket;
And with fine fingers cropt full feateously[2]
The tender stalkes on hye.
Of every sort, which in that meadow grew,
They gathered some; the violet pallid blew,
The little dazie, that at evening closes,
The virgin lillie, and the primrose trew,
With store of vermeil roses,
To decke their bridegromes posies
Against the brydale day, which was not long:
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end my song.

3

With that I saw two swannes of goodly hewe
Come softly swimming downe along the lee;[3]
Two fairer birds I yet did never see:
The snow which doth the top of Pindus[4] strew
Did never whiter shew,
Nor Jove himselfe, when he a swan would be
For love of Leda,[5] whiter did appear:
Yet Leda was, they say, as white as he,
Yet not so white as these, nor nothing neare;
So purely white they were,
That even the gentle streame, the which them bare,
Seem'd foule to them, and bad his billowes spare
To wet their silken feathers, least they might Soyle their fayre plumes with water not so fayre,
And marre their beauties bright,
That shone as heavens light,
Against their brydale day, which was not long:
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end my song.

1 rooty. 2 skilfully. 3 river.
4 A mountain in Greece.
5 Beloved by Jove in the shape of a swan.

4

Eftsoones[1] the nymphes, which now had flowers their fill,
Ran all in haste to see that silver brood,
As they came floating on the christal flood;
Whom when they sawe, they stood amazed still,
Their wondring eyes to fill.
Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fayre,
Of fowles so lovely, that they sure did deeme
Them heavenly borne, or to be that same payre
Which through the skie draw Venus silver teeme;
For sure they did not seeme
To be begot of any earthly seede,
But rather angels or of angels breede:
Yet were they bred of Somers-heat,[2] they say,
In sweetest season, when each flower and weede
The earth did fresh aray;
So fresh they seem'd as day,
Even as their brydale day, which was not long:
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end my song.

5

Then forth they all out of their baskets drew
Great store of flowers, the honour of the field,
That to the sense did fragrant odours yeild,
All which upon those goodly birds they threw,
And all the waves did strew,
That like old Peneus[3] waters they did seeme,
When downe along by pleasant Tempes[3] shore,
Scattred with flowres, through Thessaly they streeme,

1 immediately. 2 A pun for Somerset.
3 in Thessaly.

That they appeare, through lillies plenteous store,
Like a brydes chamber flore.
Two of those nymphes, meane while, two garlands bound
Of freshest flowres which in that mead they found,
The which presenting all in trim array,
Their snowie foreheads therewithall they crownd,
Whil'st one did sing this lay,
Prepar'd against that day,
Against their brydale day, which was not long:
Sweete Themmes, runne softly, till I end my song.

6

"Ye gentle birdes, the worlds faire ornament,
And heavens glorie, whom this happie hower
Doth leade unto your lovers blissfull bower,
Joy may you have and gentle hearts content
Of your loves couplement:
And let faire Venus, that is Queene of Love,
With her heart-quelling sonne upon you smile,
Whose smile, they say, hath vertue to remove
All loves dislike, and friendships faultie guile
For ever to assoile.[1]
Let endlesse peace your steadfast hearts accord,
And blessed plentie wait upon you[r] bord;
And let your bed with pleasures chast abound,
That fruitfull issue may to you afford,
Which may your foes confound,
And make your joyes redound,
Upon your brydale day, which is not long:
Sweete Themmes, run softlie, till I end my song."

7

So ended she; and all the rest around
To her redoubled that her undersong,
Which said, their bridale daye should not be long.
And gentle Eccho from the neighbour ground
Their accents did resound.
So forth those joyous birdes did passe along,
Adowne the lee, that to them murmurde low,
As he would speake, but that he lackt a tong,
Yeat did by signes his glad affection show,
Making his streame run slow.
And all the foule which in his flood did dwell
Gan flock about these twaine, that did excell
The rest, so far, as Cynthia[2] doth shend[3]

1 dispel. 2 the moon. 3 put to shame.

The lesser starres. So they enranged[1] well,
Did on those two attend,
And their best service lend,
Against their wedding day, which was not long:
Sweete Themmes run softly, till I end my song.

8

At length they all to mery London came,
To mery London, my most kyndly nurse,
That to me gave this lifes first native sourse:
Though from another place I take my name,
An house of auncient fame.
There when they came, whereas[2] those bricky towres,[3]
The which on Themmes brode aged backe doe ryde,
Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers
There whylome wont the Templer-Knights to byde,
Till they decayd through pride:
Next whereunto there standes a stately place,
Where oft I gayned giftes and goodly grace
Of that great Lord,[4] which therein wont to dwell,
Whose want too well now feeles my freendles case:
But ah here fits not well
Olde woes but joyes to tell
Against the bridale daye, which is not long:
Sweete Themmes runne softly, till I end my song.

9

Yet therein now doth lodge a noble Peer,[5]
Great Englands glory and the worlds wide wonder,
Whose dreadfull name late through all Spaine did thunder,[6]
And Hercules two pillors standing neere,
Did make to quake and feare:
Faire branch of Honor, flower of Chevalrie,
That fillest England with thy triumphs fame,
Joy have thou of thy noble victorie,
And endlesse happinesse of thine owne name[7]
That promiseth the same:
That through thy prowesse and victorious armes,

1 placed in a row. 2 where.
3 The Temple (Inner and Middle), a set of buildings and gardens extending from the Strand to the Thames; in the fourteenth century it belonged to the Knights Templars; since then, to students of law.
4 The Earl of Leicester.
5 Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex.
6 Referring to Essex's part in capturing Cadiz in 1596.
7 Spenser playfully suggests that Essex's name is made up of ever + heureux (happy).

hy country may be freed from forraine harmes:
nd great Elisaes glorious name may ring
hrough al the world, fil'd with thy wide alarmes, Vhich some brave muse may sing
o ages following,
pon the brydale day, which is not long:
Sweete Themmes runne softly, till I end my song.

10

rom those high towers, this noble Lord issuing, ike radiant Hesper when his golden hayre
n th' ocean billowes he hath bathed fayre, escended to the rivers open vewing,
Vith a great traine ensuing.
Above the rest were goodly to bee seene
Two gentle knights of lovely face and feature
Beseeming well the bower of anie Queene,
With gifts of wit and ornaments of nature,
Fit for so goodly stature:
That like the twins of Jove [1] they seem'd in sight,
Which decke the bauldricke of the heavens bright.
They two forth pacing to the rivers side,
Received those two faire brides, their loves delight,
Which at th' appointed tyde,
Each one did make his bryde,
Against their brydale day, which is not long:
Sweete Themmes runne softly, till I end my song.

1596

1 Castor and Pollux, later the constellation Gemini.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH (1552?–1618)

At a time when every man aspired to be a "complete gentleman," adept in many lines, Raleigh urpassed every one in versatility, displaying unusual skill and achieving prominence in everyhing he undertook. More than any one he is the embodiment of the Elizabethan era, an age vhich saw life as a beautiful adventure, and which investigated the things of the spirit as ardently nd curiously as it explored lands beyond the seas.

After studying at Oxford, Raleigh was a soldier in France and the Low Countries. In 1579 e went on an unsuccessful voyage of discovery to America with his half-brother, Sir Humphrey ilbert. On his return he helped put down an insurrection in Ireland. In 1584 he headed an xpedition to America which founded a colony named by Raleigh "Virginia" in honor of his ueen. He took part in the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588; later, as admiral, he was resent at the attack on the Azores.

As a courtier he stood high in the favor of Elizabeth. As a statesman, he played his part at ourt in affairs both big and petty, twice going to the Tower, in this dangerous game, after James I ecame king. And in addition to all these accomplishments, he was a poet who put feeling and incerity into lyrics that were phrased in the best Elizabethan manner, and an historian, accurate nd descriptive, who wrote some of the greatest prose passages in English.

When, in 1618, he was led to the block on Tower Hill, he made his exit from this life with a ne gesture, as befitted a true Elizabethan. The scene has been vividly described by William ldys, the antiquarian scholar, in his biography of Raleigh, published in 1736.

For the life of Raleigh see E. W. Gosse (English Worthies Series) and Sidney Lee, Great Englishmen of the Sixteenth Century (Scribners), which contains estimates of More, Sidney, Raleigh, penser, Bacon, and Shakespeare. Excellent selections from Raleigh's writings have been made y F. W. C. Hersey (Macmillan) and G. E. Hadow (Oxford University Press).

A VISION UPON THIS CONCEIT OF THE FAERIE QUEENE

This sonnet was one of the commendatory erses that appeared in the first installment of he Faerie Queene, books 1–3, 1590.

Methought I saw the grave where Laura [1] lay,
Within that temple where the vestal flame
Was wont to burn: and, passing by that way,
To see that buried dust of living fame,
Whose tomb fair Love and fairer Virtue kept,
All suddenly I saw the Fairy Queen;
At whose approach the soul of Petrarch wept,
And from thenceforth those graces were not seen,
For they this Queen attended; in whose stead
Oblivion laid him down on Laura's hearse.
Hereat the hardest stones were seen to bleed,
And groans of buried ghosts the heavens did pierce:
Where Homer's spright did tremble all for grief,
And cursed th' access of that celestial thief.

1 Petrarch's lady.

THE SILENT LOVER

1

Passions are likened best to floods and streams:
The shallow murmur, but the deep are dumb.
So, when affection yields discourse, it seems
The bottom is but shallow whence they come.
They that are rich in words, in words discover
That they are poor in that which makes a lover.

2

Wrong not, sweet empress of my heart,
The merit of true passion,
With thinking that he feels no smart,
That sues for no compassion.

Silence in love bewrays more woe
Than words, though ne'er so witty:
A beggar that is dumb, you know,
May challenge double pity.

Then wrong not, dearest to my heart,
My true, though secret passion;
He smarteth most that hides his smart,
And sues for no compassion.

HIS PILGRIMAGE

Give me my scallop-shell [1] of quiet,
My staff of faith to walk upon,
My scrip of joy, immortal diet,
My bottle of salvation,
My gown of glory, hope's true gauge;
And thus I'll take my pilgrimage.

Blood must be my body's balmer;
No other balm will there be given;
Whilst my soul, like a quiet palmer,
Traveleth towards the land of heaven,
Over the silver mountains,
Where spring the nectar fountains.
There will I kiss
The bowl of bliss;
And drink mine everlasting fill
Upon every milken [2] hill.
My soul will be a-dry before;
But after, it will thirst no more.

Then by that happy blissful day,
More peaceful pilgrims I shall see,
That have cast off their rags of clay,
And walk apparelled fresh like me.
I'll take them first
To quench their thirst
And taste of nectar suckets,[1]
At those clear wells
Where sweetness dwells,
Drawn up by saints in crystal buckets.

And when our bottles and all we
Are filled with immortality,
Then the blessed paths we'll travel,
Strowed with rubies thick as gravel;
Ceilings of diamonds, sapphire floors,
High walls of coral, and pearly bowers.
From thence to heaven's bribeless hall,
Where no corrupted voices brawl;
No conscience molten into gold,
No forged accuser bought or sold,
No cause deferred, no vain-spent journey,
For there Christ is the King's attorney,
Who pleads for all, without degrees,
And He hath angels,[2] but no fees.
And when the grand twelve-million jury
Of our sins, with direful fury,
Against our souls black verdicts give,
Christ pleads His death; and then we live.
Be Thou my speaker, taintless pleader,
Unblotted lawyer, true proceeder!
Thou giv'st salvation, even for alms,
Not with a bribed lawyer's palms.
And this is mine eternal plea
To Him that made heaven and earth and sea:
That, since my flesh must die so soon,
And want a head to dine next noon,
Just at the stroke, when my veins start and spread,
Set on my soul an everlasting head!
Then am I ready, like a palmer fit,
To tread those blest paths which before I writ.

Of death and judgment, heaven and hell,
Who oft doth think, must needs die well.

About 1603.

1 A shell found in Palestine, worn by a pilgrim to show that he had been to the Holy Land.
2 abounding in milk.

VERSES FOUND IN HIS BIBLE IN THE GATE-HOUSE AT WESTMINSTER

According to tradition, Raleigh wrote this poem the night before his execution.

Even such is time, that takes in trust
Our youth, our joys, our all we have,

1 sweetmeats.
2 A pun on angel, an old English coin that bore the head of the archangel Michael.

And pays us but with earth and dust;
Who, in the dark and silent grave,
When we have wandered all our ways,
Shuts up the story of our days;
But from this earth, this grave, this dust,
My God shall raise me up, I trust!

THE LIE

Go, Soul, the body's guest
  Upon a thankless arrant;[1]
Fear not to touch the best;
  The truth shall be thy warrant:
Go, since I needs must die,
And give the world the lie.

Say to the court, it glows
  And shines like rotten wood;
Say to the church, it shows
  What's good, and doth no good:
If court and church reply,
Then give them both the lie.

Tell potentates, they live
  Acting by others' action;
Not loved unless they give,
  Not strong but by a faction:
If potentates reply,
Give potentates the lie.

Tell men of high condition,
  That manage the estate,[2]
Their purpose is ambition,
  Their practice only hate:
And if they once reply,
Then give them all the lie.

Tell them that brave it most,
  They beg for more by spending,
Who, in their greatest cost,
  Seek nothing but commending:
And if they make reply,
Then give them all the lie.

Tell zeal it wants devotion;
  Tell love it is but lust;
Tell time it is but motion;
  Tell flesh it is but dust:
And wish them not reply,
For thou must give the lie.

Tell age it daily wasteth;
  Tell honour how it alters;
Tell beauty how she blasteth;
  Tell favour how it falters:
And as they shall reply,
Give every one the lie.

Tell wit how much it wrangles
  In tickle[1] points of niceness;
Tell wisdom she entangles
  Herself in over-wiseness:
And when they do reply,
Straight give them both the lie.

Tell physic of her boldness;
  Tell skill it is pretension;
Tell charity of coldness;
  Tell law it is contention:
And as they do reply,
So give them still the lie.

Tell fortune of her blindness;
  Tell nature of decay;
Tell friendship of unkindness;
  Tell justice of delay:
And if they will reply,
Then give them all the lie.

Tell arts they have no soundness,
  But vary by esteeming;
Tell schools they want profoundness,
  And stand too much on seeming:
If arts and schools reply,
Give arts and schools the lie.

Tell faith it's fled the city;
  Tell how the country erreth;
Tell manhood shakes off pity;
  Tell virtue least preferreth:
And if they do reply,
Spare not to give the lie.

So when thou hast, as I Commanded thee, done blabbing, —
Although to give the lie
  Deserves no less than stabbing, —
Stab at thee he that will,
No stab the soul can kill.

[1] errand. [2] state.

From THE DISCOVERY OF GUIANA

After we departed from the port of these Ciawani, we passed up the river with the flood, and anchored the ebb; and in this sort we went onward. The third day that we entered the river our galley came on ground, and stuck so fast, as we thought that even there our discovery had ended, and that we must have left sixty of our men to have inhabited, like rooks upon trees, with those nations: but the next morning, after we had cast out all her ballast, with tugging and hauling to and fro, we got her afloat, and went on: at four days' end we fell into as goodly a river as ever I beheld, which was called the great Amana, which ran more directly without windings and turnings than the other: but soon after, the flood of the sea left us, and we enforced either by main strength to row against a violent current, or to return as wise as we went out. We had then no shift but to persuade the companies that it was but two or three days' work, and therefore desired them to take pains, every gentleman and others taking their turns to row, and to spell one the other at the hour's end. Every day we passed by goodly branches of rivers, some falling from the west, others from the east, into Amana; but those I leave to the description in the chart of discovery, where every one shall be named with his rising and descent. When three days more were overgone, our companies began to despair, the weather being extreme hot, the river bordered with very high trees that kept away the air, and the current against us every day stronger than other: but we evermore commanded our pilots to promise an end the next day, and used it so long as we were driven to assure them from four reaches of the river to three, and so to two, and so to the next reach;[1] but so long we labored as many days were spent, and so driven to draw ourselves to harder allowance, our bread even at the last, and no drink at all; and our men and ourselves so wearied and scorched, and doubtful withal whether we should ever perform it or no, the heat increasing as we drew towards the line; for we were now in five degrees.

[1] unsteady.

The further we went on, (our victual decreasing, and the air breeding great faintness,) we grew weaker and weaker, when we had most need of strength and ability; for hourly the river ran more violently than other against us, and the barge, wherries, and ship's boat of captain Gifford and captain Calfield had spent all their provisions, so as we were brought into despair and discomfort, had we not persuaded all the company that it was but only one day's work more to attain the land, where we should be relieved of all we wanted; and if we returned, that we were sure to starve by the way, and that the world would also laugh us to scorn. On the banks of these rivers were divers sorts of fruits good to eat, flowers and trees of that variety as were sufficient to make ten volumes of herbals.[2] We relieved ourselves many times with the fruits of the country, and sometimes with fowl and fish: we saw birds of all colors, some carnation, some crimson, orange tawny, purple, green, watchet,[1] and of all other sorts, both simple and mixed; as it was unto us a great good passing of the time to behold them, besides the relief we found by killing some store of them with our fowling pieces, without which, having little or no bread, and less drink, but only the thick and troubled water of the river, we had been in a very hard case.

Our old pilot of the Ciawani (whom, as I said before, we took to redeem Ferdinando[2]) told us, that if we would enter a branch of a river on the right hand with our barge and wherries, and leave the galley at anchor the while in the great river, he would bring us to a town of the Arwacas, where we should find store of bread, hens, fish and of the country wine, and persuaded us, that departing from the galley at noon, we might return ere night. I was very glad to hear this speech, and presently took my barge, with eight musketeers, captain Gifford's wherry, with himself and four musketeers, and captain Calfield with his wherry and as many, and so we entered the mouth of this river; and because we were persuaded that it was so near, we took no victual with us at all. When we had rowed three hours, we marvelled we saw no sign of any dwelling, and asked the pilot where the town was; he told us a little further. After three hours more, the sun being almost set, we began to suspect that he led us that way to betray us, for he confessed that those Spaniards which fled from Trinedado, and also those that remained with Carapana in Emeria, were joined together in some village upon that river. But when it grew towards night, and we demanding where the place was, he told us but four reaches more: when we had rowed four and four we saw no sign, and our poor watermen, even heart-broken and tired, were ready to give up the ghost; for we had now come from the galley near forty miles.

At the last we determined to hang the pilot, and, if we had well known the way back again by night, he had surely gone; but our own necessities pleaded sufficiently for his safety: for it was as dark as pitch, and the river began so to narrow itself, and the trees to hang over from side to side, as we were driven with arming swords to cut a passage through those branches that covered the water. We were very desirous to find this town, hoping of a feast, because we made but a short breakfast aboard the galley in the morning, and it was now eight o'clock at night, and our stomachs began to gnaw apace; but whether it was best to return or go on we began to doubt, suspecting treason in the pilot more and more; but the poor old Indian ever assured us that it was but a little further, and but this one turning and that turning; and at last, about one o'clock after midnight, we saw a light, and rowing towards it we heard the dogs of the village. When we landed, we found few people; for the lord of that place was gone with divers canoes above four hundred miles off, upon a journey towards the head of Oroonoko, to trade for gold, and to buy women of the cannibals, who afterward unfortunately passed by us, as we rode at an anchor in the port of Morequito, in the dark of night, and yet came so near us, as his canoes grated against our barges. He left one of his company at the port of Morequito, by whom we understood that he had brought thirty young women, divers plates of gold, and had great store of fine pieces of cotton cloth and cotton beds. In his house we had good store of bread, fish, hens, and Indian drink, and so rested that night; and in the morning, after we had traded with such of his people as came down, we returned towards our galley, and brought with us some quantity of bread, fish, and hens.

1 straight section of a river. 2 books about plants.

1 light blue.

2 Raleigh's Indian pilot, who had been captured a short time before by a hostile tribe.

On both sides of this river we passed the most beautiful country that ever mine eyes beheld; and whereas all that we had seen before was nothing but woods, prickles, bushes, and thorns, here we beheld plains of twenty miles in length, the grass short and green, and in divers parts groves of trees by themselves, as if they had been by all the art and labor in the world so made of purpose: and still as we rowed, the deer came down feeding by the water's side, as if they had been used to a keeper's call. Upon this river there were great store of fowl, and of many sorts: we saw in it divers sorts of strange fishes, and of marvellous bigness; but for lagartos[1] it exceeded; for there were thousands of those ugly serpents, and the people call it for the abundance of them the river of Lagartos, in their language. I had a negro, a very proper young fellow, that, leaping out of the galley to swim in the mouth of this river, was in all our sights taken and devoured with one of those lagartos. In the meanwhile our companies in the galley thought we had been all lost, (for we promised to return before night,) and sent the Lion's Whelp's ship's boat with captain Whiddon to follow us up the river; but the next day, after we had rowed up and down some fourscore miles, we returned, and went on our way up the great river, and, when we were even at the last cast for want of victuals, captain Gifford being before the galley and the rest of the boats, seeking out some place to land upon the banks to make fire, espied four canoes coming down the river, and with no small joy caused his men to try the uttermost of their strengths, and after a while two of the four gave over, and ran themselves ashore, every man betaking himself to the fastness of the woods; the two other lesser got away while he landed to lay hold of these, and so turned into some by-creek, we knew not whither: those canoes that were taken were loaden with bread, and were bound for Marguerita in the West Indies, which those Indians, called Arwacas, proposed to carry thither for exchange: but in the lesser there were three Spaniards, who having heard of the defeat of their governor in Trinedado, and that we purposed to enter Guiana, came away in those canoes: one of them was a cavallero, as the captain of the Arwacas after told us, another a soldier, and the third a refiner.

In the meantime nothing on the earth could have been more welcome to us, next unto gold, than the great store of very excellent bread which we found in these canoes; for now our men cried, Let us go on, we care not how far. After that Captain Gifford had brought the two canoes to the galley, I took my barge, and went to the bank's side with a dozen shot, where the canoes first ran themselves ashore, and landed there, sending out captain Gifford and captain Thyn on one hand, and captain Calfield on the other, to follow those that were fled into the woods; and as I was creeping through the bushes I saw an Indian basket hidden, which was the refiner's basket; for I found in it his quicksilver, saltpetre, and divers things for the trial of metals, and also the dust of such ore as he had refined; but in those canoes which escaped there was a good quantity of ore and gold.

From THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD

The following extract is the conclusion of the History, with its famous last paragraph. It was written in the Tower between 1607 and 1614, and published in 1614, while Raleigh was still in prison. Raleigh planned two more volumes, which were never completed. The one volume that he finished ends with the foundation of the Roman Empire.

1 lizards; here, alligators.

For the rest, if we seek a reason of the succession and continuance of this boundless ambition in mortal men, we may add to that which hath been already said, that the kings and princes of the world have always laid before them the actions, but not the ends, of those great ones which preceded them. They are always transported with the glory of the one, but they never mind the misery of the other, till they find the experience in themselves. They neglect the advice of God, while they enjoy life, or hope it; but they follow the counsel of Death upon his first approach. It is he that puts into man all the wisdom of the world, without speaking a word, which God, with all the words of his law, promises, or threats, doth not infuse. Death, which hateth and destroyeth man is believed; God, which hath made him and loves him, is always deferred. I have considered, saith Solomon, all the works that are under the sun, and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit. But who believes it, till Death tells us? It was Death which, opening the conscience of Charles the Fifth, made him enjoin his son Philip to restore Navarre; and king Francis the First of France, to command that justice should be done upon the murderers of the Protestants in Merindol and Cabrieres, which till then he neglected. It is therefore Death alone that can suddenly make man to know himself. He tells the proud and insolent that they are but abjects and humbles them at the instant, makes them cry, complain, and repent, yea, even to hate their forepast happiness. He takes the account of the rich and proves him a beggar, a naked beggar, which hath interest in nothing but in the gravel that fills his mouth. He holds a glass before the eyes of the most beautiful, and makes them see therein their deformity and rottenness, and they acknowledge it.

O eloquent, just, and mighty Death! whom none could advise, thou hast persuaded; what none hath dared, thou hast done; and whom all the world hath flattered, thou only hast cast out of the world and despised; thou hast drawn together all the far-stretched greatness, all the pride, cruelty, and ambition of man, and covered it all over with these two narrow words, Hic jacet!

[Here follows a paragraph announcing the second and third volumes. Raleigh's "first volume" comprises six modern octavo volumes

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY (1554–1586)

Sidney, like Raleigh, a splendid Elizabethan gentleman, came of an excellent family, was educated at Oxford, and soon thereafter became a courtier and diplomat under Elizabeth. In a short and busy life he produced Astrophel and Stella, a sonnet sequence addressed to his beloved, Penelope Devereux; Arcadia, a romance, written for his sister, the Countess of Pembroke, which set a new style in prose writing; and The Defense of Poesy, a beautifully written appreciation of poetry. His accomplishment in literature merits Arthur Symons' enthusiastic praise: "It is in Sidney that we find the true beginning in England of the novel, of literary criticism, of the sonnet, and of the lyric."

His chivalric death on the field of Zutphen in the Low Countries is commemorated in the biography written by Fulke Greville which appeared in 1652. Spenser, who had dedicated his Faerie Queene to Sidney, mourned the death of his friend in a series of sonnets, Astrophel.

For the life of Sidney, see J. A. Symonds (English Men of Letters), and Greville (Oxford University Press). John Drinkwater has edited the poems (Dutton); and A. Feuillerat, the complete works, in two volumes (Cambridge University Press). The best edition of The Defense of Poesy is A. S. Cook's (Ginn).

THE BARGAIN

This poem first appeared in Puttenham's Art of English Poesy, 1589. Another version is incorporated in the Arcadia, 1590.

My true love hath my heart, and I have his,
By just exchange one for another given:
I hold his dear, and mine he cannot miss,
There never was a better bargain driven:
My true love hath my heart, and I have his.

His heart in me keeps him and me in one,
My heart in him his thoughts and senses guides:

He loves my heart, for once it was his own,
I cherish his because in me it bides:
My true love hath my heart, and I have his.

ASTROPHEL AND STELLA

1

Loving in truth, and fain in verse my love to show,
That she, dear she, might take some pleasure of my pain,
Pleasure might cause her read, reading might make her know,
Knowledge might pity win, and pity grace obtain,
I sought fit words to paint the blackest face of woe;
Studying inventions fine, her wits to entertain,
Oft turning others' leaves, to see if thence would flow
Some fresh and fruitful showers upon my sun-burned brain.
But words came halting forth, wanting Invention's stay;
Invention, Nature's child, fled step-dame Study's blows;
And others' feet still seemed but strangers in my way.
Thus, great with child to speak, and helpless in my throes,
Biting my truant pen, beating myself for spite,
Fool, said my Muse to me, look in thy heart, and write.

31

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies!
How silently, and with how wan a face!
What, may it be that even in heavenly place
That busy archer his sharp arrows tries?
Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's case;
I read it in thy looks; thy languished grace,
To me, that feel the like, thy state descries.
Then, even of fellowship, O Moon, tell me,
Is constant love deemed there but want of wit?
Are beauties there as proud as here they be?
Do they above love to be loved, and yet
Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
Do they call virtue there ungratefulness?

39

Come, Sleep! O Sleep, the certain knot of peace,
The baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe,
The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
Th' indifferent judge between the high and low;
With shield of proof shield me from out the prease[1]
Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw;
O make in me those civil wars to cease;
I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.
Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest bed,
A chamber deaf to noise and blind to light,
A rosy garland and a weary head:
And if these things, as being thine in right,
Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me,
Livelier than elsewhere, Stella's image see.

41

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance
Guided so well that I obtained the prize,
Both by the judgment of the English eyes
And of some sent from that sweet enemy, France;
Horsemen my skill in horsemanship advance,[2]
Townfolks my strength; a daintier judge applies
His praise to sleight,[3] which from good use[4] doth rise;
Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;
Others, because of both sides I do take
My blood from them who did excel in this,
Think Nature me a man-of-arms did make.
How far they shot awry! the true cause is,
Stella looked on, and from her heavenly face
Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.

64

No more, my dear, no more these counsels try;
O give my passions leave to run their race;
Let Fortune lay on me her worst disgrace;
Let folk o'ercharged with brain against me cry;
Let clouds bedim my face, break in mine eye;
Let me no steps but of lost labor trace;
Let all the earth with scorn recount my case, —
But do not will me from my love to fly.

1 press. 2 praise. 3 dexterity. 4 habit.

I do not envy Aristotle's wit,
Nor do aspire to Cæsar's bleeding fame;[1]
Nor aught do care though some above me sit;
Nor hope nor wish another course to frame,
But that which once may win thy cruel heart:
Thou art my wit, and thou my virtue art.

66

And do I see some cause a hope to feed,
Or doth the tedious burden of long woe
In weakened minds quick apprehending breed
Of every image which may comfort show?
I cannot brag of word, much less of deed,
Fortune wheels still with me in one sort,[2] slow;
My wealth no more, and no whit less my need;
Desire still on stilts of fear doth go.
And yet amid all fears a hope there is,
Stolen to my heart since last fair night, nay day,
Stella's eyes sent to me the beams of bliss,
Looking on me while I looked other way:
But when mine eyes back to their heaven did move,
They fled with blush which guilty seemed of love.

107

Stella, since thou so right a princess art
Of all the powers which life bestows on me,
That ere by them ought[3] undertaken be,
They first resort unto that sovereign part;
Sweet, for a while give respite to my heart,
Which pants as though it still should leap to thee:
And on my thoughts give thy lieutenancy
To this great cause, which needs both use and art.
And as a queen, who from her presence sends
Whom she employs, dismiss from thee my wit,
Till it have wrought what thy own will attends,
On servants' shame oft masters' blame doth sit:
O let not fools in me thy works reprove,
And scorning say, "See what it is to love!"

LOVE IS DEAD

Ring out your bells, let mourning shows be spread;
For Love is dead:
All Love is dead, infected
With plague of deep disdain:
Worth, as nought worth, rejected,
And Faith fair scorn doth gain.
From so ungrateful fancy,
From such a female frenzy,
From them that use men thus,
Good Lord, deliver us!

Weep, neighbours, weep; do you not hear said
That Love is dead?
His death-bed, peacock's folly;
His winding-sheet is shame;
His will, false-seeming wholly;
His sole executor, blame.
From so ungrateful fancy,
From such a female frenzy,
From them that use men thus,
Good Lord, deliver us!

Let dirge be sung, and trentals[1] rightly rea
For Love is dead;
Sir Wrong his tomb ordaineth
My mistress' marble heart;
Which epitaph containeth,
"Her eyes were once his dart."
From so ungrateful fancy,
From such a female frenzy,
From them that use men thus,
Good Lord, deliver us!

Alas, I lie: rage hath this error bred;
Love is not dead;
Love is not dead, but sleepeth
In her unmatched mind,
Where she his counsel keepeth,
Till due desert she find.
Therefore from so vile fancy,
To call such wit a frenzy,
Who Love can temper thus,
Good Lord, deliver us!

From THE DEFENSE OF POETR

This extract is from the middle of Sidne essay, following his arguments for placi poetry foremost among human studies. T essay, written about 1581 and published in 15 in two editions (one called Defense, the oth Apology), was an answer to the direct and direct attacks of the Puritans against poet The immediate cause was an invective agair poets, The School of Abuse, 1579, by Steph Gosson, dedicated, strangely enough, to Sidne Sidney's answer is a general reply, carefully co sidered, philosophic, and in good taste. T text given below is a modernized version

1 Reference to Cæsar's assassination.
2 manner. 3 aught.

1 thirty masses for the dead.

fessor A. S. Cook based upon both early ions.

conclude, therefore, that he [the poet] elleth history, not only in furnishing the d with knowledge, but in setting it for- d to that which deserveth to be called accounted good; which setting forward, moving to well-doing, indeed setteth the rel crown upon the poet as victorious, not y of the historian, but over the philoso- r, howsoever in teaching it may be ques- able. For suppose it be granted — that ch I suppose with great reason may be ied — that the philosopher, in respect of methodical proceeding, teach more per- ly than the poet, yet do I think that no n is so much φιλοφιλόσοφος[1] as to com- e the philosopher in moving with the t. And that moving is of a higher degree n teaching, it may by this appear, that s well nigh both the cause and the effect eaching; for who will be taught, if he be moved with desire to be taught? And at so much good doth that teaching bring th — I speak still of moral doctrine — as t it moveth one to do that which it doth ch? For, as Aristotle saith, it is not νσις[2] but πρᾶξις[3] must be the fruit; and ν πρᾶξις cannot be, without being moved practise, it is no hard matter to consider. e philosopher showeth you the way, he in- meth you of the particularities, as well of tediousness of the way, as of the pleasant ging you shall have when your journey is led, as of the many by-turnings that may ert you from your way; but this is to no n but to him that will read him, and read with attentive, studious painfulness; ich constant desire whosoever hath in him, h already passed half the hardness of the y, and therefore is beholding to the phi- opher but for the other half. Nay, truly, rned men have learnedly thought, that ere once reason hath so much over- stered passion as that the mind hath a free ire to do well, the inward light each mind h in itself is as good as a philosopher's ok; since in nature we know it is well to do l, and what is well and what is evil, though not in the words of art which phi- ophers bestow upon us; for out of natural nceit the philosophers drew it. But to be ved to do that which we know, or to be ved with desire to know, hoc opus, hic or est.[4]

Now therein of all sciences — I speak still of human, and according to the human conceit — is our poet the monarch. For he doth not only show the way, but giveth so sweet a prospect into the way as will entice any man to enter into it. Nay, he doth, as if your journey should lie through a fair vineyard, at the very first give you a cluster of grapes, that full of that taste you may long to pass further. He beginneth not with obscure definitions, which must blur the margent[1] with interpretations, and load the memory with doubtfulness. But he cometh to you with words set in delightful proportion, either accompanied with, or prepared for, the well-enchanting skill of music; and with a tale, forsooth, he cometh unto you, with a tale which holdeth children from play, and old men from the chimney-corner, and, pretending no more, doth intend the winning of the mind from wickedness to virtue; even as the child is often brought to take most wholesome things, by hiding them in such other as have a pleasant taste, — which, if one should begin to tell them the nature of the aloes or rhubarb they should receive, would sooner take their physic at their ears than at their mouth. So is it in men, most of which are childish in the best things, till they be cradled in their graves, — glad they will be to hear the tales of Hercules, Achilles, Cyrus, Æneas; and, hearing them, must needs hear the right description of wisdom, valor, and justice; which, if they had been barely, that is to say philosophically, set out, they would swear they be brought to school again.

That imitation whereof poetry is, hath the most conveniency to nature of all other; insomuch that, as Aristotle saith, those things which in themselves are horrible, as cruel battles, unnatural monsters, are made in poetical imitation delightful. Truly, I have known men, that even with reading Amadis de Gaule, which, God knoweth, wanteth much of a perfect poesy, have found their hearts moved to the exercise of courtesy, liberality, and especially courage. Who readeth Æneas carrying old Anchises on his back, that wisheth not it were his fortune to perform so excellent an act? Whom do not those words of Turnus move, the tale of Turnus having planted his image in the imagination?

Fugientem hæc terra videbit?
Usque adeone mori miserum est?[2]

philophilosophos, friend of the philosopher.
gnosis, knowledge. 3 praxis, practice.
This is the work, this the task.

1 margin.
2 Will this land see me flee? Is it so very unhappy to die?

Where the philosophers, as they scorn to delight, so must they be content little to move — saving wrangling whether virtue be the chief or the only good, whether the contemplative or the active life do excel — which Plato and Boethius well knew, and therefore made Mistress Philosophy very often borrow the masking raiment of Poesy. For even those hard-hearted evil men who think virtue a school-name, and know no other good but indulgere genio,[1] and therefore despise the austere admonitions of the philosopher, and feel not the inward reason they stand upon, yet will be content to be delighted, which is all the good-fellow poet seemeth to promise; and so steal to see the form of goodness — which seen, they cannot but love — ere themselves be aware, as if they took a medicine of cherries.

Infinite proofs of the strange effects of this poetical invention might be alleged; only two shall serve, which are so often remembered as I think all men know them. The one of Menenius Agrippa, who, when the whole people of Rome had resolutely divided themselves from the senate, with apparent show of utter ruin, though he were, for that time, an excellent orator, came not among them upon trust either of figurative speeches or cunning insinuations, and much less with far-fet[2] maxims of philosophy, which, especially if they were Platonic, they must have learned geometry before they could well have conceived; but, forsooth, he behaves himself like a homely and familiar poet. He telleth them a tale, that there was a time when all the parts of the body made a mutinous conspiracy against the belly, which they thought devoured the fruits of each other's labor; they concluded they would let so unprofitable a spender starve. In the end, to be short — for the tale is notorious, and as notorious that it was a tale — with punishing the belly they plagued themselves. This, applied by him, wrought such effect in the people, as I never read that ever words brought forth but then so sudden and so good an alteration; for upon reasonable conditions a perfect reconcilement ensued.

The other is of Nathan[3] the prophet, who, when the holy David had so far forsaken God as to confirm adultery with murder, when he was to do the tenderest office of a friend, in laying his own shame before his eyes, — sent by God to call again so chosen a servant, how doth he it but by telling of a man whose beloved lamb was ungratefully taken from his bosom? The application most divinely true, but the discourse itself feigned; which made David (I speak of the second and instrumental cause) as in a glass to see his own filthiness, as that heavenly Psalm of Mercy well testifieth.

By these, therefore, examples and reasons, I think it may be manifest that the poet, with that same hand of delight, doth draw the mind more effectually than any other art doth. And so a conclusion not unfitly ensueth: that as virtue is the most excellent resting-place for all worldly learning to make his end of, so poetry, being the most familiar to teach it, and most princely to move towards it, in the most excellent work is the most excellent workman.

But I am content not only to decipher him by his works — although works in commendation or dispraise must ever hold a high authority — but more narrowly will examine his parts; so that, as in a man, though all together may carry a presence full of majesty and beauty, perchance in some one defectious piece we may find a blemish.

Now in his parts, kinds, or species, as you list to term them, it is to be noted that some poesies have coupled together two or three kinds, — as tragical and comical, whereupon is risen the tragi-comical; some, in the like manner, have mingled prose and verse, as Sannazzaro[1] and Boethius;[2] some have mingled matters heroical and pastoral; but that cometh all to one in this question, for, if severed they be good, the conjunction cannot be hurtful. Therefore, perchance forgetting some, and leaving some as needless to be remembered, it shall not be amiss in a word to cite the special kinds, to see what faults may be found in the right use of them.

Is it then the pastoral poem which is misliked? — for perchance where the hedge is lowest they will soonest leap over. Is the poor pipe disdained, which sometimes out of Melibœus'[3] mouth can show the misery of people under hard lords and ravening soldiers, and again, by Tityrus,[4] what blessedness is derived to them that lie lowest from the goodness of them that sit highest? sometimes, under the pretty tales of wolves and sheep, can include the whole considerations of wrong-doing and patience; sometimes show

1 indulge your nature. 2 far-fetched.
3 2 Samuel, xii.

1 An Italian poet who wrote an Arcadia, 1504, which, like Sidney's romance, was in prose and verse.
2 In his Consolation of Philosophy, written in prison about 522.
3 A character in Virgil's First Eclogue.
4 He and Melibœus carry on the dialogue in Virgil's poem.

hat contention for trifles can get but a rifling victory; where perchance a man may ee that even Alexander and Darius, when hey strave who should be cock of this world's unghill, the benefit they got was that the fter-livers may say:

Hæc memini et victum frustra contendere Thyrsim;
Ex illo Corydon, Corydon est tempore nobis.[1]

Or is it the lamenting elegiac, which in a kind heart would move rather pity than blame; who bewaileth, with the great philosopher Heraclitus,[2] the weakness of mankind and the wretchedness of the world; who surely is to be praised, either for compassionate accompanying just causes of lamentation, or for rightly painting out how weak be the passions of wofulness?

Is it the bitter but wholesome iambic, who rubs the galled mind, in making shame the trumpet of villainy with bold and open crying out against naughtiness?

Or the satiric? who

Omne vafer vitium ridenti tangit amico;[3]

who sportingly never leaveth till he make a man laugh at folly, and at length ashamed to laugh at himself, which he cannot avoid without avoiding the folly; who, while circum præcordia ludit,[4] giveth us to feel how many headaches a passionate life bringeth us to, — how, when all is done,

Est Ulubris, animus si nos non deficit æquus.[5]

No, perchance it is the comic; whom naughty playmakers and stage-keepers have justly made odious. To the argument of abuse [6] I will answer after. Only thus much now is to be said, that the comedy is an imitation of the common errors of our life, which he representeth in the most ridiculous and scornful sort that may be, so as it is impossible that any beholder can be content to be such a one. Now, as in geometry the oblique must be known as well as the right, and in arithmetic the odd as well as the even; so in the actions of our life who seeth not the filthiness of evil, wanteth a great foil to perceive the beauty of virtue. This doth the comedy handle so, in our private and domestical matters, as with hearing it we get, as it were, an experience what is to be looked for of a niggardly Demea, of a crafty Davus, of a flattering Gnatho, of a vain-glorious Thraso; [1] and not only to know what effects are to be expected, but to know who be such, by the signifying badge given them by the comedian. And little reason hath any man to say that men learn evil by seeing it so set out; since, as I said before, there is no man living, but by the force truth hath in nature, no sooner seeth these men play their parts, but wisheth them in pistrinum,[2] although perchance the sack of his own faults lie so behind his back, that he seeth not himself to dance the same measure, — whereto yet nothing can more open his eyes than to find his own actions contemptibly set forth.

So that the right use of comedy will, I think, by nobody be blamed, and much less of the high and excellent tragedy, that openeth the greatest wounds, and showeth forth the ulcers that are covered with tissue; that maketh kings fear to be tyrants, and tyrants manifest their tyrannical humors; that with stirring the effects of admiration and commiseration teacheth the uncertainty of this world, and upon how weak foundations gilden roofs are builded; that maketh us know:

Qui sceptra sævus duro imperio regit,
Timet timentes, metus in auctorem redit.[3]

But how much it can move, Plutarch yieldeth a notable testimony of the abominable tyrant Alexander Pheræus; from whose eyes a tragedy, well made and represented, drew abundance of tears, who without all pity had murdered infinite numbers, and some of his own blood; so as he that was not ashamed to make matters for tragedies, yet could not resist the sweet violence of a tragedy. And if it wrought no further good in him, it was that he, in despite of himself, withdrew himself from hearkening to that which might mollify his hardened heart. But it is not the tragedy they do mislike, for it were too absurd to cast out so excellent a representation of whatsoever is most worthy to be learned.

1 I remember this, and how defeated Thyrsis fought in vain. From that time on, it has been Corydon, Corydon with us. (Virgil's Seventh Eclogue.)

2 The "weeping" philosopher, 535?-475 B.C., who taught that all things are in a state of flux, and that knowledge can only be relative.

3 The rascal touches every fault, while making his friend laugh. (The quotation is abridged from Persius' First Satire.)

4 He plays around our deepest feelings. (From the next line in the quotation from Persius.)

5 Freely translated: we may even dwell in and enjoy Ulubræ [a particularly desolate town], if we have tranquility of spirit. (Horace's First Epistle.)

6 A reference to Gosson's pamphlet.

1 These are stock characters in the plays of Terence, the Latin comic dramatist.

2 in the work-mill.

3 The cruel ruler who governs harshly fears those who fear him, and fear comes over him who started it. (Seneca.)

Is it the lyric that most displeaseth, who with his tuned lyre and well-accorded voice, giveth praise, the reward of virtue, to virtuous acts; who giveth moral precepts and natural problems; who sometimes raiseth up his voice to the height of the heavens, in singing the lauds of the immortal God? Certainly I must confess mine own barbarousness; I never heard the old song of Percy and Douglas [1] that I found not my heart moved more than with a trumpet; and yet it is sung but by some blind crowder, with no rougher voice than rude style; which being so evil apparelled in the dust and cobwebs of that uncivil age, what would it work, trimmed in the gorgeous eloquence of Pindar? In Hungary I have seen it the manner at all feasts, and other such meetings, to have songs of their ancestors' valor, which that right soldier-like nation think the chiefest kindlers of brave courage. The incomparable Lacedæmonians did not only carry that kind of music ever with them to the field, but even at home, as such songs were made, so were they all content to be singers of them; when the lusty men were to tell what they did, the old men what they had done, and the young men what they would do. And where a man may say that Pindar many times praiseth highly victories of small moment, matters rather of sport than virtue; as it may be answered, it was the fault of the poet, and not of the poetry, so indeed the chief fault was in the time and custom of the Greeks, who set those toys at so high a price that Philip of Macedon reckoned a horserace won at Olympus [2] among his three fearful felicities.[3] But as the unimitable Pindar often did, so is that kind most capable and most fit to awake the thoughts from the sleep of idleness, to embrace honorable enterprises.

There rests the heroical, whose very name, I think, should daunt all backbiters. For by what conceit can a tongue be directed to speak evil of that which draweth with it no less champions than Achilles, Cyrus, Æneas, Turnus, Tydeus, Rinaldo? [4] who doth not only teach and move to a truth, but teacheth and moveth to the most high and excellent truth; who maketh magnanimity and justice shine through all misty fearfulness and foggy desires; who, if the saying of Plato and Tully [1] be true, that who could see virtue would be wonderfully ravished with the love of her beauty, this man setteth her out to make her more lovely, in her holiday apparel, to the eye of any that will deign not to disdain until they understand. But if anything be already said in the defense of sweet poetry, all concurreth to the maintaining the heroical, which is not only a kind, but the best and most accomplished kind of poetry. For, as the image of each action stirreth and instructeth the mind, so the lofty image of such worthies most inflameth the mind with desire to be worthy, and informs with counsel how to be worthy. Only let Æneas be worn in the tablet of your memory, how he governeth himself in the ruin of his country; in the preserving his old father, and carrying away his religious ceremonies; in obeying the god's commandment to leave Dido, though not only all passionate kindness, but even the human consideration of virtuous gratefulness, would have craved other of him; how in storms, how in sports, how in war, how in peace, how a fugitive, how victorious, how besieged, how besieging, how to strangers, how to allies, how to enemies, how to his own; lastly, how in his inward self, and how in his outward government; and I think, in a mind most prejudiced with a prejudicating humor, he will be found in excellency fruitful, — yea, even as Horace saith, melius Chrysippo et Crantore.[2] But truly I imagine it falleth out with these poet-whippers as with some good women who often are sick, but in faith they cannot tell where. So the name of poetry is odious to them, but neither his cause nor effects, neither the sum that contains him nor the particularities descending from him, give any fast handle to their carping dispraise.

Since, then, poetry is of all human learnings the most ancient and of most fatherly antiquity, as from whence other learnings have taken their beginnings; since it is so universal that no learned nation doth despise it, nor barbarous nation is without it: since both Roman and Greek gave divine names unto it, the one of "prophesying," the other of "making," and that indeed that name of "making" is fit for him, considering that whereas other arts retain themselves within their subject, and receive, as it were, their being from it, the poet only bringeth his own stuff, and doth not learn a conceit out of 1 Probably in an older version than the one we have now. See p. 137 of this volume.

2 A slip for Olympia.

3 Philip was informed at the same time of the victory of his army in battle, the winning of a race by his horse, and the birth of his famous son Alexander. See Plutarch's Lives.

4 The first three heroes are well enough known. Turnus appears near the end of the Æneid, Tydeus in the Iliad, and Rinaldo in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.

1 Cicero.

2 Better than Chrysippus and Crantor. (They were two scholars contemporaneous with Horace.)

matter, but maketh matter for a conceit; nce neither his description nor his end con- lineth any evil, the thing described cannot e evil; since his effects be so good as to teach oodness, and delight the learners of it; since herein — namely in moral doctrine, the hief of all knowledges — he doth not only r pass the historian, but for instructing is ell nigh comparable to the philosopher, and r moving leaveth him behind him; since the Holy Scripture, wherein there is no uncleanness, hath whole parts in it poetical, and that even our Savior Christ vouchsafed to use the flowers of it; since all his kinds are not only in their united forms, but in their several dissections fully commendable; I think, and think I think rightly, the laurel crown appointed for triumphant captains doth worthily, of all other learnings, honor the poet's triumph.

ELIZABETHAN LYRICS

THOMAS SACKVILLE, LORD BUCKHURST (1536–1608)

Thomas Sackville, first Earl of Dorset and ord Buckhurst, was a prominent statesman, e holder of many important offices under lizabeth. Early in his career, 1561, he wrote, ith Thomas Norton, Gorboduc, or, Ferrex and orrex, the first English tragedy in blank verse. n 1563 he contributed to A Mirror for Magistates the Induction and The Complaint of the uke of Buckingham. The Mirror was started n years before as a collection of stories narrating the tragedy or fall of prominent Englishmen, fter the manner of Boccaccio's De Casibus irorum or Lydgate's version of Boccaccio's tories, The Fall of Princes. These two contributions of Sackville's to the Mirror are by ir the best in the collection. They are the nly poems that Sackville published, but they how, in the opinion of most critics, the greatest echnical skill and imagination since the days Chaucer.

COMPLAINT OF THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM

o long as fortune would permit the same,
lived in rule and riches with the best,
nd passed my time in honor and in fame,
hat of mishap no fear was in my breast;
ut false fortune, when I suspected least,
id turn the wheel, and with a doleful fall ath me bereft of honor, life, and all.

o, what avails in riches floods that flows?
hough she so smiled, as all the world were his:
ven kings and cæsars biden fortune's throws, nd simple sort must bear it as it is.
ake heed by me that blithed in baleful bliss:
ly rule, my riches, royal blood and all,
hen fortune frowned, the feller made my fall.

For hard mishaps, that happens unto such
Whose wretched state erst[1] never felt no change,
Agrieve them not in any part so much
As their distress, to whom it is so strange
That all their lives, nay, passed pleasures range,
Their sudden woe, that aye wield wealth at will,
Algates[2] their hearts more piercingly must thrill.

For of my birth, my blood was of the best,
First born an earl, then duke by due descent;
To swing the sway in court among the rest,
Dame Fortune me her rule most largely lent,
And kind with courage so my corpse had blent,
That lo, on whom but me did she most smile?
And whom but me, lo, did she most beguile?

Now hast thou heard the whole of my unhap,
My chance, my change, the cause of all my care;
In wealth and woe, how fortune did me wrap,
With world at will, to win me to her snare.
Bid kings, bid cæsars, bid all states beware,
And tell them this from me that tried it true:
Who reckless rules, right soon may hap to rue.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE (1525?–1577)

Gascoigne came of a distinguished family, was a graduate of Cambridge University, and a courtier at the great Queen's court. As an author he ranks high among those lesser writers of the period whose work, distinguished in itself, is more important in the history of the development of some type. To the drama he contributed The Supposes, 1566, which was a translation from Ariosto, and Jocasta, 1566, translated at second hand from Euripides. The first (supposes means disguises) is a type of play better known through The Comedy of Errors. Jocasta is a "tragedy of blood" in blank verse. His lyrics were gathered in a volume, An Hundred Sundrie Floures bound up in one Poesie, in 1572. To the warm discussion of the time regarding the principles of English verse-making he contributed Notes of Instruction. In the field of satire he wrote The Glasse of Government, 1575, and The Steele Glasse, 1576. A "steele glasse" is a mirror made of polished steel.

1 formerly. 2 always.

PIERS PLOUGHMAN

(From The Steel Glass)

Behold him, priests, and though he stink of sweat,
Disdain him not: for shall I tell you what?
Such climb to heaven before the shaven crowns.
But how? forsooth with true humility.
Not that they hoard their grain when it is cheap,
Nor that they kill the calf to have the milk,
Nor that they set debate between their lords,
By earing[1] up the balks[2] that part their bounds:
Nor for because they can both crouch and creep
(The guileful'st men that ever God yet made)
When as they mean most mischief and deceit,
Nor that they can cry out on landlords loud,
And say they rack their rents an ace too high,
When they themselves do sell their landlord's lamb
For greater price than ewe was wont be worth.
(I see you, Piers, my glass was lately scoured.)
But for they feed with fruits of their great pains
Both king and knight and priests in cloister pent.
Therefore I say that sooner some of them
Shall scale the walls which lead us up to heaven,
Than cornfed beasts, whose belly is their God,
Although they preach of more perfection.

1 ploughing. 2 unploughed ridges between fields.

SIR EDWARD DYER
(1550?–1607)

Dyer was an Oxford man, courtier, and knight, the friend of most of the writers who received preferment from Queen Elizabeth. He is remembered now solely for the poem which follows. In his time he was rated high as a poet, but most of his poems have either been lost or remain at present unidentified.

MY MIND TO ME A KINGDOM IS

My mind to me a kingdom is,
Such present joys therein I find,
That it excels all other bliss
That earth affords or grows by kind:[1]
Though much I want which most would have,
Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

No princely pomp, no wealthy store,
No force to win the victory,
No wily wit to salve a sore,
No shape to feed a loving eye;
To none of these I yield as thrall:
For why? My mind doth serve for all.

I see how plenty [surfeits] oft,
And hasty climbers soon do fall;
I see that those which are aloft
Mishap doth threaten most of all;
They get with toil, they keep with fear:
Such cares my mind could never bear.

Content to live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice;
I press to bear no haughty sway;
Look, what I lack my mind supplies:
Lo, thus I triumph like a king,
Content with that my mind doth bring.

Some have too much, yet still do crave;
I little have, and seek no more;
They are but poor, though much they have.
And I am rich with little store:
They poor, I rich; they beg, I give;
They lack, I leave; they pine, I live.

I laugh not at another's loss;
I grudge[2] not at another's pain;
No worldly waves my mind can toss;
My state at one doth still remain:
I fear no foe, I fawn no friend;
I loathe not life, nor dread my end.

1 nature. 2 grieve.

Some weigh their pleasure by their lust,
Their wisdom by their rage of will;
Their treasure is their only trust;
A cloaked craft their store of skill:
But all the pleasure that I find
Is to maintain a quiet mind.

My wealth is health and perfect ease;
My conscience clear my chief defence;
I neither seek by bribes to please,
Nor by deceit to breed offence:
Thus do I live; thus will I die;
Would all did so as well as I!

JOHN LYLY (1554?–1606)

John Lyly, dramatist and prose writer, was born about 1554 in Kent. He was educated at Oxford, and soon afterwards settled in London as a writer. His fame rests partly upon his positive achievement, but more upon the influence that his plays and his prose style exerted upon succeeding authors. Of his nine plays, Campaspe, 1581, Sappho and Phao, 1584, and Endymion, 1591, are the best. As their titles imply, they are on mythological subjects, loaded, however, with allegorical references to the court of Queen Elizabeth. This is particularly true of Endymion. These plays were not intended for an ordinary audience. They were usually performed at the court by the children of St. Paul's choir, or at night at the fashionable Blackfriars, the one theater within the city walls. Much of the charm of the plays is due to the songs. There are critics, however, who question Lyly's authorship of all the lyrics.

More popular and influential than the plays were his two prose romances, written during his first years in London: Euphues, the Anatomy of Wit, 1578, and Euphues and his England, 1580. The highly artificial style of Euphues immediately became the vogue, parodied by a few as by Shakespeare in parts of Love's Labour's Lost, but leaving, in the end, a definite mark upon Elizabethan style. Most striking among the characteristics of euphuism are the many references and veiled allusions to the classics and ancient history, elaborate alliteration, the extreme balance and cadence of sentences, puns, — in short, all species of "wit."

Lyly also had a hand in the Marprelate controversy, writing a pamphlet, Pappe with an Hatchet, 1589, in support of the Bishops. He was likewise a member of four Parliaments between 1589 and 1591; but at court he never rose as high as he hoped to. He died in 1606.

The complete works of Lyly have been edited with a life and notes, in three volumes, by R. W. Bond (Oxford University Press).

APELLES' SONG

(From Campaspe)

Cupid and my Campaspe played
At cards for kisses; Cupid paid.
He stakes his quiver, bows and arrows,
His mother's doves and team of sparrows;
Loses them too. Then down he throws
The coral of his lip, the rose
Growing on's cheek (but none knows how);
With these, the crystal of his brow,
And then the dimple of his chin;
All these did my Campaspe win.
At last he set her both his eyes;
She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
O Love, has she done this to thee?
What shall, alas! become of me?

SPRING'S WELCOME

(From Campaspe)

What bird so sings, yet so does wail?
O 'tis the ravished nightingale.
"Jug, jug, jug, jug, tereu," she cries,
And still her woes at midnight rise.
Brave prick-song![1] who is't now we hear?
None but the lark so shrill and clear;
Now at heaven's gates[2] she claps her wings,
The morn not waking till she sings.
Hark, hark, with what a pretty throat
Poor robin redbreast tunes his note!
Hark how the jolly cuckoos sing,
"Cuckoo," to welcome in the spring,
"Cuckoo," to welcome in the spring!

GEORGE PEELE (1558?–1598?)

The facts about Peele's life are scant. After graduating from Oxford in 1577, he went to London, where he earned a precarious living as an actor and a writer. He wrote much, gaining for himself a high position among the playwrights before Shakespeare, especially for his excellent blank verse, his genuine humor, and the realism that he introduced into the drama, even when the subject was romantic. Most of his lyrics exhibit the same exuberance that is found in his plays. Among the best of the latter are The Arraignment of Paris, 1584, The Old Wives Tale, 1595, and David and Bethsabe, 1599. (The dates are those of publication.)

Peele's collected works have been edited by A. H. Bullen in two volumes, 1888.

1 song written in parts.
2 Compare this with Shakespeare's song in Cymbeline.

SONG

(From The Arraignment of Paris)

Œnone. Fair and fair, and twice so fair,
As fair as any may be;
The fairest shepherd on our green,
A love for any lady.
Paris. Fair and fair, and twice so fair,
As fair as any may be;
Thy love is fair for thee alone,
And for no other lady.
Œn. My love is fair, my love is gay,
As fresh as bin the flowers in May,
And of my love my roundelay,
My merry, merry roundelay,
Concludes with Cupid's curse:
"They that do change old love for new,
Pray gods they change for worse!"
Ambo simul.[1] They that do change, etc.
Œn. My love can pipe, my love can sing,
My love can many a pretty thing,
And of his lovely praises ring
My merry, merry roundelays,
Amen to Cupid's curse:
"They that do change," etc.
Ambo. They that do change, etc.

HARVESTMEN A-SINGING

(From The Old Wives Tale)[2]

All ye that lovely lovers be,
Pray you for me.
Lo, here we come a-sowing, a-sowing,
And sow sweet fruits of love;
In your sweet hearts well may it prove!

Lo, here we come a-reaping, a-reaping,
To reap our harvest-fruit!
And thus we pass the year so long,
And never be we mute.

FAREWELL TO ARMS

His golden locks time hath to silver turned;
O time too swift, O swiftness never ceasing!
His youth 'gainst time and age hath ever spurned,
But spurned in vain; youth waneth by increasing:
Beauty, strength, youth are flowers but fading seen;
Duty, faith, love are roots, and ever green.

His helmet now shall make a hive for bees,
And, lovers' sonnets turned to holy psalms,
A man-at-arms must now serve on his knees,
And feed on prayers, which are age his alms:
But though from court to cottage he depart,
His saint is sure of his unspotted heart.

And when he saddest sits in homely cell,
He'll teach his swains this carol for a song:
"Blessed be the hearts that wish my sovereign well, Cursed be the souls that think her any wrong."
Goddess, allow this aged man his right,
To be your beadsman now that was your knight.

1 Both together.

2 The first stanza is sung when the harvestmen enter; the second, at the end of their scene, when they make their exit.

ROBERT GREENE

(1560?–1592)

Greene was a Cambridge man, who became a member of the madcap literary crew in London, leading a careless, tavern life, while turning out plays, miscellaneous prose works, and poems. Of his plays, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay, a companion piece to, perhaps a parody of, Marlowe's Faustus, is the best. Among his prose works, most striking are Pandosto (the source of Shakespeare's The Winter's Tale), Menaphon, and his last pamphlet, A Groat's-worth of Wit, bought with a Million of Repentance. His lyrics, introduced here and there in his prose writings, are among the best of the Elizabethan era.

SONG

(From The Farewell to Folly)

Sweet are the thoughts that savour of content;
The quiet mind is richer than a crown;
Sweet are the nights in careless slumber spent;
The poor estate scorns fortune's angry frown:
Such sweet content, such minds, such sleep, such bliss,
Beggars enjoy, when princes oft do miss.

The homely house that harbors quiet rest;
The cottage that affords no pride nor care;
The mean that 'grees with country music best;

The sweet consort of mirth and music's fare:
Obscured life sets down a type of bliss;
A mind content both crown and kingdom is.

PHILOMELA'S ODE

Sitting by a river's side,
Where a silent stream did glide,
Muse I did of many things,
That the mind in quiet brings.
I 'gan think how some men deem
Gold their god; and some esteem
Honor is the chief content
That to man in life is lent.
And some others do contend,
Quiet none like to a friend.
Others hold there is no wealth
Compared to a perfect health.
Some man's mind in quiet stands,
When he is lord of many lands.
But I did sigh, and said all this
Was but a shade of perfect bliss;
And in my thoughts I did approve,[1]
Nought so sweet as is true love.
Love 'twixt lovers passeth these,
When mouth kisseth and heart 'grees,
With folded arms and lips meeting,
Each soul another sweetly greeting;
For by the breath the soul fleeteth,
And soul with soul in kissing meeteth.
If love be so sweet a thing,
That such happy bliss doth bring,
Happy is love's sugared thrall,
But unhappy maidens all,
Who esteem your virgin blisses
Sweeter than a wife's sweet kisses.
No such quiet to the mind
As true Love with kisses kind;
But if a kiss prove unchaste,
Then is true love quite disgraced.
Though love be sweet, learn this of me,
No sweet love but honesty.

SEPHESTIA'S SONG TO HER CHILD

(From Menaphon)

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old there's grief enough for thee.
Mother's wag, pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy;
When thy father first did see
Such a boy by him and me,
He was glad, I was woe,
Fortune changed made him so,
When he left his pretty boy,
Last his sorrow, first his joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old there's grief enough for thee.
Streaming tears that never stint,
Like pearl drops from a flint,
Fell by course from his eyes,
That one another's [1] place supplies;
Thus he grieved in every part,
Tears of blood fell from his heart,
When he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old there's grief enough for thee.
The wanton smiled, father wept,
Mother cried, baby leapt;
More he crowed, more he cried,
Nature could not sorrow hide:
He must go, he must kiss
Child and mother, baby bless,
For he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.
Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old there's grief enough for thee.

MENAPHON'S SONG

(From Menaphon)

Some say Love,
Foolish Love,
Doth rule and govern all the gods:
I say Love,
Inconstant Love,
Sets men's senses far at odds.
Some swear Love,
Smooth-faced Love,
Is sweetest sweet that men can have:
I say Love,
Sour Love,
Makes virtue yield as beauty's slave.
A bitter sweet, a folly worst of all,
That forceth wisdom to be folly's thrall.

Love is sweet,
Wherein sweet?
In fading pleasures that do pain.
Beauty sweet:
Is that sweet
That yieldeth sorrow for a gain?

[1] prove.

[1] Referring to tears.

If Love's sweet,
Herein sweet,
That minute's joys are monthly woes:
'Tis not sweet,
That is sweet
Nowhere but where repentance grows.
Then love who list, if beauty be so sour;
Labor for me, Love rest in prince's bower.

THE SHEPHERD'S WIFE'S SONG

(From Menaphon)

Ah, what is love? It is a pretty thing,
As sweet unto a shepherd as a king;
And sweeter too:
For kings have cares that wait upon a crown,
And cares can make the sweetest love to frown.
Ah then, ah then,
If country loves such sweet desires do gain,
What lady would not love a shepherd swain?

His flocks are folded, he comes home at night,
As merry as a king in his delight;
And merrier too:
For kings bethink then what the state require,
Where shepherds careless carol by the fire.
Ah then, ah then,
If country loves such sweet desires do gain,
What lady would not love a shepherd swain?

He kisseth first, then sits as blithe to eat
His cream and curds as doth the king his meat;
And blither too:
For kings have often fears when they do sup,
Where shepherds dread no poison in their cup.
Ah then, ah then,
If country loves such sweet desires do gain,
What lady would not love a shepherd swain?

To bed he goes, as wanton then, I ween,
As is a king in dalliance with a queen;
More wanton too:
For kings have many griefs affects[1] to move,
Where shepherds have no greater grief than love.
Ah then, ah then,
If country loves such sweet desires do gain,
What lady would not love a shepherd swain?

Upon his couch of straw he sleeps as sound
As doth the king upon his bed of down;
More sounder too:
For cares cause kings full oft their sleep to spill,[1]
Where weary shepherds lie and snort[2] their fill.
Ah then, ah then,
If country loves such sweet desires do gain,
What lady would not love a shepherd swain?

Thus with his wife he spends the year as blithe
As doth the king at every tide or sithe;[3]
And blither too:
For kings have wars and broils to take in hand,
Where shepherds laugh and love upon the land.
Ah then, ah then,
If country loves such sweet desires do gain,
What lady would not love a shepherd swain?

1 affections.

ANONYMOUS

CRABBED AGE AND YOUTH

(From The Passionate Pilgrim, 1599)

Crabbed Age and Youth
Cannot live together:
Youth is full of pleasance,
Age is full of care;
Youth like summer morn,
Age like winter weather;
Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport,
Age's breath is short;
Youth is nimble, Age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and Age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee;
O, my Love, my Love is young!
Age, I do defy thee:
O, sweet shepherd, hie thee!
For methinks thou stay'st too long.

HEY NONNY NO!

Hey nonny no!
Men are fools that wish to die!
Is't not fine to dance and sing,
When the bells of death do ring?
Is't not fine to swim in wine,
And turn upon the toe,
And sing hey nonny no,
When the winds blow and the seas flow?
Hey nonny no!

1 kill. 2 snore. 3 occasion.

BACK AND SIDE, GO BARE, GO BARE

(From Gammer Gurton's Needle)

Back and side, go bare, go bare,
Both foot and hand go cold;
But, belly, God send thee good ale enough,
Whether it be new or old.

I cannot eat but little meat,
My stomach is not good;
But, sure, I think that I can drink
With him that wears a hood.
Though I go bare, take ye no care,
I am nothing a-cold;
I stuff my skin so full within
Of jolly good ale and old.

Back and side, go bare, go bare, etc.

I love no roast, but a nut-brown toast,
And a crab [1] laid in the fire;
A little bread shall do me stead,
Much bread I not desire.
No frost nor snow, no wind, I trow,
Can hurt me if i[t] would,
I am so wrapt and throughly lapt
Of jolly good ale and old.

Back and side, go bare, go bare, etc.

And Tib, my wife, that as her life
Loveth well good ale to seek,
Full oft drinks she till ye may see
The tears run down her cheek;
Then doth she trowl [2] to me the bowl,
Even as malt-worm [3] should,
And saith, "Sweetheart, I took my part
Of this jolly good ale and old."

Back and side, go bare, go bare, etc.

Now let them drink till they nod and wink,
Even as good fellows should do;
They shall not miss to have the bliss
Good ale doth bring men to.
And all poor souls that have scoured [4] bowls,
Or have them lustily trowled,
God save the lives of them and their wives,
Whether they be young or old.

Back and side, go bare, go bare, etc.

1 apple. 2 pass. 3 toper.
4 worn smooth.

SAMUEL DANIEL (1562–1619)

Daniel, a court poet, reached his highest achievement in his Epistles and his series of sonnets to Delia, in which he followed the tradition of Petrarch, Marot and the French Pléiade of writing a "sonnet-sequence" to his beloved. Some of his sonnets show unusual skill, but they fall short of the sequences written by Sidney, Spenser, and Shakespeare. His History of the Civil Wars between York and Lancaster, 1604, is a very long, matter-of-fact account of the Wars of the Roses. To the contemporary discussion about English versification Daniel contributed an essay, A Defense of Rhyme, 1603.

LOVE IS A SICKNESS

Love is a sickness full of woes,
All remedies refusing;
A plant that with most cutting grows,
Most barren with best using.
Why so?
More we enjoy it, more it dies;
If not enjoyed, it sighing cries —
Heigh ho!

Love is a torment of the mind,
A tempest everlasting;
And Jove hath made it of a kind
Not well, nor full nor fasting.
Why so?
More we enjoy it, more it dies;
If not enjoyed, it sighing cries —
Heigh ho!

TO THE LADY MARGARET, COUNTESS OF CUMBERLAND

He that of such a height hath built his mind,
And reared the dwelling of his thoughts so strong,
As neither fear nor hope can shake the frame
Of his resolved powers; nor all the wind
Of vanity or malice pierce to wrong
His settled peace, or to disturb the same,
What a fair seat hath he, from whence he may
The boundless wastes and wilds of man survey!

And with how free an eye doth he look down
Upon these lower regions of turmoil!
Where all the storms of passion mainly beat
On flesh and blood; where honor, power, renown
Are only gay afflictions, golden toil;
Where greatness stands upon as feeble feet

As frailty doth, and only great doth seem
To little minds, who do it so esteem.

He looks upon the mightiest monarch's wars
But only as on stately robberies;
Where evermore the fortune that prevails
Must be the right: the ill-succeeding mars
The fairest and the best-faced enterprise.
Great pirate Pompey lesser pirates quails:
Justice, he sees, (as if seduced) still
Conspires with power, whose cause must not be ill.

He sees the face of right t' appear as manifold
As are the passions of uncertain man;
Who puts it in all colors, all attires,
To serve his ends and make his courses hold.
He sees, that let deceit work what it can,
Plot and contrive base ways to high desires,
That the all-guiding Providence doth yet
All disappoint, and mocks this smoke of wit.

Nor is he moved with all the thunder cracks
Of tyrants' threats, or with the surly brow
Of Power, that proudly sits on others' crimes,
Charged with more crying sins than those he checks.
The storms of sad confusion, that may grow
Up in the present for the coming times,
Appal not him, that hath no side at all
But of himself, and knows the worst can fall.

Although his heart (so near allied to earth)
Cannot but pity the perplexed state
Of troublous and distressed mortality,
That thus make way unto the ugly birth
Of their own sorrows, and do still beget
Affliction upon imbecility;
Yet seeing thus the course of things must run
He looks thereon not strange, but as foredone.

And whilst distraught ambition compasses,
And is encompassed; whilst as craft deceives,
And is deceived; whilst man doth ransack man,
And builds on blood, and rises by distress;
And th' inheritance of desolation leaves
To great-expecting hopes: he looks thereon
As from the shore of peace, with unwet eye,
And bears no venture in impiety.

SONNETS

(From Delia)

51

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night
Brother to Death, in silent darkness born,
Relieve my languish, and restore the light;
With dark forgetting of my care, return,
And let the day be time enough to mourn
The shipwreck of my ill-adventured youth;
Let waking eyes suffice to wail their scorn,
Without the torment of the night's untruth.
Cease, dreams, the images of day-desires,
To model forth the passions of the morrow;
Never let rising sun approve you liars,
To add more grief to aggravate my sorrow.
Still let me sleep, embracing clouds in vain,
And never wake to feel the day's disdain.

52

Let others sing of Knights and Paladins
In aged accents and untimely words;
Paint shadows in imaginary lines
Which well the reach of their high wits records:
But I must sing of thee, and those fair eyes
Authentic shall my verse in time to come;
When yet th' unborn shall say, "Lo where she lies Whose beauty made him speak that else was dumb."
These are the arcs, the trophies I erect,
That fortify thy name against old age;
And these thy sacred virtues must protect Against the dark, and Time's consuming rage.
Though the error of my youth in them appear,
Suffice they show I lived and loved thee dear.

MICHAEL DRAYTON
(1563–1631)

Although Drayton collaborated with some of the dramatists of his day, his fame rests upon the large body of poetry that he produced. Chief among his many works are England's Heroical Epistles, 1598; Poems, Lyric and Heroic, 1606, in which some of his best ballads appeared; Nymphidia; Idea, a sonnet-sequence; and his masterpiece, Polyolbion, 1612–1622, a vigorous description of the topography and history of England.

Drayton was fired with love for England, and at his best expresses this ardor in genuine poetry, even when keeping severely to facts, as was his custom.

SONNETS

(From Idea)

TO THE READER OF THESE SONNETS

to these loves, who but for passion looks,
t this first sight, here let him lay them by,
nd seek elsewhere in turning other books,
'hich better may his labor satisfy.
o far-fetched sigh shall ever wound my breast;
ove from mine eye a tear shall never wring;
or in "Ah me's!" my whining sonnets drest!
libertine! fantastically I sing!
y verse is the true image of my mind,
ver in motion, still desiring change;
nd as thus, to variety inclined,
in all humors sportively I range!
y Muse is rightly of the English strain, hat cannot long one fashion entertain.

24

hear some say, "This man is not in love!"
Who! can he love? a likely thing!" they say.
Read but his verse, and it will easily prove!"
, judge not rashly, gentle Sir, I pray!
ecause I loosely trifle in this sort,
s one that fain his sorrows would beguile,
ou now suppose me, all this time, in sport,
nd please yourself with this conceit the while.
e shallow Censures! sometimes, see ye not,
n greatest perils some men pleasant be?
here Fame by death is only to be got,
hey resolute! So stands the case with me.
here other men in depth of passion cry,
laugh at Fortune, as in jest to die!

44

hilst thus my pen strives to eternize thee,
ge rules my lines with wrinkles in my face,
here, in the map of all my misery,
s modeled out the world of my disgrace;
hilst in despite of tyrannizing times,
Medea-like,[1] I make thee young again,
roudly thou scorn'st my world-outwearing rimes,
nd murder'st Virtue with thy coy disdain!
nd though in youth my youth untimely perish
o keep thee from oblivion and the grave,
Ensuing ages yet my rimes shall cherish,
Where I entombed, my better part shall save;
And though this earthly body fade and die,
My name shall mount upon Eternity!

[1] Medea could restore a person's youth.

61

Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part, —
Nay I have done, you get no more of me;
And I am glad, yea, glad with all my heart,
That thus so cleanly I myself can free.
Shake hands for ever, cancel all our vows,
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows
That we one jot of former love retain!
Now at the last gasp of Love's latest breath,
When his pulse failing, Passion speechless lies,
When Faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
And Innocence is closing up his eyes,
— Now if thou would'st, when all have given him over,
From death to life thou might'st him yet recover!

ODE XI

This, and the succeeding ode, are from the Ballad of Agincourt.

TO THE VIRGINIAN VOYAGE

You brave heroic minds,
Worthy your country's name,
That honor still pursue;
Go and subdue!
Whilst loitering hinds
Lurk here at home with shame.

Britons, you stay too long;
Quickly aboard bestow you!
And with a merry gale
Swell your stretched sail,
With vows as strong
As the winds that blow you!

Your course securely steer,
West-and-by-south forth keep!
Rocks, lee-shores, nor shoals,
When Eolus scowls,
You need not fear,
So absolute the deep.

And, cheerfully at sea,
Success you still entice,
To get the pearl and gold;
And ours to hold,
Virginia,
Earth's only Paradise.

Where Nature hath in store
Fowl, venison, and fish;
And the fruitful'st soil,
Without your toil,
Three harvests more,
All greater than your wish.

And the ambitious vine
Crowns with his purple mass
The cedar reaching high
To kiss the sky,
The cypress pine,
And useful sassafras.

To whom, the Golden Age
Still Nature's laws doth give:
Nor other cares attend,
But them to defend
From winter's rage,
That long there doth not live.

When as the luscious smell
Of that delicious land,
Above the seas that flows,
The clear wind throws,
Your hearts to swell,
Approaching the dear strand.

In kenning[1] of the shore
(Thanks to God first given!)
O you, the happiest men,
Be frolic then!
Let cannons roar,
Frightening the wide heaven!

And in regions far,
Such heroes bring ye forth
As those from whom we came!
And plant our name
Under that star
Not known unto our North!

And as there plenty grows,
The laurel everywhere,
Apollo's sacred tree
You may it see
A poet's brows
To crown, that may sing there.

Thy Voyages attend,
Industrious Hakluyt![2]
Whose reading shall inflame
Men to seek fame;
And much commend
To after times thy wit.

1 recognition.
2 Richard Hakluyt (1553?–1616), a clergyman, whose thrilling collection of voyages inspired English explorers and men of letters.

ODE XII

TO THE CAMBRO-BRITONS[1] AND THEIR HAI
HIS BALLAD OF AGINCOURT

Fair stood the wind for France,
When we our sails advance;
Nor now to prove our chance
Longer will tarry;
But putting to the main,
At Caux, the mouth of Seine,
With all his martial train
Landed King Harry.[2]

And taking many a fort,
Furnished in warlike sort,
Marcheth towards Agincourt
In happy hour;
Skirmishing, day by day,
With those that stopped his way,
Where the French general lay
With all his power.

Which, in his height of pride,
King Henry to deride,
His ransom to provide,
To the King sending;
Which he neglects the while,
As from a nation vile,
Yet, with an angry smile,
Their fall portending.

And turning to his men,
Quoth our brave Henry then:
"Though they to one be ten
Be not amazed!
Yet have we well begun;
Battles so bravely won
Have ever to the sun
By Fame been raised!

"And for myself," quoth he,
"This my full rest[3] shall be:
England ne'er mourn for me,
Nor more esteem me!
Victor I will remain,
Or on this earth lie slain;
Never shall she sustain
Loss to redeem me!

"Poitiers and Cressy tell,
When most their pride did swell,
Under our swords they fell.
No less our skill is,
Than when our grandsire great,
Claiming the regal seat,
By many a warlike feat
Lopped the French lilies."

1 The Welsh. 2 Henry V. 3 decision.

The Duke of York so dread
The eager vanward led;
With the main, Henry sped
Amongst his henchmen.
Exeter had the rear,
A braver man not there!
O Lord, how hot they were
On the false Frenchmen!

They now to fight are gone,
Armor on armor shone,
Drum now to drum did groan;
To hear, was wonder;
That, with the cries they make,
The very earth did shake;
Trumpet to trumpet spake;
Thunder to thunder.

Well it thine age became,
O noble Erpingham,
Which didst the signal aim
To our hid forces!
When from a meadow by,
Like a storm suddenly,
The English archery
Stuck the French horses.

With Spanish yew so strong,
Arrows a cloth-yard long,
That like to serpents stung,
Piercing the weather.
None from his fellow starts;
But, playing manly parts,
And like true English hearts,
Stuck close together.

When down their bows they threw,
And forth their bilboes [1] drew,
And on the French they flew:
Not one was tardy.
Arms were from shoulders sent,
Scalps to the teeth were rent,
Down the French peasants went;
Our men were hardy.

This while our noble King,
His broad sword brandishing,
Down the French host did ding,[2]
As to o'erwhelm it;
And many a deep wound lent,
His arms with blood besprent,
And many a cruel dent
Bruised his helmet.

Gloucester, that duke so good,
Next of the royal blood,
For famous England stood,
With his brave brother.
Clarence, in steel so bright,
Though but a maiden knight,
Yet in that furious fight
Scarce such another!

Warwick in blood did wade,
Oxford, the foe invade,
And cruel slaughter made,
Still as they ran up.
Suffolk his axe did ply;
Beaumont and Willoughby
Bare them right doughtily,
Ferrers, and Fanhope.

Upon Saint Crispin's Day
Fought was this noble Fray;[1]
Which Fame did not delay
To England to carry.
O when shall English men
With such acts fill a pen?
Or England breed again
Such a King Harry?

1 swords. 2 strike.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE
(1564–1593)

Marlowe, the greatest dramatist of his time, was born in Canterbury in 1564, the son of a shoemaker. He was educated at the King's School, Canterbury, and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he held a scholarship from 1581 to 1587, receiving both the bachelor's and the master's degrees. When he went to London is not known, but by 1587 he had produced the first part of Tamburlaine and made himself a powerful influence in English drama. Then followed in quick succession the second part of Tamburlaine, Faustus, The Jew of Malta, and Edward II, Marlowe's four great plays. The Massacre of Paris and The Tragedy of Dido, the latter written with Nash, are below his standard. It is possible likewise that he had a hand in the second and third parts of Shakespeare's Henry VI, and a smaller share in Titus Andronicus. His non-dramatic works include translations of Ovid and Lucan, splendid miscellaneous poems, and the well-known Hero and Leander, completed by Chapman after Marlowe's death.

Little is known of Marlowe's life aside from his writings, which are biography enough. That he was a dissolute, social outcast is not to be believed. His association with Sir Walter Raleigh, Kyd, and other liberal and speculative minds gave him the reputation of being an atheist. In 1593, because of his views, a warrant was issued for his arrest. Marlowe left London for Deptford where he was killed in a tavern quarrel by Ingram Frizer.

1 October 25, 1415.

Dead at twenty-nine, he had greatly surpassed as a poet and playwright all his contemporaries, including Shakespeare, who was exactly his age. In his fluent handling of blank verse, which he established as the vehicle of expression in the drama, in his incisive character studies, his vivid imagination, and exuberant lyrical power, he was supreme. To-day he is second only to Shakespeare in the history of English drama.

Marlowe's best plays are printed in the Mermaid Series, edited by Havelock Ellis, with an introduction by J. A. Symonds.

THE PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE

There is a version of this famous song in The Passionate Pilgrim and other Sonnets, 1599, ascribed to Shakespeare. The poem presented here appeared in England's Helicon, 1600, with Marlowe's name attached, seven years after his death.

Come live with me, and be my love;
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
Woods, or steepy mountain yields.

And we will sit upon the rocks,
Seeing the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle;

A gown made of the finest wool
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair-lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;

A belt of straw and ivy-buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
An if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me, and be my love.

The shepherd-swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May morning;
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love.

THOMAS NASH
(1567–1601)

Thomas Nash, a Cambridge graduate, had a restless, pleasure-loving nature, a keen mind and a keener tongue, and a gift for expression. The result was a Bohemian life in London; poverty; many enemies, because of his satires among the Puritans and at court; imprisonment; but the friendship of men like Greene, and some splendid pages of prose and verse. His reputation to-day is based upon his poems and The Unfortunate Traveller, or, The Life of Jack Wilton, 1594, a realistic tale important in the history of the picaresque novel.

SPRING

Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year's pleasant king;
Then blooms each thing, then maids dance in a ring,
Cold doth not sting, the pretty birds do sing.
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!

The palm [1] and may [2] make country houses gay,
Lambs frisk and play, the shepherds pipe all day,
And we hear aye birds tune this merry lay,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo.

The fields breathe sweet, the daisies kiss our feet,
Young lovers meet, old wives a-sunning sit,
In every street these tunes our ears do greet,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!
Spring! the sweet Spring!

LITANY IN TIME OF PLAGUE

Adieu, farewell earth's bliss!
This world uncertain is;
Fond [3] are life's lustful joys,
Death proves them all but toys.
None from his darts can fly;
I am sick, I must die —
Lord, have mercy on us!

Rich men, trust not in wealth,
Gold cannot buy you health;
Physic himself must fade;
All things to end are made;
The plague full swift goes by;
I am sick, I must die —
Lord, have mercy on us.

1 the American pussy-willow.
2 hawthorn. 3 foolish.

Beauty is but a flower,
Which wrinkles will devour;
Brightness falls from the air;
Queens have died young and fair;
Dust hath closed Helen's eye;
I am sick, I must die —
  Lord, have mercy on us!

Strength stoops unto the grave,
Worms feed on Hector brave;
Swords may not fight with fate;
Earth still holds ope her gate;
"Come, come!" the bells do cry;
I am sick, I must die —
  Lord, have mercy on us!

Wit with his wantonness
Tasteth death's bitterness;
Hell's executioner
Hath no ears for her to hear
What vain art can reply;
I am sick, I must die —
  Lord, have mercy on us!

Haste therefore each degree
To welcome destiny;
Heaven is our heritage,
Earth but a player's stage.
Mount we unto the sky;
I am sick, I must die —
  Lord, have mercy on us!

THOMAS CAMPION (d. 1619)

Campion, a graduate of Cambridge University, showed marked ability as a student of the law, as a doctor of medicine, and as a musician. As a poet he is second to few as a writer of exquisite verses after the manner of Horace and Catullus.

MY SWEETEST LESBIA

My sweetest Lesbia, let us live and love;
And though the sager sort our deeds reprove,
Let us not weigh them: heaven's great lamps do dive
Into their west, and straight again revive:
But soon as once set is our little light,
Then must we sleep one ever-during night.

If all would lead their lives in love like me,
Then bloody swords and armor should not be;
No drum nor trumpet peaceful sleeps should move,
Unless alarm came from the camp of love:
But fools do live, and waste their little light,
And seek with pain their ever-during night.

When timely death my life and fortune ends,
Let not my hearse be vexed with mourning friends;
But let all lovers, rich in triumph, come
And with sweet pastimes grace my happy tomb:
And, Lesbia, close up thou my little light,
And crown with love my ever-during night.

WHEN TO HER LUTE CORINNA SINGS

When to her lute Corinna sings,
Her voice revives the leaden strings,
And doth in highest notes appear,
As any challenged echo clear;
But when she doth of mourning speak,
E'en with her sighs the strings do break.

And as her lute doth live or die,
Led by her passion, so must I!
For when of pleasure she doth sing,
My thoughts enjoy a sudden spring;
But if she doth of sorrow speak,
Ev'n from my heart the strings do break.

WHETHER MEN DO LAUGH OR WEEP

Whether men do laugh or weep,
Whether they do wake or sleep,
Whether they die young or old,
Whether they feel heat or cold;
There is, underneath the sun,
Nothing in true earnest done.

All our pride is but a jest;
None are worst, and none are best;
Grief and joy, and hope and fear,
Play their pageants everywhere:
Vain opinion all doth sway,
And the world is but a play.

Powers above in clouds do sit,
Mocking our poor apish wit;
That so lamely, with such state,
Their high glory imitate:
No ill can be felt but pain,
And that happy men disdain.

VAIN MEN, WHOSE FOLLIES MAKE A GOD OF LOVE

Vain men, whose follies make a god of Love,
Whose blindness beauty doth immortal deem;
Praise not what you desire but what you prove,
Count those things good that are, not those that seem:
I cannot call her true that's false to me,
Nor make of women more than women be.

How fair an entrance breaks the way to love!
How rich of golden hope and gay delight!
What heart cannot a modest beauty move?
Who, seeing clear day once, will dream of night?
She seemed a saint, that brake her faith with me,
But proved a woman as all other be.

So bitter is their sweet that true content
Unhappy men in them may never find:
Ah! but without them none. Both must consent,
Else uncouth[1] are the joys of either kind.
Let us then praise their good, forget their ill!
Men must be men, and women women still.

NEVER LOVE UNLESS YOU CAN

Never love unless you can
Bear with all the faults of man:
Men sometimes will jealous be,
Though but little cause they see;
And hang the head, as discontent,
And speak what straight they will repent.

Men that but one saint adore,
Make a show of love to more:
Beauty must be scorned in none,
Though but truly served in one:
For what is courtship, but disguise?
True hearts may have dissembling eyes.

Men when their affairs require,
Must a while themselves retire:
Sometimes hunt, and sometimes hawk,
And not ever sit and talk.
If these, and such like you can bear,
Then like, and love, and never fear!

1 unknown.

CHERRY RIPE

There is a garden in her face,
Where roses and white lilies grow;
A heavenly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do flow.
There cherries grow, which none may buy
Till "Cherry ripe" themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do enclose
Of orient pearl a double row;
Which when her lovely laughter shows,
They look like rosebuds filled with snow.
Yet them nor peer nor prince can buy
Till "Cherry ripe" themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
Her brows like bended bows do stand,
Threatening with piercing frowns to kill
All that attempt, with eye or hand,
Those sacred cherries to come nigh
Till "Cherry ripe" themselves do cry.

CHANCE AND CHANGE

What if a day, or a month, or a year,
Crown thy delights, with a thousand sweet contentings?
Cannot a chance of a night, or an hour,
Cross thy desires, with as many sad tormentings?
Fortune, honor, beauty, youth,
Are but blossoms dying!
Wanton pleasure, doting love,
Are but shadows flying!
All our joys are but toys,
Idle thoughts deceiving;
None have power of an hour
In their life's bereaving.

Earth's but a point to the world; and a man
Is but a point to the world's compared center!
Shall, then, a point of a point be so vain
As to triumph in a silly point's adventure?
All is hazard that we have!
There is nothing biding!
Days of pleasure are like streams,
Through fair meadows gliding!
Weal and woe, Time doth go!
Time is never turning!
Secret fates guide our states;
Both in mirth and mourning!

JOHN FLETCHER
(1579–1625)

Fletcher, the son of a clergyman, was a graduate of Cambridge. In London he became associated with Beaumont, living with him, according to tradition, "on the Bankside, not far from the Play-house." Here they turned out a long series of popular and able plays. After Beaumont's retirement Fletcher collaborated with other dramatists, especially Shakespeare, Jonson, and Massinger. He died during the plague of 1625.

Fletcher's rank as a playwright is high, both in comedy and in tragedy, as a collaborator and alone. With Beaumont, he introduced a new era in English drama, during which they enjoyed a vogue greater than Shakespeare himself. He is, besides, an individual poet, with a genuine lyric note.

MELANCHOLY
(From The Nice Valour)

Hence, all you vain delights,
As short as are the nights
Wherein you spend your folly!
There's nought in this life sweet,
If man were wise to see't,
But only melancholy;
O sweetest melancholy!

Welcome, folded arms and fixed eyes,
A sigh that piercing mortifies,
A look that's fastened to the ground,
A tongue chained up without a sound!
Fountain heads and pathless groves,
Places which pale passion loves!
Moonlight walks, when all the fowls
Are warmly housed, save bats and owls!

A midnight bell, a parting groan,
These are the sounds we feed upon.
Then stretch our bones in a still gloomy valley;
Nothing's so dainty sweet as lovely melancholy.

INVOCATION TO SLEEP
(From Valentinian)

Gentle-charming Sleep, thou easer of all woes,
Brother to Death, sweetly thyself dispose
On this afflicted prince; fall like a cloud,
In gentle showers; give nothing that is loud
Or painful to his slumbers; — easy, light,
And as a purling stream, thou son of Night,
Pass by his troubled senses; sing his pain
Like hollow murmuring wind or silver rain;
Into this prince gently, oh, gently slide,
And kiss him into slumbers like a bride!

ASPATIA'S SONG
(From The Maid's Tragedy)

Lay a garland on my hearse
Of the dismal yew;
Maidens, willow branches bear;
Say, I died true.

My love was false, but I was firm
From my hour of birth.
Upon my buried body lie
Lightly, gentle earth!

SONG TO BACCHUS
(From Valentinian)

God Lyæus [1] ever young,
Ever honored, ever sung;
Stained with blood of lusty grapes,
In a thousand lusty shapes,
Dance upon the mazer's [2] brim,
In the crimson liquor swim;
From thy plenteous hand divine
Let a river run with wine;
God of youth, let this day here
Enter neither care nor fear!

DRINK TO-DAY
(From The Bloody Brother)

Drink to-day, and drown all sorrow;
You shall perhaps not do it to-morrow:
Best, while you have it, use your breath;
There is no drinking after death.

Wine works the heart up, wakes the wit,
There is no cure 'gainst age but it:
It helps the headache, cough, and phthisic,
And is for all diseases physic.

Then let us swill, boys, for our health;
Who drinks well, loves the commonwealth.
And he that will to bed go sober
Falls with the leaf still in October.

AWAY, DELIGHTS!
(From The Captain)

Away, delights! go seek some other dwelling,
For I must die.
Farewell, false love! thy tongue is ever telling Lie after lie.

1 Bacchus. 2 cup's.

Forever let me rest now from thy smarts;
Alas, for pity go
And fire their hearts
That have been hard to thee! Mine was not so.

Never again deluding love shall know me,
For I will die;
And all those griefs that think to overgrow me
Shall be as I.
Forever will I sleep, while poor maids cry:
"Alas, for pity stay,
And let us die
With thee! Men cannot mock us in the clay."

WEEP NO MORE

(From The Queen of Corinth)

Weep no more, nor sigh, nor groan,
Sorrow calls no time that's gone;
Violets plucked the sweetest rain
Makes not fresh nor grow again;
Trim thy locks, look cheerfully;
Fate's hid ends eyes cannot see;
Joys as winged dreams fly fast,
Why should sadness longer last?
Grief is but a wound to woe;
Gentlest fair, mourn, mourn no mo.

LOVE'S EMBLEMS

(From Valentinian)

Now the lusty spring is seen;
Golden yellow, gaudy blue,
Daintily invite the view;
Everywhere on every green,
Roses blushing as they blow,[1]
And enticing men to pull
Lilies whiter than the snow,
Woodbines of sweet honey full:
All love's emblems, and all cry,
"Ladies, if not plucked, we die."

Yet the lusty spring hath stayed;
Blushing red and purest white
Daintily to love invite
Every woman, every maid.
Cherries kissing as they grow,
And inviting men to taste,
Apples even ripe below,
Winding gently to the waist:
All love's emblems, and all cry,
"Ladies, if not plucked, we die."

1 bloom.

FRANCIS BEAUMONT
(1584?–1616)

Beaumont, the son of a knight, was a student for a while at Oxford. He left the university upon his father's death and soon thereafter was admitted to the Inner Temple. After four or five years in London he entered upon the splendid collaboration with Fletcher, in which each seemed to supplement the other in fashioning effective poetic plays. This partnership lasted about eight years, when Beaumont retired from the theater, possibly because of his marriage. He died in 1616, at thirty-two, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

ON THE TOMBS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Mortality, behold and fear!
What a change of flesh is here!
Think how many royal bones
Sleep within this heap of stones;
Here they lie had realms and lands,
Who now want strength to stir their hands;
Where from their pulpits sealed with dust
They preach, "In greatness is no trust."
Here's an acre sown indeed
With the richest royal'st seed
That the earth did e'er suck in,
Since the first man died for sin;
Here the bones of birth have cried,
"Though gods they were, as men they died."
Here are sands, ignoble things,
Dropt from the ruined sides of kings.
Here's a world of pomp and state,
Buried in dust, once dead by fate.

MASTER FRANCIS BEAUMONT'S LETTER TO BEN JONSON

The sun (which doth the greatest comfort bring
To absent friends, because the selfsame thing
They know they see, however absent) is Here our best haymaker! Forgive me this;
It is our country's style! In this warm shine
I lie and dream of your full Mermaid Wine
Oh, we have water mixed with claret lees,
Drink apt to bring in drier heresies
Than beer, good only for the sonnet's strain
With fustian metaphors to stuff the brain;
So mixed, that, given to the thirstiest one,
'Twill not prove alms, unless he have the stone.

think that with one draught man's invention fades,
Two cups had quite spoiled Homer's Iliades.
'Tis liquor that will find out Sutcliff's wit,
Lie where he will, and make him write worse yet.
Filled with such moisture, in most grievous qualms,
Did Robert Wisdom write his singing psalms;
And so must I do this: And yet I think
It is a potion sent us down to drink,
By special Providence, keeps us from fights,
Makes us not laugh when we make legs[1] to knights.
'Tis this that keeps our minds fit for our states,
A medicine to obey our magistrates:
For we do live more free than you; no hate,
No envy at one another's happy state,
Moves us; we are all equal; every whit
Of land that God gives men here is their wit,
If we consider fully; for our best
And gravest man will with his main housejest,
Scarce please you; we want subtlety to do
The city-tricks, lie, hate, and flatter too.
Here are none that can bear a painted show,
Strike when you wink, and then lament the blow;
Who, like mills set the right way for to grind,
Can make their gains alike with every wind:
Only some fellows, with the subtlest pate
Amongst us, may perchance equivocate
At selling of a horse, and that's the most.
Methinks the little wit I had is lost
Since I saw you! For wit is like a rest
Held up at tennis, which men do the best
With the best gamesters. What things have we seen Done at the Mermaid! heard words that have been
So nimble and so full of subtle flame,
As if that every one from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest
And had resolved to live a fool the rest
Of his dull life! Then, when there hath been thrown Wit able enough to justify the town
For three days past! Wit, that might warrant be
For the whole city to talk foolishly
Till that were cancelled! And, when we were gone,
We left an air behind us, which alone
Was able to make the two next companies
Right witty! though but downright fools, more wise!
When I remember this, and see that now
The country gentlemen begin to allow
My wit for dry bobs;[1] then I needs must cry,
"I see my days of ballading grow nigh!"
I can already riddle; and can sing
Catches, sell bargains; and I fear shall bring Myself to speak the hardest words I find
Over as oft as any, with one wind,
That takes no medicines! But one thought of thee Makes me remember all these things to be
The wit of our young men, fellows that show
No part of good, yet utter all they know!
Who, like trees of the guard, have growing souls.
Only strong Destiny, which all controls,
I hope hath left a better fate in store
For me, thy friend, than to live ever poor,
Banished unto this home! Fate, once again,
Bring me to thee, who canst make smooth and plain
The way of knowledge for me; and then I,
Who have no good but in thy company,
Protest it will my greatest comfort be
To acknowledge all I have to flow from thee!
Ben, when these scenes are perfect, we'll taste wine!
I'll drink thy Muse's health! thou shalt quaff mine!

1 bow.

1 jests.

JOHN WEBSTER
(1580?–1625?)

Scarcely anything is known with certainty of Webster's life. The few plays that are definitely his, and his collaboration with other playwrights, give him a well-merited place among the great Elizabethan dramatists. His famous play, The Duchess of Malfi, published in 1623, is considered by many the greatest tragedy since Shakespeare. Assuredly it is a worthy successor, among blood-and-thunder plays, to The Spanish Tragedy and to Hamlet. Webster had genuine dramatic insight. He was also endowed with a rare gift for lyrical expression, which he used in his tragedies as well as in his poems.

VANITAS VANITATUM

All the flowers of the spring
Meet to perfume our burying;
These have but their growing prime,
And man does flourish but his time:

Survey our progress from our birth, —
We are set, we grow, we turn to earth.
Courts adieu, and all delights,
All bewitching appetites!
Sweetest breath and clearest eye
Like perfumes go out and die;
And consequently this is done
As shadows wait upon the sun.
Vain the ambition of kings
Who seek by trophies and dead things
To leave a living name behind,
And weave but nets to catch the wind.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE (1564–1616)

The known facts in Shakespeare's life may be briefly summarized. He was born in Stratford-on-Avon, and was baptized in the village church there, on April 26, 1564. The assumption is that he was born a few days before. It is assumed, too, that he attended the free grammar school in Stratford. The next fact is the record of the marriage license issued to the future dramatist and Anne Hathaway on November 28, 1582. Shakespeare was eighteen years old, Anne, twenty-six. Of the marriage there is no record. Their first child, Susanna, was baptized in May, 1583. In February, 1585, their only other children, Hamnet and Judith, twins, were baptized. During the next year, 1586, Shakespeare, it is assumed, went to London. What his first employment was is not known. From remarks by Greene in his Groatsworth of Wit, we know that by 1592 he had made a reputation as a dramatist. In 1593, Venus and Adonis, and in 1594, Lucrece, were entered at Stationers' Hall. By 1594, Shakespeare had won recognition as an actor. (Acting, it should be remembered, was more remunerative in Elizabethan times than playwriting.) In that year, as a member of the Lord Chamberlain's Company, he acted before the Queen. In 1596, his son Hamnet died. In 1597, he bought the largest place in Stratford. In 1598, he acted in Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour, along with Heminge, Condell, Kempe, and Burbage; and in the same year his first published plays, Richard II and Love's Labour's Lost, appeared in quarto editions. In 1599, he was granted a coat of arms by the College of Heralds. About this time he was made a shareholder in the Lord Chamberlain's Company. From now on, Shakespeare's name appears in numerous business agreements, dealing mainly with the acquisition of real estate in London. In 1609, his Sonnets were published; and in the same year he evidently gave up acting. About 1611, it seems, he retired to Stratford, disposing of his shares in the theater. With the exception of his probable collaboration with Fletcher in Henry VIII and in The Two Noble Kinsmen, he wrote no more. He died on April 23, 1616, and was buried in the church at Stratford.

Such are the main facts, few enough, that we have concerning Shakespeare's life. More important, however, is the legacy of plays he has left us: the richest single contribution to any drama. The plays are of unequal value, but the best have never been surpassed. They may be roughly divided into four groups, or periods: his apprenticeship (1590–93); the comedies (1594–1600); the great tragedies (1600–09), and the period of his "dramatic romances" (1610–12). A table, based on that in Neilson and Thorndike's The Facts about Shakespeare, with the dates which are commonly accepted, follows:

| | COMEDIES | HISTORIES | TRAGEDIES |
|---|---|---|---|
| I. | Love's Labour's Lost (1591)Comedy of Errors (1591)Two Gentlemen of Verona (1591–92) | 1 Henry VI* (1590–91)2 Henry VI* (1590–92)3 Henry VI* (1590–92)Richard III (1593)John (1593) | Titus Andronicus* (1593–94) |
| II. | Midsummer-Night's Dream (1594–95)Merchant of Venice (1595–96)Taming of the Shrew* (1596–97)Merry Wives of Windsor (1598)Much Ado about Nothing (1599)As You Like It (1599–1600) | Richard II (1595)1 Henry IV (1597)2 Henry IV (1598)Henry V (1599) | Romeo and Juliet (1594–95) |
| III. | Twelfth Night (1601)Troilus and Cressida (1601–02)All's Well that Ends Well (1602)Measure for Measure (1603)Pericles* (1607–08) | | Julius Cæsar (1599–1601)Hamlet (1602–03)Othello (1604)King Lear (1605–06)Macbeth (1606)Timon of Athens* (1607)Antony and Cleopatra (1607–08)Coriolanus (1609) |
| IV. | Cymbeline (1610)The Winter's Tale (1611)The Tempest (1611)The Two Noble Kinsmen* (1613) | Henry VIII* (1613) | |

* Written (it is supposed) in collaboration with others.

The selections given below illustrate only Shakespeare the poet, the greatest lyric poet of his y.

The most convenient and trustworthy handbook about Shakespeare is Neilson and Thorndike's he Facts about Shakespeare (Macmillan). Among the many books about Shakespeare's life and t, the reader should consult those by G. P. Baker, A. C. Bradley, G. Brandes, E. Dowden, Lee, B. Matthews, and B. Wendell. Coleridge, Hazlitt, and Lamb wrote stimulating and ppreciative essays on various phases of Shakespeare's plays. The most recent biography is by Quincy Adams (Houghton Mifflin Company).

SONNETS

Shakespeare's sonnets circulated in manuript at least ten years before they were ought together for publication, probably thout Shakespeare's consent, in 1609. To om they were written has never been ascerined. They may have been addressed to no al person — a convention in sonnet-writing nich was common in Elizabethan times. me of them may have been written to a ung man, some to a certain dark lady. How r the material in the sonnets is autobiographi-l or based on personal experience is also batable. Note, in this connection, the obvi-s similarity between Sonnet 66 and Hamlet's ell-known soliloquy. One thing is sure: they e worthy products of Shakespeare's genius, autiful expressions of thought and feeling, hatever their source may be.

15

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge stage presenteth naught but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and checked even by the self-same sky,
Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth, before my sight,
Where wasteful Time debateth with Decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And, all in war with Time for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engraft[1] you new.

18

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
And every fair[1] from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course untrimmed;
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest:
So long as men can breathe or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

[1] inoculate.

23

As an unperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart,
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
O'ercharged with burden of mine own love's might.
O, let my books be then the eloquence
And dumb presagers of my speaking breast,
Who plead for love and look for recompense,
More than that tongue that more hath more expressed.
O, learn to read what silent love hath writ:
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

25

Let those who are in favor with their stars
Of public honor and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlooked for joy in that I honor most.
Great princes' favorites their fair leaves spread
But as the marigold at the sun's eye,
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.
The painful warrior famoused for fight,
After a thousand victories once foiled,
Is from the book of honor razed quite,

[1] beauty.

And all the rest forgot for which he toiled:
Then happy I, that love and am beloved,
Where I may not remove nor be removed.

29

When, in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, — and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

30

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:
Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless [1] night,
And weep afresh love's long since cancelled woe,
And moan the expense [2] of many a vanished sight:
Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restored and sorrows end.

32

If thou survive my well-contented day,
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And though they be outstripped by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rime,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
O, then vouchsafe me but this loving thought:
"Had my friend's Muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love."

33

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack [1] on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all-triumphant splendor on my brow;
But out! alack! he was but one hour mine;
The region cloud hath masked him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Suns of the world may stain when heaven's sun staineth.

54

O, how much more doth beauty beauteous seem
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odor which doth in it live.
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye
As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses;
But, for [2] their virtue only is their show,
They live unwooed and unrespected fade,
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odors made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distills your truth.

55

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rime;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents

1 endless. 2 loss.

1 framework. 2 since.

than unswept stone, besmeared with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room
Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

60

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crowned,
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow,
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow:
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

64

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich-proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-razed,
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate, —
That Time will come and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

65

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'er-sways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wrackful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O, none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

66

Tired with all these, for restful death I cry,
As,[1] to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimmed in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honor shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgraced,
And strength by limping sway disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly, doctor-like, controlling skill,
And simple truth miscalled simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:
Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

70

That thou art blamed shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being wooed of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast passed by the ambush of young days,
Either not assailed, or victor being charged;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy evermore enlarged:
If some suspect of ill masked not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

71

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled

[1] "Such things as the following: to see merit treated as a beggar," etc.

From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O, if, I say, you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay;
Lest the wise world should look into your moan
And mock you with me after I am gone.

73.

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou see'st the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consumed with that which it was nourished by.
This thou perceivest, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

90

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
Now, while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss:
Ah, do not, when my heart hath scaped this sorrow,
Come in the rearward of a conquered woe,
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purposed overthrow.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might;
And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
Compared with loss of thee will not seem so.

97

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
What old December's bareness every where!
And yet this time removed was summer's time,
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease:
Yet this abundant issue seemed to me
But hope of orphans and unfathered fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

98

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April dressed in all his trim
Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing,
That heavy Saturn laughed and leaped with him.
Yet nor the lays of birds nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odor and in hue
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;
Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
Yet seemed it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play.

104

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride,
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turned
In process of the seasons have I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burned
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial-hand,
Steal from his figure and no pace perceived;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion and mine eye may be deceived:
For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred:
Ere you were born was beauty's summer dead.

106

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rime
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have expressed
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they looked but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

107

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Supposed as forfeit to a confined doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured,
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;
Incertainties now crown themselves assured,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rime,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

109

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seemed my flame to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love: if I have ranged,
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reigned
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stained,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

110

Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view,
Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new;
Most true it is that I have looked on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These blenches[1] gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays proved thee my best of love.
Now all is done, have what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confined.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

111

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand:
Pity me then and wish I were renewed;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eisel[2] 'gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

116

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O, no! it is an ever-fixed mark
That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

1 side-looks. 2 vinegar.

119

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distilled from limbecks foul as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted,
In the distraction of this madding fever!
O benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruined love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return rebuked to my content,
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

130

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damasked,[1] red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go;
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground:
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she belied with false compare.

146

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
Thrall to these rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on men,
And Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

1 with mingled colors.

SONGS FROM THE PLAYS

(From Love's Labour's Lost)

When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipped and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-who;
Tu-whit, tu-who! — a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel[1] the pot.

When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-who;
Tu-whit, tu-who! — a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

(From The Two Gentlemen of Verona)

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she;
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.

Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness:
Love doth to her eyes repair
To help him of his blindness,
And, being helped, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

(From The Merchant of Venice)

Tell me, where is fancy[2] bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
Reply, reply.

It is engendered in the eyes,
With gazing fed; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies.

1 cool by skimming or stirring. 2 love.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
I'll begin it, — Ding, dong, bell.
Ding, dong, bell.

(From As You Like It)

Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Who doth ambition shun,
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

(From As You Like It)

Blow, blow, thou winter wind!
Thou are not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh ho! sing, heigh ho! unto the green holly;
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly.
Then, heigh ho, the holly!
This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!
That dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot;
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remembered not.

Heigh ho! sing, heigh ho! etc.

(From As You Like It)

It was a lover and his lass,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass,
In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding;
Sweet lovers love the spring.

Between the acres of the rye,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie,
In the spring time, etc.

This carol they began that hour,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that a life was but a flower
In the spring time, etc.

And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
For love is crowned with the prime
In the spring time, etc.

(From Much Ado about Nothing)

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more!
Men were deceivers ever,
One foot in sea and one on shore,
To one thing constant never:
Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into Hey nonny, nonny!

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe
Of dumps so dull and heavy!
The fraud of men was ever so,
Since summer first was leavy:
Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into Hey nonny, nonny!

(From Twelfth Night)

O, mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O, stay and hear; your true love's coming,
That can sing both high and low.
Trip no further, pretty sweeting,
Journeys end in lovers meeting,
Every wise man's son doth know.

What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure.
In delay there lies no plenty;
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

(From Twelfth Night)

Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O, prepare it!
My part of death, no one so true
Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet

My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown.
A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O, where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there!

(From Measure for Measure)

Take, O, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Bring again;
Seals of love, but sealed in vain,
Sealed in vain!

(From Cymbeline)

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phœbus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chaliced flowers that lies;[1]
And winking Mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes:
With every thing that pretty is,
My lady sweet, arise:
Arise, arise!

(From Cymbeline)

Fear no more the heat o' th' sun,
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Fear no more the frown o' th' great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunder-stone;[1]
Fear not slander, censure rash;
Thou hast finished joy and moan:
All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.

No exorciser harm thee!
Nor no witchcraft charm thee!
Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Nothing ill come near thee!
Quiet consummation have;
And renowned be thy grave!

(From The Tempest)

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes;
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Ding-dong!
Hark! now I hear them, — Ding-dong, bell!

(From The Tempest)

Where the bee sucks, there suck I,
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back I do fly
After summer merrily.
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

[1] A singular verb with a plural subject is not uncommon in Elizabethan poetry.

[1] bolt.

BEN JONSON (1573–1637)

Jonson was born in poverty at Westminster in 1573. He was admitted to Westminster School through the liberality of its master, William Camden, the antiquary. He may have attended St. John's College, Cambridge. After an unhappy marriage, he served with the army in Flanders. Then he became an actor and playwright in London. In 1598 he was imprisoned for killing another actor in a duel, and during the same year he won instantaneous success with his Every Man in his Humour. He followed this with Sejanus, Eastward Ho!, Volpone, Epicœne, The Alchemist, Catiline, Bartholomew Fair, among other plays; and in 1616 he published a collected edition of his works in folio.

In his plays, Jonson followed classical rules. In his poems, collected under the titles Underwoods and The Forest, he is graceful and delicate, the idol of younger poets who rejoiced in the name of "the sons of Ben." In his critical writings, Timber, or Discoveries, he shows himself a critic who, with all his rigid classicism, was liberal in his literary views.

The last few years of Jonson's life were unsuccessful. He died in 1637, and was buried in Westminster Abbey — in a vertical position, to save precious space.

Jonson's best plays may be found in the Mermaid Series. The completest and most recent study of Jonson is by C. H. Herford and Percy Simpson, 2 volumes (Oxford Press).

SONG TO CELIA

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
And I'll not look for wine.
The thirst that from the soul doth rise
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honoring thee,
As giving it a hope that there
It could not withered be.
But thou thereon didst only breathe,
And sent'st it back to me;
Since when it grows, and smells, I swear,
Not of itself, but thee.

HYMN TO DIANA[1]

(From Cynthia's Revels)

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair,
State in wonted manner keep:
Hesperus[2] entreats thy light,
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear when day did close:
Bless us then with wished sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
And thy crystal-shining quiver;
Give unto the flying hart
Space to breathe, how short soever:
Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright.

SIMPLEX MUNDITIIS

(From Epicœne)

The title, added later, is from Horace, Book I, Ode 5. It means "in simple elegance."

Still[3] to be neat, still to be drest,
As you were going to a feast;
Still to be powdered, still perfumed:
Lady, it is to be presumed,
Though art's hid causes are not found,
All is not sweet, all is not sound.

Give me a look, give me a face
That makes simplicity a grace;
Robes loosely flowing, hair as free:
Such sweet neglect more taketh me
Than all th' adulteries of art;
They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BELOVED MASTER, WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy book and fame;
While I confess thy writings to be such
As neither man, nor muse, can praise too much.
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage. But these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
For silliest ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin, where it seemed to raise.
These are, as[1] some infamous bawd or whore
Should praise a matron. What could hurt her more?
But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,
Above the ill fortune of them, or the need.
I therefore will begin. Soul of the age!
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage!
My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
A little farther off, to make thee a room:
Thou art a monument without a tomb,
And art alive still while thy book doth live
And we have wits to read and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
I mean with great, but disproportioned Muses;
For if I thought my judgment were of years,
I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
And tell how far thou didst our Lyly outshine,
Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line.
And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,
From thence to honor thee, I would not seek

1 Here, the moon-goddess.
2 The character in Cynthia's Revels who sings this song.
3 always.

1 as if.

For names; but call forth thundering
Æschylus,[1]
Euripides, and Sophocles to us;
Pacuvius,[2] Accius,[2] him of Cordova [3] dead,
To life again, to hear thy buskin tread,
And shake a stage; or, when thy socks were on,
Leave thee alone for the comparison
Of all that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Britain, thou hast one to show
To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When, like Apollo, he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm!
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines!
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit.
The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,[4]
Neat Terence,[5] witty Plautus, now not please;
But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give Nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
For though the poet's matter nature be,
His art doth give the fashion; and, that he
Who casts to write a living line, must sweat,
(Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
Upon the Muses' anvil; turn the same
(And himself with it) that he thinks to frame,
Or, for the laurel, he may gain a scorn;
For a good poet's made, as well as born.
And such wert thou! Look how the father's face Lives in his issue, even so the race
Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines
In his well turned, and true filed lines;
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were
To see thee in our water yet appear,
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,
That so did take Eliza,[6] and our James!
But stay, I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanced, and made a constellation there!
Shine forth, thou star of poets, and with rage
Or influence, chide or cheer the drooping stage,
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned like night,
And despairs day, but for thy volume's light.

1 Eldest of the three great Greek dramatists: Æschylus, 525–456 B.C., Sophocles, 496–406 B.C., Euripides, 480–406 B.C.

2 Minor Roman tragic poets of the second century, B.C.

3 Seneca, the famous Roman philosopher and writer of tragedies, 4 B.C.–65 A.D., was born in Spain.

4 The greatest Greek comic dramatist, 448?–380? B.C.

5 Terence, 190?–159? B.C., and Plautus, 254?–184 B.C., the two foremost writers of Roman comedy.

6 Queen Elizabeth.

A PINDARIC ODE[1]

ON THE DEATH OF SIR H. MORISON

TO THE IMMORTAL MEMORY AND FRIENDSHIP OF THAT NOBLE PAIR, SIR LUCIUS CARY AND SIR H. MORISON.

I

The Strophe, or Turn

Brave infant of Saguntum,[2] clear
Thy coming forth in that great year,
When the prodigious Hannibal did crown
His rage with razing your immortal town.
Thou looking then about,
Ere thou wert half got out,
Wise child, didst hastily return,
And mad'st thy mother's womb thine urn.
How summed [3] a circle didst thou leave mankind
Of deepest lore, could we the center find!

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

Did wiser nature draw thee back,
From out the horror of that sack;
Where shame, faith, honor, and regard of right,
Lay trampled on? the deeds of death and night
Urged, hurried forth, and hurled
Upon the affrighted world;
Fire and famine with fell fury met,
And all on utmost ruin set:
As, could they but life's miseries foresee,
No doubt all infants would return like thee.

The Epode, or Stand

For what is life, if measured by the space,
Not by the act?
Or masked man, if valued by his face,
Above his fact?
Here's one outlived his peers

1 The Greek ode, perfected by Pindar, 522–448? B.C., was written to be chanted by a chorus. It consisted of one or more sections, each composed of a strophe, an antistrophe, and an epode or after-song. The antistrophe had to be the exact counterpart of the strophe, in order to bring the chorus, which moved across the stage in rhythm with the music, back to its starting place.

2 The incident mentioned here was supposed to have happened during the capture of Saguntum in Spain by Hannibal.

3 complete.

And told forth fourscore years:
He vexed time, and busied the whole state;
Troubled both foes and friends;
But ever to no ends:
What did this stirrer but die late?
How well at twenty had he fallen or stood!
For three of his four score he did no good.

2

The Strophe, or Turn

He entered well by virtuous parts,
Got up, and thrived with honest arts,
He purchased friends, and fame, and honors then,
And had his noble name advanced with men;
But weary of that flight,
He stooped in all men's sight
To sordid flatteries, acts of strife,
And sunk in that dead sea of life,
So deep, as he did then death's waters sup,
But that the cork of title buoyed him up.

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

Alas! but Morison fell young!
He never fell, — thou fall'st, my tongue.
He stood a soldier to the last right end,
A perfect patriot and a noble friend;
But most, a virtuous son.
All offices were done
By him, so ample, full, and round,
In weight, in measure, number, sound,
As, though his age imperfect might appear,
His life was of humanity the sphere.

The Epode, or Stand

Go now, and tell our days summed up with fears,
And make them years;
Produce thy mass of miseries on the stage,
To swell thine age;
Repeat of things a throng,
To show thou hast been long,
Not lived; for life doth her great actions spell,
By what was done and wrought
In season, and so brought
To light: her measures are, how well
Each syllabe answered, and was formed, how fair;
These make the lines of life, and that's her air!

3

The Strophe, or Turn

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make men better be;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sear:
A lily of a day,
Is fairer far, in May,
Although it fall and die that night;
It was the plant and flower of light.
In small proportions we just beauties see;
And in short measures life may perfect be.

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

Call, noble Lucius, then, for wine,
And let thy looks with gladness shine;
Accept this garland, plant it on thy head,
And think, nay know, thy Morison's not dead.
He leaped the present age,
Possessed with holy rage,
To see that bright eternal day;
Of which we priests and poets say
Such truths as we expect for happy men;
And there he lives with memory, and Ben ——

The Epode, or Stand

Jonson, who sung this of him, ere he went,
Himself, to rest,
Or taste a part of that full joy he meant
To have expressed,
In this bright asterism; [1] —
Where it were friendship's schism,
Were not his Lucius long with us to tarry,
To separate these twi-
Lights, the Dioscuri; [2]
And keep the one half from his Harry.
But fate doth so alternate the design,
Whilst that in heaven, this light on earth must shine, —

4

The Strophe, or Turn

And shine as you exalted are;
Two names of friendship, but one star:
Of hearts the union, and those not by chance
Made, or indenture, or leased out t' advance
The profits for a time.
No pleasures vain did chime,
Of rhymes, or riots, at your feasts,
Orgies of drink, or feigned protests;
But simple love of greatness and of good,
That knits brave minds and manners more than blood.

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

This made you first to know the why
You liked, then after, to apply

1 constellation.
2 The twins, Castor and Pollux, whom Zeus allowed to live on alternate days after their death.

That liking; and approach so one the t' other,
Till either grew a portion of the other;
Each styled by his end,
The copy of his friend.
You lived to be the great sir-names
And titles by which all made claims
Unto the Virtue: nothing perfect done,
But as a Cary or a Morison.

The Epode, or Stand

And such a force the fair example had,
As they that saw
The good and durst not practise it, were glad
That such a law
Was left yet to mankind;
Where they might read and find
Friendship, indeed, was written not in words;
And with the heart, not pen,
Of two so early men,
Whose lines her rolls were, and records;
Who, ere the first down bloomed on the chin,
Had sowed these fruits, and got the harvest in.

EPITAPH ON ELIZABETH L. H.

Would'st thou hear what man can say
In a little? Reader, stay.

Underneath this stone doth lie
As much beauty as could die:
Which in life did harbor give
To more virtue than doth live.

If at all she had a fault,
Leave it buried in this vault.
One name was Elizabeth,
The other, let it sleep with death!
Fitter, where it died, to tell,
Than that it lived at all. Farewell!

A FAREWELL TO THE WORLD

False world, good night! since thou hast brought
That hour upon my morn of age;
Henceforth I quit thee for my thought,
My part is ended on thy stage.

Yes, threaten, do. Alas! I fear
As little as I hope from thee:
I know thou canst not show nor bear
More hatred than thou hast to me.

My tender, first, and simple years
Thou didst abuse and then betray;
Since stirred'st up jealousies and fears,
When all the causes were away.

Then in a soil hast planted me
Where breathe the basest of thy fools;
Where envious arts professed be,
And pride and ignorance the schools;

Where nothing is examined, weighed,
But as 'tis rumored, so believed;
Where every freedom is betrayed,
And every goodness taxed or grieved.

But what we're born for, we must bear:
Our frail condition it is such
That what to all may happen here,
If 't chance to me, I must not grutch.[1]

Else I my state should much mistake
To harbor a divided thought
From all my kind — that, for my sake,
There should a miracle be wrought.

No, I do know that I was born
To age, misfortune, sickness, grief:
But I will bear these with that scorn
As shall not need thy false relief.

Nor for my peace will I go far,
As wanderers do, that still do roam;
But make my strengths, such as they are,
Here in my bosom, and at home.

1 murmur, complain.

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

The seventeenth century is a many-sided period in the history of English literature. It is the entury of Shakespeare's greatest plays, of the King James version of the Bible, of Bacon, Milton, nd Dryden. It saw the colonization of America, the Civil War and the execution of Charles I, the estoration of the Stuarts, and, toward its close, the introduction of genuine parliamentary gov-rnment through the Declaration of Rights, with William of Orange as king. Ushered in when the magination of the glorious Elizabethan age was at its height, it closed with reason and rules dom-nating literature.

The political life of the century may be briefly summarized. In 1603 Queen Elizabeth died. he was succeeded by the son of Mary, Queen of Scots, James VI of Scotland, who as James I of ngland began the line of English Stuarts. His reign was marked by the rise of the Puritans. In 625 he was succeeded by his son Charles, who followed his father's belief in the divine right of ings. In 1628 Charles I was forced, as a result of his independent acts, to agree to the Petition of ight, which strengthened the power of Parliament and asserted the rights of the people. In spite f this, he continued to rule as he pleased and antagonized the Puritans to such a degree that many f them emigrated to America. In 1642 he refused to obey Parliament, and Civil War broke out. nder Cromwell Parliament was victorious in battle, and in 1649 King Charles I, declared guilty of reason, was beheaded. From 1649 to 1653 Parliament governed the country. This government as called the Commonwealth. In 1653 Parliament relinquished its power to Cromwell, who was ade Lord Protector under the Protectorate. Upon his death in 1658, the power of the Puritans roke up, and in 1660 King Charles II was invited to return to his father's throne. During these ears the Puritans were severe in banishing simple pleasures and making life less colorful, but it ust not be forgotten that they were idealists who deserve endless credit for furthering the cause of eligious toleration, freedom of speech and of the press, and justice in open court.

After 1660 English life and society changed with the return of the Royalists from exile. The way of the Puritan yielded to that of the Cavalier. Somber London of the previous generation gave ay to the "gala day of wit and pleasure, of gallantry and Charles II." Refinement, elegance, and it became gods of the courtiers. Hazlitt's brilliant picture is probably not too far from the truth.

Happy, thoughtless age, when kings and nobles led purely ornamental lives; when the utmost tretch of a morning's study went no farther than the choice of a sword-knot, or the adjustment of side-curl; when the soul spoke out in all the pleasing eloquence of dress; and beaux and belles, namored of themselves in one another's follies, fluttered like gilded butterflies, in giddy mazes, hrough the walks of St. James's Park!"

In the drama, the century saw a rise and fall. At the beginning, Shakespeare was at his best. fter 1611 he apparently retired from the stage, probably in favor of the great collaborators, Beau-ont and Fletcher, who throughout the century were by far the most popular dramatists in Eng-and. Their plays were acted during the Restoration, says Dryden, twice as often as Shake-peare's. Among other playwrights up to 1642, Jonson, Chapman, Heywood, Middleton, Web-ter, Ford, Shirley, and Massinger are the best. Among their many plays stand several undoubted masterpieces, most prominent, Heywood's A Woman Killed with Kindness, Webster's The Duchess of Malfi, and Massinger's A New Way to Pay Old Debts. In general, the theater was passing from he patronage of the common people to a more sophisticated audience composed largely of the ourt. Plots became more licentious, the desire to shock and to be shocked increased, with the re-ult that Puritan antagonism grew rapidly. With the outbreak of the Civil War the theaters were fficially closed by Parliament, and remained so until 1660. Theatrical performances, however, ere given surreptitiously during this period. The old tradition carried on; but, when the theaters ere reopened in 1660, a new type of play quickly developed, largely under the influence of the rench stage with which the Royalists had become acquainted during their exile in France. This as the so-called "heroic drama." Its characteristics were the use of the heroic couplet instead of lank verse; the strict or partial observance of the three unities of time, place, and action; the em-loyment (for the first time on the English stage) of women actors; the preference for gigantic hemes involving love and honor, particularly in an Eastern setting; the elaborate use of scenery, usic, and whatever else would heighten the spectacle — all in a large rectangular auditorium, hich supplanted the much smaller, almost circular theater of Elizabethan days. In heroic tragedy Dryden was the prominent figure. A "minor" writer, Otway, however, produced the ablest ragedy, Venice Preserved, 1682, the best tragedy in verse since Webster, or possibly since Shake-peare. But it was in comedy that the Restoration made its great contribution to English drama. arly in the 1660's Etherege won the town with his sprightly, satirical comedies in prose, soon to be ollowed by the splendid prose plays of Wycherley, Vanbrugh, Farquhar, and Congreve, the four supreme wits of Restoration comedy. Their spirit pervades the best of English comedy, through Fielding, Sheridan, and Goldsmith, down to Wilde and Shaw.

In poetry the century witnessed the change from the imaginative Elizabethan manner to the more artificial formalism of Dryden and Pope. Different in temper as these two poles seem to be, they have, nevertheless, a direct connection in the person of Ben Jonson. He of all the Elizabethans was most classical, most precise in workmanship. Around him gathered a number of rising poets, the "sons of Ben." Those who followed him directly or indirectly in his admiration for Anacreon, Catullus, and Horace, and composed variations on the theme of carpe diem, are the Cavalier poets, like Carew, Suckling, Lovelace, and particularly Herrick, most of whom were attached to the court. Those who developed still more intricately his use of "conceits," or far-fetched figures of speech, are the "metaphysical poets." Their leader was Donne, who was exactly the same age as Jonson. Donne, Herbert, Crashaw, and Vaughan produced some of the finest religious and mystical poetry in the language. Another group of writers, who also owed something to Jonson, developed the heroic couplet, the medium of poetic expression for the Restoration period that blank verse had been for the Elizabethan. Chief among them were Edmund Waller and Sir Charles Denham. Cowley, who also wrote couplets, did much to perfect the ode in English. The glory of the period was Milton, a majestic figure in English literature. In him are combined the vigorous imagination of the Elizabethan and the nobility, even the austerity, of the Puritan. In an age when poets were favoring the heroic couplet, he produced the greatest blank verse since Shakespeare. In an age which was becoming more and more rigidly neo-classic, his imagination conceived the sublime Paradise Lost.

The Elizabethan era was essentially the age of poetry. The seventeenth century is often called the "age of prose." During the century, especially in the latter half, reason supplanted imagination, and the language of reason is prose. The scientific speculation and philosophizing of Bacon were continued in Burton, Sir Thomas Browne, Thomas Hobbes, and Milton. Thomas Fuller, Richard Baxter, and Jeremy Taylor discussed religion. Izaak Walton wrote his inimitable descriptions of nature and the lives of the poets. The prose fashioned by these writers was worthy of the high standard set by the translators of the King James version of the Bible. It was direct and exact, yet not totally devoid of imagination, and, above all, it had beautiful cadence. Before the close of the century, Dryden, by many considered the father of modern English prose, wrote his critical essays and prefaces, Bunyan his Pilgrim's Progress, 1678, 1684, Pepys and Evelyn their diaries, Isaac Newton, Principia, 1687, and John Locke, Essay Concerning the Human Understanding, 1690. As the century turned, Defoe, Swift, Addison, and Steele were beginning their contributions to the history of English prose.

Good summaries of seventeenth-century literature may be found in J. H. B. Masterman, The Age of Milton (Bell), and R. Garnett, The Age of Dryden (Bell). For appreciative criticism, see B. Wendell, The Temper of the Seventeenth Century in English Literature (Scribners), and E. Gosse, Seventeenth-Century Studies (Dodd, Mead & Co.).

---

FRANCIS BACON (1561–1626)

Francis Bacon was born at London January 22, 1561. He was the son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, who occupied the position of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal to Queen Elizabeth. Francis entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1573, where he began his scientific studies. He went on to Gray's Inn, London, where he studied law, and was admitted as barrister. He sought long and earnestly for court patronage under Queen Elizabeth, but though he was supported by the Queen's favorite, the Earl of Essex, he failed of preferment. When the Earl of Essex fell out with the Queen and entered into treasonable designs against her, Bacon deserted him, and at his trial acted as one of the prosecutors. This began his career of court favor, which was continued under James I. He was a member of Parliament. He became Attorney-General in 1613, and five years later Lord Chancellor and Baron Verulam. In 1620, however, he was accused in Parliament of having taken presents from persons whose cases were pending before him, and confessed his guilt. He was sentenced to lose his offices, and pay a heavy fine, which was remitted by the king. He lived in retirement until his death in 1626.

Bacon was a literary man primarily because he used literature as a means to forward his attempt to bring about a new experimental attitude toward knowledge. To this end he wrote his chief work, the Instauratio Magna, in Latin, the language of the learned. Part of this forms the English work on The Advancement of Learning. Bacon's place in English literature belongs to him by his authorship of the Essays. These appeared in their first form as a "set of dispersed meditations" in 1597. They were only ten in number. They were expanded in style and increased in number to the final edition of fifty-eight in 1625. They are brief comments on life, couched in a style sometimes pithy and sententious, sometimes gorgeous and ornate. They represent the realistic terest of the age in human life, and reflect its habit of distinction and originality in expression. Bacon's works are collected in the large edition of Ellis, Spedding, and Heath. The Essays have ssed through many modern editions, among which those by E. A. Abbott and Miss Mary Augusta ott may be mentioned. The standard life is by J. Spedding. A brief biography by R. W. urch appears in the English Men of Letters Series. See also Macaulay's essay.

ESSAYS OR COUNSELS CIVIL AND MORAL

I

OF TRUTH

What is truth? said jesting Pilate;[1] and ould not stay for an answer. Certainly ere be[2] that delight in giddiness,[3] and count a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free-will thinking, as well as in acting. And though e sects of philosophers of that kind[4] be ne, yet there remain certain discoursing[5] its which are of the same veins, though ere be not so much blood in them as was in ose of the ancients. But it is not only fficulty and labor which men take in finding t of truth; nor again that when it is found imposeth upon men's thoughts; that doth ring lies in favor; but a natural though cor- pt love of the lie itself. One of the later hool[6] of the Grecians examineth the matter d is at a stand to think what should be in , that men should love lies, where neither ey make for pleasure, as with poets, nor for dvantage, as with the merchant; but for the e's sake. But I cannot tell; this same truth a naked and open day-light, that doth not ow the masks and mummeries and tri- mphs of the world, half so stately and aintily as candle-lights. Truth may per- aps come to the price of a pearl, that show- h best by day; but it will not rise to the rice of a diamond or carbuncle, that showeth est in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ver add pleasure. Doth any man doubt, hat if there were taken out of men's minds ain opinions, flattering hopes, false valua- ons, imaginations as one would,[7] and the ke, but it would leave the minds of a number f men poor shrunken things, full of melan- oly and indisposition, and unpleasing to emselves? One of the fathers,[8] in great verity, called poesy vinum dæmonum,[9] ecause it filleth the imagination; and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in and settleth in it, that doth the hurt; such as we spake of before. But howsoever[1] these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his sabbath work ever since is the illumination of his Spirit. First he breathed light upon the face of the matter or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man; and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. The poet[2] that beautified the sect[3] that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth (a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene), and to see the errors and wanderings and mists and tempests in the vale below; so[4] always that this prospect be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth, to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn[5] upon the poles of truth.

To pass from theological and philosophical truth to the truth of civil business; it will be acknowledged even by those that practise it not, that clear and round dealing is the honor of man's nature; and that mixture of falsehood is like alloy in coin of gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious. And therefore Mon-

1 John XVIII, 38. 2 there are those.
3 i.e., of thought.
4 The skeptics, who believed that only relative truth as possible.
5 rambling.
6 Lucian, born about 120 A.D., who attacked with satire l the shams of his day.
7 wished. 8 St. Augustine, 354–430 A.D.
9 devil's wine.

1 notwithstanding. 2 Lucretius, 99–55 B.C.
3 The Epicureans 4 provided.
5 The terms are taken from Ptolemaic astronomy.

taigne [1] saith prettily, when he inquired the reason why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace and such an odious charge. Saith he, If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth, is as much to say, as that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men. For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men; it being foretold [2] that when Christ cometh, he shall not find faith upon the earth.

2

OF DEATH

Men fear death, as children fear to go in the dark; and as that natural fear in children is increased with tales, so is the other. Certainly, the contemplation of death, as the wages of sin and passage to another world, is holy and religious; but the fear of it, as a tribute due unto nature, is weak. Yet in religious meditations there is sometimes mixture of vanity and of superstition. You shall read in some of the friars' books of mortification,[3] that a man should think with himself what the pain is if he have but his finger's end pressed or tortured, and thereby imagine what the pains of death are, when the whole body is corrupted and dissolved; when many times death passeth with less pain than the torture of a limb; for the most vital parts are not the quickest of sense. And by him [4] that spake only as a philosopher and natural man, it was well said, Pompa mortis magis terret, quam mors ipsa.[5] Groans and convulsions, and a discolored face, and friends weeping, and blacks,[6] and obsequies, and the like, show death terrible. It is worthy the observing, that there is no passion in the mind of man so weak, but it mates [7] and masters the fear of death; and therefore death is no such terrible enemy when a man hath so many attendants about him that can win the combat of him. Revenge triumphs over death; love slights it; honor aspireth to it; grief flieth to it; fear pre-occupateth [8] it; nay, we read, after Otho the emperor [9] had slain himself, pity (which is the tenderest of affections) provoked many to die, out of mere compassion to their sovereign, and as the truest sort of followers. Nay, Seneca adds niceness and satiety: Cogita quamdiu eadem feceris; mori velle, non tantum fortis, aut miser, sed etiam fastidiosus potest.[1] A man would die, though he were neither valiant nor miserable, only upon a weariness to do the same thing so oft over and over. It is no less worthy to observe, how little alteration in good spirits the approaches of death make; for they appear to be the same men till the last instant. Augustus Cæsar died in a compliment: Livia, conjugii nostri memor, vive et vale.[2] Tiberius in dissimulation; as Tacitus saith of him, Jam Tiberium vires et corpus non dissimulatio, deserebant.[4] Vespasian in a jest, sitting upon the stool; Ut puto deus fio. Galba with a sentence; Feri, si ex re sit populi Romani; [6] holding forth his neck. Septimius Severus in despatch; Adeste si quid mihi restat agendum.[7] And the like. Certainly the Stoics [8] bestowed too much cost upon death, and by their great preparations made it appear more fearful. Better saith he,[9] qui finem vitæ extremum inter munera ponat naturæ.[10] It is as natural to die as to be born; and to a little infant, perhaps, the one is as painful as the other. He that dies in an earnest pursuit, is like one that is wounded in hot blood; who, for the time, scarce feels the hurt; and therefore a mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good doth avert the dolors of death. But, above all, believe it, the sweetest canticle is, Nunc dimittis; [11] when a man hath obtained worthy ends and expectations. Death hath this also; that it openeth the gate to good fame, and extinguisheth envy. Extinctus amabitur idem.[12]

5

OF ADVERSITY

It was an high speech of Seneca (after the manner of the Stoics), that the good things

1 The great French essayist and skeptic, 1533–92.
2 St. Luke XVIII, 8. 3 penance.
4 Seneca, Stoic philosopher and dramatist, 4–65 A.D., in his Epistles.
5 The surroundings of death are more terrifying than death itself.
6 black clothing. 7 overcomes. 8 anticipates.
9 Marcus Salvius Otho, Roman emperor, 32–69 A.D.

1 Think how long you have done the same things; a man may wish to die, not so much because he is brave or wretched, but because he is tired of living.
2 Livia, remember our marriage, live on, and farewell.
3 The Roman historian, c. 54–C. 116 A.D.
4 Strength and vigor left Tiberius, but not his ability to dissimulate.
5 As I see it, I am becoming a god.
6 Strike, if it be for the good of the Roman people.
7 Be at hand, in case there is anything more for me to do.
8 The Stoics taught resignation.
9 Juvenal, the Roman satirist, of the first century, A.D.
10 Who considers the cessation of life as one of nature's blessings.
11 St. Luke II, 29: Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.
12 The same man who was hated when alive will be loved when he is dead.

hich belong to prosperity are to be wished; but ie good things that belong to adversity are to be dmired.[1] Bona rerum secundarum optabilia; dversarum mirabilia. Certainly if miracles e the command over nature, they appear nost in adversity. It is yet a higher speech f his than the other (much too high for a eathen), It is true greatness to have in one the ailty of a man, and the security of a God. ere magnum habere fragilitatem hominis, ecuritatem Dei. This would have done etter in poesy, where transcendences are nore allowed. And the poets indeed have een busy with it; for it is in effect the thing hich is figured in that strange fiction of the ncient poets, which seemeth not to be with- ut mystery;[2] nay, and to have some ap- roach to the state of a Christian; that Her- ules, when he went to unbind Prometheus (by hom human nature is represented), sailed e length of the great ocean in an earthen pot r pitcher; lively describing Christian reso- ution, that saileth in the frail bark of the esh through the waves of the world. But speak in a mean.[3] The virtue of prosper- y is temperance; the virtue of adversity is ortitude; which in morals is the more heroi- l virtue. Prosperity is the blessing of the ld Testament; adversity is the blessing of he New; which carrieth the greater benedic- ion, and the clearer revelation of God's avor. Yet even in the Old Testament, if you isten to David's harp,[4] you shall hear as any hearse-like airs as carols; and the encil of the Holy Ghost hath labored more n describing the afflictions of Job than the licities of Solomon. Prosperity is not with- ut many fears and distastes; and adversity not without comforts and hopes. We see needle-works and embroideries, it is more easing to have a lively work upon a sad[5] nd solemn ground, than to have a dark and elancholy work upon a lightsome ground: dge therefore of the pleasure of the heart by he pleasure of the eye. Certainly virtue is ke precious odors, most fragrant when they e incensed or crushed: for prosperity doth est discover vice, but adversity doth best iscover virtue.

7

OF PARENTS AND CHILDREN

The joys of parents are secret; and so are heir griefs and fears. They cannot utter the he; nor they will not utter the other. Chil- dren sweeten labors; but they make misfortunes more bitter. They increase the cares of life; but they mitigate the remembrance of death. The perpetuity by generation is common to beasts; but memory, merit, and noble works are proper to men. And surely a man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed. So the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. They that are the first raisers of their houses are most indulgent towards their children; beholding them as the continuance not only of their kind but of their work; and so both children and creatures.

The difference in affection of parents towards their several children is many times unequal; and sometimes unworthy; especially in the mother; as Solomon saith, A wise son rejoiceth the father, but an ungracious son shames the mother. A man shall see, where there is a house full of children, one or two of the eldest respected, and the youngest made wantons;[2] but in the midst some that are as it were forgotten, who many times nevertheless prove the best. The illiberality of parents in allowance towards their children is an harmful error; makes them base; acquaints them with shifts; makes them sort with mean company; and makes them surfeit more when they come to plenty. And therefore the proof is best, when men keep their authority towards their children, but not their purse. Men have a foolish manner (both parents and schoolmasters and servants) in creating and breeding an emulation between brothers during childhood, which many times sorteth to discord when they are men, and disturbeth families. The Italians make little difference between children and nephews or near kinsfolks; but so they be of the lump, they care not though they pass not through their own body. And, to say truth, in nature it is much a like matter; insomuch that we see a nephew sometimes resembleth an uncle or a kinsman more than his own parent; as the blood happens. Let parents choose betimes the vocations and courses they mean their children should take; for then they are most flexible; and let them not too much apply themselves to the disposition of their children, as thinking they will take best to that which they have most

1 wondered at. 2 underlying meaning.
3 directly, simply. 4 The Psalms. 5 dark.

1 Proverbs, x, 1.
2 spoiled children; etymologically, wanton is the equivalent of modern German ungezogen (untrained).

mind to. It is true, that if the affection [1] or aptness of the children be extraordinary, then it is good not to cross it; but generally the precept is good, optimum elige, suave et facile illud faciet consuetudo.[2] Younger brothers are commonly fortunate, but seldom or never where the elder are disinherited.

8

OF MARRIAGE AND SINGLE LIFE

He that hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men; which both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason that those that have children should have greatest care of future times; unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are, who though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences. Nay, there are some other that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay more, there are some foolish rich covetous men, that take a pride in having no children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk, Such an one is a great rich man, and another except to it, Yea, but he hath a great charge of children; as if it were an abatement to his riches. But the most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous [3] minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants; but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away; and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A single life doth well with churchmen; for charity will hardly water the ground where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates; for if they be facile and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives put men in mind of their wives and children; and I think the despising of marriage amongst the Turks maketh the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity; and single men though they may be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhaust, yet, on the other side, they are more cruel and hardhearted (good to make severe inquisitors), because their tenderness is not so often called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands, as was said of Ulysses, vetulam suam prætulit immortalitati.[1] Chaste women are often proud and froward, as presuming upon the merit of their chastity. It is one of the best bonds both of chastity and obedience in the wife, if she think her husband wise; which she will never do if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses. So as a man may have a quarrel [2] to marry when he will. But yet he [3] was reputed one of the wise men, that made answer to the question, when a man should marry — A young man not yet, an elder man not at all. It is often seen that bad husbands have very good wives; whether it be that it raiseth the price of their husband's kindness when it comes; or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be sure to make good their own folly.

1 tendency.
2 Choose the best; custom will make it pleasant and easy.
3 capricious.

1 He preferred his aged wife to immortality.
2 reason.
3 Thales, the Greek philosopher, 640–546 B.C.

10

OF LOVE

The stage is more beholding to love, than the life of man. For as to the stage, love is ever matter of comedies, and now and then of tragedies; but in life it doth much mischief; sometimes like a siren, sometimes like a fury. You may observe that amongst all the great and worthy persons (whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent) there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love: which shows that great spirits and great business do keep out this weak passion. You must except nevertheless Marcus Antonius,[4] the half partner of the empire of Rome, and Appius Claudius,[5] the decemvir and lawgiver; whereof the former was indeed a voluptuous man, and inordinate; but the latter was an austere and wise man: and therefore it seems (though rarely) that love can find entrance not only into an open heart, but also into a heart well

4 The lover of Cleopatra.
5 Who was in love with Virginia, a plebeian.

ortified, if watch be not well kept. It is a oor saying of Epicurus,[1] Satis magnum alter lteri theatrum sumus;[2] as if man, made for he contemplation of heaven and all noble bjects, should do nothing but kneel before little idol, and make himself a subject, hough not of the mouth (as beasts are), yet f the eye; which was given him for higher urposes. It is a strange thing to note the xcess of this passion, and how it braves the ature and value of things, by this; that the peaking in a perpetual hyperbole is comely n nothing but in love. Neither is it merely n the phrase; for whereas it hath been well aid that the arch-flatterer, with whom all he petty flatterers have intelligence, is a an's self; certainly the lover is more. For here was never proud man thought so aburdly well of himself as the lover doth of erson loved; and therefore it was well said, hat it is impossible to love and to be wise. Neither doth this weakness appear to others nly, and not to the party loved; but to the oved most of all, except the love be recipoque.[3] For it is a true rule, that love is ever ewarded either with the reciproque or with n inward and secret contempt. By how uch the more men ought to beware of this assion, which loseth not only other things, ut itself! As for the other losses, the poet's elation doth well figure them: that he[4] that referred Helena quitted the gifts of Juno nd Pallas. For whosoever esteemeth too uch of amorous affection quitteth both iches and wisdom. This passion hath his oods in the very times of weakness; which re great prosperity and great adversity; hough this latter hath been less observed: oth which times kindle love, and make it ore fervent, and therefore show it to be the hild of folly. They do best, who if they annot but admit love, yet make it keep uarter;[5] and sever it wholly from their erious affairs and actions of life; for if it heck[6] once with business, it troubleth men's ortunes, and maketh men that they can no ays be true to their own ends. I know not ow, but martial men are given to love: I hink it is but as they are given to wine; for erils commonly ask to be paid in pleasures. here is in man's nature a secret inclination nd motion towards love of others, which if be not spent upon some one or a few, doth aturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable; as it is seen sometime in friars. Nuptial love maketh mankind; friendly love perfecteth it; but wanton love corrupteth and embaseth it.

1 The Greek philosopher, 342–270 B.C., who believed hat the greatest good is pleasure.
2 We are a big enough show to one another.
3 reciprocal. 4 Paris.
5 keep its place. 6 interfere.

II

OF GREAT PLACE

Men in great place are thrice servants: servants of the sovereign or state; servants of fame; and servants of business. So as they have no freedom; neither in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire, to seek power and to lose liberty: or to seek power over others and to lose power over a man's self. The rising unto place is laborious; and by pains men come to greater pains; and it is sometimes base; and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery, and the regress is either a downfall, or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing. Cum non sis qui fueris, non esse cur velis vivere.[1] Nay, retire men cannot when they would, neither will they when it were reason; but are impatient of privateness, even in age and sickness, which require the shadow; like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn. Certainly great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions, to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it: but if they think with themselves what other men think of them, and that other men would fain be as they are, then they are happy as it were by report; when perhaps they find the contrary within. For they are the first that find their own griefs, though they be the last that find their own faults. Certainly men in great fortunes are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business they have no time to tend their health either of body or mind. Illi mors gravis incubat, qui notus nimis omnibus, ignotus moritur sibi.[2] In place there is license to do good and evil; whereof the latter is a curse: for in evil the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can.[3] But power to do good is the true and lawful end of aspiring. For good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be

1 Since you are not what you were, there is no reason why you should desire to live.
2 Death is a sad misfortune to him who dies too well known to everybody, but unknown to himself.
3 know, know how.

without power and place, as the vantage and commanding ground. Merit and good works is the end of man's motion; and conscience [1] of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest. For if a man can be partaker of God's theatre, he shall likewise be partaker of God's rest. Et conversus Deus, ut aspiceret opera quæ fecerunt manus suæ, vidit quod omnia essent bona nimis; [2] and then the sabbath. In the discharge of thy place set before thee the best examples; for imitation is a globe of precepts. And after a time set before thee thine own example; and examine thyself strictly whether thou didst not best at first. Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Reform therefore, without bravery [3] or scandal of former times and persons; but yet set it down to thyself as well to create good precedents as to follow them. Reduce things to the first institution, and observe wherein and how they have degenerate; but yet ask counsel of both times; of the ancient time, what is best; and of the latter time, what is fittest. Seek to make thy course regular, that men may know beforehand what they may expect; but be not too positive and peremptory; and express thyself well when thou digressest from thy rule. Preserve the right of thy place; but stir not questions of jurisdiction: and rather assume thy right in silence and de facto,[4] than voice it with claims and challenges. Preserve likewise the rights of inferior places; and think it more honor to direct in chief than to be busy in all. Embrace and invite helps and advices touching the execution of thy place; and do not drive away such as bring thee information, as meddlers; but accept of them in good part. The vices of authority are chiefly four: delays, corruption, roughness, and facility.[5] For delays: give easy access; keep times appointed; go through with that which is in hand, and interlace not business but of necessity. For corruption: do not only bind thine own hands or thy servants' hands from taking, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering. For integrity used doth the one; but integrity professed, and with a manifest detestation of bribery, doth the other. And avoid not only the fault, but the suspicion. Whosoever is found variable, and changeth manifestly without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption. Therefore always when thou changest thine opinion or course profess it plainly, and declare it, together with the reasons that move thee to change; and do not think to steal [1] it. A servant or a favorite, if he be inward, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close [2] corruption. For roughness: it is a needless cause of discontent: severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting. As for facility: it is worse than bribery. For bribes come but now and then; but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without. As Solomon saith,[3] To respect persons is not good; for such a man will transgress for a piece of bread. It is most true that was anciently spoken, A place showeth the man. And it showeth some to the better, and some to the worse. Omnium consensu capax imperii, nisi imperasset,[4] saith Tacitus of Galba; but of Vespasian he saith, Solus imperantium, Vespasianus mutatus in melius; [5] though the one was meant of sufficiency,[6] the other of manners and affection. It is an assured sign of a worthy and generous spirit, whom honor amends. For honor is, or should be, the place of virtue; and as in nature things move violently to their place and calmly in their place, so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. All rising to great place is by a winding stair; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst he is in the rising, and to balance himself when he is placed. Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly; for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to look to be called. Be not too sensible or too remembering of thy place in conversation and private answers to suitors; but let it rather be said, When he sits in place he is another man.

1 consciousness.
2 And God turned to gaze upon the works which his hands had made, and he saw that they were all very good.
3 bravado. 4 as a matter of course.
5 softness, lack of backbone.

12

OF BOLDNESS

It is a trivial grammar-school text, but yet worthy a wise man's consideration.

1 hide. 2 secret. 3 Proverbs, XXVIII, 21.
4 A man whom everybody would have considered as able to govern, if he had not been an emperor.
5 Vespasian was the only emperor who changed for the better.
6 capacity, ability.

uestion was asked of Demosthenes,[1] what as the chief part of an orator? he answered, tion; what next? action; what next again? tion. He said it that knew it best, and had y nature himself no advantage in that he mmended. A strange thing, that that part an orator which is but superficial, and ther the virtue of a player, should be laced so high, above those other noble parts invention, elocution, and the rest; nay most alone, as if it were all in all. But the ason is plain. There is in human nature enerally more of the fool than of the wise; nd therefore those faculties by which the olish part of men's minds is taken are most otent. Wonderful like is the case of bold- ess, in civil business: what first? boldness; hat second and third? boldness. And yet oldness is a child of ignorance and baseness, r inferior to other parts. But nevertheless doth fascinate and bind hand and foot hose that are either shallow in judgment or eak in courage, which are the greatest art; yea and prevaileth with wise men at eak times. Therefore we see it hath done onders in popular states; but with senates nd princes less; and more ever upon the rst entrance of bold persons into action than on after; for boldness is an ill keeper of romise. Surely as there are mountebanks r the natural body, so are there mounte- anks for the politic body; men that under- ake great cures, and perhaps have been cky in two or three experiments, but want he grounds of science, and therefore cannot old out. Nay, you shall see a bold fellow any times do Mahomet's miracle. Ma- omet made the people believe that he would all an hill to him, and from the top of it ffer up his prayers for the observers of his aw. The people assembled; Mahomet alled the hill to come to him, again and gain; and when the hill stood still, he was ever a whit abashed, but said, If the hill will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet will go o the hill. So these men, when they have romised great matters and failed most hamefully, yet (if they have the perfection f boldness) they will but slight it over, and make a turn, and no more ado. Certainly o men of great judgment, bold persons are sport to behold; nay and to the vulgar lso, boldness has somewhat of the ridicu- ous. For if absurdity be the subject of aughter, doubt you not but great boldness s seldom without some absurdity. Es- ecially it is a sport to see, when a bold fellow is out of countenance; for that puts his face into a most shrunken and wooden posture; as needs it must; for in bashfulness the spirits do a little go and come; but with bold men, upon like occasion, they stand at a stay; like a stale[1] at chess, where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stir. But this last were fitter for a satire than for a serious observation. This is well to be weighed; that boldness is ever blind; for it seeth not dangers and inconveniences. Therefore it is ill in counsel, good in execution; so that the right use of bold persons is, that they never command in chief, but be seconds, and under the direction of others. For in counsel it is good to see dangers; and in execution not to see them, except they be very great.

1 The great Greek orator, 384–322 B.C.

17

OF SUPERSTITION

It were better to have no opinion of God at all, than such an opinion as is unworthy of him. For the one is unbelief, the other is contumely; and certainly superstition is the reproach of the Deity. Plutarch[2] saith well to that purpose: Surely (saith he) I had rather a great deal men should say there was no such man at all as Plutarch, than that they should say that there was one Plutarch that would eat his children as soon as they were born; as the poets speak of Saturn. And as the contumely is greater towards God, so the danger is greater towards men. Atheism leaves a man to sense, to philosophy, to natural piety, to laws, to reputation; all which may be guides to an outward moral virtue, though religion were not; but superstition dismounts all these, and erecteth an absolute monarchy in the minds of men. Therefore atheism did never perturb states; for it makes men wary of themselves, as looking no further: and we see the times inclined to atheism (as the time of Augustus Cæsar) were civil[3] times. But superstition hath been the confusion of many states, and bringeth in a new primum mobile,[4] that ravisheth all the spheres of government. The master of superstition is the people; and in all superstition wise men follow fools; and arguments are fitted to practice, in a reversed order. It was gravely said by some of the prelates

1 stalemate, a situation in chess where the king is unable to move without moving into check.

2 Greek historian of the first century A.D., author of the famous Lives and the Morals, essays from which Bacon derived much.

3 peaceful.

4 In Ptolemaic astronomy, the outermost revolving sphere which enclosed the universe.

in the Council of Trent,[1] where the doctrine of the Schoolmen bare great sway, that the Schoolmen were like astronomers, which did feign eccentrics and epicycles, and such engines [2] of orbs, to save the phenomena; [3] though they knew there were no such things; and in like manner, that the Schoolmen had framed a number of subtle and intricate axioms and theorems, to save the practice of the church. The causes of superstition are: pleasing and sensual rites and ceremonies; excess of outward and pharisaical holiness; over-great reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the church; the stratagems of prelates for their own ambition and lucre; the favoring too much of good intentions, which openeth the gate to conceits and novelties; the taking an aim at divine matters by human, which cannot but breed mixture of imaginations: and, lastly, barbarous times, especially joined with calamities and disasters. Superstition, without a veil, is a deformed thing; for as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man, so the similitude of superstition to religion makes it the more deformed. And as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms, so good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a superstition in avoiding superstition, when men think to do best if they go furthest from the superstition formerly received; therefore care would be had that (as it fareth in ill purgings) the good be not taken away with the bad; which commonly is done when the people is the reformer.

18

OF TRAVEL

Travel, in the younger sort, is a part of education, in the elder, a part of experience. He that travelleth into a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel. That young men travel under some tutor, or grave servant, I allow [4] well; so that he be such a one that hath the language, and hath been in the country before; whereby he may be able to tell them what things are worthy to be seen in the country where they go; what acquaintances they are to seek; what exercises or discipline the place yieldeth. For else young men shall go hooded, and look abroad little. It is a strange thing, that in sea voyages where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men should make diaries; but in land travel, wherein so much is to be observed, for the most part they omit it; as if chance were fitter to be registered than observation. Let diaries therefore be brought in use. The things to be seen and observed are: the courts of princes, specially when they give audience to ambassadors; the courts of justice, while they sit and hear causes; and so of consistories ecclesiastic; the churches and monasteries, with the monuments which are therein extant; the walls and fortifications of cities and towns, and so the havens and harbors; antiquities and ruins; libraries; colleges, disputations, and lectures, where any are; shipping and navies; houses and gardens of state and pleasure, near great cities; armories; arsenals; magazines; exchanges; burses; warehouses; exercises of horsemanship, fencing, training of soldiers, and the like; comedies, such whereunto the better sort of persons do resort; treasuries of jewels and robes; cabinets and rarities; and, to conclude, whatsoever is memorable in the places where they go. After all which the tutors or servants ought to make diligent inquiry. As for triumphs, masks, feasts, weddings, funerals, capital executions, and such shows, men need not to be put in mind of them; yet are they not to be neglected. If you will have a young man to put his travel into a little room, and in short time to gather much, this you must do. First, as was said, he must have some entrance into the language before he goeth. Then he must have such a servant or tutor as knoweth the country, as was likewise said. Let him carry with him also some card [1] or book describing the country where he travelleth; which will be a good key to his inquiry. Let him keep also a diary. Let him not stay long in one city or town; more or less as the place deserveth, but not long; nay, when he stayeth in one city or town, let him change his lodging from one end and part of the town to another; which is a great adamant [2] of acquaintance. Let him sequester himself from the company of his countrymen, and diet in such places where there is good company of the nation where he travelleth. Let him, upon his removes from one place to another, procure recommendation to some person of quality residing in the place whither he removeth; that he may use his favor in those things he desireth to see or know. Thus he may abridge his travel with much profit.

1 This council, 1545–63, decided against the reforms of the Protestants.
2 devices.
3 That is, medieval philosophers simply invented theories to explain the causes of natural phenomena which they did not understand.
4 approve.

1 chart. 2 lodestone.

As for the acquaintance which is to be sought in travel; that which is most of all profitable is acquaintance with the secretaries and employed men of ambassadors: for so in travelling in one country he shall suck the experience of many. Let him also see and visit eminent persons in all kinds, which are of great name abroad; that he may be able to tell how the life agreeth with the fame. For quarrels, they are with care and discretion to be avoided. They are commonly for mistresses, healths,[1] place, and words. And let a man beware how he keepeth company with choleric and quarrelsome persons; for they will engage him into their own quarrels. When a traveller returneth home, let him not leave the countries where he hath travelled altogether behind him; but maintain a correspondence by letters with those of his acquaintance which are of most worth. And let his travel appear rather in his discourse than in his apparel or gesture; and in his discourse let him be rather advised in his answers, than forwards to tell stories; and let it appear that he doth not change his country manners for those of foreign parts; but only prick in some flowers of that he hath learned abroad into the customs of his own country.

23

OF WISDOM FOR A MAN'S SELF

An ant is a wise creature for itself, but it is a shrewd[2] thing in an orchard or garden. And certainly men that are great lovers of themselves waste the public. Divide with reason between self-love and society; and be so true to thyself, as thou be not false to others; specially to thy king and country. It is a poor centre of a man's actions, himself. It is right earth. For that only stands fast upon his own centre;[3] whereas all things that have affinity with the heavens move upon the centre of another, which they benefit. The referring of all to a man's self is more tolerable in a sovereign prince; because themselves are not only themselves, but their good and evil is at the peril of the public fortune. But it is a desperate evil in a servant to a prince, or a citizen in a republic. For whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state. Therefore let princes, or states, choose such servants as have not this mark; except they mean their service should be made but the accessory. That which maketh the effect more pernicious is that all proportion is lost. It were disproportion enough for the servant's good to be preferred before the master's; but yet it is a greater extreme, when a little good of the servant shall carry things against a great good of the master's. And yet that is the case of bad officers, treasurers, ambassadors, generals, and other false and corrupt servants; which set a bias[1] upon their bowl, of their own petty ends and envies, to the overthrow of their master's great and important affairs. And for the most part, the good such servants receive is after the model of their own fortune; but the hurt they sell for that good is after the model of their master's fortune. And certainly it is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs; and yet these men many times hold credit with their masters, because their study is but to please them and profit themselves; and for either respect they will abandon the good of their affairs.

Wisdom for a man's self is, in many branches thereof, a depraved thing. It is the wisdom of rats, that will be sure to leave a house somewhat before it fall. It is the wisdom of the fox, that thrusts out the badger, who digged and made room for him. It is the wisdom of crocodiles, that shed tears when they would devour. But that which is specially to be noted is, that those which (as Cicero says of Pompey) are sui amantes, sine rivali[2] are many times unfortunate. And whereas they have all their times sacrificed to themselves, they become in the end themselves sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned.

27

OF FRIENDSHIP

It had been hard for him[3] that spake it to have put more truth and untruth together in few words, than in that speech, Whosoever is delighted in solitude is either a wild beast or a god. For it is most true that a natural and secret hatred and aversation towards[4] society in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast; but it is most untrue that it should have any character at all of the divine na-

1 drinking of healths. 2 injurious.
3 Bacon follows the Ptolemaic system of astronomy: i.e., that the earth was the center of the universe.

1 Lead put in the side of a bowling ball to prevent its rolling true.
2 lovers of themselves, without a rival.
3 Aristotle, in his Politics. 4 aversion to.

ture; except it proceed, not out of a pleasure in solitude, but out of a love and desire to sequester a man's self for a higher conversation: such as is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathen; as Epimenides the Candian, Numa the Roman, Empedocles the Sicilian, and Apollonius [1] of Tyana; and truly and really in divers of the ancient hermits and holy fathers of the church. But little do men perceive what solitude is, and how far it extendeth. For a crowd is not company; and faces are but a gallery of pictures; and talk but a tinkling cymbal,[2] where there is no love. The Latin adage meeteth with it a little: Magna civitas, magna solitudo; [3] because in a great town friends are scattered; so that there is not that fellowship, for the most part, which is in less neighborhoods. But we may go further, and affirm most truly that it is a mere [4] and miserable solitude to want true friends; without which the world is but a wilderness; and even in this sense also of solitude, whosoever in the frame of his nature and affections is unfit for friendship, he taketh it of the beast, and not from humanity.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness and swellings of the heart, which fashions of all kinds do cause and induce. We know diseases of stoppings and suffocations are the most dangerous in the body; and it is not much otherwise in the mind; you may take sarza [5] to open the liver, steel to open the spleen, flowers of sulphur for the lungs, castoreum for the brain; but no receipt openeth the heart, but a true friend; to whom you may impart griefs, joys, fears, hopes, suspicions, counsels, and whatsoever lieth upon the heart to oppress it, in a kind of civil shrift or confession.

It is a strange thing to observe how high a rate great kings and monarchs do set upon this fruit of friendship whereof we speak: so great, as they purchase it many times at the hazard of their own safety and greatness. For princes, in regard of the distance of their fortune from that of their subjects and servants, cannot gather this fruit, except (to make themselves capable thereof) they raise some persons to be as it were companions and almost equals to themselves, which many times sorteth to inconvenience. The modern languages give unto such persons the name of favorites, or privadoes; [1] as if it were matter of grace, or conversation. But the Roman name attaineth the true use and cause thereof, naming them participes curarum; [2] for it is that which tieth the knot. And we see plainly that this hath been done, not by weak and passionate princes only, but by the wisest and most politic that ever reigned; who have oftentimes joined to themselves some of their servants; whom both themselves have called friends, and allowed others likewise to call them in the same manner; using the word which is received between private men.

L. Sylla, when he commanded Rome, raised Pompey (after surnamed the Great) to that height, that Pompey vaunted himself for Sylla's over-match. For when he had carried the consulship for a friend of his, against the pursuit of Sylla, and that Sylla did a little resent thereat, and began to speak great, Pompey turned upon him again, and in effect bade him be quiet; for that more men adored the sun rising than the sun setting. With Julius Cæsar, Decimus Brutus had obtained that interest, as he set him down in his testament for heir in remainder after his nephew. And this was the man that had power with him to draw him forth to his death. For when Cæsar would have discharged the senate, in regard of some ill presages, and specially a dream of Calpurnia; this man lifted him gently by the arm out of his chair, telling him he hoped he would not dismiss the senate till his wife had dreamt a better dream. And it seemeth his favor was so great, as Antonius, in a letter which is recited verbatim in one of Cicero's Philippics, calleth him venefica, witch; as if he had enchanted Cæsar. Augustus raised Agrippa (though of mean birth) to that height, as when he consulted with Mæcenas [3] about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mæcenas took the liberty to tell him, that he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great. With Tiberius Cæsar, Sejanus had ascended to that height, as they two were termed and reckoned as a pair of friends. Tiberius in a letter to him saith, Hæc pro amicitiâ nostrâ non occultavi; [4] and the whole senate dedicated an altar to Friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearness of friendship between them

1 All of these ancient philosophers and poets professed to love solitude. Numa was the second king of Rome; for Empedocles, the Greek philosopher and poet of Sicily (490–430 B.C.), see Matthew Arnold's poem.

2 I Corinthians, XIII, 1.

3 A great city is great solitude.

4 absolute. 5 sarsaparilla.

1 confidants, comrades. 2 partners in cares.

3 The Roman statesman of the first century B.C., immortal as the patron of Virgil and Horace.

4 On account of our friendship, I have not concealed these matters (from you).

two. The like or more was between Septimius Severus and Plautianus. For he forced his eldest son to marry the daughter of Plautianus; and would often maintain Plautianus in doing affronts to his son; and did write also in a letter to the senate, by these words: I love the man so well, as I wish he may over-live[1] me. Now if these princes had been as a Trajan or a Marcus Aurelius, a man might have thought that this had proceeded of an abundant goodness of nature; but being men so wise, of such strength and severity of mind, and so extreme lovers of themselves, as all these were, it proveth most plainly that they found their own felicity though as great as ever happened to mortal men) but as an half piece, except they mought have a friend to make it entire; and yet, which is more, they were princes that had wives, sons, nephews; and yet all these could not supply the comfort of friendship.

It is not to be forgotten what Comineus[2] observeth of his first master, Duke Charles[3] the Hardy; namely, that he would communicate his secrets with none; and least of all, those secrets which troubled him most. Whereupon he goeth on and saith that towards his latter time that closeness did impair and a little perish his understanding. Surely Comineus mought have made the same judgment also, if it had pleased him, of his second master, Lewis the Eleventh,[4] whose closeness was indeed his tormentor. The parable of Pythagoras[5] is dark, but true; Cor ne edito: Eat not the heart. Certainly, if a man would give it a hard phrase, those that want friends to open themselves unto are cannibals of their own hearts. But one thing is most admirable (wherewith I will conclude this first fruit of friendship), which is, that this communicating of a man's self to his friend works two contrary effects; for it redoubleth joys, and cutteth griefs in halves. For there is no man that imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man that imparteth his griefs to his friend, but he grieveth the less. So that it is in truth of operation upon a man's mind, of like virtue as the alchemists use to attribute to their stone[6] for man's body; that it worketh all contrary effects, but still to the good and benefit of nature. But yet without praying in aid of alchemists, there is a manifest image of this in the ordinary course of nature. For in bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and on the other side weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression: and even so it is of minds.

The second fruit of friendship is healthful and sovereign for the understanding, as the first is for the affections. For friendship maketh indeed a fair day in the affections, from storm and tempests; but it maketh daylight in the understanding, out of darkness and confusion of thoughts. Neither is this to be understood only of faithful counsel, which a man receiveth from his friend; but before you come to that, certain it is that whosoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up, in the communicating and discoursing with another; he tosseth his thoughts more easily; he marshalleth them more orderly; he seeth how they look when they are turned into words: finally, he waxeth wiser than himself; and that more by an hour's discourse than by a day's meditation. It was well said by Themistocles to the king of Persia, That speech was like cloth of Arras, opened and put abroad; whereby the imagery doth appear in figure; whereas in thoughts they lie but as in packs.[1] Neither is this second fruit of friendship, in opening the understanding, restrained only to such friends as are able to give a man counsel; (they indeed are best;) but even without that, a man learneth of himself, and bringeth his own thoughts to light, and whetteth his wits as against a stone, which itself cuts not. In a word, a man were better relate himself to a statua or picture, than to suffer his thoughts to pass in smother.

Add now, to make this second fruit of friendship complete, that other point which lieth more open and falleth within vulgar[2] observation; which is faithful counsel from a friend. Heraclitus[3] saith well in one of his enigmas, Dry light is ever the best. And certain it is, that the light that a man receiveth by counsel from another is drier and purer than that which cometh from his own understanding and judgment; which is ever infused and drenched in his affections and customs. So as there is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. For there is no such flatterer as is a man's self; and 1 outlive.

2 The French historian, Philippe de Comines, d. 1519.
3 Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, 1433–77.
4 King of France, 1461–83. (He appears in Scott's Quentin Durward.)
5 The Greek mathematician of the sixth century B.C.
6 The philosopher's stone.

1 i.e., when the cloth is not spread out.
2 common.
3 The Greek philosopher, c. 535–475 B.C.

there is no such remedy against flattery of a man's self as the liberty of a friend. Counsel is of two sorts: the one concerning manners, the other concerning business. For the first, the best preservative to keep the mind in health is the faithful admonition of a friend. The calling of a man's self to a strict account is a medicine, sometime, too piercing and corrosive. Reading good books of morality is a little flat and dead. Observing our faults in others is sometimes improper for our case. But the best receipt (best, I say, to work, and best to take) is the admonition of a friend. It is a strange thing to behold what gross errors and extreme absurdities many (especially of the greater sort) do commit, for want of a friend to tell them of them; to the great damage both of their fame and fortune: for, as St. James saith,[1] they are as men that look sometimes into a glass, and presently forget their own shape and favor. As for business, a man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on; or that a man in anger is as wise as he that hath said over the four and twenty[2] letters; or that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm as upon a rest; and such other fond[3] and high imaginations, to think himself all in all. But when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight. And if any man think that he will take counsel, but it shall be by pieces; asking counsel in one business of one man, and in another business of another man; it is well (that is to say, better perhaps than if he asked none at all); but he runneth two dangers: one, that he shall not be faithfully counselled; for it is a rare thing, except it be from a perfect and entire friend, to have counsel given, but such as shall be bowed and crooked to some ends which he hath that giveth it. The other, that he shall have counsel given, hurtful and unsafe (though with good meaning), and mixed partly of mischief and partly of remedy; even as if you would call a physician that is thought good for the cure of the disease you complain of, but is unacquainted with your body; and therefore may put you in way for a present cure, but overthroweth your health in some other kind; and so cure the disease and kill the patient. But a friend that is wholly acquainted with a man's estate will beware, by furthering any present business, how he dasheth upon other inconvenience. And therefore rest not upon scattered counsels; they will rather distract and mislead, than settle and direct.

After these two noble fruits of friendship (peace in the affections, and support of the judgment), followeth the last fruit; which is like the pomegranate, full of many kernels; I mean aid and bearing a part in all actions and occasions. Here the best way to represent to life the manifold use of friendship is to cast and see how many things there are which a man cannot do himself; and then it will appear that it was a sparing speech of the ancients, to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself. Men have their time, and die many times in desire of some things which they principally take to heart; the bestowing of a child, the finishing of a work, or the like. If a man have a true friend, he may rest almost secure that the care of those things will continue after him. So that a man hath, as it were, two lives in his desires. A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices of life are as it were granted to him and his deputy. For he may exercise them by his friend. How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them; a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg; and a number of the like. But all these things are graceful in a friend's mouth, which are blushing in a man's own. So again, a man's person hath many proper relations which he cannot put off. A man cannot speak to his son but as a father; to his wife but as a husband; to his enemy but upon terms: whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. But to enumerate these things were endless; I have given the rule, where a man cannot fitly play his own part; if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage.

28

OF EXPENSE

Riches are for spending, and spending for honor and good actions. Therefore extraordinary expense must be limited by the worth of the occasion; for voluntary undoing may be as well for a man's country as for the kingdom of heaven. But ordinary expense ought to be limited by a man's estate; and governed with such regard, as it be within his compass; and not subject to deceit and

1 James, I, 23, 24.
2 In Bacon's day I and V were used for J and U.
3 foolish.

ouse of servants; and ordered to the best how, that the bills may be less than the esti- ation abroad. Certainly, if a man will keep ut of even hand,[1] his ordinary expenses ught to be but to the half of his receipts; nd if he think to wax rich, but to the third art. It is no baseness for the greatest to escend and look into their own estate. ome forbear it, not upon negligence alone, ut doubting[2] to bring themselves into mel- ncholy, in respect they shall find it broken. ut wounds cannot be cured without search- g. He that cannot look into his own estate all, had need both choose well those whom employeth, and change them often; for w are more timorous and less subtle. He at can look into his estate but seldom, it hooveth him to turn all to certainties.[3] man had need, if he be plentiful in some nd of expense, to be as saving again in some her. As if he be plentiful in diet, to be sav- g in apparel; if he be plentiful in the hall, to saving in the stable; and the like. For he at is plentiful in expenses of all kinds will rdly be preserved from decay. In clearing a man's estate, he may as well hurt him- lf in being too sudden, as in letting it run too long. For hasty selling is commonly disadvantageable as interest. Besides, he at clears at once will relapse; for finding mself out of straits, he will revert to his stoms: but he that cleareth by degrees in- ceth a habit of frugality, and gaineth as ell upon his mind as upon his estate. Cer- inly, who hath a state to repair, may not spise small things; and commonly it is less shonorable to abridge petty charges, than stoop to petty gettings. A man ought arily to begin charges which once begun ill continue; but in matters that return not e may be more magnificent.

32

OF DISCOURSE

Some in their discourse desire rather com- endation of wit, in being able to hold all ar- uments, than of judgment, in discerning hat is true; as if it were a praise to know hat might be said, and not what should be ought. Some have certain common places nd themes wherein they are good, and want ariety; which kind of poverty is for the most art tedious, and when it is once perceived, diculous. The honorablest part of talk is give the occasion; and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. It is good, in discourse and speech of conversation, to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments, tales with reasons, asking of questions with telling of opinions, and jest with earnest: for it is a dull thing to tire, and, as we say now, to jade, any thing too far. As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, great persons, any man's present business of importance, and any case that deserveth pity. Yet there be some that think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick. That is a vein which would be bridled;

Parce, puer, stimulis, et fortius utere loris.[1]

And generally, men ought to find the difference between saltness and bitterness. Certainly, he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others' memory. He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh; for he shall give them occasion to please themselves in speaking, and himself shall continually gather knowledge. But let his questions not be troublesome; for that is fit for a poser.[2] And let him be sure to leave other men their turns to speak. Nay, if there be any that would reign and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and to bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.[3] If you dissemble sometimes your knowledge of that you are thought to know, you shall be thought another time to know that you know not. Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom, and well chosen. I knew one was wont to say in scorn, He must needs be a wise man, he speaks so much of himself: and there is but one case wherein a man may commend himself with good grace; and that is in commending virtue in another; especially if it be such a virtue whereunto himself pretendeth. Speech of touch[4] towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. I knew two noblemen, of the west part of England, whereof the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at 1 balance his accounts. 2 fearing.

3 fixed incomes and expenditures.

1 From Ovid: "spare the whip, boy, and hold the reins more tightly."
2 examiner. 3 vigorous French dances.
4 personal remarks.

the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout[1] or dry blow given? To which the guest would answer, Such and such a thing passed. The lord would say, I thought he would mar a good dinner. Discretion of speech is more than eloquence; and to speak agreeably to him with whom we deal, is more than to speak in good words or in good order. A good continued speech, without a good speech of interlocution, shows slowness: and a good reply or second speech, without a good settled speech, showeth shallowness and weakness. As we see in beasts, that those that are weakest in the course are yet nimblest in the turn; as it is betwixt the greyhound and the hare. To use too many circumstances[2] ere one come to the matter, is wearisome; to use none at all, is blunt.

39

OF CUSTOM AND EDUCATION

Men's thoughts are much according to their inclination; their discourse and speeches according to their learning and infused opinions; but their deeds are after as they have been accustomed. And therefore, as Machiavel[3] well noteth (though in an evil-favored instance), there is no trusting to the force of nature nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom. His instance is, that for the achieving of a desperate conspiracy, a man should not rest upon the fierceness of any man's nature, or his resolute undertakings; but take such an one as hath had his hands formerly in blood. But Machiavel knew not of a Friar Clement,[4] nor a Ravillac,[5] nor a Jaureguy,[6] nor a Baltazar Gerard; yet his rule holdeth still that nature, nor the engagement of words, are not so forcible as custom. Only superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary[7] resolution is made equipollent[8] to custom even in matter of blood. In other things the predominancy of custom is everywhere visible; insomuch as a man would wonder to hear men profess, protest, engage, give great words, and then do just as they have done before; as if they were dead images, and engines moved only by the wheels of custom. We see also the reign or tyranny of custom what it is. The Indians[1] (I mean the sect of their wise men) lay themselves quietly upon a stack of wood, and so sacrifice themselves by fire. Nay the wives strive to be burned with the corpses of their husbands. The ladies of Sparta, of ancient time, were wont to be scourged upon the altar of Diana, without so much as quecking.[2] I remember, in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's time of England, an Irish rebel condemned, put up a petition to the deputy that he might be hanged in a withe, and not in an halter; because it had been so used with former rebels. There be monks in Russia, for penance, that will sit a whole night in a vessel of water, till they be engaged with hard ice. Many examples may be put of the force of custom, both upon mind and body. Therefore, since custom is the principal magistrate of man's life, let men by all means endeavor to obtain good customs. Certainly custom is most perfect when it beginneth in young years: this we call education; which is, in effect, but an early custom. So we see, in languages the tongue is more pliant to all expressions and sounds, the joints are more supple to all feats of activity and motions, in youth than afterwards. For it is true that late learners cannot so well take the ply;[3] except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix, but have kept themselves open and prepared to receive continual amendment, which is exceeding rare. But if the force of custom simple and separate be great, the force of custom copulate and conjoined and collegiate is far greater. For there example teacheth, company comforteth, emulation quickeneth, glory raiseth: so as in such places the force of custom is in his exaltation.[4] Certainly the great multiplication of virtues upon human nature resteth upon societies well ordained and disciplined. For commonwealths and good governments do nourish virtue grown, but do not much mend the seeds. But the misery is, that the most effectual means are now applied to the ends least to be desired.

1 insult. 2 details.
3 Machiavelli, the celebrated Italian politician, 1469–1527, author of The Prince and Discourses.
4 Jacques Clément assassinated Henry III of France.
5 François Ravaillac assassinated Henry IV of France in 1610.
6 Jaureguy attempted to assassinate William the Silent, Prince of Orange; Gérard succeeded, in 1584.
7 vowed. 8 equivalent.

42

OF YOUTH AND AGE

A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time. But that happeneth rarely. Generally, youth is like the first cogitations, not so wise as the second. For there is a youth in thoughts, as well as in

1 i.e., Hindus. 2 flinching. 3 be directed.
4 Astrological term; here, "at its greatest power."

nges. And yet the invention of young men is more lively than that of old; and imaginations stream into their minds better, and as it were more divinely. Natures that have much heat and great and violent desires and perturbations are not ripe for action till they have passed the meridian of their years; as it was with Julius Cæsar and Septimius Severus. Of the latter of whom it is said, Juventutem egit erroribus, imo furoribus, plenam.[1] And yet he was the ablest emperor, almost, of all the list. But reposed natures may do well in youth. As it is seen in Augustus Cæsar, Cosmus Duke of Florence, Gaston de Foix,[2] and others. On the other side, heat and vivacity in age is an excellent composition for business. Young men are fitter to invent than to judge; fitter for execution than for counsel; and fitter for new projects than for settled business. For the experience of age, in things that fall within the compass of it, directeth them; but in new things, abuseth[3] them. The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold; stir more than they can quiet; fly to the end, without consideration of the means and degrees; pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon absurdly; care not to innovate,[4] which draws unknown inconveniences; use extreme remedies at first; and that which doubleth all errors will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Men of age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon, and seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Certainly it is good to compound employments of both; for that will be good for the present, because the virtues of either age may correct the defects of both; and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors; and, lastly, good for extern[5] accidents, because authority followeth old men, and favor and popularity youth. But for the moral part, perhaps youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politic. A certain rabbin,[6] upon the text, Your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams,[1] inferreth that young men are admitted nearer to God than old, because vision is a clearer revelation than a dream. And certainly, the more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. There be some have an overearly ripeness in their years, which fadeth betimes. These are, first, such as have brittle wits, the edge whereof is soon turned; such as was Hermogenes[2] the rhetorician, whose books are exceeding subtle; who afterwards waxed stupid. A second sort is of those that have some natural dispositions which have better grace in youth than in age; such as is a fluent and luxuriant speech; which becomes youth well, but not age: so Tully[3] saith of Hortensius,[4] Idem manebat, neque idem decebat.[5] The third is of such as take too high a strain at the first, and are magnanimous more than tract of years can uphold. As was Scipio Africanus, of whom Livy[6] saith in effect, Ultima primis cedebant.[7]

1 He passed his entire youth in errors, or rather, mad acts.
2 Duc de Nemours, an able French general, killed in battle at Ravenna in 1512.
3 misleads.
4 i.e., they are not careful how they innovate.
5 outside.
6 rabbi

1 Joel, II, 28.
2 A Greek prodigy of the second century A.D.
3 Cicero.
4 A Roman orator, Cicero's contemporary.
5 He remained the same, when the same was no longer becoming to him.
6 The excellent Roman historian, 59 B.C.–17 A.D.
7 His last acts were not up to his first.

47

OF NEGOTIATING

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by the mediation of a third than by a man's self. Letters are good, when a man would draw an answer by letter back again; or when it may serve for a man's justification afterwards to produce his own letter; or where it may be danger to be interrupted, or heard by pieces. To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, as commonly with inferiors; or in tender cases, where a man's eye upon the countenance of him with whom he speaketh may give him a direction how far to go; and generally, where a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. In choice of instruments, it is better to choose men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that is committed to them, and to report back again faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive out of other men's business somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report for satisfaction' sake. Use also such persons as affect the business wherein they are employed; for that quickeneth much; and such as are fit for the matter; as bold men for expostulation, fair-spoken men for persuasion, crafty men for inquiry and observation, froward and absurd [1] men for business that doth not well bear out itself.[2] Use also such as have been lucky, and prevailed before in things wherein you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription.[3] It is better to sound a person with whom one deals afar off, than to fall upon the point at first; except you mean to surprise him by some short question. It is better dealing with men in appetite,[4] than with those that are where they would be. If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start or first performance [5] is all; which a man cannot reasonably demand, except either the nature of the thing be such, which must go before; or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing; or else that he be counted the honester man. All practice [6] is to discover, or to work. Men discover themselves in trust, in passion, at unawares, and of necessity, when they would have somewhat done and cannot find an apt pretext. If you would work any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weakness and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. In dealing with cunning persons, we must ever consider their ends, to interpret their speeches; and it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. In all negotiations of difficulty, a man may not look to sow and reap at once; but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

50

OF STUDIES

Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in studies is sloth; to use them too much for ornament, is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humor of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience: for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need proyning,[1] by study; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men contemn studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them; for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute; nor to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously;[2] and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others; but that would be only in the less important arguments, and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy[3] things. Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit: and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that[4] he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets witty;[5] the mathematics subtile; natural philosophy deep; moral grave; logic and rhetoric able to contend. Abeunt studia in mores.[6] Nay, there is no stond [7] or impediment in the wit but may be wrought out by fit studies; like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises. Bowling is good for the stone and reins;[8] shooting for the lungs and breast; gentle walking for the stomach; riding for the head; and the like. So if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the mathematics; for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again. If his wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the Schoolmen; for they are cymini sectores.[9] If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers' cases. So every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.

1 unreasonable. 2 justify itself.
3 reputation, i.e., of being lucky.
4 eager, ambitious.
5 i.e., which of the two men shall carry out his agreement first.
6 dealing.

1 pruning, cultivating. 2 carefully.
3 tasteless. 4 what.
5 Poets make men witty, i.e., full of fancy, imaginative.
6 Studies develop into manners (Ovid).
7 obstruction. 8 kidneys. 9 hair-splitters.

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY LYRICS

GEORGE WITHER
(1588–1667)

Wither was a militant Puritan, but far from mber or bigoted. His steadily increasing putation as a poet is based upon his keen tire, Abuses Stript and Whipt, 1613; his storals, The Shepherd's Hunting, 1615, and ir Virtue, 1622; and his religious lyrics, pub- hed under the title of Hallelujah in 1641. s a poet he displays genuine lyrical feeling. ne poems here given display his lighter mood.

HALL I, WASTING IN DESPAIR

Shall I, wasting in despair,
Die, because a woman's fair?
Or make pale my cheeks with care,
'Cause another's rosy are?
Be she fairer than the day,
Or the flowery meads in May!
If she be not so to me,
What care I how fair she be?

Should my heart be grieved or pined,
'Cause I see a woman kind?
Or a well disposed nature
Joined with a lovely feature?
Be she meeker, kinder than
Turtle dove, or pelican!
If she be not so to me,
What care I how kind she be?

Shall a woman's virtues move
Me to perish for her love?
Or her well deserving known,
Make me quite forget mine own?
Be she with that goodness blest
Which may gain her, name of best!
If she be not such to me,
What care I how good she be?

'Cause her fortune seems too high,
Shall I play the fool, and die?
Those that bear a noble mind,
Where they want of riches find,
Think "What, with them, they would do
That, without them, dare to woo!"
And unless that mind I see,
What care I though great she be?

Great, or good, or kind, or fair,
I will ne'er the more despair!
If she love me (this believe!)
I will die, ere she shall grieve!
If she slight me, when I woo,
I can scorn, and let her go!
For if she be not for me,
What care I for whom she be?

I LOVED A LASS

I loved a lass, a fair one,
As fair as e'er was seen;
She was indeed a rare one,
Another Sheba Queen.
But, fool as then I was,
I thought she loved me too;
But now, alas! she's left me,
Falero, lero, loo!

Her hair like gold did glister,
Each eye was like a star,
She did surpass her sister,
Which passed all others far.
She would me honey call,
She'd — O she'd kiss me too!
But now, alas! she's left me,
Falero, lero, loo!

Many a merry meeting
My love and I have had;
She was my only sweeting,
She made my heart full glad.
The tears stood in her eyes
Like to the morning dew:
But now, alas! she's left me,
Falero, lero, loo!

Her cheeks were like the cherry,
Her skin was white as snow;
When she was blithe and merry
She angel-like did show;
Her waist exceeding small,
The fives did fit her shoe:
But now alas! she's left me,
Falero, lero, loo!

In summer time or winter
She had her heart's desire;
I still did scorn to stint her
From sugar, sack, or fire;
The world went round about,
No cares we ever knew:
But now, alas! she's left me,
Falero, lero, loo!

To maidens' vows and swearing
Henceforth no credit give;
You may give them the hearing,
But never them believe;
They are as false as fair,
Unconstant, frail, untrue:

For mine, alas! hath left me,
Falero, lero, loo!

WILLIAM BROWNE
(1591–1643)

Aside from a few pure lyrics, Browne is remembered for his long poem, Britannia's Pastorals, 1613, which describes the natural beauties of England. His spirit and temper foreshadow James Thomson of The Seasons and The Castle of Indolence.

FOR HER GAIT, IF SHE BE WALKING

For her gait, if she be walking;
Be she sitting, I desire her
For her state's sake; and admire her
For her wit if she be talking;
Gait and state and wit approve her;
For which all and each I love her.

Be she sullen, I commend her
For a modest. Be she merry,
For a kind one her prefer I.
Briefly, everything doth lend her
So much grace, and so approve her,
That for everything I love her.

ON THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF PEMBROKE[1]

Underneath this sable hearse [2]
Lies the subject of all verse:
Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother.
Death, ere thou hast slain another
Fair and learned and good as she,
Time shall throw a dart at thee.

Marble piles let no man raise
To her name; for after days
Some kind woman, born as she,
Reading this, like Niobe [3]
Shall turn marble, and become
Both her mourner and her tomb.

THOMAS CAREW
(1598?–1639?)

Among the Cavalier poets, who, like Herrick, sang melodiously of the less serious side of life, Carew holds a deservedly high place. His lyrics are musical and delicately beautiful. Most of them were published in a collected edition after his death.

1 Sir Philip Sidney's sister, to whom he dedicated his Arcadia.
2 tomb.
3 When Niobe was mourning the death of her children, Zeus changed her to stone.

SONG

Ask me no more where Jove bestows,
When June is past, the fading rose;
For in your beauty's orient [1] deep
These flowers, as in their causes, sleep.

Ask me no more whither do stray
The golden atoms of the day;
For, in pure love, heaven did prepare
Those powders to enrich your hair.

Ask me no more whither doth haste
The nightingale when May is past;
For in your sweet dividing [2] throat
She winters and keeps warm her note.

Ask me no more where those stars light
That downwards fall in dead of night;
For in your eyes they sit, and there
Fixed become as in their sphere.

Ask me no more if east or west
The Phœnix [3] builds her spicy nest;
For unto you at last she flies,
And in your fragrant bosom dies.

PERSUASIONS TO JOY: A SONG

If the quick spirits in your eye
Now languish and anon must die;
If every sweet and every grace
Must fly from that forsaken face:
Then, Celia, let us reap our joys
Ere Time such goodly fruit destroys.

Or, if that golden fleece must grow
For ever free from aged snow;
If those bright suns must know no shade
Nor your fresh beauties ever fade:
Then fear not, Celia, to bestow
What, still being gathered, still must grow.

Thus either Time his sickle brings
In vain, or else in vain his wings.

INGRATEFUL BEAUTY THREATENED

Know, Celia, since thou art so proud,
'Twas I that gave thee thy renown.

1 bright. 2 singing. 3 see footnote, p. 329.

Thou hadst in the forgotten crowd
Of common beauties lived unknown,
Had not my verse extolled thy name,
And with it imped [1] the wings of Fame.

That killing power is none of thine;
I gave it to thy voice and eyes;
Thy sweets, thy graces, all are mine;
Thou art my star, shinest in my skies;
Then dart not from thy borrowed sphere
Lightning on him that fixed thee there.

Tempt me with such affrights no more,
Lest what I made I uncreate;
Let fools thy mystic form adore,
I know thee in thy mortal state.
Wise poets, that wrapt Truth in tales,
Knew her themselves through all her veils.

THE UNFADING BEAUTY

He that loves a rosy cheek,
Or a coral lip admires,
Or from star-like eyes doth seek
Fuel to maintain his fires:
As old Time makes these decay,
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combined,
Kindle never-dying fires.
Where these are not, I despise
Lovely cheeks or lips or eyes.

EPITAPH

This little vault, this narrow room,
Of love and beauty is the tomb;
The dawning beam, that 'gan to clear
Our clouded sky, lies darkened here,
For ever set to us: by death
Sent to enflame the world beneath.
'Twas but a bud, yet did contain
More sweetness than shall spring again;
A budding star, that might have grown
Into a sun when it had blown.
This hopeful beauty did create
New life in love's declining state;
But now his empire ends, and we
From fire and wounding darts are free.
His brand, his bow, let no man fear:
The flames, the arrows, all lie here.

[1] To imp, in falconry, was to mend a wing by fastening on additional feathers.

SIR WILLIAM DAVENANT
(1606–1668)

Davenant, who boasted that he was a son of Shakespeare, is chiefly important as a link between the theater of 1642 and the new theater of 1660, with its actresses, elaborate, movable scenery, music, heroic couplets, three unities, and gigantic themes of love and honor. While imprisoned in the Tower, he wrote his ponderous heroic poem, Gondibert, 1652, after the French manner. In 1656, before the theaters were legally opened, he produced The Siege of Rhodes, the first English opera. Thereafter he managed a theater, staging more than a score of his own plays among others; collaborating with Dryden in a new version of The Tempest (in which, to add to the spectacle, they had two islands); and guiding the fortunes of the new heroic drama generally. His lyrics alone have lasted, although in his life Davenant enjoyed great popularity as a writer.

SONG

The lark now leaves his wat'ry nest,
And climbing shakes his dewy wings,
He takes this window for the East,
And to implore your light he sings:
Awake, awake! the morn will never rise
Till she can dress her beauty at your eyes.

The merchant bows unto the seaman's star,
The ploughman from the sun his season takes;
But still the lover wonders what they are
Who look for day before his mistress wakes.
Awake, awake! break through your veils of lawn!
Then draw your curtains, and begin the dawn!

TO A MISTRESS DYING

Lover. Your beauty, ripe and calm and fresh
As eastern summers are,
Must now, forsaking time and flesh,
Add light to some small star.

Philosopher. Whilst she yet lives, were stars decayed,
Their light by hers relief might find;
But Death will lead her to a shade
Where Love is cold and Beauty blind.

Lover. Lovers, whose priests all poets are,
Think every mistress, when she dies,

Is changed at least into a star:
And who dares doubt the poets wise?

Philosopher. But ask not bodies doomed to die
To what abode they go;
Since Knowledge is but Sorrow's spy,
It is not safe to know.

EDMUND WALLER
(1606–1687)

Waller has written some of the best artificial poems of the Restoration period, most of them addressed to "Sacharissa," his first wife. They are notable for their wit and delicate fancy. Though of a prominent Royalist family, a graduate of Cambridge, Waller served Cromwell. Later he took the side of King Charles and was forced into exile in France. After 1660 he usually managed to keep a seat in Parliament or a position at court, frequently at the expense of turning against a friend or making himself abjectly servile.

GO, LOVELY ROSE!

Go, lovely Rose!
Tell her that wastes her time and me,
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet and fair she seems to be.

Tell her that's young,
And shuns to have her graces spied,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended died.

Small is the worth
Of beauty from the light retired;
Bid her come forth,
Suffer herself to be desired,
And not blush so to be admired.

Then die! that she
The common fate of all things rare
May read in thee:
How small a part of time they share,
That are so wondrous sweet and fair!

ON A GIRDLE

That which her slender waist confined,
Shall now my joyful temples bind;
No monarch but would give his crown,
His arms might do what this has done.

It was my heaven's extremest sphere,
The pale which held that lovely deer;
My joy, my grief, my hope, my love,
Did all within this circle move!

A narrow compass! and yet there
Dwelt all that's good, and all that's fair;
Give me but what this ribband bound,
Take all the rest the sun goes round!

TO PHYLLIS

Phyllis, why should we delay
Pleasures shorter than the day?
Could we (which we never can)
Stretch our lives beyond their span,
Beauty like a shadow flies,
And our youth before us dies;
Or would youth and beauty stay,
Love hath wings, and will away.
Love hath swifter wings than Time;
Change in love to heaven does climb;
Gods that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate.
Phyllis, to this truth we owe
All the love betwixt us two.
Let not you and I inquire
What has been our past desire;
On what shepherds you have smiled,
Or what nymphs I have beguiled;
Leave it to the planets too,
What we shall hereafter do;
For the joys we now may prove,
Take advice of present love.

OLD AGE

The seas are quiet when the winds give o'er;
So calm are we when passions are no more.
For then we know how vain it was to boast
Of fleeting things, so certain to be lost.
Clouds of affection from our younger eyes
Conceal that emptiness which age descries.

The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed,
Lets in new light through chinks that Time hath made.
Stronger by weakness, wiser men become
As they draw near to their eternal home.
Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view
That stand upon the threshold of the new.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING
(1609–1642)

Suckling, a knight and son of a knight, well-to-do, happy-go-lucky favorite of the king, author of four forgotten plays, lives in English literature for his carefree, witty, graceful songs.

A DOUBT OF MARTYRDOM

O for some honest lover's ghost,
Some kind unbodied post
Sent from the shades below!
I strangely long to know
Whether the noble chaplets wear,
Those that their mistress' scorn did bear
Or those that were used kindly.

For whatsoe'er they tell us here
To make those sufferings dear,
'Twill there, I fear, be found
That to the being crowned
T' have loved alone will not suffice,
Unless we also have been wise
And have our loves enjoyed.

What posture can we think him in
That, here unloved, again
Departs, and 's thither gone
Where each sits by his own?
Or how can that Elysium be Where I my mistress still must see
Circled in other's arms?

For there the judges all are just,
And Sophonisba [1] must
Be his whom she held dear,
Not his who loved her here.
The sweet Philoclea,[2] since she died,
Lies by her Pirocles [2] his side,
Not by Amphialus.[2]

Some bays, perchance, or myrtle bough
For difference crowns the brow
Of those kind souls that were
The noble martyrs here;
And if that be the only odds
(As who can tell?), ye kinder gods,
Give me the woman here!

THE CONSTANT LOVER

Out upon it, I have loved
Three whole days together!
And am like to love three more,
If it prove fair weather.

Time shall moult away his wings,
Ere he shall discover
In the whole wide world again
Such a constant lover.

But the spite on't is, no praise
Is due at all to me:
Love with me had made no stays,[1]
Had it any been but she.

Had it any been but she,
And that very face,
There had been at least ere this
A dozen dozen in her place.

WHY SO PALE AND WAN?

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
Prithee, why so pale?
Will, when looking well can't move her,
Looking ill prevail?
Prithee, why so pale?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
Prithee, why so mute?
Will, when speaking well can't win her,
Saying nothing do't?
Prithee, why so mute?

Quit, quit for shame! This will not move
This cannot take her.
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her:
The devil take her!

RICHARD CRASHAW
(1613?–1649)

A Puritan by birth and a graduate of Cambridge, Crashaw became a Catholic, living in France and Italy, and dying a priest of the Church. Crashaw was both a scholar and a poet. As a poet he was usually mystical. In his fondness for involved imagery, he is like Donne; in his religious poetry, which forms the greater part of his verse, he resembles Herbert. His most important volume is Steps to the Temple, 1646.

WISHES TO HIS SUPPOSED MISTRESS

Whoe'er she be —
That not impossible she
That shall command my heart and me:

1 Of Carthage, who married Masinissa after the latter had defeated her husband, Syphax.
2 Characters in Sidney's Arcadia.

1 stops.

Where'er she lie,
Locked up from mortal eye
In shady leaves of destiny:

Till that ripe birth
Of studied Fate stand forth,
And teach her fair steps to our earth:

Till that divine
Idea take a shrine
Of crystal flesh, through which to shine:

Meet you her, my wishes,
Bespeak her to my blisses,
And be ye called my absent kisses.

I wish her beauty,
That owes not all its duty
To gaudy tire, or glistering shoe-tie:

Something more than Taffeta or tissue can,
Or rampant feather, or rich fan.

More than the spoil
Of shop, or silkworm's toil,
Or a bought blush, or a set smile.

A face, that's best
By its own beauty drest,
And can alone commend the rest.

A face, made up
Out of no other shop
Than what Nature's white hand sets ope.

A cheek, where youth
And blood, with pen of truth,
Write what the reader sweetly ru'th.

A cheek, where grows
More than a morning rose,
Which to no box his being owes.

Lips, where all day
A lover's kiss may play,
Yet carry nothing thence away:

Looks, that oppress
Their richest tires, but dress
And clothe their simplest nakedness.

Eyes, that displace
The neighbour diamond, and outface
That sunshine by their own sweet grace.

Tresses, that wear
Jewels but to declare
How much themselves more precious are:

Whose native ray
Can tame the wanton day
Of gems that in their bright shades play.

Each ruby there,
Or pearl that dare appear,
Be its own blush, be its own tear.

A well-tamed heart,
For whose more noble smart
Love may be long choosing a dart.

Eyes, that bestow
Full quivers on love's bow,
Yet pay less arrows than they owe.

Smiles, that can warm
The blood, yet teach a charm,
That chastity shall take no harm.

Blushes, that bin
The burnish of no sin,
Nor flames of aught too hot within.

Joys, that confess
Virtue their mistress,
And have no other head to dress.

Fears, fond [1] and flight [2]
As the coy bride's, when night
First does the longing lover right.

Tears, quickly fled,
And vain, as those are shed
For a dying maidenhead.

Days, that need borrow
No part of their good-morrow
From a fore-spent night of sorrow.

Days, that in spite
Of darkness, by the light
Of a clear mind, are day all night.

Nights, sweet as they,
Made short by lovers' play,
Yet long by th' absence of the day.

Life, that dares send
A challenge to his end,
And when it comes, say, "Welcome, friend!"

Sydneian [3] showers
Of sweet discourse, whose powers
Can crown old Winter's head with flowers.

1 foolish. 2 quickly disappearing.
3 Sir Philip Sidney's.

Soft silken hours,
Open suns, shady bowers;
'Bove all, nothing within that lowers.

Whate'er delight
Can make Day's forehead bright,
Or give down to the wings of Night.

In her whole frame
Have nature all the name,
Art and ornament the shame.

Her flattery,
Picture and poesy;
Her counsel her own virtue be.

I wish her store
Of worth may leave her poor
Of wishes; and I wish — no more.

Now, if Time knows
That her, whose radiant brows
Weave them a garland of my vows;

Her, whose just bays
My future hopes can raise,
A trophy to her present praise;

Her, that dares be
What these lines wish to see;
I seek no further, it is she.

'Tis she, and here,
Lo! I unclothe and clear
My wishes' cloudy character.

May she enjoy it
Whose merit dare apply it,
But modesty dares still deny it!

Such worth as this is
Shall fix my flying wishes,
And determine them to kisses.

Let her full glory,
My fancies, fly before ye;
Be ye my fictions — but her story.

RICHARD LOVELACE
(1618–1658)

Lovelace, an ardent Royalist, an Oxford graduate, spent his fortune, and much time in prison, for King Charles. He is the type of cavalier pictured by Browning in Cavalier Lyrics and by Sir Walter Scott in Here's a Health to King Charles. His best lyrics deal with loyalty in love and war.

TO LUCASTA, ON GOING TO THE WARS

Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind,
That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind
To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase,
The first foe in the field;
And with a stronger faith embrace
A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
As thou too shalt adore:
I could not love thee, dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.

TO ALTHEA, FROM PRISON

When Love with unconfined wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at the grates;
When I lie tangled in her hair
And fettered to her eye,
The gods that wanton in the air
Know no such liberty.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
With no allaying Thames,[1]
Our careless heads with roses bound,
Our hearts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
When healths and draughts go free,
Fishes that tipple in the deep
Know no such liberty.

When, like committed[2] linnets, I
With shriller throat will sing
The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
And glories of my king;
When I shall voice aloud how good
He is, how great should be,
Enlarged winds, that curl the flood,
Know no such liberty.

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage:
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage:
If I have freedom in my love,
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty.

1 i.e., water. 2 caged.

ANDREW MARVELL
(1621–1678)

From the time of his graduation from Cambridge to his death Marvell gave his time mainly to politics: holding a seat in Parliament; assisting Milton when the latter was Latin Secretary; and writing articles, often bitter but always keen, in favor of representative government. It is a tribute to Marvell's integrity and sociability that in spite of his political opposition he remained a friend of Charles II, who offered him sinecures, which Marvell regularly refused. Marvell's prose far outweighs in bulk his verse, but good as it is, it does not approach in greatness the few poems that he wrote. The best of Marvell's lyrics are unsurpassed.

HORATIAN ODE UPON CROMWELL'S RETURN FROM IRELAND

The forward youth that would appear,
Must now forsake his Muses dear,
Nor in the shadows sing
His numbers languishing.

'Tis time to leave the books in dust,
And oil the unused armor's rust,
Removing from the wall
The corslet of the hall.

So restless Cromwell could not cease
In the inglorious arts of peace,
But through adventurous war
Urged his active star;

And like the three-forked lightning, first
Breaking the clouds where it was nursed,
Did through his own side
His fiery way divide;

For 'tis all one to courage high,
The emulous, or enemy;
And with such, to enclose
Is more than to oppose;

Then burning through the air he went
And palaces and temples rent;
And Cæsar's head at last
Did through his laurels blast.

'Tis madness to resist or blame
The face of angry heaven's flame;
And if we would speak true,
Much to the man is due

Who, from his private gardens, where
He lived reserved and austere,
(As if his highest plot
To plant the bergamot,[1])

Could by industrious valor climb
To ruin the great work of time,
And cast the kingdoms old
Into another mould;

Though Justice against Fate complain,
And plead the ancient rights in vain —
But those do hold or break
As men are strong or weak;

Nature, that hateth emptiness,[2]
Allows of penetration[3] less,
And therefore must make room
Where greater spirits come.

What field of all the civil war
Where his were not the deepest scar?
And Hampton[4] shows what part
He had of wiser art,

Where, twining subtle fears with hope,
He wove a net of such a scope
That Charles himself might chase
To Carisbrook's narrow case,

That thence the Royal actor borne
The tragic scaffold might adorn:
While round the armed bands
Did clap their bloody hands.

He nothing common did or mean
Upon that memorable scene,
But with his keener eye
The axe's edge did try;

Nor called the Gods, with vulgar spite,
To vindicate his helpless right;
But bowed his comely head
Down, as upon a bed.

— This was that memorable hour
Which first assured the forced power:[5]
So when they did design
The Capitol's first line,[6]

A bleeding head,[7] where they begun,
Did fright the architects to run;
And yet in that the State
Foresaw its happy fate!

1 A kind of pear-tree. 2 a vacuum.
3 penetrability of matter.
4 Hampton Court, the royal residence near Richmond outside London, from which Charles fled to Carisbrook Castle.
5 The Commonwealth. 6 Foundations of Rome.
7 Found, according to tradition, during the digging.

And now the Irish are ashamed
To see themselves in one year tamed;
So much one man can do
That does both act and know.

They can affirm his praises best,
And have, though overcome, confessed
How good he is, how just
And fit for highest trust.

Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
But still in the republic's hand —
How fit he is to sway
That can so well obey!

He to the Commons' feet presents
A kingdom [1] for his first year's rents,
And (what he may) forbears
His fame, to make it theirs:

And has his sword and spoils ungirt
To lay them at the public's skirt.
So when the falcon high
Falls heavy from the sky,

She, having killed, no more doth search
But on the next green bough to perch,
Where, when he first does lure,
The falconer has her sure.

— What may not then our isle presume
While victory his crest does plume?
What may not others fear
If thus he crowns each year?

As Cæsar he, ere long, to Gaul,
To Italy an Hannibal,
And to all states not free
Shall climacteric [2] be.

The Pict [3] no shelter now shall find Within his parti-colored [4] mind,
But from this valor sad
Shrink underneath the plaid —

Happy, if in the tufted brake
The English hunter him mistake,[5]
Nor lay [6] his hounds in near
The Caledonian deer.

But thou, the war's and Fortune's son,
March indefatigably on;
And for the last effect
Still keep the sword erect.

Besides the force it has to fright
The spirits of the shady night,
The same arts that did gain
A power, must it maintain.

1 Ireland. 2 dangerous, decisive. 3 Scot.
4 Variegated, as his plaid.
5 miss. 6 lay in = send in.

TO HIS COY MISTRESS

Had we but world [1] enough, and time,
This coyness, Lady, were no crime.
We would sit down and think which way
To walk and pass our long love's day.
Thou by the Indian Ganges' side
Shouldst rubies find; I by the tide
Of Humber would complain. I would Love you ten years before the Flood,
And you should, if you please, refuse
Till the conversion of the Jews.
My vegetable love should grow
Vaster than empires, and more slow;
An hundred years should go to praise
Thine eyes and on thy forehead gaze;
Two hundred to adore each breast,
But thirty thousand to the rest;
An age at least to every part,
And the last age should show your heart.
For, Lady, you deserve this state,
Nor would I love at lower rate.
But at my back I always hear Time's winged chariot hurrying near;
And yonder all before us lie
Deserts of vast eternity.
Thy beauty shall no more be found,
Nor, in thy marble vault, shall sound
My echoing song; then worms shall try
That long preserved virginity,
And your quaint honor turn to dust,
And into ashes all my lust:
The grave's a fine and private place,
But none, I think, do there embrace.
Now therefore, while the youthful hue
Sits on thy skin like morning dew,
And while thy willing soul transpires
At every pore with instant fires,
Now let us sport us while we may,
And now, like amorous birds of prey,
Rather at once our time devour
Than languish in his slow-chapped [2] power.
Let us roll all our strength and all
Our sweetness up into one ball,
And tear our pleasures with rough strife
Thorough the iron gates of life:
Thus, though we cannot make our sun
Stand still, yet we will make him run.

1 i.e., space. 2 slowly crushing.

THE GARDEN

How vainly men themselves amaze,[1]
To win the palm, the oak, or bays,
And their incessant labors see
Crowned from some single herb or tree,
Whose short and narrow-verged [2] shade
Does prudently their toils upbraid,
While all the flowers and trees do close
To weave the garlands of repose!

Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
And Innocence, thy sister dear?
Mistaken long, I sought you then
In busy companies of men.
Your sacred plants, if here below,
Only among the plants will grow;
Society is all but rude
To this delicious solitude.

No white nor red was ever seen
So amorous [3] as this lovely green.
Fond lovers, cruél as their flame,
Cut in these trees their mistress' name.
Little, alas! they know or heed
How far these beauties hers exceed!
Fair trees! wheres'e'r your barks I wound,
No name shall but your own be found.

When we have run our passion's heat,
Love hither makes his best retreat.
The gods, that mortal beauty chase,
Still in a tree did end their race;
Apollo hunted Daphne so,
Only that she might laurel grow;
And Pan did after Syrinx speed,
Not as a nymph, but for a reed.

What wondrous life is this I lead!
Ripe apples drop about my head;
The luscious clusters of the vine
Upon my mouth do crush their wine;
The nectarine and curious [4] peach
Into my hands themselves do reach;
Stumbling on melons, as I pass,
Ensnared with flowers, I fall on grass.

Meanwhile the mind, from pleasure less,
Withdraws into its happiness;
The mind, that ocean where each kind
Does straight its own resemblance find;
Yet it creates, transcending these,
Far other worlds, and other seas,
Annihilating all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade.

Here at the fountain's sliding foot,
Or at some fruit-tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest [1] aside,
My soul into the boughs does glide;
There, like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets and combs its silver wings,
And, till prepared for longer flight,
Waves in its plumes the various light.

Such was that happy garden-state,
While man there walked without a mate;
After a place so pure and sweet,
What other help could yet be meet!
But 'twas beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there:
Two paradises 'twere in one,
To live in paradise alone.

How well the skilful gardener drew
Of flowers and herbs this dial [2] new!
Where, from above, the milder sun
Does through a fragrant zodiac run,
And, as it works, the industrious bee
Computes its time as well as we!
How could such sweet and wholesome hours
Be reckoned, but with herbs and flowers!

AN EPITAPH

Enough; and leave the rest to Fame!
'Tis to commend her, but to name.
Courtship which, living, she declined,
When dead, to offer were unkind:
Nor can the truest wit, or friend,
Without detracting, her commend.

To say — she lived a virgin chaste
In this age loose and all unlaced;
Nor was, when vice is so allowed,
Of virtue or ashamed or proud;
That her soul was on Heaven so bent,
No minute but it came and went;
That, ready her last debt to pay,
She summed her life up every day;
Modest as morn, as mid-day bright,
Gentle as evening, cool as night:
— 'Tis true; but all too weakly said.
'Twas more significant, she's dead.

HENRY VAUGHAN
(1622–1695)

Vaughan is a follower of Herbert as a writer of religious lyrics, but with an imagination and

1 perplex, worry. 2 of a narrow margin
3 beautiful. 4 delicious.

1 vestment, covering.
2 i.e., a clock made of flowers.

yrical power that is all his own. Little is nown of his life. He attended Oxford, and later ettled down at Newton-by-Usk. He called imself "the Silurist," after the old name of he place in Wales where he was born. His est work is contained in Silex Scintillans Sparkling Flint), 1650, and Olor Iscanus (The wan of Usk), 1651. The best known of his oems is The Retreat, partly because of the narked similarity between it and Wordsworth's Ode on the Intimations of Immortality.

THE RETREAT

Happy those early days, when I
Shined in my angel-infancy!
Before I understood this place
Appointed for my second race,[1]
Or taught my soul to fancy aught
But a white, celestial thought;
When yet I had not walked above
A mile or two from my first love,
And looking back, at that short space,
Could see a glimpse of his bright face;
When on some gilded cloud or flower
My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
And in those weaker glories spy
Some shadows of eternity;
Before I taught my tongue to wound
My conscience with a sinful sound,
Or had the black art to dispense,
A several sin to every sense,
But felt through all this fleshly dress
Bright shoots of everlastingness.
O, how I long to travel back,
And tread again that ancient track!
That I might once more reach that plain,
Where first I left my glorious train;
From whence th' enlightened spirit sees
That shady city[2] of palm trees.
But ah! my soul with too much stay
Is drunk, and staggers in the way!
Some men a forward motion love,
But I by backward steps would move;
And when this dust falls to the urn,
In that state I came, return.

THE WORLD

I saw Eternity the other night,
Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
All calm, as it was bright;
And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years,
Driv'n by the spheres,
Like a vast shadow moved, in which the world
And all her train were hurled.
The doting lover in his quaintest strain
Did there complain;
Near him, his lute, his fancy, and his flights,
Wit's four delights,
With gloves, and knots, the silly snares of pleasure,
Yet his dear treasure,
All scattered lay, while he his eyes did pour
Upon a flower.

The darksome statesman, hung with weights and woe,
Like a thick midnight-fog, moved there so slow,
He did not stay, nor go;
Condemning thoughts, like sad eclipses, scowl
Upon his soul,
And clouds of crying witnesses without
Pursued him with one shout.
Yet digged the mole, and, lest his ways be found,
Worked under ground,
Where he did clutch his prey; but one did see
That policy;
Churches and altars fed him; perjuries
Were gnats and flies;
It rained about him blood and tears, but he Drank them as free.

The fearful miser on a heap of rust
Sat pining all his life there, did scarce trust
His own hands with the dust,
Yet would not place one piece above, but lives
In fear of thieves.
Thousands there were as frantic as himself,
And hugged each one his pelf;
The downright epicure placed heaven in sense,
And scorned pretence;
While others, slipt into a wide excess,
Said little less;
The weaker sort, slight, trivial wares enslave,
Who think them brave;
And poor, despised Truth sat counting by
Their victory.

Yet some, who all this while did weep and sing,
And sing and weep, soared up into the ring;

1 existence. 2 Paradise.

But most would use no wing.
O fools, said I, thus to prefer dark night
Before true light!
To live in grots and caves, and hate the day
Because it shows the way,
The way, which from this dead and dark abode
Leads up to God;
A way there you might tread the sun, and be
More bright than he!
But, as I did their madness so discuss,
One whispered thus:
"This ring the Bridegroom did for none provide,
But for his bride."

DEPARTED FRIENDS

They are all gone into the world of light!
And I alone sit lingering here;
Their very memory is fair and bright,
And my sad thoughts doth clear.

It glows and glitters in my cloudy breast,
Like stars upon some gloomy grove,
Or those faint beams in which this hill is drest,
After the sun's remove.

I see them walking in an air of glory,
Whose light doth trample on my days;
My days, which are at best but dull and hoary,
Mere glimmering and decays.

O holy hope! and high humility,
High as the heavens above!
These are your walks, and you have showed them me,
To kindle my cold love.

Dear, beauteous death! the jewel of the just Shining nowhere, but in the dark,
What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust,
Could man outlook that mark!

He that hath found some fledged bird's nest may know
At first sight if the bird be flown;
But what fair well or grove he sings in now
That is to him unknown.

And yet, as angels in some brighter dreams
Call to the soul, when man doth sleep,
So some strange thoughts transcend our wonted themes,
And into glory peep.

If a star were confined into a tomb,
The captive flames must needs burn there;
But when the hand that locked her up gives room,
She'll shine through all the sphere.

O Father of eternal life, and all
Created glories under Thee,
Resume Thy spirit from this world of thrall
Into true liberty!

Either disperse these mists, which blot and fill
My perspective still as they pass;
Or else remove me hence unto that hill,
Where I shall need no glass.

JOHN DONNE (1573–1631)

John Donne became famous both as a vigorous, influential poet and as a stirring preacher. He was born a Roman Catholic. He studied at Oxford and Cambridge, and later read law at Lincoln's Inn. After a careful, analytical study of religious questions, he joined the Church of England. In 1610 he took orders, and in 1621 he was appointed Dean of St. Paul's in London. Here his sermons, which are still good reading, brought him a great reputation. The best of his poems appeared in The Progress of the Soul, 1601, An Anatomy of the World, 1611, Epithalamium, 1613, and Divine Poems. These were reprinted in numerous collected editions after his death.

Donne is a difficult, but interesting and original poet, who delighted in the use of "conceits" or intricate figures of speech. This practice, strong among the Elizabethan poets, he carried on to highly artificial, often ludicrous, conclusions. In his intellectuality, directness, and, at times, grotesqueness, Donne is much like Browning. Because of his definite accomplishment and wide influence he towers above British minor poets.

The definitive edition of Donne's poems is H. J. C. Grierson's, in two volumes (Oxford University Press).

SONG

Go and catch a fa'ling star,
Get with child a mandrake [1] root,
Tell me where all times past are,
Or who cleft the Devil's foot;
Teach me to hear mermaids singing,
Or to keep off envy's stinging,
And find
What wind
Serves to advance an honest mind.

If thou be'st born to strange sights,
Things invisible go see,
Ride ten thousand days and nights
Till age snow white hairs on thee;
Thou, when thou return'st, wilt tell me
All strange wonders that befell thee,
And swear
No where
Lives a woman true and fair.

If thou find'st one let me know,
Such a pilgrimage were sweet;
Yet do not, I would not go,
Though at next door we might meet;
Though she were true when you met her,
And last till you write your letter,
Yet she Will be
False, ere I come, to two or three.

A VALEDICTION FORBIDDING MOURNING

As virtuous men pass mildly away,
And whisper to their souls to go,
Whilst some of their sad friends do say,
"Now his breath goes," and some say "No";

So let us meet and make no noise,
No tear-floods, nor sigh-tempests move,
'Twere profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love.

Moving of th' Earth brings harm and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;
But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent.

Dull sublunary lovers' love,
(Whose soul is sense) cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented [2] it.

But we by a love so far refined,
That ourselves know not what it is,
Inter-assured of the mind,
Careless eyes, lips, and hands, to miss;

Our two souls therefore, which are one,
Though I must go, endure not yet
A breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat.

If they be two, they are two so
As stiff twin compasses are two,
Thy soul, the fixed foot, makes no show
To move, but doth, if th' other do.

And though it in the centre sit,
Yet when the other far doth roam,
It leans and hearkens after it,
And grows erect as that comes home.

Such wilt thou be to me, who must
Like th' other foot, obliquely run,
Thy firmness makes my circle just,
And makes me end where I begun.

THE INDIFFERENT

I can love both fair and brown;
Her whom abundance melts, and her whom want betrays;
Her who loves loneness best, and her who masks and plays;
Her whom the country formed, and whom the town;
Her who believes, and her who tries;
Her who still weeps with spongy eyes,
And her who is dry cork and never cries.
I can love her, and her, and you, and you;
I can love any, so she be not true.

Will no other vice content you?
Will it not serve your turn to do as did your mothers?
Or have you all old vices spent and now would find out others?
Or doth a fear that men are true torment you?
O we are not, be not you so;
Let me — and do you — twenty know;
Rob me, but bind me not, and let me go.
Must I, who came to travel thorough you,
Grow your fixed subject, because you are true?

Venus heard me sigh this song;
And by love's sweetest part, variety, she swore,
She heard not this till now; it should be so no more.

[1] The mandragora, a root to which many superstitions were attached.
[2] formed, caused.

She went, examined, and returned ere long,
And said, "Alas! some two or three Poor heretics in love there be,
Which think to stablish dangerous constancy.
But I have told them, 'Since you will be true,
You shall be true to them, who 're false to you.'"

SONG

Sweetest love, I do not go
For weariness of thee,
Nor in hope the world can show
A fitter love for me;
But since that I
At the last must part, 'tis best
Thus to use myself in jest,
By feigned deaths to die.

Yesternight the sun went hence,
And yet is here to-day;
He hath no desire nor sense,
Nor half so short a way;
Then fear not me,
But believe that I shall make Speedier journeys, since I take
More wings and spurs than he.

O how feeble is man's power,
That, if good fortune fall,
Cannot add another hour,
Nor a last hour recall;
But come bad chance,
And we join to it our strength,
And we teach it art and length,
Itself o'er us to advance.

When thou sigh'st, thou sigh'st not wind,
But sigh'st my soul away;
When thou weep'st, unkindly kind,
My life's blood doth decay:
It cannot be
That thou lovest me as thou say'st,
If in thine my life thou waste,
That art the best of me.

Let not thy divining heart
Forethink me any ill;
Destiny may take thy part
And may thy fears fulfil.
But think that we
Are but turned aside to sleep:
They who one another keep Alive, ne'er parted be.

DEATH

Death, be not proud, though some hav called thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so;
For those whom thou think'st thou dos overthrow
Die not, poor Death; nor yet canst thou kil me.
From Rest and Sleep, which but thy picture
be,
Much pleasure, then from thee much mor
must flow;
And soonest our best men with thee do go,
Rest of their bones and souls' delivery!
Thou art slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
And dost with poison, war, and sickness
dwell;
And poppy or charms can make us sleep as well
And better than thy stroke. Why swell'st thou then?
One short sleep past, we wake eternally,
And Death shall be no more: Death, thou shalt die!

THE FUNERAL

Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm
Nor question much
That subtle wreath of hair about mine arm;
The mystery, the sign you must not touch,
For 'tis my outward soul,
Viceroy to that which, unto heav'n being gone,
Will leave this to control
And keep these limbs, her provinces, from dissolution.

For if the sinewy thread my brain lets fall
Through every part
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all;
Those hairs, which upward grew, and strength and art
Have from a better brain,
Can better do't: except she meant that I
By this should know my pain,
As prisoners then are manacled, when they're condemned to die.

Whate'er she meant by't, bury it with me,
For since I am
Love's martyr, it might breed idolatry,
If into others' hands these reliques came.
As 'twas humility
T' afford to it all that a soul can do,

So 'tis some bravery
That, since you would have none of me, I bury some of you.

THE CANONIZATION

For God's sake hold your tongue, and let me
love;
Or chide my palsy, or my gout;
My five gray hairs, or ruined fortune flout;
With wealth your state, your mind with arts improve;
Take you a course, get you a place,
Observe his Honor, or his Grace;
Or the king's real, or his stamped face
Contemplate; what you will, approve,
So you will let me love.

Alas! alas! who's injured by my love?
What merchant's ships have my sighs drowned?
Who says my tears have overflowed his ground?
When did my colds a forward spring remove?
When did the heats which my veins fill
Add one more to the plaguy bill?
Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still Litigious men, which quarrels move,
Though she and I do love.

Call 's what you will, we are made such by
love;
Call her one, me another fly;
We're tapers too, and at our own cost die,
And we in us find th' eagle and the dove.
The phœnix [1] riddle hath more wit
By us; we two being one, are it;
So, to one neutral thing both sexes fit.
We die and rise the same, and prove Mysterious by this love.

We can die by it, if not live by love,
And if unfit for tomb or hearse,
Our legend be, it will be fit for verse;
And if no piece of chronicle we prove,
We'll build in sonnets pretty rooms;
As well a well-wrought urn becomes
The greatest ashes, as half-acre tombs,
And by these hymns all shall approve
Us canonized for love;

And thus invoke us: "You, whom reverend
love
Made one another's hermitage;
You, to whom love was peace, that now is rage;
Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrors, and such spies,
That they did all to you epitomize,
Countries, towns, courts, beg from above
A pattern of your love."

1 The Phœnix, symbol of immortality, was supposed, after living centuries, to burn itself in a nest of spices, and then to rise from the ashes.

LOVE'S DEITY

I long to talk with some old lover's ghost
Who died before the god of love was born.
I cannot think that he who then loved most Sunk so low as to love one which did scorn.
But since this god produced a destiny,
And that vice-nature, custom, lets it be,
I must love her that loves not me.

Sure they which made him god, meant not so much,
Nor he in his young godhead practised it.
But when an even flame two hearts did touch,
His office was indulgently to fit
Actives to passives. Correspondency
Only his subject was; it cannot be
Love, till I love her who loves me.

But every modern god will now extend
His vast prerogative as far as Jove.
To rage, to lust, to write to, to commend,
All is the purlieu of the god of love.
O, were we wakened by this tyranny
To ungod this child again, it could not be
I should love her who loves not me.

Rebel and atheist too, why murmur I,
As though I felt the worst that love could do?
Love may make me leave loving, or might try
A deeper plague, to make her love me too;
Which, since she loves before, I'm loth to see.
Falsehood is worse than hate; and that must
be,
If she whom I love, should love me.

A HYMN TO GOD THE FATHER

Wilt thou forgive that sin where I begun,
Which was my sin, though it were done before?
Wilt thou forgive that sin through which I run,
And do run still, though still I do deplore?

When thou hast done, thou hast not done;
For I have more.

Wilt thou forgive that sin which I have won
Others to sin, and made my sins their door?
Wilt thou forgive that sin which I did shun
A year or two, but wallowed in a score?
When thou hast done, thou hast not done;
For I have more.

I have a sin of fear, that when I have spun
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore;
But swear by thyself that at my death thy son
Shall shine as he shines now and heretofore;
And having done that, thou hast done;
I fear no more.

ROBERT HERRICK (1591–1674)

The life of Herrick, foremost of the so-called "sons of Ben," is a series of apparently antithetical sequences. Born in Cheapside, London, in August, 1591, the son of a goldsmith, he was apprenticed at sixteen to his uncle, Sir William Herrick, who was likewise a goldsmith. At twenty-one he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his B.A. in 1616. A dozen years later, after a convivial, or at least carefree, life in London with Ben Jonson and other poets, he took orders and received from King Charles the parish of Dean Prior in Devonshire. With the coming of the Commonwealth in 1647 he lost this living and returned to London. In this year he published his first book of verse, Noble Numbers, or Pious Pieces. In 1648 there followed immediately Hesperides, or Works both Human and Divine, and a one-volume edition of both books. With the Restoration in 1660, Herrick was given Dean Prior again, where he spent the rest of his life. He died in 1674, and was buried in his church.

Herrick is a direct descendant in literature of Anacreon, Horace, and Catullus, and of their follower in verse, Ben Jonson. He treats light subjects with consummate lyrical skill and an originality that is inimitable.

An excellent edition of the Hesperides, edited by H. P. Horne, with a biography of Herrick by Ernest Rhys, may be found in The Canterbury Poets series, Walter Scott Publishing Company. The complete poems may be found in the Muses Library, two volumes, edited by A. Pollard, with a preface by Swinburne.

THE ARGUMENT OF HIS BOOK

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds, and bowers,
Of April, May, of June, and July flowers;
I sing of May-poles, hock-carts,[1] wassails,[2] wakes,[3]
Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal cakes.
I write of Youth, of Love, and have access
By these, to sing of cleanly wantonness;
I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,
Of balm, of oil, of spice, and ambergris;
I sing of times trans-shifting; and I write
How roses first came red, and lilies white;
I write of groves, of twilights, and I sing
The court of Mab, and of the Fairy King.
I write of Hell; I sing and ever shall,
Of Heaven, and hope to have it after all.

WHEN HE WOULD HAVE HIS VERSES READ

In sober mornings do not thou rehearse
The holy incantation of a verse;
But when that men have both well drunk and fed,
Let my enchantments then be sung or read.
When laurel spirts i' th' fire, and when the hearth
Smiles to itself and gilds the roof with mirth;
When up the thyrse[1] is raised, and when the sound
Of sacred orgies flies, "a round, a round;"[2]
When the rose reigns, and locks with ointments shine,
Let rigid Cato read these lines of mine.

1 The last cart loaded at harvest time.
2 drinking-bouts. 3 parish holidays.

UPON THE LOSS OF HIS MISTRESSES

I have lost, and lately, these
Many dainty mistresses:
Stately Julia, prime of all;
Sapho next, a principal;
Smooth Anthea, for a skin
White and heaven-like crystalline;
Sweet Electra, and the choice
Myrha, for the lute and voice.
Next, Corinna, for her wit,
And the graceful use of it;

1 A staff twined with ivy, — a symbol of Bacchus.
2 i.e., "let's dance."

With Perilla: all are gone,
Only Herrick's left alone,
For to number sorrow by
Their departures hence, and die.

CHERRY-RIPE

Cherry-ripe, ripe, ripe, I cry,
Full and fair ones, come and buy;
If so be you ask me where
They do grow? I answer, There,
Where my Julia's lips do smile,
There's the land, or cherry isle,
Whose plantations fully show
All the year, where cherries grow.

CORINNA'S GOING A-MAYING

Get up, get up for shame, the blooming morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.
See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colors through the air:
Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see
The dew bespangling herb and tree.
Each flower has wept and bowed toward the east
Above an hour since; yet you not dressed;
Nay! not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins said
And sung their thankful hymns, 'tis sin,
Nay, profanation, to keep in,
Whereas a thousand virgins on this day
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in May.

Rise, and put on your foliage, and be seen
To come forth, like the spring-time, fresh and green,
And sweet as Flora. Take no care
For jewels for your gown or hair:
Fear not; the leaves will strew
Gems in abundance upon you:
Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
Against you come,[1] some orient pearls unwept;
Come and receive them while the light
Hangs on the dew-locks of the night:
And Titan[2] on the eastern hill
Retires himself, or else stands still Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
Few beads[3] are best, when once we go a-Maying.

1 for your arrival. 2 The sun. 3 prayers.

Come, my Corinna, come; and, coming, mark
How each field turns a street,[1] each street a park
Made green and trimmed with trees; see how Devotion gives each house a bough
Or branch: each porch, each door, ere this,
An ark, a tabernacle is,
Made up of white-thorn, neatly interwove;
As if here were those cooler shades of love.
Can such delights be in the street
And open fields and we not see 't?
Come, we'll abroad; and let's obey
The proclamation made for May:
And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
But, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

There's not a budding boy or girl this day
But is got up, and gone to bring in May.
A deal of youth, ere this, is come Back, and with white-thorn laden home.
Some have despatched their cakes and cream
Before that we have left[2] to dream;
And some have wept, and wooed, and plighted troth,
And chose their priest, ere we can cast off sloth:
Many a green-gown[3] has been given;
Many a kiss, both odd and even:
Many a glance, too, has been sent
From out the eye, love's firmament;
Many a jest told of the keys betraying
This night, and locks picked, yet we're not a-Maying.

Come, let us go while we are in our prime;
And take the harmless folly of the time!
We shall grow old apace, and die
Before we know our liberty.
Our life is short, and our days run
As fast away as does the sun;
And, as a vapor or a drop of rain,
Once lost, can ne'er be found again.
So when or you or I are made
A fable, song, or fleeting shade,
All love, all liking, all delight
Lies drowned with us in endless night.
Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
Come, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

1 i.e., is crowded. 2 ceased.
3 i.e., many a maid has been thrown upon the grass.

TO THE VIRGINS, TO MAKE MUCH OF TIME

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying;
And this same flower that smiles to-day,
To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun,
The higher he's a-getting,
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer;
But being spent, the worse, and worst
Times, still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time,
And while ye may, go marry;
For, having lost but once your prime,
You may forever tarry.

TO ANTHEA, WHO MAY COMMAND HIM ANYTHING

Bid me to live, and I will live
Thy Protestant[1] to be:
Or bid me love, and I will give
A loving heart to thee.

A heart as soft, a heart as kind,
A heart as sound and free,
As in the whole world thou canst find,
That heart I'll give to thee.

Bid that heart stay, and it will stay,
To honor thy decree:
Or bid it languish quite away,
And 't shall do so for thee.

Bid me to weep, and I will weep,
While I have eyes to see:
And having none, yet will I keep
A heart to weep for thee.

Bid me despair, and I'll despair,
Under that cypress tree:
Or bid me die, and I will dare
E'en death, to die for thee.

Thou art my life, my love, my heart,
The very eyes of me;
And hast command of every part,
To live and die for thee.

1 confirmed admirer.

HIS REQUEST TO JULIA

Julia, if I chance to die
Ere I print my poetry,
I most humbly thee desire
To commit it to the fire:
Better 'twere my book were dead,
Than to live not perfected.

A LYRIC TO MIRTH

While the milder fates consent,
Let's enjoy our merriment;
Drink, and dance, and pipe, and play,
Kiss our dollies[1] night and day;
Crowned with clusters of the vine,
Let us sit and quaff our wine;
Call on Bacchus, chant his praise,
Shake the thyrse and bite the bays;
Rouse Anacreon from the dead,
And return him drunk to bed;
Sing o'er Horace; for ere long
Death will come and mar the song:
Then shall Wilson and Gotiere[2]
Never sing or play more here.

UPON JULIA'S CLOTHES

Whenas in silks my Julia goes,
Then, then, methinks, how sweetly flows
The liquefaction of her clothes.
Next, when I cast mine eyes, and see
That brave vibration, each way free,
O, how that glittering taketh me!

A BACCHANALIAN VERSE

Fill me a mighty bowl
Up to the brim;
That I may drink
Unto my Jonson's soul.

Crown it again, again;
And thrice repeat
That happy heat,
To drink to thee, my Ben.

Well I can quaff, I see,
To th' number five,
Or nine, but thrive
In frenzy ne'er like thee.

1 sweethearts.
2 Composers living in Herrick's day.

TO SILVIA

Pardon my trespass, Silvia; I confess
My kiss outwent the bounds of shamefacedness:
None is discreet at all times; no, not Jove
Himself, at one time, can be wise and love.

TO LIVE MERRILY, AND TO TRUST TO GOOD VERSES

Now is the time for mirth,
Nor cheek or tongue be dumb;
For with the flow'ry earth,
The golden pomp is come.

The golden pomp is come;
For now each tree does wear,
Made of her pap and gum,
Rich beads of amber here.

Now reigns the Rose, and now
Th' Arabian dew besmears
My uncontrolled brow,
And my retorted[1] hairs.

Homer,[2] this health to thee,
In sack of such a kind,
That it would make thee see,
Though thou wert ne'er so blind.

Next, Virgil I'll call forth,
To pledge this second health
In wine whose each cup's worth
An Indian commonwealth.

A goblet next I'll drink
To Ovid; and suppose
Made he the pledge, he'd think
The world had all one nose.[3]

Then this immensive cup
Of aromatic wine,
Catullus, I quaff up
To that terse muse of thine.

Wild I am now with heat;
O Bacchus, cool thy rays!
Or frantic I shall eat
Thy thyrse, and bite the bays.

Round, round, the roof does run;
And being ravished thus,
Come, I will drink a tun
To my Propertius.

Now to Tibullus next,
This flood I drink to thee:
But stay, I see a text,
That this presents to me.

Behold! Tibullus lies
Here burnt, whose small return
Of ashes scarce suffice
To fill a little urn.

Trust to good verses then;
They only will aspire,
When pyramids, as men,
Are lost i' th' funeral fire;

And when all bodies meet
In Lethe, to be drowned;
Then only numbers sweet
With endless life are crowned.

1 disheveled.
2 This poem gives a good idea of Herrick's favorite classical poets. To the list should be added Anacreon and Horace.
3 A reference to Ovid's name, Naso.

UPON MISTRESS SUSANNA SOUTHWELL HER FEET

Her pretty feet
Like snails did creep
A little out, and then,
As if they played at bo-peep,
Did soon draw in again.

TO ELECTRA

I dare not ask a kiss;
I dare not beg a smile;
Lest having that or this,
I might grow proud the while.

No, no, the utmost share
Of my desire shall be
Only to kiss that air
That lately kissed thee.

TO MUSIC, TO BECALM HIS FEVER

Charm me asleep, and melt me so
With thy delicious numbers,
That being ravished, hence I go
Away in easy slumbers.
Ease my sick head,
And make my bed,

Thou power that canst sever
From me this ill,
And quickly still,
Though thou not kill
My fever.

Thou sweetly canst convert the same
From a consuming fire
Into a gentle-licking flame,
And make it thus expire;
Then make me weep
My pains asleep,
And give me such reposes,
That I, poor I,
May think, thereby,
I live and die
'Mongst roses.

Fall on me like a silent dew,
Or like those maiden showers
Which, by the peep of day, do strew
A bapti'm o'er the flowers.
Melt, melt my pains,
With thy soft strains,
That having ease me given,
With full delight
I leave this light,
And take my flight
For Heaven.

DELIGHT IN DISORDER

A sweet disorder in the dress
Kindles in clothes a wantonness:
A lawn about the shoulders thrown
Into a fine distraction;
An erring lace, which here and there
Enthrals the crimson stomacher;
A cuff neglectful, and thereby
Ribbons to flow confusedly;
A winning wave, deserving note,
In the tempestuous petticoat;
A careless shoe-string, in whose tie
I see a wild civility; [1]
Do more bewitch me, than when art
Is too precise in every part.

THE BRACELET TO JULIA

Why I tie about thy wrist,
Julia, this my silken twist;
For what other reason is't,
But to show thee how in part
Thou my pretty captive art?
But thy bond-slave is my heart.

1 good breeding.

'Tis but silk that bindeth thee,
Knap the thread and thou art free:
But 'tis otherwise with me;
I am bound, and fast bound so,
That from thee I cannot go;
If I could, I would not so.

THE PRIMROSE

Ask me why I send you here
This sweet Infanta of the year?
Ask me why I send to you
This Primrose, thus bepearled with dew?
I will whisper to your ears,
The sweets of love are mixed with tears.

Ask me why this flower does show
So yellow-green, and sickly too?
Ask me why the stalk is weak,
And bending, yet it doth not break?
I will answer, these discover
What fainting hopes are in a lover.

HIS TEARS TO THAMESIS

I send, I send here my supremest kiss
To thee, my silver-footed Thamesis.[1]
No more shall I reiterate [2] thy strand,
Whereon so many stately structures stand,
Nor in the summer's sweeter evenings go
To bathe in thee, as thousand others do:
No more shall I along thy crystal glide
In barge, with boughs and rushes beautified,
With soft, smooth virgins for our chaste disport,
To Richmond, Kingston, and to Hampton Court: [3]
Never again shall I with finny oar
Put from or draw unto the faithful shore;
And landing here, or safely landing there,
Make way to my beloved Westminster,[4]
Or to the golden Cheapside,[5] where the earth
Of Julia Herrick gave to me my birth.
May all clean nymphs and curious water dames
With swan-like state, float up and down thy streams:
No drought upon thy wanton waters fall,
To make them lean and languishing at all:
No ruffling winds come hither to disease [6]
Thy pure and silver-wristed Naiades.

1 The Thames.
2 walk again. (Note the root: Lat. iter = road, journey.)
3 These are places on the Thames, not far from London.
4 The school that Herrick probably attended.
5 An old section of London.
6 make uncomfortable.

Keep up your state, ye streams, and as ye spring,
Never make sick your banks by surfeiting.
Grow young with tides, and though I see ye never,
Receive this vow; so fare ye well for ever.

TO DAFFODILS

Fair Daffodils, we weep to see
You haste away so soon;
As yet the early-rising sun
Has not attained his noon.
Stay, stay,
Until the hasting day
Has run
But to the even-song;
And, having prayed together, we
Will go with you along.

We have short time to stay, as you,
We have as short a spring;
As quick a growth to meet decay,
As you, or anything.
We die
As your hours do, and dry
Away,
Like to the summer's rain;
Or as the pearls of morning's dew,
Ne'er to be found again.

A GRACE FOR A CHILD

Here a little child I stand,
Heaving up my either hand;
Cold as paddocks [1] though they be.
Here I lift them up to Thee,
For a benison to fall
On our meat, and on us all. Amen.

THE COUNTRY LIFE

TO THE HONORED MR. ENDYMION PORTER, GROOM OF THE BEDCHAMBER TO HIS MAJESTY

Sweet country life, to such unknown
Whose lives are others', not their own!
But, serving courts and cities, be Less happy, less enjoying thee.
Thou never plough'st the ocean's foam
To seek and bring rough pepper home;
Nor to the Eastern Ind dost rove
To bring from thence the scorched clove;
Nor, with the loss of thy loved rest,
Bring'st home the ingot from the West.

No, thy ambition's masterpiece
Flies no thought higher than a fleece;
Or how to pay thy hinds, and clear
All scores, and so to end the year:
But walk'st about thine own dear bounds,
Not envying others' larger grounds,
For well thou know'st, 'tis not th' extent
Of land makes life, but sweet content.
When now the cock, the ploughman's horn,
Calls forth the lily-wristed morn,
Then to thy corn-fields thou dost go,
Which, though well soiled,[1] yet thou dost know
That the best compost for the lands
Is the wise master's feet and hands.
There at the plough thou find'st thy team
With a hind whistling there to them,
And cheer'st them up by singing how
The kingdom's portion is the plough.
This done, then to th' enamelled meads
Thou go'st; and as thy foot there treads,
Thou seest a present Godlike power
Imprinted in each herb and flower,
And smell'st the breath of great-eyed kine,
Sweet as the blossoms of the vine.
Here thou behold'st thy large sleek neat [2]
Unto the dewlaps [3] up in meat;
And as thou look'st, the wanton steer,
The heifer, cow, and ox draw near,
To make a pleasing pastime there.
These seen, thou go'st to view thy flocks
Of sheep, safe from the wolf and fox,
And find'st their bellies there as full
Of short sweet grass as backs with wool,
And leav'st them, as they feed and fill,
A shepherd piping on a hill.
For sports, for pageantry, and plays,
Thou hast thy eves and holidays,
On which the young men and maids meet
To exercise their dancing feet,
Tripping the comely country round,
With daffodils and daisies crowned.
Thy wakes, thy quintals,[4] here thou hast,
Thy Maypoles too with garlands graced;
Thy morris-dance, thy Whitsun-ale,
Thy shearing-feast, which never fail;
Thy harvest home,[5] thy wassail bowl,
That's tossed up after fox i' th' hole;[6]
Thy mummeries, thy Twelfthtide kings
And queens, thy Christmas revellings;
Thy nut-brown mirth, thy russet wit,
And no man pays too dear for it.
To these thou hast thy times to go
And trace the hare i' th' treacherous snow:

1 frogs.

1 fertilized. 2 oxen.
3 Folds of skin under an ox's neck.
4 tilting games.
5 Celebration at the end of harvest.
6 An old game.

Thy witty wiles to draw, and get
The lark into the trammel net:
Thou hast thy cockrood [1] and thy glade
To take the precious pheasant made;
Thy lime-twigs, snares, and pitfalls then,
To catch the pilf'ring birds, not men.
O happy life! if that their good
The husbandmen but understood,
Who all the day themselves do please,
And younglings, with such sports as these,
And, lying down, have nought t' affright
Sweet sleep, that makes more short the night.

Cætera desunt [2] ——

HIS PRAYER TO BEN JONSON

When I a verse shall make,
Know I have prayed thee,
For old religion's sake,
Saint Ben, to aid me.

Make the way smooth for me,
When I, thy Herrick,
Honoring thee, on my knee
Offer my Lyric.

Candles I'll give to thee,
And a new altar;
And thou, Saint Ben, shalt be Writ in my psalter.

UPON A CHILD

Here a pretty baby lies
Sung asleep with lullabies:
Pray be silent, and not stir
Th' easy earth that covers her.

THE MAD MAID'S SONG

Good morrow to the day so fair;
Good morning, sir, to you;
Good morrow to mine own torn hair,
Bedabbled with the dew.

Good morning to this primrose too;
Good morrow to each maid
That will with flowers the tomb bestrew
Wherein my love is laid.

Ah! woe is me, woe, woe is me,
Alack, and well-a-day!
For pity, sir, find out that bee
Which bore my love away.

I'll seek him in your bonnet brave;
I'll seek him in your eyes;
Nay, now I think they've made his grave
I'th' bed of strawberries.

I'll seek him there; I know, ere this,
The cold, cold earth doth shake him;
But I will go, or send a kiss
By you, sir, to awake him.

Pray hurt him not; though he be dead,
He knows well who do love him;
And who with green turfs rear his head,
And who do rudely move him.

He's soft and tender, pray take heed,
With bands of cowslips bind him,
And bring him home; but 'tis decreed,
That I shall never find him.

THE NIGHT-PIECE, TO JULIA

Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee,
The shooting stars attend thee;
And the elves also,
Whose little eyes glow,
Like the sparks of fire, befriend thee.

No Will-o'-th'-Wisp mislight thee,
Nor snake or slow-worm bite thee;
But on, on thy way,
Not making a stay,
Since ghost there's none to affright thee.

Let not the dark thee cumber;
What though the moon does slumber?
The stars of the night
Will lend thee their light,
Like tapers clear, without number.

Then, Julia, let me woo thee,
Thus, thus to come unto me;
And when I shall meet
Thy silv'ry feet,
My soul I'll pour into thee.

THE HOCK CART; OR, HARVEST HOME

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE MILDMAY, EARL OF WESTMORLAND

Come, sons of summer, by whose toil,
We are the lords of wine and oil;
By whose tough labors and rough hands,
We rip up first, then reap our lands.
Crowned with the ears of corn, now come,
And to the pipe sing harvest home.

1 A net stretched across a glade, or artificially made clearing, to catch woodcock and similar birds.

2 "The rest is lacking." Herrick never finished the poem.

me forth, my lord, and see the cart ressed up with all the country art.
e, here a malkin,[1] there a sheet,
spotless pure as it is sweet;
ie horses, mares, and frisking fillies,
ad all in linen white as lilies.
ie harvest swains and wenches bound r joy, to see the hock cart crowned.
out the cart, hear how the rout rural younglings raise the shout, essing before, some coming after,
ose with a shout, and these with laughter.
me bless the cart, some kiss the sheaves,
me prank them up with oaken leaves;
me cross the fill-horse,[2] some with great evotion stroke the home-borne wheat; hile other rustics, less attent prayers than to merriment, in after with their breeches rent.
ell, on, brave boys, to your lord's hearth,
itt'ring with fire, where, for your mirth, shall see first the large and chief undation of your feast, fat beef;
ith upper stories, mutton, veal,
nd bacon, which makes full the meal,
ith sev'ral dishes standing by,
s, here a custard, there a pie,
nd here all-tempting frumenty.[3]
nd for to make the merry cheer, smirking wine be wanting here,
here's that which drowns all care, stout beer, hich freely drink to your lord's health,
hen to the plough (the commonwealth),
ext to your flails, your fans, your vats;
hen to the maids with wheaten hats;
the rough sickle, and the crook'd scythe,
rink, frolic boys, till all be blithe.
ed and grow fat; and as ye eat,
mindful that the lab'ring neat,
s you, may have their fill of meat.
nd know, besides, ye must revoke[4]
he patient ox unto the yoke, nd all go back unto the plough nd harrow, though they're hanged up now.
nd, you must know, your lord's word's true,
eed him ye must, whose food fills you.
nd that this pleasure is like rain,
ot sent ye for to drown your pain,
ut for to make it spring again.

TO BLOSSOMS

Fair pledges of a fruitful tree,
Why do ye fall so fast?
Your date is not so past,
But you may stay yet here a while,
To blush and gently smile,
And go at last.

What, were ye born to be
An hour or half's delight,
And so to bid good-night?
'Twas pity Nature brought ye forth,
Merely to show your worth,
And lose you quite.

But you are lovely leaves, where we
May read how soon things have
Their end, though ne'er so brave;
And after they have shown their pride
Like you a while, they glide
Into the grave.

UPON BEN JONSON

Here lies Jonson with the rest
Of the poets, but the best.
Reader, wouldst thou more have known?
Ask his story, not this stone;
That will speak what this can't tell
Of his glory. So farewell.

AN ODE FOR HIM

Ah, Ben!
Say how or when
Shall we, thy guests,
Meet at those lyric feasts
Made at the Sun,
The Dog, the Triple Tun?
Where we such clusters[1] had
As made us nobly wild, not mad;
And yet each verse of thine
Outdid the meat, outdid the frolic wine.

My Ben,
Or come again,
Or send to us
Thy wit's great overplus;
But teach us yet
Wisely to husband it,
Lest we that talent spend,
And having once brought to an end
That precious stock, the store
Of such a wit the world should have no more.

DISSUASIONS FROM IDLENESS

Cynthius[2] pluck ye by the ear,
That ye may good doctrine hear.
Play not with the maiden hair,
For each ringlet there's a snare.

1 a cloth on a pole. 2 draught-horse.
3 boiled wheat. 4 recall.

1 of grapes; i.e., wine. 2 Apollo.

Cheek and eye, and lip and chin,
These are traps to take fools in;
Arms and hands, and all parts else,
Are but toils, or manacles,
Set on purpose to enthral
Men, but slothfuls most of all.
Live employed, and so live free
From these fetters, like to me,
Who have found, and still can prove
The lazy man the most doth love.

THE HAG

The hag is astride
This night for to ride;
The devil and she together:
Through thick and through thin,
Now out and then in,
Though ne'er so foul be the weather.

A thorn or a burr
She takes for a spur;
With a lash of a bramble she rides now,
Through brakes and through briars,
O'er ditches and mires,
She follows the spirit that guides now.

No beast, for his food,
Dares now range the wood,
But hushed in his lair he lies lurking;
While mischiefs by these,
On land and on seas,
At noon of night are a-working.

The storm will arise
And trouble the skies
This night; and, more for the wonder,
The ghost from the tomb
Affrighted shall come,
Called out by the clap of the thunder.

A THANKSGIVING TO GOD FOR HIS HOUSE

Lord, Thou hast given me a cell
Wherein to dwell;
A little house, whose humble roof
Is weatherproof,
Under the spars of which I lie
Both soft and dry;
Where Thou, my chamber for to ward,
Hast set a guard
Of harmless thoughts, to watch and keep Me while I sleep.
Low is my porch, as is my fate,
Both void of state;
And yet the threshold of my door
Is worn by th' poor,
Who thither come and freely get
Good words or meat.
Like as my parlor, so my hall
And kitchen's small:
A little buttery, and therein
A little bin,
Which keeps my little loaf of bread
Unchipped, unflead;[1]
Some brittle sticks of thorn or briar
Make me a fire,
Close by whose living coal I sit,
And glow like it.
Lord, I confess too, when I dine,
The pulse is Thine,
And all those other bits that be
There placed by Thee;
The worts,[2] the purslane,[3] and the mess
Of water-cress,
Which of Thy kindness Thou hast sent;
And my content
Makes those, and my beloved beet,
To be more sweet.
'Tis Thou that crown'st my glittering hearth
With guiltless mirth,
And giv'st me wassail bowls to drink,
Spiced to the brink.
Lord, 'tis Thy plenty-dropping hand
That soils my land,
And giv'st me, for my bushel sown,
Twice ten for one:
Thou mak'st my teeming hen to lay
Her egg each day;
Besides my healthful ewes to bear
Me twins each year;
The while the conduits of my kine
Run cream, for wine.
All these, and better Thou dost send Me, to this end,
That I should render, for my part,
A thankful heart,
Which, fired with incense, I resign,
As wholly Thine;
But the acceptance, that must be,
My Christ, by Thee.

HIS WINDING-SHEET

Come thou, who art the wine and wit
Of all I've writ;
The grace, the glory, and the best
Piece of the rest.
Thou art of what I did intend
The all and end;
And what was made, was made to meet
Thee, thee my sheet;

1 unflayed. 2 cabbages.
3 A vegetable used for salads.

ome then, and be to my chaste side
Both bed and bride.
'e two, as relics left, will have
One rest, one grave;
nd, hugging close, we will not fear
Lust ent'ring here,
'here all desires are dead or cold,
As is the mould;
nd all affections are forgot,
Or trouble not.
ere, here the slaves and pris'ners be
From shackles free,
nd weeping widows, long oppressed,
Do here find rest.
he wronged client ends his laws
Here, and his cause.
ere those long suits of Chancery lie
Quiet, or die;
nd all Star Chamber bills do cease,
Or hold their peace.
ere needs no Court for our Request,
Where all are best,
ll wise, all equal, and all just Alike i' th' dust.
or need we here to fear the frown
Of court or crown,
'here Fortune bears no sway o'er things,
There all are kings.
n this securer place we'll keep,
As lulled asleep;
r for a little time we'll lie,
As robes laid by,
o be another day re-worn,
Turned, but not torn,
r like old testaments engrossed,
Locked up, not lost;
nd for a while lie here concealed,
To be revealed
ext, at that great Platonic Year,[1]
And then meet here.

HIS LITANY TO THE HOLY SPIRIT

In the hour of my distress,
When temptations me oppress,
And when I my sins confess,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When I lie within my bed,
Sick in heart and sick in head,
And with doubts discomforted,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the house doth sigh and weep,
And the world is drowned in sleep,
Yet mine eyes the watch do keep,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the artless [1] doctor sees
No one hope, but of his fees,
And his skill runs on the lees,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When his potion and his pill,
His, or none, or little skill,
Meet for nothing but to kill,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the passing-bell doth toll,
And the furies in a shoal
Come to fright a parting soul,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the tapers now burn blue,
And the comforters are few,
And that number more than true,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the priest his last hath prayed,
And I nod to what is said,
'Cause my speech is now decayed,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When, God knows, I'm tossed about,
Either with despair or doubt,
Yet, before the glass be out,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the tempter me pursu'th
With the sins of all my youth,
And half damns me with untruth,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the flames and hellish cries
Fright mine ears and fright mine eyes,
And all terrors me surprise,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the Judgment is revealed,
And that opened which was sealed,
When to thee I have appealed,
Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

HIS RETURN TO LONDON

From the dull confines of the drooping West,[2]
To see the day spring from the pregnant East,
Ravished in spirit I come, nay more, I fly
To thee, blessed place of my nativity!

1 The revolution of thousands of years which would bring all things back to the state in which they once were.

1 unskilful. 2 i.e., Devonshire.

Thus, thus with hallowed foot I touch the ground
With thousand blessings by thy fortune crowned.
O fruitful genius! that bestowest here
An everlasting plenty year by year;
O place! O people! manners, framed to please
All nations, customs, kindreds, languages!
I am a free-born Roman; suffer then
That I amongst you live a citizen.
London my home is, though by hard fate sent
Into a long and irksome banishment;
Yet since called back, henceforward let me be,
O native country! repossessed by thee;
For, rather than I'll to the West return,
I'll beg of thee first here to have mine urn.
Weak I am grown, and must in short time fall,
Give thou my sacred relics burial.

ON HIMSELF

I will no longer kiss,
I can no longer stay;
The way of all flesh is,
That I must go this day.
Since longer I can't live,
My frolic youths, adieu;
My lamp to you I'll give,
And all my troubles too.

TO HIS BOOK

Go thou forth, my book, though late,
Yet be timely fortunate.
It may chance good luck may send Thee a kinsman or a friend,
That may harbor thee, when I
With my fates neglected lie.
If thou know'st not where to dwell,
See, the fire's by. Farewell.

GEORGE HERBERT (1593–1633)

Herbert, the best writer of religious poetry in English literature, was a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, for a while a pensioner at court, and during the last few years of his life the diligent, scholarly rector of a small country parish. While a follower of the style made popular by his friend Donne, Herbert has an originality and a very high degree of technical skill that is all his own. He wrote some prose, but is best in his religious lyrics, collected under the title The Temple and published the year after his death. Izaak Walton wrote an appreciative life of Herbert in 1670. The standard edition of his works is by Professor George Herbert Palmer (Houghton Mifflin Company.)

VIRTUE

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky!
The dew shall weep thy fall to-night;
For thou must die.

Sweet rose, whose hue, angry and brave,
Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye,
Thy root is ever in its grave,
And thou must die.

Sweet spring, full of sweet days and roses,
A box where sweets compacted lie,
My music shows ye have your closes,
And all must die.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like seasoned timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives.

LOVE

Love bade me welcome; yet my soul drew back,
Guilty of dust and sin.
But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack
From my first entrance in,
Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning,
If I lacked anything.

"A guest," I answered, "worthy to be here:"
Love said, "You shall be he."
"I, the unkind, ungrateful? Ah, my dear,
I cannot look on Thee!"
Love took my hand and smiling did reply,
"Who made the eyes but I?"

"Truth, Lord; but I have marred them; let my shame Go where it doth deserve."

And know you not," says Love, "who bore the blame?"
"My dear, then I will serve."
You must sit down," says Love, "and taste my meat."
So I did sit and eat.

THE PULLEY

As the title implies, the poem deals with God's means of drawing us to himself" almer).

When God at first made man, aving a glass of blessings standing by,
"Let us," said he, "pour on him all we can.
t the world's riches, which dispersed lie,
Contract into a span."

So Strength first made a way;
hen Beauty flowed; then Wisdom, Honor, Pleasure.
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
erceiving that alone, of all his treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

"For if I should," said he,
Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
He would adore my gifts instead of me, nd rest in Nature, not the God of Nature;
So both should losers be.

"Yet let him keep the rest,
ut keep them with repining restlessness;
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my breast."

THE COLLAR[1]

truck the board, and cried, "No more;
I will abroad!
hat! shall I ever sigh and pine?
y lines and life are free; free as the road,
Loose as the wind, as large as store.[2]
Shall I be still in suit?[3]
Have I no harvest but a thorn
To let me blood, and not restore hat I have lost with cordial fruit?
Sure there was wine
Before my sighs did dry it; there was corn
Before my tears did drown it.
Is the year only lost to me?
Have I no bays to crown it,
o flowers, no garlands gay? all blasted,
All wasted?

Not so, my heart, but there is fruit,
And thou hast hands.
Recover all thy sigh-blown age
On double pleasures; leave thy cold dispute
Of what is fit and not; forsake thy cage,
Thy rope of sands,
Which petty thoughts have made; and made to thee
Good cable, to enforce and draw,
And be thy law,
While thou didst wink and wouldst not see.
Away! take heed!
I will abroad.
Call in thy death's-head there, tie up thy fears.
He that forbears
To suit and serve his need
Deserves his load."
But as I raved, and grew more fierce and wild
At every word,
Methought I heard one calling, "Child";
And I replied, "My Lord."

THE QUIP

The merry World did on a day
With his train-bands and mates agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me.

First Beauty crept into a rose,
Which when I plucked not, "Sir," said she,
"Tell me, I pray, whose hands are those?"[1]
But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then Money came, and chinking still,
"What tune is this, poor man?" said he;
"I heard in Music you had skill."
But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then came brave Glory puffing by
In silks that whistled, who but he!
He scarce allowed me half an eye.
But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Then came quick Wit and Conversation,
And he would needs a comfort be,
And, to be short, make an oration.
But thou shalt answer, Lord, for me.

Yet when the hour of thy design
To answer these fine things shall come,
Speak not at large; say, "I am thine,"
And then they have their answer home.

[1] i.e., restraint. [2] abundance.
[3] i.e., always petitioning.

[1] i.e., why don't you use your hands?

THE WORLD

Love[1] built a stately house,[2] where Fortune came;
And spinning fancies, she was heard to say
That her fine cobwebs did support the frame,
Whereas they were supported by the same.
But Wisdom quickly swept them all away.

Then Pleasure came, who, liking not the fashion,
Began to make balconies, terraces,
Till she had weakened all by alteration;
But reverend laws, and many a proclamation,
Reformed all at length with menaces.

1 i.e., divine love. 2 i.e., the world.

Then entered Sin, and with that sycamore
Whose leaves first sheltered man fro drought and dew,
Working and winding slily evermore,
The inward walls and summers[1] cleft an tore;
But Grace shored these, and cut that as i grew.

Then Sin combined with Death in a firr
band
To raze the building to the very floor;
Which they effected, none could them with stand.
But Love and Grace took Glory by the hand
And built a braver palace than before.

1 beams.

IZAAK WALTON (1593–1683)

Izaak Walton was born in Stratford, August 9, 1593. He settled in London as an ironmonger but retired from business after the defeat of the royalists at Marston Moor, and lived in th country, cultivating the tastes which were most markedly his, for clergymen of the Establishe Church, and for fish. His Lives of such eminent divines as John Donne, George Herbert, an Richard Hooker are excellent examples of biography and portraiture. His most famous work The Compleat Angler, is a study of his favorite pastime and of his own gentle and amusing char acter. It was first published in 1653, and was expanded through many subsequent editions unti his death in 1683, when it was continued by his friend, Charles Cotton. Walton's style is simpl and homely compared with the splendors of Browne and Taylor; but it served as a vehicle for on of the best known masterpieces in the English tongue. An edition of The Compleat Angler by Andrew Lang appeared in 1896. It is found in Everyman's Library.

FROM THE COMPLETE ANGLER

THE THIRD DAY — continued

On the Nature and Breeding of the Trout, and how to fish for him

CHAPTER IV

PISCATOR,[1] VENATOR,[2] MILK-WOMAN, MAUDLIN, HOSTESS

PISCATOR. The Trout is a fish highly valued, both in this and foreign nations. He may be justly said, as the old poet said of wine, and we English say of venison, to be a generous fish: a fish that is so like the buck, that he also has his seasons; for it is observed, that he comes in and goes out of season with the stag and buck. Gesner[3] says, his name is of a German offspring; and says he is a fish that feeds clean and purely, in the swiftest streams, and on the hardest gravel; and that he may justly contend with all fresh water fish, as the Mullet may with all sea fish, for precedency and daintiness of taste; and that being in right season, the most dainty palates have allowed precedency to him.

And before I go farther in my discourse, let me tell you, that you are to observe, that as there be some barren does that are good in summer, so there be some barren Trouts that are good in winter; but there are not many that are so; for usually they be in their perfection in the month of May, and decline with the buck. Now you are to take notice, that in several countries, as in Germany, and in other parts, compared to ours, fish do differ much in their bigness, and shape, and other ways; and so do Trouts. It is well known that in the Lake Leman, the Lake of Geneva, there are Trouts taken of three cubits long: as is affirmed by Gesner, a writer of good credit: and Mercator[1] says, the Trouts that are taken in the Lake of Geneva are a great part of the merchandize of that famous city. And you are further to know, that there be certain waters that breed Trouts remarkable, both for their number and smallness. I

1 angler. 2 huntsman.
3 Conrade Gesner, 1516–65, a lovable naturalist, called the "Pliny of Germany." Walton refers to him often.

1 Gerard Mercator (d. 1594), a Flemish mathematician and map-maker.

ow a little brook in Kent, that breeds them a number incredible, and you may take em twenty or forty in an hour, but none eater than about the size of a Gudgeon. here are also, in divers rivers, especially at relate to, or be near to the sea, as Winester, or the Thames about Windsor, a tle Trout called a Samlet, or Skegger out, in both which places I have caught enty or forty at a standing, that will bite fast and as freely as Minnows: these be by ne taken to be young Salmons; but in ose waters they never grow to be bigger an a Herring.

There is also in Kent, near to Canterbury, Trout called there a Fordidge Trout, a out that bears the name of the town where is usually caught, that is accounted the rest of fish; many of them near the bigness a Salmon, but known by their different our; and in their best season they cut very ite: and none of these have been known to caught with an angle, unless it were one at was caught by Sir George Hastings, an cellent angler, and now with God: and he th told me he thought that Trout bit not hunger but wantonness; and it is the her to be believed, because both he, then, d many others before him, have been rious to search into their bellies, what the od was by which they lived; and have ind out nothing by which they might isfy their curiosity.

Concerning which you are to take notice, at it is reported by good authors, that sshoppers and some fish have no mouths, t are nourished and take breath by the rousness of their gills, man knows not how: d this may be believed, if we consider that nen the raven hath hatched her eggs, she kes no further care, but leaves her young es to the care of the God of nature, who is d, in the Psalms, "to feed the young ravens at call upon him." And they be kept alive d fed by a dew; or worms that breed in eir nests; or some other ways that we morls know not. And this may be believed of e Fordidge Trout, which, as it is said of the rk, that he knows his season, so he knows s times, I think almost his day of coming to that river out of the sea; where he lives, d, it is like, feeds, nine months of the year, d fasts three in the river of Fordidge. And u are to note, that those townsmen are ry punctual in observing the time of beginng to fish for them; and boast much, that eir river affords a Trout that exceeds all hers. And just so does Sussex boast of several fish; as, namely, a Shelsey Cockle, a Chichester Lobster, an Arundel Mullet, and an Amerly Trout.

And, now, for some confirmation of the Fordidge Trout: you are to know that this Trout is thought to eat nothing in the fresh water; and it may be the better believed, because it is well known, that swallows, and bats, and wagtails, which are called half-year birds, and not seen to fly in England for six months in the year, but about Michaelmas leave us for a hotter climate, yet some of them that have been left behind their fellows, have been found, many thousands at a time, in hollow trees, or clay caves, where they have been observed to live, and sleep out the whole winter, without meat. And so Albertus[1] observes, That there is one kind of frog that hath her mouth naturally shut up about the end of August, and that she lives so all the winter: and though it be strange to some, yet it is known to too many among us to be doubted.

And so much for these Fordidge Trouts, which never afford an angler sport, but either live their time of being in the fresh water, by their meat formerly gotten in the sea, not unlike the swallow or frog, or, by the virtue of the fresh water only; or, as the birds of Paradise and the cameleon are said to live, by the sun and the air.

There is also in Northumberland a Trout called a Bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts; and there are, in many rivers that relate to the sea, Salmon-trouts, as much different from others, both in shape and in their spots, as we see sheep in some countries differ one from another in their shape and bigness, and in the fineness of the wool: and, certainly, as some pastures breed larger sheep, so do some rivers, by reason of the ground over which they run, breed larger Trouts.

Now the next thing that I will commend to your consideration is, that the Trout is of a more sudden growth than other fish. Concerning which, you are also to take notice, that he lives not so long as the Pearch, and divers other fishes do, as Sir Francis Bacon hath observed in his History of Life and Death.

And next you are to take notice, that he is not like the Crocodile, which if he lives never so long, yet always thrives till his death: but 'tis not so with the Trout; for after he is come to his full growth, he declines in his body, and keeps his bigness, or thrives only in his head till his death. And you are to know, that he will, about, especially before, the time of his spawning, get, almost miraculously, through weirs and flood-gates, against the stream; even through such high and swift places as is almost incredible. Next, that the Trout usually spawns about October or November, but in some rivers a little sooner or later; which is the more observable, because most other fish spawn in the spring or summer, when the sun hath warmed both the earth and water, and made it fit for generation. And you are to note, that he continues many months out of season; for it may be observed of the Trout, that he is like the Buck or the Ox, that will not be fat in many months, though he go in the very same pastures that horses do, which will be fat in one month: and so you may observe, That most other fishes recover strength, and grow sooner fat and in season than the Trout doth.

1 Albertus Magnus, 1193–1280, a German scholastic philosopher.

And next you are to note, That till the sun gets to such a height as to warm the earth and the water, the Trout is sick, and lean, and lousy, and unwholesome; for you shall, in winter, find him to have a big head, and, then, to be lank and thin and lean; at which time many of them have sticking on them Sugs, or Trout-lice; which is a kind of a worm, in shape like a clove, or pin with a big head, and sticks close to him, and sucks his moisture; those, I think, the Trout breeds himself: and never thrives till he free himself from them, which is when warm weather comes; and, then, as he grows stronger, he gets from the dead still water into the sharp streams and the gravel, and, there, rubs off these worms or lice; and then, as he grows stronger, so he gets him into swifter and swifter streams, and there lies at the watch for any fly or minnow that comes near to him; and he especially loves the May-fly, which is bred of the cod-worm, or cadis; and these make the Trout bold and lusty, and he is usually fatter and better meat at the end of that month than at any time of the year.

Now you are to know that it is observed, that usually the best Trouts are either red or yellow; though some, as the Fordidge Trout, be white and yet good; but that is not usual: and it is a note observable, that the female Trout hath usually a less head, and a deeper body than the male Trout, and is usually the better meat. And note, that a hog back and a little head, to either Trout, Salmon or any other fish, is a sign that that fish is in season.

But yet you are to note, that as you some willows or palm-trees bud and bloss sooner than others do, so some Trouts be rivers, sooner in season: and as some holl or oaks, are longer before they cast th leaves, so are some Trouts, in rivers, lon before they go out of season.

And you are to note, that there are seve kinds of Trouts: but these several kinds a not considered but by very few men; for th go under the general name of Trouts; just pigeons do, in most places; though it is c tain, there are tame and wild pigeons; a of the tame, there be helmits and runts, a carriers and cropers, and indeed too many name. Nay, the Royal Society have fou and published lately, that there be thirty a three kinds of spiders; and yet all, for aug I know, go under that one general name spider. And it is so with many kinds of fis and of Trouts especially; which differ in th bigness, and shape, and spots, and colou The great Kentish hens may be an instanc compared to other hens: and, doubtless, the is a kind of small Trout, which will nev thrive to be big; that breeds very many mo than others do, that be of a larger size: whi you may rather believe, if you consider th the little wren and titmouse will have twen young ones at a time, when, usually, t noble hawk, or the musical thrassel or blac bird, exceed not four or five.

And now you shall see me try my skill catch a Trout; and at my next walkin either this evening or to-morrow mornin I will give you direction how you yourse shall fish for him.

VENATOR. Trust me, master, I see now is a harder matter to catch a Trout than Chub; for I have put on patience, and fo lowed you these two hours, and not seen fish stir, neither at your minnow nor you worm.

PISCATOR. Well, scholar, you must endur worse luck sometime, or you will never mak a good angler. But what say you now there is a Trout now, and a good one too, if can but hold him; and two or three turn more will tire him. Now you see he lie still, and the sleight is to land him: reach m that landing-net. So, Sir, now he is min own: what say you now, is not this worth a my labour and your patience?

VENATOR. On my word, master, this is gallant Trout; what shall we do with him?

PISCATOR. Marry, e'en eat him to supper we'll go to my hostess from whence we came she told me, as I was going out of door, tha

y brother Peter, a good angler and a cheer-l companion, had sent word he would lge there to-night, and bring a friend with
n. My hostess has two beds, and I know u and I may have the best: we'll rejoice with y brother Peter and his friend, tell tales, sing ballads, or make a catch, or find some rmless sport to content us, and pass away ittle time without offence to God or man.

VENATOR. A match, good master, let's go that house, for the linen looks white, and ells of lavender, and I long to lie in a pair sheets that smell so. Let's be going, good aster, for I am hungry again with fishing.

PISCATOR. Nay, stay a little, good scholar.
caught my last Trout with a worm; now I ll put on a minnow, and try a quarter of an ur about yonder trees for another; and, so, lk towards our lodging. Look you, holar, thereabout we shall have a bite esently, or not at all. Have with you, r: o' my word I have hold of him. Oh! it is great logger-headed Chub; come, hang him on that willow twig, and let's be going.
it turn out of the way a little, good scholar!
ward yonder high honeysuckle hedge;
ere we'll sit and sing, whilst this shower ls so gently upon the teeming earth, and ves yet a sweeter smell to the lovely flowers at adorn these verdant meadows.
Look! under that broad beech-tree I sat wn, when I was last this way a-fishing; and e birds in the adjoining grove seemed to ve a friendly contention with an echo, hose dead voice seemed to live in a hollow
e near to the brow of that primrose-hill.
here I sat viewing the silver streams glide
ently towards their centre, the tempestu-s sea; yet sometimes opposed by rugged ots and pebble-stones, which broke their aves, and turned them into foam; and somenes I beguiled time by viewing the harm-ss lambs; some leaping securely in the cool ade, whilst others sported themselves in e cheerful sun; and saw others craving com-rt from the swollen udders of their bleating
ms. As I thus sat, these and other sights d so fully possest my soul with content, that thought, as the poet has happily exprest it,

I was for that time lifted above earth;
And possest joys not promised in my birth.

As I left this place, and entered into the xt field, a second pleasure entertained me;
was a handsome milk-maid, that had not t attained so much age and wisdom as to id her mind with any fears of many things at will never be, as too many men too often do; but she cast away all care, and sung like a nightingale. Her voice was good, and the ditty fitted for it; it was that smooth song which was made by Kit Marlow, now at least fifty years ago; and the milk-maid's mother sung an answer to it, which was made by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his younger days. They were old-fashioned poetry, but choicely good; I think much better than the strong lines that are now in fashion in this critical age. Look yonder! on my word, yonder, they both be a-milking again. I will give her the Chub, and persuade them to sing those two songs to us.

God speed you, good woman! I have been a-fishing; and am going to Bleak Hall to my bed; and having caught more fish than will sup myself and my friend, I will bestow this upon you and your daughter, for I use to sell none.

MILK-WOMAN. Marry! God requite you, Sir, and we'll eat it cheerfully. And if you come this way a-fishing two months hence, a grace of God! I'll give you a syllabub of new verjuice,[1] in a new-made hay-cock, for it. And my Maudlin shall sing you one of her best ballads; for she and I both love all anglers, they be such honest, civil, quiet men. In the meantime will you drink a draught of red cow's milk? you shall have it freely.

PISCATOR. No, I thank you; but, I pray, do us a courtesy that shall stand you and your daughter in nothing, and yet we will think ourselves still something in your debt: it is but to sing us a song that was sung by your daughter when I last passed over this meadow, about eight or nine days since.

MILK-WOMAN. What song was it, I pray? Was it, "Come, Shepherds, deck your herds"? or, "As at noon Dulcina rested"? or, "Phillida flouts me"? or, "Chevy Chace"? or, "Johnny Armstrong"? or, "Troy Town"?[2]

PISCATOR. No, it is none of those; it is a Song that your daughter sung the first part, and you sung the answer to it.

MILK-WOMAN. O, I know it now. I learned the first part in my golden age, when I was about the age of my poor daughter; and the latter part, which indeed fits me best now, but two or three years ago, when the cares of the world began to take hold of me: but you shall, God willing, hear them both; and sung as well as we can, for we both love anglers. Come Maudlin, sing the first part 1 fruit-juice.

2 Old English songs, most of which can be found in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry.

to the gentlemen, with a merry heart; and I'll sing the second when you have done.

THE MILK-MAID'S SONG [1]

Come, live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove,
That valleys, groves, or hills, or fields,
Or woods, and steepy mountains yields;

Where we will sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed our flocks,
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses;
And, then, a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle,
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle;

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Slippers, lined choicely for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;

A belt of straw and ivy-buds,
With coral clasps, and amber studs.
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come, live with me, and be my love.

Thy silver dishes, for thy meat,
As precious as the Gods do eat,
Shall, on an ivy table, be Prepared each day for thee and me.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight, each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love.

VENATOR. Trust me, master, it is a choice song, and sweetly sung by honest Maudlin. I now see it was not without cause that our good queen Elizabeth did so often wish herself a milk-maid all the month of May, because they are not troubled with fears and cares, but sing sweetly all the day, and sleep securely all the night: and without doubt, honest, innocent, pretty Maudlin does so. I'll bestow Sir Thomas Overbury's [2] milk-maid's wish upon her, "that she may die in the Spring; and, being dead, may have good store of flowers stuck round about her winding-sheet."

THE MILK-MAID'S MOTHER'S ANSWER.[3]

If all the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

But Time drives flocks from field to fold;
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold;
Then Philomel becometh dumb;
And age complains of cares to come.

The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields.
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring but sorrow's fall.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten;
In folly ripe, in reason rotten.

Thy belt of straw, and ivy buds,
Thy coral clasps, and amber studs,
All these in me no means can move
To come to thee, and be thy love.

What should we talk of dainties, then,
Of better meat than's fit for men?
These are but vain: that's only good
Which God hath blessed, and sent for food.

But could youth last, and love still breed;
Had joys no date, nor age no need;
Then those delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love.

MOTHER. Well! I have done my song. But stay, honest anglers; for I will make Maudlin sing you one short song more. Maudlin! sing that song that you sung last night, when young Coridon the shepherd played so purely on his oaten pipe to you and your cousin Betty.

MAUDLIN. I will, mother.

I married a wife of late,
The more's my unhappy fate:
I married her for love,
As my fancy did me move,
And not for a worldly estate:

But oh! the green sickness
Soon changed her likeness;
And all her beauty did fail.
But 'tis not so
With those that go
Thro' frost and snow,
As all men know,
And carry the milking-pail.

PISCATOR. Well sung, good woman; I thank you. I'll give you another dish of fish one of these days; and then beg another song of you. Come, scholar! let Maudlin alone; do not you offer to spoil her voice. Look; yonder comes mine hostess, to call us to supper. How now! is my brother Peter come?

HOSTESS. Yes, and a friend with him. They are both glad to hear that you are in these parts; and long to see you; and long to be at supper, for they be very hungry.

1 See the note on Marlowe, p. 276.

2 Overbury, 1581–1613, remembered for his Characters, essayistic descriptions of men and women.

3 Like Marlowe's song, taken from England's Helicon, 1600. In some copies the poem is signed S.W.R.; in others, the initials are covered by a slip marked Ignoto.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE (1605–1682)

Thomas Browne, distinguished both as writer and physician, was born October 19, 1605. He s sent to Winchester School and Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1626. He udied medicine, and spent some time in travel. After his return he settled in Norwich, where he ntinued to live quietly as physician and scholar, until his death in 1682. He was knighted by ng Charles II in 1671.

Browne's most famous work, the Religio Medici, written as "a private exercise directed to rself," was printed without his consent in 1642. This forced him to issue an authorized and rrected edition in 1643. It is a long meditation upon his own character and experience, reveal- ; a fascinating and baffling personality. As a physician and man of science Browne was end- sly curious and skeptical, but he was also a mystic. His other works are marked by the same xture of curiosity and enthusiasm. The longest of them, the Pseudodoxia Epidemica or Vulgar rors is a survey of folk superstitions; Urn Burial is an essay on burial customs inspired by the covery of sepulchral urns in Norfolk; A Letter to a Friend is a minute account of the phenomena nibited in the death of a young man, his patient.

In Sir Thomas Browne's writings the rich, elaborate, prose style for which the seventeenth ntury was noted reached its height. In gorgeous vocabulary and sustained rhythm it employed resources of poetry, and became a model for later writers of poetic or imaginative prose.

Sir Thomas Browne's works are published in collected editions by Simon Wilkin in Bohn's brary and by Charles Sayle in the English Library. The Religio Medici is included in the lden Treasury Series, and in Everyman's Library. There are essays on Browne by Thomas Quincey and Walter Pater, both of whom were influenced by him in their art of prose writing.

From RELIGIO MEDICI

The essay consists of seventy-five sections, e first eighteen of which appear below.

For my religion, though there be several cumstances that might persuade the world have none at all, as the general scandal of profession, the natural course of my dies, the indifferency of my behavior and course in matters of religion, neither vio- tly defending one, nor with that common lor and contention opposing another; yet despite hereof, I dare, without usurpation, sume the honorable style of a Christian. ot that I merely owe this title to the font, y education, or clime wherein I was born, being bred up either to confirm those prin- ples my parents instilled into my under- nding, or by a general consent proceed in e religion of my country: but having in my er years and confirmed judgment, seen and amined all, I find myself obliged by the inciples of grace, and the law of mine own ason, to embrace no other name but this: ither doth herein my zeal so far make me get the general charity I owe unto human- , as rather to hate than pity Turks, in- els, and (what is worse) Jews; rather con- nting myself to enjoy that happy style, an maligning those who refuse so glorious title.

Sect. 2. — But, because the name of a ristian is become too general to express our ith, there being a geography of religion as ll as lands, and every clime distinguished t only by their laws and limits, but circum- scribed by their doctrines and rules of faith; to be particular, I am of that reformed new-cast religion,[1] wherein I dislike nothing but the name; of the same belief our Savior taught, the apostles disseminated, the fathers authorized, and the martyrs confirmed, but by the sinister ends of princes, the ambition and avarice of prelates, and the fatal corruption of times, so decayed, impaired, and fallen from its native beauty, that it required the careful and charitable hands of these times to restore it to its primitive integrity. Now the accidental occasion whereupon, the slender means whereby, the low and abject condition of the person[2] by whom so good a work was set on foot, which in our adversaries beget contempt and scorn, fills me with wonder, and is the very same objection the insolent pagans first cast at Christ and his disciples.

Yet have I not so shaken hands with those desperate resolutions,[3] who had rather venture at large their decayed bottom,[4] than bring her in to be new trimmed in the dock; who had rather promiscuously retain all, than abridge any, and obstinately be what they are, than what they have been, as to stand in diameter and swords point with them. We have reformed from them, not against them; for omitting those improperations,[5] and terms of scurrility betwixt us, which only difference our affections, and not our cause, there is between us one common name and appellation, one faith and necessary body of principles common to us both. And therefore I am not scrupulous to converse and live with them, to enter their churches in defect of ours, and either pray with them, or for them. I could never perceive any rational consequence from those many texts which prohibit the Children of Israel to pollute themselves with the temples of the heathens; we being all Christians, and not divided by such detested impieties as might profane our prayers, or the place wherein we make them; or that a resolved conscience may not adore her Creator anywhere, especially in places devoted to his service; where if their devotions offend him, mine may please him; if theirs profane it, mine may hallow it; holy-water and crucifix (dangerous to the common people) deceive not my judgment, nor abuse my devotion at all. I am, I confess, naturally inclined to that which misguided zeal terms superstition: my common conversation I do acknowledge austere, my behavior full of rigor, sometimes not without morosity; yet at my devotion I love to use the civility of my knee, my hat, and hand, with all those outward and sensible motions which may express or promote any invisible devotion. I should violate my own arm rather than a church, nor willingly deface the name of saint or martyr. At the sight of a cross or crucifix I can dispense with my hat, but scarce with the thought or memory of my Savior: I cannot laugh at, but rather pity the fruitless journeys of pilgrims, or contemn the miserable condition of friars; for though misplaced in circumstances, there is something in it of devotion. I could never hear the Ave-Mary bell [1] without an elevation, or think it a sufficient warrant, because they erred in one circumstance, for me to err in all, that is, in silence and dumb contempt. Whilst therefore they direct their devotions to her, I offer mine to God, and rectify the errors of their prayers, by rightly ordering mine own. At a solemn procession I have wept abundantly, while my consorts, blind with opposition and prejudice, have fallen into an excess of scorn and laughter. There are questionless, both in Greek, Roman, and African churches, solemnities and ceremonies, whereof the wiser zeals do make a Christian use, and stand condemned by us, not as evil in themselves, but as allurements and baits of superstition to those vulgar heads that look asquint o the face of truth, and those unstable jud ments that cannot resist in the narrow poi and center of virtue without a reel or stagg to the circumference.

1 Protestant. 2 Luther.
3 i.e. men of desperate resolutions.
4 ship. 5 insults.

As there were many reformers, so likewi many reformations; every country proceed ing in a particular way and method, accor ing as their national interest, together wit their constitution and clime inclined the some angrily, and with extremity; othe calmly, and with mediocrity, not rending b easily dividing the community, and leavin an honest possibility of a reconciliatio which though peaceable spirits do desire, an may conceive that revolution of time and th mercies of God may effect, yet that judgme that shall consider the present antipathi between the two extremes, their contrarieti in condition, affection and opinion, may wit the same hopes expect a union in the poles heaven.

But to difference myself nearer,[1] and dra into a lesser circle: there is no church, whos every part so squares unto my conscience whose articles, constitutions, and custom seem so consonant unto reason, and as were framed to my particular devotion, a this whereof I hold my belief, the Church o England, to whose faith I am a sworn sub ject, and therefore, in a double obligation subscribe unto her articles, and endeavor t observe her constitutions: whatsoever beyond, as points indifferent, I observe, ac cording to the rules of my private reason, o the humor and fashion of my devotion neither believing this because Luther af firmed it, nor disapproving that becaus Calvin hath disavouched it. I condemn no all things in the council of Trent,[2] nor ap prove all in the synod of Dort.[3] In brief where the Scripture is silent, the church i my text; where that speaks, 'tis but my com ment; where there is a joint silence of both, borrow not the rules of my religion from Rome or Geneva, but from the dictates o my own reason. It is an unjust scandal o our adversaries, and a gross error in our selves, to compute the nativity of our re ligion from Henry the Eighth; who, though he rejected the Pope, refused not the faith o Rome, and effected no more than what his own predecessors desired and essayed in ages

1 "A church bell that tolls every day at six and twelve of the clock; at the hearing whereof, every one in what place soever, either of house or street, betakes himself to his prayer, which is commonly directed to the Virgin." — (Browne's note).

1 to define more closely.

2 This council, held at Trent in the Tyrol, 1545–63, decided against the ideas of the Reformation.

3 The meeting, held at Dort in the Netherlands, 1618–19, condemned the doctrines of Arminius, the Leyden remonstrant.

ast, and it was conceived the state of Venice ould have attempted in our days.[1] It is as ncharitable a point in us to fall upon those opular scurrilities and opprobrious scoffs of he Bishop of Rome, to whom, as a temporal rince, we owe the duty of good language. I onfess there is a cause of passion[2] between s: by his sentence I stand excommunicated; eretic is the best language he affords me: et can no ear witness I ever returned to him he name of antichrist, man of sin, or whore Babylon. It is the method of charity to uffer without reaction: those usual satires nd invectives of the pulpit may perchance roduce a good effect on the vulgar, whose ars are opener to rhetoric than logic; yet o they, in no wise, confirm the faith of wiser elievers, who know that a good cause needs ot be patroned by passion, but can sustain self upon a temperate dispute.

SECT. 6. — I could never divide myself rom any man upon the difference of an opin-n, or be angry with his judgment for not greeing with me in that from which, per-aps, within a few days, I should dissent my-elf. I have no genius to disputes in religion: nd have often thought it wisdom to decline hem, especially upon a disadvantage, or hen the cause of truth might suffer in the eakness of my patronage. Where we desire o be informed, 'tis good to contest with men bove ourselves; but, to confirm and estab-sh our opinions, 'tis best to argue with judg-ments below our own, that the frequent poils and victories over their reasons may ettle in ourselves an esteem and confirmed pinion of our own. Every man is not a roper champion for truth, nor fit to take up he gauntlet in the cause of verity; many, rom the ignorance of these maxims, and an nconsiderate zeal unto truth, have too rashly harged the troops of error and remain as rophies unto the enemies of truth. A man ay be in as just possession of truth as of a ity, and yet be forced to surrender; 'tis herefore far better to enjoy her with peace han to hazard her on a battle. If, therefore, here rise any doubts in my way, I do forget hem, or at least defer them, till my better ettled judgment and more manly reason be ble to resolve them; for I perceive every an's own reason is his best Œdipus,[3] and ill upon a reasonable truce, find a way to oose those bonds wherewith the subtleties f error have enchained our more flexible and tender judgments. In philosophy, where truth seems doublefaced, there is no man more paradoxical than myself: but in divinity I love to keep the road; and, though not in an implicit, yet an humble faith, follow the great wheel of the church, by which I move; not reserving any proper poles, or motion from the epicycle[1] of my own brain. By this means I leave no gap for heresy, schisms or errors, of which at present, I hope I shall not injure truth to say, I have no taint or tincture. I must confess my greener studies have been polluted with two or three; not any begotten in the latter centuries, but old and obsolete, such as could never have been revived but by such extravagant and irregular heads as mine. For, indeed, heresies perish not with their authors; but, like the river Arethusa,[2] though they lose their currents in one place, they rise up again in another. One general council is not able to extirpate one single heresy: it may be cancelled for the present; but revolution of time, and the like aspects from heaven, will restore it, when it will flourish till it be condemned again. For, as though there were a metempsychosis, and the soul of one man passed into another, opinions do find, after certain revolutions, men and minds like those that first begat them. To see ourselves again, we need not look for Plato's year:[3] every man is not only himself; there have been many Diogeneses, and as many Timons, though but few of that name; men are lived over again; the world is now as it was in ages past; there was none then, but there hath been some one since, that parallels him, and is, as it were, his revived self.

SECT. 7. — Now, the first of mine[4] was that of the Arabians, that the souls of men perished with their bodies, but should yet be raised again at the last day: not that I did absolutely conceive a mortality of the soul, but, if that were (which faith, not philosophy, hath yet thoroughly disproved), and that both entered the grave together, yet I held the same conceit thereof that we all do of the body, that it should rise again. Surely it is but the merits of our unworthy natures, if we sleep in darkness until the last alarm. A serious reflex upon my own unworthiness did make me backward from challenging this prerogative of my soul: so that I might enjoy

1 Referring to a quarrel between the Pope and Venice n 1606.

2 anger.

3 solver of perplexities.

1 i.e., figures taken from Ptolemaic astronomy.

2 Supposed to flow from Greece to Sicily, under the sea.

3 "A revolution of certain thousand years, when all things should return unto their former estate, and he be teaching again in his school, as when he delivered this opinion." — (Browne's note).

4 i.e., heresies.

my Savior at the last, I could with patience be nothing almost unto eternity. The second was that of Origen;[1] that God would not persist in his vengeance for ever, but, after a definite time of his wrath, would release the damned souls from torture; which error I fell into upon a serious contemplation of the great attribute of God, his mercy; and did a little cherish it in myself, because I found therein no malice, and a ready weight to sway me from the other extreme of despair whereunto melancholy and contemplative natures are too easily disposed. A third there is, which I did never positively maintain or practise, but have often wished it had been consonant to truth, and not offensive to my religion; and that is, the prayer for the dead; whereunto I was inclined from some charitable inducements, whereby I could scarce contain my prayers for a friend at the ringing of a bell, or behold his corpse without an orison for his soul. 'Twas a good way, methought, to be remembered by posterity, and far more noble than a history. These opinions I never maintained with pertinacity, or endeavored to inveigle any man's belief unto mine, nor so much as ever revealed, or disputed them with my dearest friends; by which means I neither propagated them in others, nor confirmed them in myself: but, suffering them to flame upon their own substance, without addition of new fuel, they went out insensibly of themselves; therefore these opinions, though condemned by lawful councils, were not heresies in me, but bare errors, and single lapses of my understanding, without a joint depravity of my will. Those have not only depraved understandings, but diseased affections, which cannot enjoy a singularity without a heresy, or be the author of an opinion without they be of a sect also. This was the villany of the first schism of Lucifer; who was not content to err alone, but drew into his faction many legions of spirits; and upon this experience he tempted only Eve, well understanding the communicable nature of sin, and that to deceive but one was tacitly and upon consequence to delude them both.

SECT. 8. — That heresies should arise, we have the prophecy of Christ; but, that old ones should be abolished, we hold no prediction. That there must be heresies, is true, not only in our church, but also in any other: even in the doctrines heretical there will be superheresies; and Arians, not only divided from the church, but also among themselves:

1 One of the early church fathers, third century A.D.

for heads that are disposed unto schism, and complexionally propense to innovation, are naturally indisposed for a community; nor will be ever confined unto the order or economy of one body; and therefore, when they separate from others, they knit but loosely among themselves; nor contented with a general breach or dichotomy [1] with their church, do subdivide and mince themselves almost into atoms. 'Tis true, that men of singular parts and humors have not been free from singular opinions and conceits in all ages; retaining something, not only beside the opinion of their own church, or any other, but also any particular author; which, notwithstanding, a sober judgment may do without offence or heresy; for there are yet, after all the decrees of councils, and the niceties of the schools, many things, untouched, unimagined, wherein the liberty of an honest reason may play and expatiate with security, and far without the circle of a heresy.

SECT. 9. — As for those wingy mysteries in divinity, and airy subtleties in religion, which have unhinged the brains of better heads, they never stretched the pia mater [2] of mine. Methinks there be not impossibilities enough in religion for an active faith: the deepest mysteries ours contains have not only been illustrated, but maintained, by syllogism and the rule of reason. I love to lose myself in a mystery; to pursue my reason to an O altitudo! [3] 'Tis my solitary recreation to pose my apprehension with those involved enigmas and riddles of the Trinity — incarnation and resurrection. I can answer all the objections of Satan and my rebellious reason with that odd resolution I learned of Tertullian,[4] Certum est quia impossibile est.[5] I desire to exercise my faith in the difficultest point; for, to credit ordinary and visible objects is not faith, but persuasion. Some believe the better for seeing Christ's sepulchre; and, when they have seen the Red Sea, doubt not of the miracle. Now, contrarily, I bless myself, and am thankful, that I lived not in the days of miracles; that I never saw Christ nor his disciples. I would not have been one of those Israelites that passed the Red Sea; nor one of Christ's patients, on whom he wrought his wonders: then had my faith been thrust upon me; nor should I enjoy that greater blessing pronounced to all that be-

1 division.
2 The inner membrane covering the brain.
3 "What a height;" i.e., the point beyond which human reason cannot go.
4 Early church father.
5 It is true, because it is impossible.

lieve and saw not. 'Tis an easy and necessary belief, to credit what our eye and sense hath examined. I believe he was dead, and buried, and rose again; and desire to see him in his glory, rather than to contemplate him in his cenotaph or sepulchre. Nor is this much to believe; as we have reason, we owe this faith unto history: they only had the advantage of a bold and noble faith, who lived before his coming, who, upon obscure prophesies and mystical types, could raise a belief, and expect apparent impossibilities.

SECT. 10. — 'Tis true, there is an edge in all firm belief, and with an easy metaphor we may say, the sword of faith; but in these obscurities I rather use it in the adjunct the Apostle gives it, a buckler; under which I conceive a wary combatant may lie invulnerable. Since I was of understanding to know that we know nothing, my reason hath been more pliable to the will of faith: I am now content to understand a mystery, without a rigid definition, in an easy and Platonic description. That allegorical description of Hermes [1] pleaseth me beyond all the metaphysical definitions of divines. Where I cannot satisfy my reason, I love to humor my fancy: I had as lieve you tell me that anima est angelus hominis, est corpus Dei,[2] as ἐντελέχεια;[3] — lux est umbra Dei,[4] as actus perspicui.[5] Where there is an obscurity too deep for our reason, 'tis good to sit down with a description, periphrasis, or adumbration; for, by acquainting our reason how unable it is to display the visible and obvious effects of nature, it becomes more humble and submissive unto the subtleties of faith: and thus I teach my haggard and unreclaimed reason to stoop unto the lure of faith. I believe there was already a tree, whose fruit our unhappy parents tasted, though, in the same chapter where God forbids it, 'tis positively said, the plants of the field were not yet grown; for God had not caused it to rain upon the earth. I believe that the serpent (if we shall literally understand it), from his proper form and figure, made his motion on his belly, before the curse. I find the trial of the pucelage [6] and virginity of women, which God ordained the Jews, is very fallible. Experience and history informs me that, not only many particular women, but likewise whole nations, have escaped the curse of childbirth, which God seems to pronounce upon the whole sex; yet do I believe that all this is true, which, indeed, my reason would persuade me to be false: and this, I think, is no vulgar part of faith, to believe a thing not only above, but contrary to, reason, and against the arguments of our proper senses.

SECT. 11. — In my solitary and retired imagination (neque enim cum porticus aut me lectulus accepit, desum mihi),[1] I remember I am not alone; and therefore forget not to contemplate him and his attributes, who is ever with me, especially those two mighty ones, his wisdom and eternity. With the one I recreate, with the other I confound, my understanding: for who can speak of eternity without a solecism, or think thereof without an ecstacy? Time we may comprehend; 'tis but five days older than ourselves, and hath the same horoscope with the world; but, to retire so far back as to apprehend a beginning, — to give such an infinite start forwards as to conceive an end, — in an essence that we affirm hath neither the one nor the other, it puts my reason to St. Paul's sanctuary: [2] my philosophy dares not say the angels can do it. God hath not made a creature that can comprehend him; 'tis a privilege of his own nature: "I am that I am" was his own definition unto Moses; and 'twas a short one to confound mortality, that durst question God, or ask him what he was. Indeed, he only is; all others have and shall be; but, in eternity, there is no distinction of tenses; and therefore that terrible term, predestination, which hath troubled so many weak heads to conceive, and the wisest to explain, is in respect to God no prescious determination of our estates to come, but a definite blast of his will already fulfilled, and at the instant that he first decreed it; for, to his eternity, which is indivisible, and altogether, the last trump is already sounded, the reprobates in the flame, and the blessed in Abraham's bosom. St. Peter speaks modestly, when he saith, "a thousand years to God are but as one day;" for, to speak like a philosopher, those continued instances of time, which flow into a thousand years, make not to him one moment. What to us is to come, to his eternity is present; his whole duration being

1 "Sphæra cujus centrum ubique, circumferentia nullibi." — (Browne's note).
(A sphere whose center is everywhere and circumference nowhere.) Hermes Trismegistus, a writer of the fourth century A.D., is the supposed father of alchemy.
2 The soul is the angel of man; it is the body of God.
3 "the actual being," Aristotle's term for the soul.
4 Light is the shadow of God.
5 "transparent phenomena," Aristotle's definition of light.
6 virginity.

1 For even when my porch or couch receives me, I remember myself.
2 i.e., I go to the Apostle for comfort.

but one permanent point, without succession, parts, flux, or division.

SECT. 12. — There is no attribute that adds more difficulty to the mystery of the Trinity, where, though in a relative way of Father and Son, we must deny a priority. I wonder how Aristotle could conceive the world eternal, or how he could make good two eternities. His similitude, of a triangle comprehended in a square, doth somewhat illustrate the trinity of our souls, and that the triple unity of God; for there is in us not three, but a trinity of, souls; because there is in us, if not three distinct souls, yet differing faculties, that can and do subsist apart in different subjects, and yet in us are thus united as to make but one soul and substance. If one soul were so perfect as to inform three distinct bodies, that were a petty trinity. Conceive the distinct number of three, not divided nor separated by the intellect, but actually comprehended in its unity, and that is a perfect trinity. I have often admired the mystical way of Pythagoras, and the secret magic of numbers. "Beware of philosophy," is a precept not to be received in too large a sense: for, in this mass of nature, there is a set of things that carry in their front, though not in capital letters, yet in stenography and short characters, something of divinity; which, to wiser reasons, serve as luminaries in the abyss of knowledge, and, to judicious beliefs, as scales and rundles [1] to mount the pinnacles and highest pieces of divinity. The severe schools shall never laugh me out of the philosophy of Hermes, that this visible world is but a picture of the invisible, wherein, as in a portrait, things are not truly, but in equivocal shapes, and as they counterfeit some real substance in that invisible fabric.

SECT. 13. — That other attribute, wherewith I recreate my devotion, is his wisdom, in which I am happy; and for the contemplation of this only do not repent me that I was bred in the way of study. The advantage I have of the vulgar, with the content and happiness I conceive therein, is an ample recompense for all my endeavors, in what part of knowledge soever. Wisdom is his most beauteous attribute: no man can attain unto it: yet Solomon pleased God when he desired it. He is wise, because he knows all things; and he knoweth all things, because he made them all: but his greatest knowledge is in comprehending that he made not, that is, himself. And this is also the greatest knowledge in man. For this do I honor my own profession, and embrace the counsel even of the devil himself: had he read such a lecture in Paradise as he did at Delphos,[1] we had better known ourselves; nor had we stood in fear to know him. I know God is wise in all; wonderful in what we conceive, but far more in what we comprehend not: for we behold him but asquint, upon reflex or shadow; our understanding is dimmer than Moses's eye; we are ignorant of the back parts or lower side of his divinity; therefore, to pry into the maze of his counsels, is not only folly in man, but presumption even in angels. Like us, they are his servants, not his senators; he holds no counsel, but that mystical one of the Trinity, wherein, though there be three persons, there is but one mind that decrees without contradiction. Nor needs he any; his actions are not begot with deliberation; his wisdom naturally knows what's best: his intellect stands ready fraught with the superlative and purest ideas of goodness: consultation and election, which are two motions in us, make but one in him: his actions springing from his power at the first touch of his will. These are contemplations metaphysical: my humble speculations have another method, and are content to trace and discover those expressions he hath left in his creatures, and the obvious effects of nature. There is no danger to profound [2] these mysteries, no sanctum sanctorum [3] in philosophy. The world was made to be inhabited by beasts, but studied and contemplated by man: 'tis the debt [4] our reason we owe unto God, and the homage we pay for not being beasts. Without this, the world is still as though it had not been, or as it was before the sixth day, when as yet there was not a creature that could conceive or say there was a world. The wisdom of God receives small honor from those vulgar heads that rudely stare about, and with a gross rusticity admire his works. Those highly magnify him, whose judicious enquiry into his acts, and deliberate research into his creatures, return the duty of a devout and learned admiration. Therefore,

Search while thou wilt; and let thy reason go
To ransom truth, e'en to th' abyss below;
Rally the scattered causes; and that line
Which nature twists be able to untwine.
It is thy Maker's will; for unto none
But unto reason can he e'er be known.

1 ladders.

1 Γνῶθι σεαυτόν. Nosce teipsum. — (Browne's note) (Know thyself.)
2 to sound, investigate. 3 holy of holies. 4 for.

The devils do know thee; but those damned meteors
Build not thy glory, but confound thy creatures.
Teach my endeavors so thy works to read,
That learning them in thee I may proceed.
Give thou my reason that instructive flight,
Whose weary wings may on thy hands still light.
Teach me to soar aloft, yet ever so,
When near the sun, to stoop again below.
Thus shall my humble feathers safely hover,
And, though near earth, more than the heav'ns discover.
And then at last, when homeward I shall drive,
Rich with the spoils of nature, to my hive,
There will I sit, like that industrious fly,
Buzzing thy praises; which shall never die
Till death abrupts them, and succeeding glory
Bid me go on in a more lasting story.

And this is almost all wherein an humble creature may endeavor to requite, and some way to retribute unto his Creator: for, if not he that saith, Lord, Lord, but he that doeth the will of the Father, shall be saved, certainly our wills must be our performances, and our intents make out our actions; otherwise our pious labors shall find anxiety in our graves, and our best endeavors not hope, but fear, a resurrection.

SECT. 14. — There is but one first cause, and four second causes of all things. Some are without efficient, as God; others without matter, as angels; some without form, as the first matter: but every essence, created or uncreated, hath its final cause, and some positive end both of its essence and operation. This is the cause I grope after in the works of nature; on this hangs the providence of God. To raise so beauteous a structure as the world and the creatures thereof was but his art; but their sundry and divided operations, with their predestinated ends, are from the treasury of his wisdom. In the causes, nature, and affections, of the eclipses of the sun and moon, there is most excellent speculation; but, to profound farther, and to contemplate a reason why his providence hath so disposed and ordered their motions in that vast circle, as to conjoin and obscure each other, is a sweeter piece of reason, and a diviner point of philosophy. Therefore, sometimes, and in some things, there appears to me as much divinity in Galen [1] his books, De Usu Partium,[2] as in Suarez's [3] Metaphysics. Had Aristotle been as curious in the enquiry of this cause as he was of the other, he had not left behind him an imperfect piece of philosophy, but an absolute tract of divinity.

SECT. 15. — Natura nihil agit frustra,[1] is the only indisputable axiom in philosophy. There are no grotesques in nature; not any thing framed to fill up empty cantons, and unnecessary spaces. In the most imperfect creatures, and such as were not preserved in the ark, but, having their seeds and principles in the womb of nature, are every where, where the power of the sun is, — in these is the wisdom of his hand discovered. Out of this rank Solomon chose the object of his admiration; indeed, what reason may not go to school to the wisdom of bees, ants, and spiders? What wise hand teacheth them to do what reason cannot teach us? Ruder heads stand amazed at those prodigious pieces of nature, whales, elephants, dromedaries, and camels; these, I confess, are the colossuses and majestic pieces of her hand; but in these narrow engines there is more curious mathematics; and the civility of these little citizens more neatly sets forth the wisdom of their Maker. Who admires not Regio Montanus [2] his fly beyond his eagle; or wonders not more at the operation of two souls in those little bodies than but one in the trunk of a cedar? I could never content my contemplation with those general pieces of wonder, the flux and reflux of the sea, the increase of Nile, the conversion of the needle to the north; and have studied to match and parallel those in the more obvious and neglected pieces of nature which, without farther travel, I can do in the cosmography of myself. We carry with us the wonders we seek without us: there is all Africa and her prodigies in us. We are that bold and adventurous piece of nature, which he that studies wisely learns, in a compendium, what others labor at in a divided piece and endless volume.

SECT. 16. — Thus there are two books from whence I collect my divinity: besides that written one of God, another of his servant, nature, that universal and public manuscript, that lies expansed unto the eyes of all. Those that never saw him in the one have discovered him in the other: this was the scripture and theology of the heathens; the natural motion of the sun made them more admire him than its supernatural station did the children of Israel. The ordinary effects of nature wrought more admiration in 1 Mediæval writer on medicine.

2 On the use of parts.
3 A Jesuit religious philosopher.

1 Nature does nothing in vain.
2 A German of Königsberg, 1436–75, who constructed a mechanical fly and an eagle which could soar.

them than, in the other, all his miracles. Surely the heathens knew better how to join and read these mystical letters than we Christians, who cast a more careless eye on these common hieroglyphics, and disdain to suck divinity from the flowers of nature. Nor do I so forget God as to adore the name of nature; which I define not, with the schools, to be the principle of motion and rest, but that straight and regular line, that settled and constant course the wisdom of God hath ordained the actions of his creatures, according to their several kinds. To make a revolution every day is the nature of the sun, because of that necessary course which God hath ordained it, from which it cannot swerve but by a faculty from that voice which first did give it motion. Now this course of nature God seldom alters or perverts; but, like an excellent artist, hath so contrived his work, that, with the self-same instrument, without a new creation, he may effect his obscurest designs. Thus he sweeteneth the water with a word, preserveth the creatures in the ark, which the blast of his mouth might have as easily created; — for God is like a skilful geometrician, who, when more easily, and with one stroke of his compass, he might describe or divide a right line, had yet rather do this in a circle or longer way, according to the constituted and forelaid principles of his art: yet this rule of his he doth sometimes pervert, to acquaint the world with his prerogative, lest the arrogancy of our reason should question his power, and conclude he could not. And thus I call the effects of nature the works of God, whose hand and instrument she only is; and therefore, to ascribe his actions unto her is to devolve the honor of the principal agent upon the instrument; which if with reason we may do, then let our hammers rise up and boast they have built our houses, and our pens receive the honor of our writings. I hold there is a general beauty in the works of God, and therefore no deformity in any kind of species or creature whatsoever. I cannot tell by what logic we call a toad, a bear, or an elephant ugly; they being created in those outward shapes and figures which best express the actions of their inward forms; and having passed that general visitation of God, who saw that all that he had made was good, that is, conformable to his will, which abhors deformity, and is the rule of order and beauty. There is no deformity but in monstrosity; wherein, notwithstanding, there is a kind of beauty; nature so ingeniously contriving the irregular parts, as they become sometime more remarkable than the principal fabric. To speak yet more narrowly, there was never any thing ugly or mis-shapen, but the chaos; wherein, notwithstanding, to speak strictly, there was no deformity, because no form; nor was it yet impregnate by the voice of God. Now nature is not at variance with art, nor art with nature; they being both the servants of his providence. Art is the perfection of nature. Were the world now as it was the sixth day, there were yet a chaos. Nature hath made one world, and art another. In brief, all things are artificial; for nature is the art of God.

SECT. 17. — This is the ordinary and open way of his providence, which art and industry have in good part discovered; whose effects we may foretell without an oracle. To foreshow these is not prophecy, but prognostication. There is another way, full of meanders and labyrinths, whereof the devil and spirits have no exact ephemerides:[1] and that is a more particular and obscure method of his providence; directing the operation of individual and single essences: this we call fortune; that serpentine and crooked line, whereby he draws those actions his wisdom intends in a more unknown and secret way: this cryptic and involved method of his providence have I ever admired; nor can I relate the history of my life, the occurrences of my days, the escapes, or dangers, and hits of chance, with a bezo las manos[2] to Fortune, or a bare gramercy[3] to my good stars. Abraham might have thought the ram in the thicket came thither by accident: human reason would have said, that mere chance conveyed Moses in the ark to the sight of Pharaoh's daughter. What a labyrinth is there in the story of Joseph! able to convert a stoic. Surely there are in every man's life certain rubs, doublings, and wrenches, which pass a while under the effects of chance; but at the last, well examined, prove the mere hand of God. 'Twas not dumb chance that, to discover the fougade, or powder plot, contrived a miscarriage in the letter. I like the victory of '88[4] the better for that one occurrence which our enemies imputed to our dishonor, and the partiality of fortune; to wit, the tempests and contrariety of winds. King Philip did not detract from the nation when he said, he sent his armada to fight with men, and not to combat with the winds.

1 almanacs. 2 I kiss your hands.
3 many (lit. great) thanks.
4 The defeat of the Spanish Armada.

Where there is a manifest disproportion between the powers and forces of two several agents, upon a maxim of reason we may promise the victory to the superior: but when unexpected accidents slip in, and unthought-of occurrences intervene, these must proceed from a power that owes no obedience to those axioms; where, as in the writing upon the wall, we may behold the hand, but see not the spring that moves it. The success of that petty province of Holland (of which the Grand Seignior [1] proudly said, if they should trouble him, as they did the Spaniard, he would send his men with shovels and pick-axes, and throw it into the sea) I cannot altogether ascribe to the ingenuity and industry of the people, but the mercy of God, that hath disposed them to such a thriving genius; and to the will of his providence, that dispenseth his favor to each country in their preordinate season. All cannot be happy at once; for, because the glory of one state depends upon the ruin of another, there is a revolution and vicissitude of their greatness, and must obey the swing of that wheel, not moved by intelligences, but by the hand of God, whereby all estates rise to their zenith and vertical points, according to their predestinated periods. For the lives not only of men, but of commonwealths and the whole world, run not upon a helix [2] that still enlargeth; but on a circle, where, arriving to their meridian, they decline in obscurity, and fall under the horizon again.

Sect. 18. — These must not therefore be named the effects of fortune but in a relative way, and as we term the works of nature. It was the ignorance of man's reason that begat this very name, and by a careless term miscalled the providence of God: for there is no liberty for causes to operate in a loose and straggling way; nor any effect whatsoever but hath its warrant from some universal or superior cause. 'Tis not a ridiculous devotion to say a prayer before a game at tables; for, even in sortileges [3] and matters of greatest uncertainty, there is a settled and preordered course of effects. It is we that are blind, not fortune. Because our eye is too dim to discover the mystery of her effects, we foolishly paint her blind, and hoodwink the providence of the Almighty. I cannot justify that contemptible proverb, that "fools only are fortunate;" or that insolent paradox, that "a wise man is out of the reach of fortune;" much less those opprobrious epithets of poets, — whore, bawd, and strumpet. 'Tis, I confess, the common fate of men of singular gifts of mind, to be destitute of those of fortune; which doth not any way deject the spirit of wiser judgments who thoroughly understand the justice of this proceeding; and, being enriched with higher donatives, cast a more careless eye on these vulgar parts of felicity. It is a most unjust ambition, to desire to engross the mercies of the Almighty, not to be content with the goods of mind, without a possession of those of body or fortune: and it is an error, worse than heresy, to adore these complimental and circumstantial pieces of felicity, and undervalue those perfections and essential points of happiness, wherein we resemble our Maker. To wiser desires it is satisfaction enough to deserve, though not to enjoy, the favors of fortune. Let providence provide for fools: 'tis not partiality, but equity, in God, who deals with us but as our natural parents. Those that are of able body and mind he leaves to their deserts; to those of weaker merits he imparts a larger portion; and pieces out the defect of one by the excess of the other. Thus have we no just quarrel with nature for leaving us naked; or to envy the horns, hoofs, skins, and furs of other creatures; being provided with reason, that can supply them all. We need not labor, with so many arguments, to confute judicial astrology; for, if there be a truth therein, it doth not injure divinity. If to be born under Mercury disposeth us to be witty; under Jupiter to be wealthy; I do not owe a knee unto these, but unto that merciful hand that hath ordered my indifferent and uncertain nativity into such benevolous aspects. Those that hold, that all things are governed by fortune, had not erred, had they not persisted there. The Romans, that erected a temple to Fortune, acknowledged therein, though in a blinder way, somewhat of divinity; for, in a wise supputation,[1] all things begin and end in the Almighty. There is a nearer way to heaven than Homer's chain; an easy logic may conjoin a heaven and earth in one argument, and, with less than a sorites,[2] resolve all things to God. For though we christen effects by their most sensible and nearest causes, yet is God the true and infallible cause of all; whose concourse, though it be general, yet doth it subdivide itself into the particular actions of every thing, and is that spirit, by which each singular essence not only subsists, but performs its operation.

1 The Sultan. 2 spiral.
3 prophecies by drawing lots.

1 accounting. 2 syllogism.

THOMAS FULLER (1608–1661)

Thomas Fuller was the son of a clergyman, born in 1608. He attended Queen's College, Cambridge, entered the church, and held various livings. He adhered to the king's party in the Civil War, and joined the royal army at Oxford. After the defeat of the King he lived largely by his writings. He died shortly after the restoration of Charles II.

Fuller's writings are voluminous and miscellaneous. He was a favorite preacher, being much reputed for his pithy proverbial expressions and his wit. He compiled a volume of practical ethics called The Holy State and the Prophane State (1642) and The History of the Worthies of England, which appeared after his death. This is a sort of dictionary of national biography, a survey of England by counties, with brief sketches of the most distinguished representatives of the various professions. Fuller was a great favorite with the critics of the early nineteenth century, Coleridge and Lamb, for his quaintness, his curious turns of mind and style, in which he showed something of the spirit of the "metaphysical poets."

THE LIFE OF SIR FRANCIS DRAKE

From THE HOLY STATE, BK. II, CH. XXII

Francis Drake was born nigh South Tavistock in Devonshire, and brought up in Kent; God dividing the honor betwixt two counties, that the one might have his birth, and the other his education. His father, being a minister, fled into Kent, for fear of the Six Articles, wherein the sting of Popery still remained in England, though the teeth thereof were knocked out, and the Pope's supremacy abolished. Coming into Kent, he bound his son Francis apprentice to the master of a small bark, which traded into France and Zealand, where he underwent a hard service; and pains, with patience in his youth, did knit the joints of his soul, and made them more solid and compacted. His master, dying unmarried, in reward of his industry, bequeathed his bark unto him for a legacy.

For some time he continued his master's profession; but the narrow seas were a prison for so large a spirit, born for greater undertakings. He soon grew weary of his bark; which would scarce go alone, but as it crept along by the shore; wherefore, selling it, he unfortunately ventured most of his estate with Captain John Hawkins into the West Indies, in 1567; whose goods were taken by the Spaniards at St. John de Ulva, and he himself scarce escaped with life: the king of Spain being so tender in those parts, that the least touch doth wound him; and so jealous of the West Indies, his wife, that willingly he would have none look upon her: he therefore used them with the greater severity.

Drake was persuaded by the minister of his ship, that he might lawfully recover in value of the king of Spain, and repair his losses upon him anywhere else. The case was clear in sea-divinity; and few are such infidels, as not to believe doctrines which make for their own profit. Whereupon Drake, though a poor private man, hereafter undertook to revenge himself on so mighty a monarch; who, as not contented that the sun riseth and setteth in his dominions, may seem to desire to make all his own where he shineth. And now let us see how a dwarf, standing on the mount of God's providence, may prove an overmatch for a giant.

After two or three several voyages to gain intelligence in the West Indies, and some prizes taken, at last he effectually set forward from Plymouth with two ships, the one of seventy, the other twenty-five tons, and seventy-three men and boys in both. He made with all speed and secrecy to Nombre de Dios, as loath to put the town to too much charge (which he knew they would willingly bestow) in providing beforehand for his entertainment; which city was then the granary of the West Indies, wherein the golden harvest brought from Panama was hoarded up till it could be conveyed into Spain. They came hard aboard the shore, and lay quiet all night, intending to attempt the town in the dawning of the day.

But he was forced to alter his resolution, and assault it sooner; for he heard his men muttering amongst themselves of the strength and greatness of the town: and when men's heads are once fly-blown with buzzes of suspicion, the vermin multiply instantly, and one jealousy begets another. Wherefore, he raised them from their nest before they had hatched their fears; and, to put away those conceits, he persuaded them it was day-dawning when the moon rose, and instantly set on the town, and won it, being unwalled. In the market-place the Spaniards saluted them with a volley of shot; Drake returned their greeting with a flight of arrows, the best and ancient English compliment, which drave their enemies away. Here Drake received a dangerous wound, though he valiantly concealed it a long time; knowing if his heart stooped, his men's would fall, and loath to leave off the action, wherein if so bright an opportunity once setteth, it seldom riseth again. But at length his men forced him to return to his ship, that his wound might be dressed; and this unhappy accident defeated the whole design. Thus victory sometimes slips through their fingers who have caught it in their hands.

But his valor would not let him give over the project as long as there was either life or warmth in it; and therefore, having received intelligence from the negroes called Symerons of many mules'-lading of gold and silver, which was to be brought from Panama, he, leaving competent numbers to man his ships, went on land with the rest, and bestowed himself in the woods by the way as they were to pass, and so intercepted and carried away an infinite mass of gold. As for the silver, which was not portable over the mountains, they digged holes in the ground and hid it therein.

There want not those who love to beat down the price of every honorable action, though they themselves never mean to be chapmen.[1] These cry up Drake's fortune herein to cry down his valor; as if this his performance were nothing, wherein a golden opportunity ran his head, with his long forelock, into Drake's hands beyond expectation. But, certainly, his resolution and unconquerable patience deserved much praise, to adventure on such a design, which had in it just no more probability than what was enough to keep it from being impossible. Yet I admire not so much at all the treasure he took, as at the rich and deep mine of God's providence.

Having now full freighted himself with wealth, and burnt at the House of Crosses above two hundred thousand pounds' worth of Spanish merchandise, he returned with honor and safety into England, and, some years after (December 13th, 1577) undertook that his famous voyage about the world, most accurately described by our English authors: and yet a word or two thereof will not be amiss.

Setting forward from Plymouth, he bore up for Cabo-verd,[2] where, near to the island of St. Jago, he took prisoner Nuno de Silva, an experienced Spanish pilot, whose direction he used in the coasts of Brazil and Magellan Straits, and afterwards safely landed him at Guatulco in New Spain. Hence they took their course to the Island of Brava; and hereabouts they met with those tempestuous winds whose only praise is, that they continue not an hour, in which time they change all the points of the compass. Here they had great plenty of rain, poured (not, as in other places, as it were out of sieves, but) as out of spouts, so that a butt of water falls down in a place; which, notwithstanding, is but a courteous injury in that hot climate far from land, and where otherwise fresh water cannot be provided. Then cutting the Line, they saw the face of that heaven which earth hideth from us, but therein only three stars of the first greatness, the rest few and small compared to our hemisphere; as if God, on purpose, had set up the best and biggest candles in that room wherein his civilest guests are entertained.

Sailing the south of Brazil, he afterwards passed the Magellan Straits (August 20th, 1578) and then entered Mare Pacificum, came to the southernmost land at the height of 55½ latitudes; thence directing his course northward, he pillaged many Spanish towns, and took rich prizes of high value in the kingdoms of Chili, Peru, and New Spain. Then, bending eastwards, he coasted China, and the Moluccas, where, by the king of Terrenate, a true gentleman Pagan, he was most honorably entertained. The king told them, they and he were all of one religion in this respect, — that they believed not in gods made of stocks and stones, as did the Portugals. He furnished them also with all necessaries that they wanted.

On January 9th following (1579), his ship, having a large wind and a smooth sea, ran aground on a dangerous shoal, and struck twice on it; knocking twice at the door of death, which, no doubt, had opened the third time. Here they stuck, from eight o'clock at night till four the next afternoon, having ground too much, and yet too little to land on; and water too much, and yet too little to sail in. Had God (who, as the wise man saith, "holdeth the winds in his fist," Prov. xxx. 4) but opened his little finger, and let out the smallest blast, they had undoubtedly been cast away; but there blew not any wind all the while. Then they, conceiving aright that the best way to lighten the ship was, first, to ease it of the burden of their sins by true repentance, humbled themselves, by fasting, under the hand of God. Afterwards they received the communion, dining on Christ in the sacrament, expecting no other than to sup with him in heaven. Then they cast out of their ship six great pieces of ordnance, threw overboard as much wealth as would break the heart of a miser to think on it, with much sugar, and packs of spices, making a caudle[1] of the sea round about. Then they betook themselves to their prayers, the best lever at such a dead lift indeed; and it pleased God, that the wind, formerly their mortal enemy, became their friend; which, changing from the starboard to the larboard of the ship, and rising by degrees, cleared them off to the sea again, — for which they returned unfeigned thanks to Almighty God.

1 merchants. 2 Cape Verde.

By the Cape of Good Hope and west of Africa, he returned safe into England, and (November 3rd, 1580) landed at Plymouth (being almost the first of those that made a thorough light through the world), having, in his whole voyage, though a curious searcher after the time, lost one day through the variation of several climates. He feasted the queen in his ship at Dartford, who knighted him for his service. Yet it grieved him not a little, that some prime courtiers refused the gold he offered them, as gotten by piracy. Some of them would have been loath to have been told, that they had aurum Tholosanum[2] in their own purses. Some think, that they did it to show that their envious pride was above their covetousness, who of set purpose did blur the fair copy of his performance, because they would not take pains to write after it.

I pass by his next West-Indian voyage (1585), wherein he took the cities of St. Jago, St. Domingo, Carthagena, and St. Augustine in Florida; as also his service performed in 1588, wherein he, with many others, helped to the waning of that half-moon,[3] which sought to govern all the motion of our sea. I haste to his last voyage.

Queen Elizabeth, in 1595, perceiving that the only way to make the Spaniard a cripple forever, was to cut his sinews of war in the West Indies, furnished Sir Francis Drake, and Sir John Hawkins, with six of her own ships, besides twenty-one ships and barks of their own providing, containing in all two thousand five hundred men and boys, for some service on America. But, alas! this voyage was marred before begun. For, so great preparations being too big for a cover, the king of Spain knew of it, and sent a caraval of adviso[1] to the West Indies; so that they had intelligence three weeks before the fleet set forth of England, either to fortify or remove their treasure; whereas, in other of Drake's voyages, not two of his own men knew whither he went; and managing such a design is like carrying a mine in war, — if it hath any vent, all is spoiled. Besides, Drake and Hawkins, being in joint commission, hindered each other. The latter took himself to be inferior rather in success than skill; and the action was unlike to prosper when neither would follow, and both could not handsomely go abreast. It vexed old Hawkins, that his counsel was not followed, in present sailing to America, but that they spent time in vain in assaulting the Canaries; and the grief that his advice was slighted, say some, was the cause of his death. Others impute it to the sorrow he took for the taking of his bark called "the Francis," which five Spanish frigates had intercepted. But when the same heart hath two mortal wounds given it together, it is hard to say which of them killeth.

Drake continued his course for Porto Rico; and, riding within the road, a shot from the Castle entered the steerage of the ship, took away the stool from under him as he sat at supper, wounded Sir Nicholas Clifford, and Brute Brown to death. "Ah, dear Brute!" said Drake, "I could grieve for thee, but now is no time for me to let down my spirits." And, indeed, a soldier's most proper bemoaning a friend's death in war, is in revenging it. And, sure, as if grief had made the English furious, they soon after fired five Spanish ships of two hundred tons apiece, in despite of the Castle.

America is not unfitly resembled to an hourglass, which hath a narrow neck of land (suppose it the hole where the sand passeth), betwixt the parts thereof, — Mexicana and Peruana. Now, the English had a design to march by land over this Isthmus, from Porto Rico to Panama, where the Spanish treasure was laid up. Sir Thomas Baskerville, general of the land-forces, undertook the service with seven hundred and fifty armed men. They marched through deep ways, the Spaniards much annoying them with shot out of the woods. One fort in the passage they assaulted in vain, and heard two others were built to stop them, besides Panama itself. They had so much of this breakfast, they thought they should surfeit of a dinner and supper of the same. No hope of conquest,

1 a warm mixed drink.
2 Spanish gold; here, bribes. 3 Spain.

1 messengership.

xcept with cloying the jaws of death, and hrusting men on the mouth of the cannon. Wherefore, fearing to find the proverb true, hat "gold may be bought too dear," they eturned to their ships. Drake afterwards red Nombre de Dios, and many other petty owns (whose treasure the Spaniards had onveyed away), burning the empty casks, when their precious liquor was run out before, and then prepared for their returning ome.

Great was the difference betwixt the Indian cities now, from what they were when Drake first haunted these coasts. At first, he Spaniards here were safe and secure, ounting their treasure sufficient to defend tself, the remoteness thereof being the greatst (almost only) resistance, and the fetching f it more than the fighting for it. Whilst he king of Spain guarded the head and heart f his dominions in Europe, he left his long egs in America open to blows; till, finding hem to smart, being beaten black and blue y the English, he learned to arm them at ast, fortifying the most important of them o make them impregnable.

Now began Sir Francis's discontent to eed upon him. He conceived that expectation, a merciless usurer, computing each day since his departure, exacted all interest nd return of honor and profit proportionable o his great preparations, and transcending is former achievements. He saw that all the ood which he had done in this voyage consisted in the evil he had done to the Spaards afar off, whereof he could present but mall visible fruits in England. These apprehensions, accompanying, if not causing, the disease of the flux, wrought his sudden death, January 28th, 1595. And sickness did not so much untie his clothes, as sorrow did rend at once the robe of his mortality asunder. He lived by the sea, died on it, and was buried in it. Thus an extempore performance (scarce heard to be begun before we hear it is ended!) comes off with better applause, or miscarries with less disgrace, than a long-studied and openly-premeditated action. Besides, we see how great spirits, having mounted to the highest pitch of performance, afterwards strain and break their credits in striving to go beyond it. Lastly, God oftentimes leaves the brightest men in an eclipse, to show that they do but borrow their luster from his reflexion. We will not justify all the actions of any man, though of a tamer profession than a sea-captain, in whom civility is often counted preciseness. For the main, we say that this our captain was a religious man towards God and his houses (generally sparing churches where he came), chaste in his life, just in his dealings, true of his word, and merciful to those that were under him, hating nothing so much as idleness: and therefore, lest his soul should rust in peace, at spare hours he brought fresh water to Plymouth. Careful he was for posterity (though men of his profession have as well an ebb of riot, as a float of fortune), and providently raised a worshipful family of his kindred. In a word: should those that speak against him fast till they fetch their bread where he did his, they would have a good stomach to eat it.

JEREMY TAYLOR (1613–1667)

Taylor became a preacher shortly after his graduation from Cambridge; was soon appointed chaplain to King Charles I; and after the Restoration was made a bishop. As a clergyman he was noted for his unswerving faith, his gentleness and diligence, and his eloquence. He wrote much prose. Best known of his writings are Holy Living, 1650, and Holy Dying, 1651.

Taylor is one of the prose stylists of the seventeenth century. His prose is clear and vigorous, scholarly in its references, emotional in its allusions and figures of speech, and always beautiful in cadence.

OF THE SLAVERY AND PAINS ETERNAL[1]

The slavery of the damned in hell is such, that all their senses, and powers of soul and body, are subject unto eternal pains and torments; with their touch, they are to serve the burning and never-consuming fire; with their taste, hunger and thirst; with their smell, stink; with their sight, those horrid and monstrous shapes which the devils shall assume; with their hearing, scorns and affronts; with their imagination, horror; with their will, loathsomeness and detestation; with their memory, despair; with their understanding, confusion; with such a multitude of other punishments, as they shall want eyes to weep for them.

1 From Contemplations of the State of Man, Book II, chapter 7.

Aelian[1] writes of Trizus, the tyrant, that he commanded his subjects not to speak together, and when they used signs, instead of words, he also forbade those; whereupon the afflicted people met in the market-place to at least weep for their misfortunes, but neither was that permitted: greater shall be the rigor in hell, where they shall neither be suffered to speak a word of comfort, nor move hand or foot, nor ease their hearts with weeping. Jeremias the prophet lamented with floods of tears, that Jerusalem, which was the queen of nations, should be made a slave and tributary: what tears are sufficient to lament the damnation of a poor soul who, from an heir and prince of the kingdom of heaven, hath made himself a slave to the devil, and those eternal punishments in hell, unto which he is to pay as many tributes as he hath senses, powers, and members.

As the slaves of the earth are whipped and punished by their masters, so the slaves of hell are tormented by the devils, who have power and dominion over them: children, as slaves, are whipped and chastised by their masters, so the tormentors, making the damned as their slaves, lay upon them a thousand afflictions, griefs, and miseries: every member of their body shall suffer greater pain and torment, than if it were torn from the body. If one cannot tell how to suffer a toothache, headache, or the pain of the cholic, what will it be when there shall not be any joint, or the least part of the body, which shall not cause him an intolerable pain? Not only the head, or teeth, but also the breasts, sides, shoulders, the back, the heart, and all the parts of the body, even to the very bones and marrow. Who can express the number and greatness of their torments, since all their powers and senses, soul and body, are to suffer in a most violent manner? Besides this, every sense from his particular object shall receive a particular punishment.

The eye shall not only be grieved with a scorching heat, but shall be tormented with monstrous and horrible figures: many are affrighted very much, passing through a churchyard, only for fear of seeing a fantasm; in what a fright will be a miserable damned soul, which shall see so many, and of so horrid shapes? Their sight also shall be tormented with beholding the punishment of their friends and kindred. Hegesippus[2] writes, that Alexander, the son of Hyrcannus, resolving to punish certain persons with exemplary rigor, caused eight hundred to be crucified; and whilst they were yet alive, caused their wives and children to be murdered before their eyes; that so they might die not once, but many deaths. This rigor shall not be wanting in hell, where fathers shall see their sons, and brothers their brothers, tormented. The torment of the eyes shall be also very great, in regard that those which have given other scandal, and made others fall into sin, shall see themselves, and those others, in that abyss of torments. To the sight of those dreadful apparitions shall be added the horror and fearful darkness of the place.

The darkness of Egypt was said to be horrible, because there the Egyptians beheld fearful figures and fantasms which terrified them. In the like manner, in that infernal darkness, the eyes shall be tormented with the monstrous figures of the wicked spirits, which shall appear much more dreadful, by reason of the obscurity and sadness of that eternal night.

The hearing shall not only be afflicted by an intolerable pain, caused by that ever burning and penetrating fire, but also with the fearful and amazing noises of thunders, howlings, clamors, groans, curses, and blasphemies. Sylla,[1] being dictator, caused six thousand persons to be enclosed in the circus; and then appointing the senate to meet in a temple close by, where he intended to speak unto them about his own affairs, to strike the greater terror into them, and make them know he was their master, he gave order, that, so soon as he began his oration, the soldiers should kill this multitude of people, which was effected: upon which were heard such lamentations, outcries, groans, clashing of armor, and blows of those merciless homicides, that the senators could not hear a word, but stood amazed with terror of so horrid a fact. What shall be the harmony of hell, where the ears shall be deafened with the cries and complaints of the damned? What confusion and horror shall it breed, to hear all lament, all complain, all curse and blaspheme, through the bitterness of the torments which they suffer?

But the damned shall principally be affrighted, and shall quake to hear the thunderclap of the wrath of God, which shall continually resound in their ears! "Whereas the just," saith the royal prophet, "shall be in the eternal memory of God, and shall not fear the dreadful crack of his wrath."

1 A Roman writer of anecdotes, second century A.D.
2 Early historian of the Christian Church, second century A.D.

1 Sulla, dictator of Rome in 82 B.C.

The smell shall also be tormented with a most pentilential stink. Horrible was that torment used by Mezentius,[1] to tie a living body to a dead, and there to leave them, until the infection and putrefied exhalations of the dead had killed the living. What can be more abominable, than for a living man to have his mouth laid close to that of a dead one, full of grubs and worms, where the living must receive all those pestilential vapors, breathed forth from a corrupt carcass, and suffer such loathsomeness and abominable stink? But what is this in respect of hell, when each body of the damned is more loathsome and unsavory than a million of dead dogs, and all those pressed and crowded together in so strait a compass? Bonaventure[2] goes so far as to say, that if one only of the damned were brought into this world, it were sufficient to infect the whole earth. Neither shall the devils send forth a better smell; for although they are spirits, yet those fiery bodies, unto which they are fastened and confined, shall be of a more pestilential savor.

Hell is the world's sink, and the receptacle of all the filth in this great frame, and withal a deep dungeon, where the air hath no access. How great must the stink and infection needs be of so many corruptions heaped one upon another! and how insufferable the smell of that infernal brimstone, mixed with so many corrupted matters! O gulf of horror! O infernal grave! without vent or breathing place! Eternal grave of such as die continually and cannot die, with what abominable filth art thou not filled!

What shall I then say of the tongue, which is the instrument of so many ways of sinning, flattery, lying, murmuring, and calumniating, gluttony, and drunkenness. Who can express that bitterness, which the damned shall suffer, greater than that of aloes or wormwood? The Scripture tells us, the gall of dragons shall be their wine; and they shall taste the poison of asps for all eternity, unto which shall be joined an intolerable thirst, and doglike hunger: conformable to which David said, "they shall suffer hunger, as dogs." Famine is the most pressing of all necessities, and most deformed of all evils; plagues and wars are happinesses in respect of it. If, then, a famine of eight days be the worst of temporal evils, what shall that famine be which is eternal? Let our epicures hear what the Son of God prophesies: "Wo unto you who are full;" for you shall be a hungered, and with such a hunger as shall be eternal. Hunger in this life doth bring men to such extremity, that not only they come to desire to eat dogs, cats, rats, and mice, but also mothers come to eat their own children, and men the flesh of their own arms, as it fell out to Zeno[1] the emperor. If hunger be so terrible a mischief in this life, how will it afflict the damned in the other! Without all doubt, the damned would rather tear themselves in pieces than suffer it; all the most horrible famines, that Scripture histories propose unto us, are but weak pictures to that which the damned suffer in this unfortunate residence of eternal miseries; neither shall thirst torment them less.

The sense of touching, as it is the most extended sense of all the rest, so it shall be the most tormented in that burning fire; all the torments which the Scripture doth exhibit to us, as prepared for the reprobate, seem to fall upon this only sense: "They shall pass," saith Job, "from extremity of cold to intolerable heats," whole floods of fire and brimstone, which shower down upon those unfortunate wretches; all this belongs unto the sense of touching. We are amazed to think of the inhumanity of Phalaris,[2] who roasted men alive in his brazen bull: this was a joy in respect of that fire of hell, which penetrates the very entrails of the body without consuming them. The burning of a finger only does cause so great a torment, that it is insufferable; but far greater were it to burn the whole arm; and far greater were it, besides the arms, to burn the legs; and far more violent torment would it be to burn the whole body. This torment is so great that it cannot be expressed, since it comprises as many torments as the body of man hath joints, sinews, arteries, etc., and especially being caused by that penetrating and real fire, of which this temporal fire is but a painted fire in respect of that in hell.

Amongst all the torments which human justice hath invented for the punishment of crimes, there is none held more rigorous than that of fire, by reason of the great activity of that element. What shall the heat of that fire be, which shall be the executioner of the justice of the God of vengeance! whose zeal

1 A mythical Etruscan king, whose cruelties were proverbial.

2 Noted Italian theologian, 1221–74, who was later canonized.

1 Emperor of the East, fifth century A.D.

2 A cruel tyrant of Sicily in the sixth century B.C., the supposed author of the "epistles of Phalaris," which were shown by Bentley in 1697 to be spurious.

shall be inflamed against the wicked, and shall kindle the fire, which shall eternally burn in the extremities of hell! Such are the torments and miseries of hell, that if all the trees in the world were put in one heap, and set on fire, I would rather burn there till the day of judgment, than suffer, only for the space of one hour, that fire of hell. What a miserable unhappiness will it be to burn in those flames of hell, not only for an hour, but till the day of judgment! yea, even for all eternity, and world without end! Who would not esteem it a hideous torment, if he were to be burnt alive a hundred times, and his torment was to last every time for the space of an hour, with what compassionate eyes would all the world look upon such a miserable wretch! Nevertheless, without all doubt, any of the damned in hell would receive this as a great happiness to end his torments with those hundred times burning: for what comparison is there betwixt a hundred hours burning, with some space of time betwixt every hour, and to burn a hundred years of continual torment! And what comparison will there be betwixt burning for a hundred years' space, and to be burning without interruption, as long as God is God!

Who can express the strange and horrible confusion which shall inhabit the appetite of these wretched creatures? If all the disorders of man's life spring from his passions, what disorder must those miserable souls needs feel in that part, what convulsions, what rage, what fury? Alas! that noble passion, love, the queen of all the rest, the sun of life, that passion which might have made them happy for ever, if they had turned it towards God; that amiable object being razed out of them, the perpetual aversion they have to love shall eternally afflict them, the passion of hatred shall be outrageous in the damned, whence shall proceed their continual blasphemies against God, and the perpetual curses and imprecations which they shall make against the creatures; and if they have any desires, they shall be desirous to see all the world partaker of their pains; their aversion from all good shall be as much tormenting, as in itself it is execrable: of joy there must no mention be made in that place of dolor; but contrariwise of incredible sadness, which shall oppress them without any consolation. The heat of anger shall redouble the heat of their flames; hope banished from their hearts shall leave the place void to despair, which shall be one of their fiercest tormentors. And though their bodies be within hell's bosom, yet shall they bear about them another hell in their own bosoms.

Consider, now, my soul, whether thou art able to live in this devouring fire, whether thou wilt make choice of thy habitation in eternal flames. This fire is prepared for the devil and his angels; consider whether thou wilt enter in to this cursed crew, and take part of the dregs of their chalice. There is no medium; either thou must forsake thy sins, or else thou must be given up a prey to this eternal torment. I doubt not, thou wilt make a happy choice; and, to escape so dangerous a gulf, cast thy self into the arms of Divine mercy, which only admits the penitent, and say thus: O great God, who art a consuming fire, and makest the fire of thy Divine justice issue from amongst the thorns, to burn the tallest cedars in Lebanon; let the fire, which walks before thee as executioner of justice, never depart from our memory; may it be unto us a pillar of light in the darkness of our errors, a lamp unto our feet, and a lantern to our ways, whereby we may discover this infernal gulf, which is ready to swallow us up. Thou, O Lord, who didst deliver the three children out of the Babylonian furnace, preserve us from those eternal flames, and exempt us from the burning ones of thy wrath; place us in the light and bright one of thy love, where, like Pyratides[1] and sacred Salamanders,[2] we shall live happy, without pain and torment, singing honor, praise, and benediction unto thee, our God, for ever and ever. Amen.

1 children of fire.

2 The Salamander was supposed, erroneously, to be able to live in fire. In certain mediæval cults a soul that could endure fire was called a Salamander.

ABRAHAM COWLEY (1618–1667)

Cowley is remembered for his Pindaric odes, his light lyrics, especially those after the manner of the Greek poet Anacreon, and his prose essays. Shortly after his graduation from Cambridge, he joined the Royalist side in the Civil War, spending a dozen years in France during the Commonwealth in the employ of the Queen. At the Restoration he received as a reward a small country estate, where he spent the remainder of his life. Although an avowed disciple of Spenser, much of Cowley's verse is typical of the century in its metaphysical character, — often sparkling, but ometimes forced. During his life he enjoyed a high reputation as a writer and as a scholar. Among his honors was the presidency of the Royal Society. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, near his master, Spenser.

OF MYSELF

It is a hard and nice [1] subject for a man to write of himself; it grates his own heart to say anything of disparagement and the reader's ears to hear anything of praise for him. There is no danger from me of offending him in this kind; neither my mind, nor my body, nor my fortune allow me any materials for that vanity. It is sufficient for my own contentment that they have preserved me from being scandalous, or remarkable on the defective side. But besides that, I shall here speak of myself only in relation to the subject of these precedent discourses, and shall be likelier thereby to fall into the contempt than rise up to the estimation of most people.

As far as my memory can return back into my past life, before I knew or was capable of guessing what the world, or glories, or business of it were, the natural affections of my soul gave a secret bent of aversion from them, as some plants are said to turn away from others, by an antipathy imperceptible to themselves and inscrutable to man's understanding. Even when I was a very young boy at school, instead of running about on holidays, and playing with my fellows, I was wont to steal from them and walk into the fields, either alone with a book, or with some one companion, if I could find any of the same temper. I was then, too, so much an enemy to constraint, that my masters could never prevail on me, by any persuasions or encouragements, to learn without book the common rules of grammar, in which they dispensed with me alone, because they found I made a shift to do the usual exercises out of my own reading and observation. That I was then of the same mind as I am now — which, I confess, I wonder at myself — may appear at the latter end of an ode which I made when I was but thirteen years old, and which was then printed with many other verses. The beginning of it is boyish; but of this part which I here set down, if a very little were corrected, I should hardly now be much ashamed.

9

This only grant me, that my means may lie
Too low for envy, for contempt too high.
Some honor I would have,
Not from great deeds, but good alone.
Th' unknown are better than ill-known.
Rumor can ope the grave;
Acquaintance I would have; but when 't depends
Not on the number, but the choice of friends.

10

Books should, not business, entertain the light,
And sleep, as undisturbed as death, the night.
My house a cottage, more
Than palace, and should fitting be
For all my use, no luxury.
My garden painted o'er
With Nature's hand, not Art's; and pleasures yield,
Horace might envy in his Sabine [1] field.

11

Thus would I double my life's fading space,
For he that runs it well, twice runs his race.
And in this true delight,
These unbought sports, that happy state,
I would not fear nor wish my fate,
But boldly say each night,
To-morrow let my sun his beams display,
Or in clouds hide them; I have lived to-day.

You may see by it I was even then acquainted with the poets, (for the conclusion is taken out of Horace); and perhaps it was the immature and immoderate love of them which stamped first, or rather engraved, the characters in me. They were like letters cut into the bark of a young tree, which, with the tree, still grow proportionably. But how this love came to be produced in me so early is a hard question. I believe I can tell the particular little chance that filled my head first with such chimes of verse, as have never since left ringing there; for I remember when I began to read, and take some pleasure in it, there was wont to lie in my mother's parlor — I know not by what accident, for she herself never in her life read any book but of devotion — but there was wont to lie Spenser's works; this I happened to fall upon, and was infinitely delighted with the stories of the knights, and giants, and monsters, and brave houses, which I found everywhere there — though my understanding had little to do with all this — and by degrees, with the tinkling of the rhyme, and dance of the numbers; so that I think I had read him all over before I was twelve years old, and was 1 delicate.

1 The country place of the Roman poet Horace, given to him, about 33 B.C., by his patron Mæcenas.

thus made a poet as immediately as a child is made an eunuch. With these affections of mind, and my heart wholly set upon letters, I went to the university, but was soon torn from thence by that violent public storm [1] which would suffer nothing to stand where it did, but rooted up every plant, even from the princely cedars, to me, the hyssop.[2] Yet I had as good fortune as could have befallen me in such a tempest; for I was cast by it into the family of one [3] of the best persons, and into the court of one of the best princesses [4] of the world. Now, though I was here engaged in ways most contrary to the original design of my life, that is, into much company, and no small business, and into a daily sight of greatness, both militant and triumphant — for that was the state then of the English and the French courts — yet all this was so far from altering my opinion, that it only added the confirmation of reason to that which was before but natural inclination. I saw plainly all the paint of that kind of life, the nearer I came to it; and that beauty which I did not fall in love with, when, for aught I knew, it was real, was not like to bewitch or entice me when I saw it was adulterate. I met with several great persons, whom I liked very well, but could not perceive that any part of their greatness was to be liked or desired, no more than I would be glad or content to be in a storm, though I saw many ships which rid safely and bravely in it. A storm would not agree with my stomach, if it did with my courage. Though I was in a crowd of as good company as could be found anywhere, though I was in business of great and honorable trust, though I eat at the best table, and enjoyed the best conveniences for present subsistence that ought to be desired by a man of my condition, in banishment and public distresses, yet I could not abstain from renewing my old school-boy's wish in a copy of verses to the same effect:

Well then. I now do plainly see
This busy world and I shall ne'er agree, etc.

And I never then proposed to myself any other advantage from his majesty's happy restoration, but the getting into some moderately convenient retreat in the country, which I thought in that case I might easily have compassed, as well as some others, who, with no greater probabilities or pretences, have arrived to extraordinary fortunes. But I had before written a shrewd prophecy against myself, and I think Apollo inspired me in the truth, though not in the elegance of it:

Thou neither great at court, nor in the war,
Nor at the Exchange shalt be, nor at the wrangling bar;
Content thyself with the small barren praise
Which thy neglected verse does raise, etc.

However, by the failing of the forces which I had expected, I did not quit the design which I had resolved on; I cast myself into it a corpus perditum,[1] without making capitulations, or taking counsel of fortune. But God laughs at a man who says to his soul, Take thy ease. I met presently not only with many little incumbrances and impediments, but with so much sickness — a new misfortune to me — as would have spoiled the happiness of an emperor as well as mine. Yet I do neither repent nor alter my course: Non ego perfidum dixi sacramentum.[2] Nothing shall separate me from a mistress which I have loved so long, and have now at last married, though she neither has brought me a rich portion, nor lived yet so quietly with me as I hoped from her.

— Nec vos dulcissima mundi
Nomina, vos musæ, libertas, otia, libri,
Hortique, sylvæque, anima remanente relinquam.

Nor by me e'er shall you,
You of all names the sweetest and the best,
You muses, books, and liberty, and rest;
You gardens, fields, and woods forsaken be,
As long as life itself forsakes not me.[3]

1 The civil war of 1642.

2 A small plant; the comparison here between the cedar and the hyssop is from 1 Kings IV, 33.

3 William Hervey, whose brother John (later Earl of St. Albans) was the confidant of Charles I's queen, Henrietta Maria. On the death of William Hervey, Cowley wrote a sincere elegy, which may be found in Palgrave's Golden Treasury.

4 Queen Henrietta Maria, whose secretary Cowley was after her flight to France.

ANACREONTICS

1. DRINKING

The thirsty earth soaks up the rain,
And drinks and gapes for drink again;
The plants suck in the earth, and are
With constant drinking fresh and fair;
The sea itself (which one would think Should have but little need of drink)
Drinks twice ten thousand rivers up,
So filled that they o'erflow the cup.

1 lost body. 2 I have not sworn a false oath.

3 Cowley concludes the essay with two translations from Martial.

The busy Sun (and one would guess By's drunken fiery face no less)
Drinks up the sea, and when he's done,
The Moon and Stars drink up the Sun:
They drink and dance by their own light,
They drink and revel all the night:
Nothing in Nature's sober found,
But an eternal health goes round.
Fill up the bowl, then, fill it high,
Fill all the glasses there — for why
Should every creature drink but I?
Why, man of morals, tell me why?

2. THE EPICURE

Underneath this myrtle shade,
On flowery beds supinely laid,
With odorous oils my head o'erflowing,
And around it roses growing,
What should I do but drink away
The heat and troubles of the day?
In this more than kingly state
Love himself on me shall wait.
Fill to me, Love! nay, fill it up!
And mingled cast into the cup
Wit and mirth and noble fires,
Vigorous health and gay desires.
The wheel of life no less will stay
In a smooth than rugged way:
Since it equally doth flee,
Let the motion pleasant be.
Why do we precious ointments shower? —
Nobler wines why do we pour?
Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead?
Nothing they but dust can show,
Of bones that hasten to be so.
Crown me with roses while I live,
Now your wines and ointments give;
After death I nothing crave,
Let me alive my pleasures have:
All are Stoics in the grave.

THE WISH

Well then! I now do plainly see
This busy world and I shall ne'er agree.[1]
The very honey of all earthly joy
Does of all meats the soonest cloy;
And they, methinks, deserve my pity
Who for it can endure the stings,
The crowd and buzz and murmurings,
Of this great hive, the city.

Ah, yet, ere I descend to the grave
May I a small house and large garden have;
And a few friends, and many books, both true,
Both wise, and both delightful too!
And since love ne'er will from me flee,
A Mistress moderately fair,
And good as guardian angels are,
Only beloved and loving me.

O fountains! when in you shall I
Myself eased of unpeaceful thoughts espy?
O fields! O woods! when, when shall I be made
The happy tenant of your shade?
Here's the spring-head of Pleasure's flood;
Here's wealthy Nature's treasury,
Where all the riches lie that she
Has coined and stamped for good.

Pride and ambition here
Only in far-fetched metaphors appear;
Here nought but winds can hurtful murmurs scatter,
And nought but Echo flatter.
The gods, when they descended, hither
From heaven did always choose their way;
And therefore we may boldly say
That 'tis the way too thither.

How happy here should I
And one dear She live, and embracing die!
She who is all the world, and can exclude
In deserts solitude.
I should have then this only fear:
Lest men, when they my pleasures see,
Should hither throng to live like me,
And so make a city here.

1 Cf. Cowley's essay, Of Myself.

THE THIEF

Thou robbest my days of business and delights,
Of sleep thou robbest my nights;
Ah, lovely thief, what wilt thou do?
What, rob me of Heaven too?
Thou even my prayers dost steal from me,
And I, with wild idolatry,
Begin to God, and end them all to thee.

Is it a sin to love, that it should thus
Like an ill conscience, torture us?
Whate'er I do, where e'er I go,
(None guiltless e'er was haunted so)
Still, still, methinks thy face I view,
And still thy shape does me pursue,
As if not you me, but I had murdered you.

From books I strive some remedy to take,
  But thy name all the letters make;
  Whate'er 'tis writ, I find that there,
  Like points and commas everywhere.
  Me blest for this let no man hold;
  For I, as Midas did of old,
Perish by turning everything to gold.

What do I seek, alas, or why do I
  Attempt in vain from thee to fly?
  For making thee my deity
  I give thee then ubiquity.
  My pains resemble hell in this:
  The divine presence there too is,
But to torment men, not to give them bliss.

A SUPPLICATION

  Awake, awake, my Lyre!
And tell thy silent master's humble tale
  In sounds that may prevail;
  Sounds that gentle thoughts inspire:
  Though so exalted she
  And I so lowly be
Tell her, such different notes make all thy harmony.

  Hark, how the strings awake!
And, though the moving hand approach not near,
  Themselves with awful fear
  A kind of numerous[1] trembling make.
  Now all thy forces try;
  Now all thy charms apply;
Revenge upon her ear the conquests of her eye.

  Weak Lyre! thy virtue sure
Is useless here, since thou art only found
  To cure, but not to wound,
  And she to wound, but not to cure.
  Too weak too, wilt thou prove
  My passion to remove;
Physic to other ills, thou'rt nourishment to Love.

  Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre!
For thou canst never tell my humble tale
  In sounds that will prevail,
  Nor gentle thoughts in her inspire;
  All thy vain mirth lay by,
  Bid thy strings silent lie,
Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre, and let thy master die.

1 metrical.

JOHN MILTON (1608–1674)

John Milton was born in London December 9, 1608. His father was a scrivener, or drawer of legal documents, who had broken off relations with his family, which was Roman Catholic, in order to follow the Puritan faith. He was a man of culture, and a musician of some note. John Milton was sent to Saint Paul's School and later to Christ's College, Cambridge, where he made his mark as a scholar, though he found the academic routine distasteful. His father had purchased a small estate in the country, at Horton, where Milton spent some five years after his departure from Cambridge, 1632 to 1637, reading the classics and writing poetry. In 1638 he went to Italy. The Italian poetry of the early Renaissance which had been such an inspiration to Chaucer had become conventional and stereotyped, practiced by poets who associated themselves in circles or academies, for purposes of literary competition. Milton enjoyed the elegance and culture which he found in Italy, but he recognized the lack of freedom of thought under the tyranny of Spain and the Church. When he learned that his own countrymen were engaged in a struggle to preserve their own liberties against Charles I, he "thought it shame" to be absent, and returned to England in 1639.

For the next eighteen years Milton was absorbed in the political movements of the time. He was a zealous opponent of the Established Church and the King. He became Latin Secretary to the Council of State and wrote much in defense of the revolution and execution of the King. It was in consequence of these labors that his eyesight, which had always been weak, failed totally. Before this, in 1643, Milton had married Mary Powell, daughter of a Cavalier family. She left him shortly after the marriage, but returned to him in 1645, and bore him three daughters. After her death he married Katharine Woodcock in 1656, who died a year later. His third wife was Elizabeth Minshull. After the restoration of Charles II, Milton was in some personal danger and had to go into hiding, but he was relieved by the act of oblivion and resumed work on his greater poems, which occupied him until shortly before his death in 1674.

Milton was born when the mood of appreciation of the experience of the present world which was characteristic of the Renaissance was yielding to that interest in the other world which was the essence of Puritanism. Nevertheless, the London which he knew as a boy was the London of Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. The letters and elegies which he wrote in Latin contain ample evidence of his delight in music, the stage, and in the beauty of women. Yet this urge of the Renaissance was restrained by a Puritan sense of the meaning of life. He early felt himself called to be a poet, "to leave something so written to aftertimes as they should not willingly let it die." How seriously he took this vocation is shown by his sonnet On Reaching the Age of Twenty-Three. His first considerable poem was the Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity (1629). There followed the two poems, L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, inspired by his early residence at Horton. While there, at the instance of his friend Henry Lawes, the chief musical composer of the day, he wrote the pastoral play, Comus, and just before his departure for Italy, the elegy on the death of a college friend, which he called Lycidas. When Milton returned from Italy, he found Parliament entering on the long contest with Charles I which culminated in the Civil War. The first phase of the struggle which interested him was the issue of freedom of worship from the authority of the Established Church. Later he became concerned with the problem of individual liberty in relation to the necessary control of the State. His desertion by his first wife led him to write several pamphlets on the right of divorce, and the magnificent plea for freedom of speech called Areopagitica. In opposition to the doctrine of divine right, he defended the right of the people to put to death a king who oppressed them, in his Tenure of Kings and Magistrates; and against the hostile criticism of scholars and publicists on the Continent he wrote in Latin his First Defense of the People of England, followed by the Second Defense. All this, however, was apart from the serious vocation as poet. This he resumed when his blindness gave him some release from the cares of office. Paradise Lost was published in 1663. A kindred theme, the story of Christ's temptation, he dealt with in Paradise Regained. His last poem was a tragedy on the Greek model, Samson Agonistes, based on the story of Samson's destruction of the Philistine temple of Dagon.

Milton's poetry is edited by David Masson in three volumes. A single-volume edition is that edited by W. V. Moody (Cambridge Poets). Milton's prose works are collected in the Bohn Library. Annotated editions of the Areopagitica are those by J. W. Hales (Clarendon Press) and Laura E. Lockwood in the Riverside Literature Series.

The chief life of Milton is that by David Masson in seven volumes. Single-volume lives are those by Mark Pattison in the English Men of Letters Series and by Richard Garnett in the Great Writers Series. The famous Essay on Milton by Lord Macaulay appears on page 1002 of the present work. Other essays are those by W. Bagehot, J. R. Lowell, G. E. Woodbury, etc. An important study is Denis Saurat's Milton, Man and Thinker. James Holly Hanford's A Milton Handbook is useful.

L'ALLEGRO AND IL PENSEROSO

1631–1633

These poems were written at Horton, either during a vacation in 1631, or after Milton had taken up his residence there in July, 1632. They are companion pieces, The Joyous Man and The Thoughtful Man, written to emphasize two attitudes toward life, the cheerful and social, and the thoughtful and solitary. It is certain that Milton in his own experience comprehended both the frank delight in the sensations of the present, which was of the Renaissance; and the serious contemplation of man's place in the world, which was enforced by Puritanism. The poems are examples of Milton's classic sense of form, the central theme in each case strictly controlling the detail abundantly offered in its illustration. They are classic in another respect, in the choice of language fitted to the thought with a perfection that is beyond praise.

L'ALLEGRO

Hence, loathèd Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born,
In Stygian cave forlorn,
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy,
Find out some uncouth [1] cell,
Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings,
And the night-raven sings;
There under ebon shades, and low-browed rocks,
As ragged [1] as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert [2] ever dwell.
But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
In heaven ycleped Euphrosyne,
And by men, heart-easing Mirth,
Whom lovely Venus at a birth
With two sister Graces more
To ivy-crownèd Bacchus bore;
Or whether (as some sager sing)
The frolic Wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a-Maying,
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses washed in dew.
Filled her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair.
Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful Jollity,
Quips, and Cranks,[3] and wanton Wiles,
Nods, and Becks, and wreathèd Smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;

1 unknown.

1 rugged.
2 Known to the Homeric Greeks as a land of mist and darkness.
3 windings.

Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides.
Come, and trip it as ye go,
On the light fantastic toe;
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain Nymph, sweet Liberty;
And, if I give thee honor due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreproved [1] pleasures free;
To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing startle the dull night,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled Dawn doth rise;
Then to come, in spite of sorrow,[2]
And at my window bid good-morrow,
Through the sweet-briar or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine;
While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of Darkness thin;
And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dames before:
Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumbering Morn,
From the side of some hoar [3] hill,
Through the high wood echoing shrill:
Sometime walking, not unseen,
By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
Right against the eastern gate,
Where the great Sun begins his state,[4]
Robed in flames and amber light,
The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
While the ploughman, near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scythe,
And every shepherd tells his tale [5]
Under the hawthorn in the dale.
Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
Whilst the landscape round it measures:
Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray;
Mountains on whose barren breast
The laboring clouds do often rest;
Meadows trim with daisies pied;
Shallow brooks, and rivers wide.
Towers and battlements it sees
Bosomed high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some Beauty lies,
The Cynosure [6] of neighboring eyes.
Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
From betwixt two aged oaks,
Where Corydon and Thyrsis met
Are at their savory dinner set
Of herbs and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses;
And then in haste her bower she leaves,
With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;
Or, if the earlier season lead,
To the tanned haycock in the mead.
Sometimes with secure [1] delight
The upland hamlets will invite,
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks [2] sound
To many a youth and many a maid
Dancing in the chequered shade;
And young and old come forth to play
On a sunshine holiday,
Till the livelong daylight fail:
Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab [3] the junkets eat:
She was pinched and pulled, she said;
And he, by Friar's [4] lantern led,
Tells how the drudging Goblin sweat
To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath threshed the corn
That ten day-laborers could not end;
Then lies him down, the lubber fiend,[5]
And, stretched out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength,
And crop-full out of doors he flings,
Ere the first cock his matin rings.
Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lulled asleep.
Towered cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men,
Where throngs of Knights and Barons bold,
In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold,
With store of Ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit or arms, while both contend
To win her grace whom all commend.
There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe, with taper clear,
And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
With mask and antique pageantry;
Such sights as youthful Poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream.
Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock [6] be on,

1 innocent. 2 in order to spite sorrow.
3 white with frost in autumn, the hunting season.
4 royal progress. 5 counts his flock.
6 In astronomy, the constellation of the Lesser Bear, containing the Pole Star, by which the Tyrian sailors steered their course.

1 carefree. 2 early type of fiddle.
3 The fairy Mab concerned herself with servant girls either as their benevolent patroness or evil genius.
4 Friar Rush, sometimes called Jack-a-lantern, and Robin Good-fellow performed similar offices toward farm-laborers.
5 Lob-lie-by-the-fire.
6 Implying comedy. Comic actors wore the soccus, a low slipper. Tragic actors wore the cothurnus, a high boot, or buskin.

Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.
And ever, against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
In notes with many a winding bout[1]
Of linkèd sweetness long drawn out
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony;
That Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber on a bed
Of heaped Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto to have quite set free
His half-regained Eurydice.
These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

IL PENSEROSO

Hence, vain deluding Joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred!
How little you bested,[2]
Or fill the fixèd mind with all your toys!
Dwell in some idle brain,
And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sunbeams,
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners[3] of Morpheus' train.
But, hail! thou Goddess sage and holy!
Hail, divinest Melancholy!
Whose saintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight,
And therefore to our weaker view
O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;
Black, but such as in esteem
Prince Memnon's sister might beseem,[4]
Or that starred Ethiop Queen[5] that strove
To set her beauty's praise above
The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended.
Yet thou art higher far descended:
Thee bright-haired Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore;
His daughter she; in Saturn's reign
Such mixture was not held a stain.

1 turn, or involution. 2 benefit.
3 Queen Elizabeth's body guards, noblemen picked for their wealth and personal beauty, were known as her "pensioners."
4 Prince Memnon was of traditional beauty. The suggestion is that this is also an attribute of his sister, although no such person exists in legend.
5 Cassiopeia.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her, and in secret shades
Of woody Ida's[1] inmost grove,
Whilst yet there was no fear of Jove.
Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestic train,
And sable stole of cypress lawn
Over thy decent[2] shoulders drawn.
Come; but keep thy wonted state,
With even step, and musing gait,
And looks commercing with the skies,
Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes:
There, held in holy passion still,
Forget thyself to marble, till
With a sad[3] leaden downward cast
Thou fix them on the earth as fast.
And join with thee calm Peace and Quiet,
Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
And hears the Muses in a ring
Aye round about Jove's altar sing;
And add to these retirèd Leisure,
That in trim gardens takes his pleasure;
But, first and chiefest, with thee bring
Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheelèd throne,
The Cherub Contemplation;
And the mute Silence hist along,[4]
'Less Philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke[5]
Gently o'er the accustomed oak.
Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, Chauntress, oft the woods among
I woo, to hear thy even-song;
And, missing thee, I walk unseen[6]
On the dry smooth-shaven green,
To behold the wandering Moon,
Riding near her highest noon,
Like one that had been led astray
Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
And oft, as if her head she bowed,
Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-watered shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar;
Or, if the air will not permit,
Some still removèd place will fit,

1 Mount Ida, in Crete, the home of the Muses, where the infant Jove was nurtured.
2 comely. 3 sober.
4 bring along with finger on lip, saying hist!
5 Mythology attributes the dragon team not to the moon but to Ceres.
6 Supposedly, the nightingale does not sing after the grass is mown; hence, "missing thee."

Where glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom,
Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the Bellman's drowsy charm
To bless the doors from nightly harm.
Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft outwatch the Bear,[1]
With thrice-great Hermes,[2] or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook;
And of those demons that are found
In fire, air, flood, or underground,
Whose power hath a true consent
With planet or with element.
Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
In sceptred pall come sweeping by,
Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,[3]
Or the tale of Troy divine,
Or what (though rare) of later age
Ennobled hath the buskined[4] stage.
But, O sad Virgin! that thy power
Might raise Musæus[5] from his bower;
Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
And made Hell grant what Love did seek;
Or call up him that left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold,[6]
Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
And who had Canacè to wife,
That owned the virtuous[7] ring and glass,
And of the wondrous horse of brass
On which the Tartar King did ride;
And if aught else great Bards beside
In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
Of turneys, and of trophies hung,
Of forests, and enchantments drear,
Where more is meant than meets the ear.
Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited[8] Morn appear,
Not tricked and frounced, as she was wont
With the Attic boy[9] to hunt,
But kerchieft in a comely cloud,
While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or ushered with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute-drops from off the eaves.
And, when the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, Goddess, bring
To archèd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown, that Sylvan[1] loves,
Of pine, or monumental oak,
Where the rude axe with heavèd stroke
Was never heard the Nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallowed haunt.
There, in close covert, by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from Day's garish eye,
While the bee with honeyed thigh,
That at her flowery work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy-feathered Sleep.
And let some strange mysterious dream
Wave at his wings, in airy stream
Of lively portraiture displayed,
Softly on my eyelids laid.
And as I wake, sweet music breathe
Above, about, or underneath,
Sent by some Spirit to mortals good,
Or the unseen Genius of the wood.
But let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,[2]
And love the high embowèd roof,
With antique pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light.
There let the pealing organ blow,
To the full voiced Quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies,
And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.
And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that Heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.
These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
And I with thee will choose to live.

1 Watch until dawn, as the constellation of the Bear does not set.
2 Hermes Trismegistus, a mythical philosopher and magician. During the middle ages his name was used as a signature to various books on mysticism and magic.
3 The Seven against Thebes, of Æschylus, the Œdipus Tyrannus and Antigone of Sophocles, the Electra, and the Iphigenia of Euripides, deal with these subjects.
4 Cf. L'Allegro, line 132.
5 Like Orpheus, a mythical Greek poet.
6 Chaucer's Squire's Tale, in which Camball, Algarsife, and Canace are personages.
7 with magic power. 8 soberly dressed.
9 Cephalus.

LYCIDAS

1637

L'Allegro and Il Penseroso mark the beginning of the period of quiet enjoyment and study which made up Milton's life at Horton. Lyci-

1 Sylvanus, the god of woods. 2 enclosure.

das represents the deepening seriousness of its close. The occasion of the poem was the death of Edward King, a fellow student of Milton's at Cambridge, by drowning in the Irish Sea. It was a contribution to a memorial volume made up by his friends in 1637. It is in a form which was much in fashion among poets of the Renaissance — that of the pastoral elegy. Historically this form goes back to Theocritus and the Greek poets of Alexandria, who made the rude songs of shepherds and goatherds, sung in competition for a prize, in lamentation for disappointment in love or as a dirge over a dead comrade, the conventional basis for more artificial compositions. Spenser had given examples of various kinds of pastoral poetry in his Shepherd's Calendar. Now Milton adopted the elegy as the expression of grief for a young and promising friend, who as a clergyman might not unfittingly be described as a shepherd. Like Spenser, Milton introduced into his poem certain reflections on matters of current interest, particularly the arrogance of the Established church which was soon to lead to civil war between Parliament and the King. Although Lycidas follows a model inherited from classical literature, it is much less classical in style than the preceding poems — less restrained and chiselled, more emotional, decorated, eloquent, approaching the sublime. Especially in lines 155–163 in which he makes use of the romantic appeal of remote places he anticipates the rhetorical splendor of the great passages in Paradise Lost.

Yet once more, O ye Laurels, and once more,
Ye Myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forced fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear
Compels me to disturb your season due;
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear.
Begin, then, Sisters of the sacred well [1]
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring;
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain and coy excuse:
So may some gentle Muse [2]
With lucky [1] words favour my destined urn,
And as he passes turn,
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud!
For we were nursed upon the self-same hill,
Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill;
Together both, ere the high lawns appeared
Under the opening eyelids of the Morn,
We drove a-field, and both together heard
What time the grey-fly winds her sultry horn,
Battening our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
Oft till the star that rose at evening bright
Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.
Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute;
Tempered [2] to the oaten flute
Rough Satyrs danced, and Fauns with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long;
And old Damœtas [3] loved to hear our song.
But, oh! the heavy change, now thou art gone,
Now thou art gone and never must return!
Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes, mourn.
The willows, and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
As killing as the canker to the rose,
Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear,
When first the white-thorn blows;
Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.
Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep
Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?
For neither were ye playing on the steep [4]
Where your old Bards, the famous Druids, lie,
Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,

1 The nine muses of Greek mythology, to whom the fountain of Aganippe, on Mt. Helicon, where there was also an altar dedicated to Jove, was sacred. Making the source of the spring from beneath the altar was original with Milton.

2 poet.

1 auspicious. 2 in tune with.

3 Perhaps a reference to William Chappell, Milton's tutor at Cambridge.

4 Possibly the Druid sepulchers at Kerig y Druidion in Denbighshire, a possible haunt of the Muses. Mona, the island of Anglesey, is now treeless, but was evidently wooded in Milton's time. Deva, or the Dee, is a "wizard stream," because of a tradition that the shifting of its channel portended good fortune for the side toward which it tended.

Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream.
Ay me! I fondly dream
"Had ye been there," . . . for what could that have done?
What could the Muse [1] herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament,
When, by the rout that made the hideous roar,
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?
Alas! what boots it with uncessant care
To tend the homely, slighted, Shepherd's trade,
And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair?
Fame is the spur that the clear [2] spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind)
To scorn delights and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury [3] with the abhorrèd shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise," Phœbus replied, and touched my trembling ears:
"Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistering foil [4]
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumor lies,
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."
O fountain Arethuse, [5] and thou honored flood,
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the Herald of the Sea, [6]
That came in Neptune's plea.
He asked the waves, and asked the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?
And questioned every gust of rugged wings
That blows from off each beakèd promontory.
They knew not of his story;
And sage Hippotades [1] their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon strayed:
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope [2] with all her sisters played.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigged with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.
Next, Camus, [3] reverend Sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower [4] inscribed with woe.
"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"
Last came, and last did go,
The Pilot of the Galilean Lake; [5]
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain).
He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespake: —
"How well could I have spared for thee, young swain, Enow of such as, for their bellies' sake,
Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold!
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learnt aught else the least
That to the faithful Herdman's art belongs!
What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;
And, when they list, their lean and flashy [6] songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;

1 Calliope, mother of Orpheus. 2 untainted.
3 Atropos, one of the Fates, usually represented as blind.
4 Referring to the use of gold or silver leaf to set off a jewel.
5 The Fountain Arethuse, in Sicily, represents pastoral poetry, as does the River Mincius, from the association with Virgil's Eclogues.
6 Triton.

1 Æolus, son of Hippotes, the god of winds.
2 One of the daughters of Nereus.
3 Many of the Cambridge poets have thus personified the river Cam.
4 The hyacinth sprung from the blood of Hyacinthus, ai, ai, the Greek exclamation of lament, inscribed thereon.
5 Saint Peter, who holds keys to the Kingdom of Heaven.
6 vapid. Songs may be taken to mean discourses.

The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But, swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw,
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread;
Besides what the grim Wolf[1] with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
But that two-handed engine[2] at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."
Return, Alpheus; the dread voice is past
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use[3]
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks,
Throw hither all your quaint enamelled eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers,
And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe[4] primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freaked with jet,
The glowing violet,
The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears;
Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies.
For so, to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled;
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus[1] old,
Where the great Vision of the guarded mount[2]
Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold.[3]
Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth:
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.
Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor.
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear might of Him that walked the waves,
Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive[4] nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above,
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and singing in their glory move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the Shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth thou art the Genius of the shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth[5] Swain to the oaks and rills,
While the still Morn went out with sandals grey:
He touched the tender stops of various quills,
With eager thought warbling his Doric lay:
And now the sun had stretched out all the hills,
And now was dropt into the western bay.
At last he rose, and twitched[6] his mantle blue:
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

1 The Roman Catholic Church.
2 This obscurity is susceptible of many explanations; perhaps, the two houses of Parliament.
3 frequent, visit. 4 early.

1 Fabled Bellerium, the Latin name for Land's End in Cornwall.
2 The legend that the Archangel Michael appeared at a craggy seat looking out over the sea, near the ruins of an old Norman stronghold on St. Michael's Mount, opposite Penzance.
3 Both on the seacoast of Spain. 4 inexpressible.
5 unknown, for in 1637 Milton was still an "unknown" poet.
6 gathered about him.

ON HIS BEING ARRIVED TO THE AGE OF TWENTY-THREE

This sonnet was written at Cambridge, in 1631, shortly before Milton took his Master's degree.

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth,
Stolen on his wing my three and twentieth year!
My hasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud or blossom shew'th.
Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth,
That I to manhood am arrived so near,
And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
That some more timely-happy spirits endu'th.
Yet be it less or more, or soon or slow,
It shall be still in strictest measure even
To that same lot, however mean or high,
Toward which Time leads me, and the will of Heaven.
All is, if I have grace to use it so,
As ever in my great Task-master's eye.

1631

WHEN THE ASSAULT WAS INTENDED TO THE CITY

Written in November, 1642, when the forces of Charles I threatened the capture of London.

Captain, or Colonel, or Knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honor did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
Lift not thy spear against the Muse's bower;
The great Emathian[1] conqueror bid spare
The house of Pindarus, when temple and tower
Went to the ground; and the repeated air
Of sad Electra's Poet[2] had the power
To save the Athenian walls from ruin bare.

1642

1 Alexander the Great.
2 Euripides, to whose fame as a dramatist was attributed the leniency of the Spartans toward Athens.

TO THE LORD GENERAL CROMWELL

ON THE PROPOSALS OF CERTAIN MINISTERS AT THE COMMITTEE FOR PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL

The ministers referred to were the Presbyterian clergy who threatened to impose their ecclesiastical system in place of the Episcopal. Milton as an Independent demanded absolute freedom of conscience and worship. He looked to Cromwell to secure this.

Cromwell, our chief of men, who through a cloud
Not of war only, but detractions rude,
Guided by faith and matchless fortitude,
To peace and truth thy glorious way hast ploughed,
And on the neck of crownèd Fortune proud
Hast reared God's trophies, and his work pursued,
While Darwen[1] stream, with blood of Scots inbrued,
And Dunbar[2] field, resounds thy praises loud,
And Worcester's[3] laureate wreath: yet much remains
To conquer still; Peace hath her victories
No less renowned than War: new foes arise,
Threatening to bind our souls with secular chains.
Help us to save free conscience from the paw
Of hireling wolves, whose Gospel is their maw.

1652

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIEMONT

The Waldenses, a reformed sect dwelling among the mountains of Piedmont, were persecuted by the Duke of Savoy. Cromwell addressed a stern remonstrance to that ruler.

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered Saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold;
Even them who kept thy truth so pure of old,

1 The battle of Preston, August 17, 1648.
2 The battle of Dunbar against the Scots, September 3, 1650.
3 The battle of Worcester by which Cromwell suppressed the rising in favor of Charles II, September 3, 1651.

When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,[1]
Forget not: in thy book record their groans
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piemontese, that rolled Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple Tyrant;[2] that from these may grow
A hundredfold, who, having learnt thy way,
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.[3]

1655

ON HIS BLINDNESS

When I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days[4] in this dark world and wide,
And that one Talent[5] which is death to hide
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
To serve therewith my Maker, and present
My true account, lest He returning chide;
"Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"
I fondly[6] ask. But Patience, to prevent
That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not need Either man's work or his own gifts. Who best Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
Is kingly: thousands[7] at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
They also serve who only stand and wait."

1655

1 When, before the Reformation, England was a Catholic country.
2 The Pope, so called from his tiara surrounded by three crowns.
3 The woe which will be visited upon Babylon (interpreted as the Church of Rome) on the day of Judgment. Cf. Rev. XVIII.
4 Milton was forty-four when his blindness became total.
5 For the parable of the talents, see Matt. XXV, 14–30.
6 foolishly. 7 of heavenly messengers.

ON HIS DECEASED WIFE

This sonnet refers to Milton's second wife, Katharine Woodcock, who died in 1657.

Methought I saw my late espousèd saint
Brought to me like Alcestis from the grave,
Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave,
Rescued from Death by force, though pale and faint.
Mine, as whom washed from spot of childbed taint
Purification in the Old Law did save,[1]
And such as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in Heaven without restraint,
Came vested all in white, pure as her mind.
Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied sight
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
So clear as in no face with more delight.
But, oh! as to embrace me she inclined,
I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

1658

PARADISE LOST

1658–1665

Milton's poetry was not the result of casual interest or occasional inspiration. With the seriousness which governed his entire life, he early devoted himself to preparation for his mission of giving to England a poem of the same greatness as Homer had given to Greece in the Iliad, or Virgil to Rome in the Æneid. In choice of subject he wavered between legendary British history, which was the material suggested by the examples of Homer and Virgil, and a Biblical theme. Since the Puritans had come to think of themselves as God's Chosen People, in succession to the Hebrews, and the Biblical narratives as the supreme illustrations of God's dealings with men, it was natural for him to choose the latter. A list in Milton's handwriting of more than a hundred subjects from the Old and New Testaments shows how systematically he explored the possibilities of the field. In all Biblical history, two events stand out as of the highest importance, the Fall of Man from his original state of holiness, and his Redemption by Christ. The former was a subject of much theological controversy in Milton's day, the view taken of it marking the difference between the Calvinists, who held that all events, including the Fall of Adam, and the fate of every one of his sinful descendants, were immutably fixed in God's thought, and the Arminians, of whom Milton was one, who believed that God's decision in regard to the sinner was not irrevocable, but might through His grace be altered by repentance and faith in Christ. In view of its importance, both in the history of God's relation with man and in contemporary thought, Milton was constrained to choose the subject of the Fall.

1 The reference is to the ceremonies of purification after childbirth, enjoined by Mosaic law. See Leviticus XII.

Similarly Milton had a choice between two forms, both having classical authority, the epic and the tragedy. Certain of his subjects suggested the latter, notably the story of Samson which he later treated after the manner of Sophocles, but the Fall of Man was clearly epic in scope. Milton followed the account which had been elaborated by Christian fathers and rabbinical scholars upon the version given in Genesis. Vague allusions elsewhere in the Bible to Satan or Lucifer as an adversary of God, and to war in heaven, gave the suggestion for the revolt of part of the heavenly host under Lucifer's leadership. According to the practice of the epic, the poem begins in the thick of events after Lucifer and his rebel angels have been thrown from the battlements of heaven to the hell beneath. There follows their encouragement by their leader and their summons to a council, from which issues the plan to attack God's omnipotence by seducing into sin the man and woman whom He had created, to take with their descendants the places left vacant in heaven by the expulsion of the fallen angels. The first division of the poem closes with Lucifer's arrival on the earth and sight of the Garden of Eden. The second division of four books goes back over preceding events, the revolt of the angels, the creation of the universe and of man. The last four books deal with the temptation itself and the expulsion from paradise followed by Adam's prophetic view of the fortunes of his descendants in later history.

For his poetic form, Milton chose the pentameter blank verse which had been introduced by Surrey, and given currency by Marlowe and the dramatists. Milton's verse was, however, more stately and sustained than theirs. In his hands it became the equivalent in dignity and elevation of the dactylic hexameter of the classical epic poets. As in his earlier poetry Milton showed his power of using romantic suggestion and imagery in that strict subordination to the central theme which is the chief quality of classical art. The first two books of Paradise Lost afford magnificent illustration of this characteristic.

Milton had the material and form of Paradise Lost in mind for many years, but was prevented from beginning his work by his political writing, to which he was drawn by the situation of the time, and later by his Latin Secretaryship. Only in 1658 was he able to begin work in earnest and by this time he was totally blind. He composed largely at night, committing the verses to memory and dictating them later. The poem was finished in 1665. On account of the Great Fire in 1666 its publication was postponed until 1667, when Milton made an agreement to sell the copyright for £5 down, with two equal sums payable after successive sales of 1300 copies. Paradise Lost has come to be recognized as the greatest English epic, the poem which sets forth the traditional and historic faith of the English people in their God, and his dealings with the human race. It likewise embodies a complete philosophical survey of the universe. It is a monument of the time when men thought it still possible to achieve this sort of completeness and authority, a period of which Milton was the last great figure.

BOOK I

THE ARGUMENT

This First Book proposes, first in brief, the whole subject — Man's disobedience, and the loss thereupon of Paradise, wherein he was placed: then touches the prime cause of his fall — the Serpent, or rather Satan in the Serpent; who, revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of Angels, was, by the command of God, driven out of Heaven, with all his crew, into the great Deep. Which action passed over, the Poem hastes into the midst of things; presenting Satan, with his Angels, now fallen into Hell — described here not in the Centre (for heaven and earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed), but in a place of utter darkness, fitliest called Chaos. Here Satan, with his Angels lying on the burning lake, thunderstruck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion; calls up him who, next in order and dignity, lay by him: they confer of their miserable fall. Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded. They rise: their numbers; array of battle; their chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech; comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven; but tells them, lastly, of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy, or report, in Heaven — for that Angels were long before this visible creation was the opinion of many ancient Fathers. To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine thereon, he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium, the palace of Satan, rises, suddenly built out of the Deep: the infernal Peers there sit in council.

Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
Brought death into the World, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful Seat,
Sing, Heavenly Muse,[1] that, on the secret top
Of Oreb,[2] or of Sinai, didst inspire
That Shepherd[3] who first taught the chosen seed
In the beginning how the heavens and earth
Rose out of Chaos: or, if Sion hill
Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook[4] that flowed

1 The power that inspired Moses, and David, as opposed to the nine muses of Greek mythology.
2 The range of which Sinai was one mountain.
3 Moses.
4 At the foot of Mt. Moriah, on which stood the temple of Jerusalem.

Fast by the oracle of God, I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventrous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar
Above the Aonian mount,[1] while it pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
And chiefly Thou, O Spirit, that dost prefer
Before all temples the upright heart and pure,
Instruct me, for Thou know'st; Thou from the first
Wast present, and, with mighty wings outspread,
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast Abyss,[2]
And mad'st it pregnant: what in me is dark
Illumine, what is low raise and support;
That, to the highth of this great argument,[3]
I may assert[4] Eternal Providence,
And justify the ways of God to men.
Say first — for Heaven hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of Hell — say first what cause
Moved our grand[5] Parents, in that happy state,
Favored of Heaven so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the World besides.
Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?
The infernal Serpent; he it was whose guile,
Stirred up with envy and revenge, deceived
The mother of mankind, what time his pride
Had cast him out from Heaven, with all his host
Of rebel Angels, by whose aid, aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,
He trusted to have equalled the Most High,
If he opposed, and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God,
Raised impious war in Heaven and battle proud,
With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power
Hurled headlong flaming from the ethereal sky,
With hideous ruin and combustion, down
To bottomless perdition, there to dwell
In adamantine chains and penal fire,
Who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.
Nine times the space that measures day and night
To mortal men, he, with his horrid crew,
Lay vanquished, rolling in the fiery gulf,
Confounded, though immortal. But his doom
Reserved him to more wrath; for now the thought
Both of lost happiness and lasting pain
Torments him: round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witnessed[1] huge affliction and dismay,
Mixed with obdúrate pride and steadfast hate.
At once, as far as Angels ken, he views
The dismal situation waste and wild.
A dungeon horrible, on all sides round,
As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames
No light; but rather darkness visible
Served only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell, hope never comes
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges,[2] and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsumed.
Such place Eternal Justice had prepared
For those rebellious; here their prison ordained
In utter[3] darkness, and their portion set,
As far removed from God and light of Heaven
As from the centre thrice to the utmost pole.[4]
Oh how unlike the place from whence they fell!
There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelmed
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns; and, weltering by his side,
One next himself in power, and next in crime,
Long after known in Palestine, and named
Beelzebub. To whom the Arch-Enemy,[5]
And thence in Heaven called Satan, with bold words
Breaking the horrid silence, thus began: —
"If thou beest he — but Oh how fallen! how changed
From him! — who, in the happy realms of light,
Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads, though bright — if he whom mutual league,

1 The Aonian mount was Helicon, in Bœotia, sacred to the Muses. Milton means that he will surpass the classic poets, who drew their inspiration thence.

2 To the conception of God moving on the face of the deep Milton adds that of the descent of the Holy Ghost "in bodily shape like a dove" at the baptism of Jesus.

3 theme, subject. 4 vindicate. 5 first, original.

1 gave evidence of. 2 afflicts.

3 outer, the usual significance of utter in the seventeenth century.

4 Milton thought of the earth as surrounded by ten concentric spheres and hung from the threshold of heaven. The terrestrial poles projected outward through the intervening spheres to the outermost one.

5 Satan, in Hebrew, means "adversary."

United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
Joined with me once, now misery hath joined
In equal ruin; into what pit thou seest
From what highth fallen: so much the stronger proved
He with his thunder: and till then who knew
The force of those dire arms? Yet not for those,
Nor what the potent Victor in his rage
Can else inflict, do I repent, or change,
Though changed in outward lustre, that fixed mind,
And high disdain from sense of injured merit,
That with the Mightiest raised me to contend,
And to the fierce contention brought along
Innumerable force of Spirits armed,
That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
His utmost power with adverse power opposed
In dubious battle on the plains of Heaven,
And shook his throne. What though the field be lost?
All is not lost — the unconquerable will,
And study of revenge, immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield:
And what is else not to be overcome;
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his power
Who, from the terror of this arm, so late
Doubted his empire — that were low indeed;
That were an ignominy and shame beneath
This downfall; since, by fate, the strength of Gods,
And this empyreal substance, cannot fail;
Since, through experience of this great event,
In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,
We may with more successful hope resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand Foe,
Who now triumphs,' and in the excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of Heaven."
So spake the apostate Angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but racked with deep despair;
And him thus answered soon his bold Compeer: —
"O Prince, O Chief of many thronèd Powers
That led the embattled Seraphim to war
Under thy conduct, and, in dreadful deeds
Fearless, endangered Heaven's perpetual King,
And put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate!
Too well I see and rue the dire event
That, with sad overthrow and foul defeat,
Hath lost us Heaven, and all this mighty host
In horrible destruction laid thus low,
As far as Gods and Heavenly Essences
Can perish: for the mind and spirit remains
Invincible, and vigor soon returns,
Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
Here swallowed up in endless misery.
But what if He our Conqueror (whom I now
Of force [1] believe almighty, since no less Than such could have o'erpowered such force as ours)
Have left us this our spirit and strength entire,
Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
That we may so suffice [2] his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service as his thralls
By right of war, whate'er his business be,
Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
Or do his errands in the gloomy Deep? [3]
What can it then avail though yet we feel Strength undiminished, or eternal being
To undergo eternal punishment?"
Whereto with speedy words the Arch-Fiend replied: —
"Fallen Cherub,[4] to be weak is miserable,
Doing or suffering: but of this be sure —
To do aught good never will be our task,
But ever to do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to His high will Whom we resist. If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labor must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil;
Which ofttimes may succeed so as perhaps
Shall grieve him, if I fail [5] not, and disturb
His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
But see! the angry Victor hath recalled
His ministers of vengeance and pursuit
Back to the gates of Heaven: the sulphurous hail,
Shot after us in storm, o'erblown hath laid
The fiery surge that from the precipice
Of Heaven received us falling; and the thunder,

1 perforce. 2 satisfy. 3 Chaos.
4 See note on line 737. 5 mistake.

Winged with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless Deep.
Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our Foe.
Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames Casts pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves;
There rest, if any rest can harbor there;
And, re-assembling our afflicted powers,
Consult how we may henceforth most offend
Our Enemy, our own loss how repair,
How overcome this dire calamity,
What reinforcement we may gain from hope,
If not what resolution from despair."
Thus Satan, talking to his nearest Mate,
With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That sparkling blazed; his other parts besides
Prone on the flood, extended long and large,
Lay floating many a rood, in bulk as huge
As whom the fables name of monstrous size,
Titanian or Earth-born, that warred on Jove,
Briareos or Typhon,[1] whom the den
By ancient Tarsus held,[2] or that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim the ocean-stream.
Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-foundered[3] skiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixèd anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea, and wishèd morn delays.
So stretched out huge in length the Arch-Fiend lay,
Chained on the burning lake; nor ever thence
Had risen, or heaved his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
Left him at large to his own dark designs,
That with reiterated crimes he might
Heap on himself damnation, while he sought
Evil to others, and enraged might see
How all his malice served but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy, shewn
On Man by him seduced, but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance poured.
Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature; on each hand the flames
Driven backward slope their pointing spires, and, rolled
In billows, leave i' the midst a horrid vale.
Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight; till on dry land
He lights — if it were land that ever burned
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire,
And such appeared in hue as when the force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shattered side
Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible
And fuelled entrails, thence conceiving fire,
Sublimed[1] with mineral fury, aid the winds,
And leave a singèd bottom all involved
With stench and smoke. Such resting found the sole
Of unblest feet. Him followed his next Mate;
Both glorying to have scaped the Stygian flood
As gods, and by their own recovered strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal power.
"Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,"
Said then the lost Archangel, "this the seat
That we must change for Heaven? — this mournful gloom
For that celestial light? Be it so, since He
Who now is sovran can dispose and bid
What shall be right: farthest from Him is best,
Whom reason hath equalled, force hath made supreme Above his equals. Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! Hail, horrors! hail,
Infernal World! and thou, profoundest Hell,
Receive thy new possessor — one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time.
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a Heaven of Hell, a Hell of Heaven.

1 Briareos, one of the Titans; Typhon, one of the giants. Both "earth-born," as the offspring of Uranus and Ge (Earth).

2 An elaboration of a line of Æschylus, in which Typhon is described as living in a "Cilician den." Tarsus was the capital of Cilicia.

3 brought to a stand by the coming on of night.

1 changed from a solid to a vapor by the action of heat.

What matter where, if I be still the same,
And what I should be, all but less than [1] he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least
We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy, will not drive us hence:
Here we may reign secure; and, in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven.
But wherefore let we then our faithful friends,
The associates and co-partners of our loss,
Lie thus astonished [2] on the oblivious [3] pool,
And call them not to share with us their part
In this unhappy mansion, or once more
With rallied arms to try what may be yet
Regained in Heaven, or what more lost in Hell?"

So Satan spake; and him Beëlzebub
Thus answered: — "Leader of those armies bright
Which, but the Omnipotent, none could have foiled!
If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge
Of hope in fears and dangers — heard so oft
In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge
Of battle, when it raged, in all assaults
Their surest signal — they will soon resume
New courage and revive, though now they lie
Grovelling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
As we erewhile, astounded and amazed;
No wonder, fallen such a pernicious highth!"

He scarce had ceased when the superior Fiend
Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous shield,
Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behind him cast. The broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
Through optic glass the Tuscan artist [4] views
At evening, from the top of Fesolè,
Or in Valdarno,[5] to descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe.
His spear — to equal which the tallest pine
Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
Of some great Ammiral,[6] were but a wand —
He walked with, to support uneasy steps
Over the burning marle, not like those steps
On Heaven's azure; and the torrid clime
Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.
Nathless [1] he so endured, till on the beach
Of that inflamèd sea he stood, and called
His legions — Angel Forms, who lay entranced
Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
In Vallombrosa, where the Etrurian shades
High over-arched embower; or scattered sedge [2]
Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion [3] armed Hath vexed the Red-Sea coast, whose waves o'erthrew
Busiris [4] and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
From the safe shore their floating carcases
And broken chariot-wheels. So thick bestrown,
Abject and lost, lay these, covering the flood,
Under amazement of their hideous change.
He called so loud that all the hollow deep
Of Hell resounded: — "Princes, Potentates,
Warriors, the Flower of Heaven — once yours; now lost,
If such astonishment as this can seize Eternal Spirits! Or have ye chosen this place
After the toil of battle to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the ease you find
To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven?
Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
To adore the Conqueror, who now beholds
Cherub and Seraph rolling in the flood
With scattered arms and ensigns, till anon
His swift pursuers from Heaven-gates discern
The advantage, and, descending, tread us down
Thus drooping, or with linkèd thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf? —
Awake, arise, or be for ever fallen!"

They heard, and were abashed, and up they sprung
Upon the wing, as when men wont to watch,
On duty sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel;
Yet to their General's voice they soon obeyed
Innumerable. As when the potent rod

1 only less than, or, all but equal to.
2 thunderstruck.
3 Oblivious is used in the now unusual causative sense of inducing forgetfulness.
4 Galileo, whom Milton had met at Florence.
5 valley of the river Arno, in which Florence lies.
6 Admiral, here transferred to the ship in which he sails, the flag-ship.

1 nevertheless.
2 The Hebrew name for the Red Sea signifies Sea of Sedge.
3 The great hunter of classic myth.
4 Busiris was really an earlier king than the Pharaoh of Moses.

Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Waved round the coast, up-called a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping[1] on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like Night, and darkened all the land of Nile;[2]
So numberless were those bad Angels seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of Hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires;
Till, as a signal given, the uplifted spear
Of their great Sultan waving to direct
Their course, in even balance down they light
On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain:
A multitude like which the populous North
Poured never from her frozen loins to pass
Rhene[3] or the Danaw,[4] when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the South, and spread Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.
Forthwith, from every squadron and each band,
The heads and leaders thither haste where stood
Their great Commander — godlike Shapes, and Forms
Excelling human; princely Dignities;
And Powers that erst in Heaven sat on thrones,
Though of their names in Heavenly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rased
By their rebellion from the Books of Life.
Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve
Got them new names, till, wandering o'er the earth,
Through God's high sufferance for the trial of man,
By falsities and lies the greatest part
Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
God their Creator, and the invisible
Glory of Him that made them to transform Oft to the image of a brute, adorned
With gay religions full of pomp and gold,
And devils to adore for deities:
Then were they known to men by various names,
And various idols through the heathen world.
Say, Muse, their names then known, who first, who last,
Roused from the slumber on that fiery couch,
At their great Emperor's call, as next in worth Came singly where he stood on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof.
The chief were those who, from the pit of Hell
Roaming to seek their prey on Earth, durst fix
Their seats, long after, next the seat of God,
Their altars by His altar, gods adored
Among the nations round, and durst abide Jehovah thundering out of Sion, throned
Between the Cherubim; yea, often placed Within His sanctuary itself their shrines,
Abominations; and with cursèd things
His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned,
And with their darkness durst affront His light.
First, Moloch,[1] horrid King, besmeared with blood
Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
Though, for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard that passed through fire
To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite
Worshiped in Rabba[2] and her watery plain
In Argob[2] and in Basan,[2] to the stream
Of utmost Arnon.[2] Nor content with such Audacious neighborhood, the wisest heart
Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God
On that opprobrious hill, and made his grove
The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell.
Next Chemos, the obscene dread of Moab's sons,
From Aroar[3] to Nebo and the wild
Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon
And Horonaim, Seon's[4] realm, beyond
The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines,
And Elealè to the Asphaltic Pool:
Peor his other name, when he enticed
Israel in Sittim,[5] on their march from Nile,
To do him wanton rites, which cost them woe.

1 Moving in curves. 2 See Exodus VI, 16–20.
3 Rhine. 4 Danube.

1 A nature-god, typifying the destructive power of the sun, called in Scripture the "abomination of the children of Ammon."

2 Rabba, capital city of the Ammonites; Argob, district of the mountain range of Bashan, here called Basan; Arnon, a boundary river to the east of Jordan. Here, as throughout the following two hundred lines, Milton uses proper names for their grandiloquent sound and rich but vague suggestion, rather than for the purpose of conveying information.

3 The towns and mountains mentioned in lines 407–411 all lie on or near the Dead Sea, called the Asphaltic Pool from the bitumen or asphaltus it contains.

4 King of the Ammonites. 5 See Numbers XXV.

Yet thence his lustful orgies[1] he enlarged
Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
Of Moloch homicide, lust hard by hate,
Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.
With these came they who, from the bordering flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Ashtaroth — those male,
These feminine. For Spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure,
Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
Nor founded on the brittle strength of bones,
Like cumbrous flesh; but, in what shape they choose,
Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
Can execute their aery purposes,
And works of love or enmity fulfil.
For those the race of Israel oft forsook
Their Living Strength, and uufrequented left
His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods; for which their heads, as low
Bowed down in battle, sunk before the spear
Of despicable foes. With these in troop Came Astoreth, whom the Phœnicians called Astarte, queen of heaven, with crescent horns;
To whose bright image nightly by the moon
Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs;
In Sion also not unsung, where stood
Her temple on the offensive mountain, built
By that uxorious king[2] whose heart, though large,
Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Thammuz[3] came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eye surveyed the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Next came one
Who mourned in earnest, when the captive Ark
Maimed his brute image, head and hands lopt off,
In his own temple, on the grunsel-edge,[1]
Where he fell flat and shamed his worshipers:
Dagon[2] his name, sea-monster, upward man
And downward fish; yet had his temple high
Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams.
He also against the house of God was bold:
A leper once he lost, and gained a king[3] —
Ahaz, his sottish conqueror, whom he drew
God's altar to disparage and displace
For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings, and adore the gods
Whom he had vanquished. After these appeared
A crew who, under names of old renown —
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train —
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abused
Fanatic Egypt and her priests to seek
Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms
Rather than human. Nor did Israel scape
The infection, when their borrowed gold composed
The calf in Oreb;[4] and the rebel king[5]
Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan,
Likening his Maker to the grazèd ox —
Jehovah, who, in one night, when he passed
From Egypt marching, equalled[6] with one stroke
Both her first-born and all her bleating gods.
Belial came last; than whom a Spirit more lewd
Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. To him no temple stood
Or altar smoked; yet who more oft than he
In temples and at altars, when the priest
Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons,[7] who filled
With lust and violence the house of God?
In courts and palaces he also reigns,
And in luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,

1 Used in the classic sense of rites, observances.
2 Solomon.
3 An important figure in Phœnician mythology, slain by a boar, but reviving again each spring, his death and resuscitation symbolizing the characteristics of winter and spring. When the river Adonis became reddened by the mud brought down from Lebanon by the spring torrents, it was believed to be the flowing afresh of Thammuz's wounds which caused the change of color.

1 ground-sill or threshold.
2 A sea-god, the national deity of the Philistines, who dwelt along the seashore. See 1 Samuel VI.
3 See 2 Kings V and XVI. 4 See 1 Kings XII, 28.
5 Jeroboam, who rebelled against Rehoboam. He made two calves of gold, setting one in Bethel and the other in Dan.
6 leveled, struck down. The reference is to the tenth plague, the smiting of "all the first-born of the land of Egypt . . . and all the first-born of the cattle."
7 See 1 Samuel II, 12–17.

nd injury and outrage; and, when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
f Belial, flown [1] with insolence and wine.
Witness the streets of Sodom, and that night n Gibeah, when the hospitable door xposed a matron, to avoid worse rape.[2]
These were the prime in order and in might:
he rest were long to tell; though far renowned he Ionian gods — of Javan's issue held ods,[3] yet confessed later than Heaven and Earth, heir boasted parents; — Titan, Heaven's first-born, Vith his enormous brood, and birthright seized
y younger Saturn: he from mightier Jove, is own and Rhea's son, like measure found;
o Jove usurping reigned. These, first in Crete nd Ida known, thence on the snowy top f cold Olympus ruled the middle air, heir highest heaven; or on the Delphian cliff,[4]
r in Dodona,[5] and through all the bounds
f Doric land; or who with Saturn old led over Adria to the Hesperian fields, nd o'er the Celtic [6] roamed the utmost Isles.
All these and more came flocking; but with looks owncast and damp;[7] yet such wherein appeared bscure some glimpse of joy to have found their Chief ot in despair, to have found themselves not lost n loss itself; which on his countenance cast ike doubtful hue. But he, his wonted pride oon recollecting,[8] with high words, that bore emblance of worth, not substance, gently raised heir fainting courage, and dispelled their fears:
hen straight commands that, at the warlike sound
f trumpets loud and clarions, be upreared is mighty standard. That proud honor claimed Azazel as his right, a Cherub tall:
Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
The imperial ensign; which, full high advanced,
Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblazed,
Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds:
At which the universal host up-sent
A shout that tore Hell's concave, and beyond
Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.
All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient [1] colors waving: with them rose
A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
Appeared, and serried shields in thick array
Of depth immeasurable. Anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood [2]
Of flutes and soft recorders [3] — such as raised
To highth of noblest temper heroes old
Arming to battle, and instead of rage
Deliberate valor breathed, firm, and unmoved
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat;
Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage
With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain
From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
Breathing united force with fixèd thought,
Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed
Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil. And now
Advanced in view they stand — a horrid front
Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with ordered spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty Chief
Had to impose. He through the armèd files
Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse [4]
The whole battalion views — their order due,
Their visages and stature as of Gods;
Their number last he sums. And now his heart
Distends with pride, and, hardening in his strength,
Glories: for never, since created Man,

1 flushed.
2 For the allusions, see Genesis XIX, Judges XIX.
3 Uranus (Heaven) and Ge (earth) had as offspring the Titans. One of these, Cronos (Saturn in Roman mythology) dethroned his father, and was in turn dethroned by his son Zeus, whose mother was Rhea.
4 A part of Mt. Parnassus, the seat of the famous oracle of Apollo.
5 In Epirus, where there was an oracle of Zeus.
6 i.e. Celtic land — a Greek idiom.
7 depressed. 8 re-collecting.

1 bright, lustrous.
2 grave and stern, in contrast with the softer Lydian mode.
3 flageolets. 4 across.

Met such embodied force as, named with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warred on by cranes[1] — though all the giant brood
Of Phlegra[2] with the heroic race were joined
That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each side
Mixed with auxiliar gods; and what resounds
In fable or romance of Uther's son,[3]
Begirt with British and Armoric knights;[4]
And all who since, baptized or infidel,
Jousted in Aspramont,[5] or Montalban,
Damasco,[6] or Marocco, or Trebisond,
Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore
When Charlemain with all his peerage fell
By Fontarabbia. Thus far these beyond
Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed
Their dread Commander. He, above the rest
In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tower. His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appeared
Less than Archangel ruined, and the excess
Of glory obscured: as when the sun new-risen
Looks through the horizontal misty air
Shorn of his beams, or, from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations, and with fear of change
Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet shone
Above them all the Archangel: but his face
Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and care
Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
Of dauntless courage, and considerate[7] pride
Waiting revenge. Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse[8] and passion,[9] to behold
The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemned
For ever now to have their lot in pain —
Millions of Spirits for his fault amerced
Of Heaven, and from eternal splendors flung
For his revolt — yet faithful how they stood,[1]
Their glory withered; as, when heaven's fire
Hath scathed the forest oaks or mountain pines,
With singèd top their stately growth, though bare,
Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared
To speak; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
With all his peers: Attention held them mute.
Thrice he assayed, and thrice, in spite of scorn,
Tears, such as Angels weep, burst forth: at last Words interwove with sighs found out their way: —
"O myriads of immortal Spirits! O Powers
Matchless, but with the Almighty! — and that strife
Was not inglorious, though the event was dire,
As this place testifies, and this dire change,
Hateful to utter. But what power of mind,
Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have feared
How such united force of gods, how such
As stood like these, could ever know repulse?
For who can yet believe, though after loss,
That all these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied Heaven, shall fail to reascend,
Self-raised, and re-possess their native seat?
For me, be witness all the host of Heaven,
If counsels different, or danger shunned
By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns Monarch in Heaven till then as one secure
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
Consent or custom, and his regal state
Put forth at full, but still his strength concealed —
Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.
Henceforth his might we know, and know our own,
So as not either to provoke, or dread
New war provoked: our better part remains
To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not; that he no less
At length from us may find, Who overcomes

1 The pygmies of Ethiopia were said to fight with the cranes who invaded their country.
2 The wars of the giants and the gods were fought at Phlegra in Macedon.
3 King Arthur.
4 Armoric knights are knights of Brittany.
5 Aspramont, in Provence; Montalban, in Languedoc; Trebisond, in Cappadocia; are all famous in the annals of chivalry.
6 Damascus, the scene of many combats during the Crusades.
7 thoughtful. 8 pity.
9 strong feeling, not anger.

1 "To behold," from line 605 is understood in this construction.

By force hath overcome but half his foe.
Space may produce new Worlds; whereof so rife
There went a fame in Heaven that He ere long Intended to create, and therein plant
A generation whom his choice regard
Should favor equal to the Sons of Heaven.
Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption — thither, or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold
Celestial Spirits in bondage, nor the Abyss
Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts
Full counsel must mature. Peace is despaired;
For who can think submission? War, then, war
Open or understood, must be resolved."
He spake; and, to confirm his words, outflew
Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
Of mighty Cherubim; the sudden blaze
Far round illumined Hell. Highly they raged
Against the Highest and fierce with graspèd arms
Clashed on their sounding shields the din of war,
Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.
There stood a hill not far, whose grisly top Belched fire and rolling smoke; the rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf — undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur.[1] Thither, winged with speed,
A numerous brigad hastened: as when bands
Of pioneers, with spade and pickaxe armed,
Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them on —
Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell
From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts
Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of Heaven's pavement, trodden gold,
Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
In vision beatific. By him first
Men also, and by his suggestion taught,
Ransacked the Centre,[2] and with impious hands
Rifled the bowels of their mother Earth
For treasures better hid. Soon had his crew
Opened into the hill a spacious wound,
And digged out ribs of gold. Let none admire
That riches grow in Hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell
Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,[1]
Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
And strength, and art, are easily outdone
By Spirits reprobate, and in an hour
What in an age they, with incessant toil
And hands innumerable, scarce perform.
Nigh on the plain, in many cells prepared,
That underneath had veins of liquid fire
Sluiced from the lake, a second multitude
With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scummed the bullion-dross.
A third as soon had formed within the ground
A various mould, and from the boiling cells
By strange conveyance filled each hollow nook;
As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.
Anon out of the earth a fabric huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet —
Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set, and Doric pillars overlaid
With golden architrave; nor did there want
Cornice or frieze, with bossy sculptures graven:
The roof was fretted gold. Not Babylon
Nor great Alcairo such magnificence
Equalled in all their glories, to enshrine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. The ascending pile
Stood fixed her stately highth; and straight the doors,
Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
Within, her ample spaces o'er the smooth
And level pavement: from the archèd roof,
Pendent by subtle magic, many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. The hasty multitude
Admiring entered; and the work some praise,

1 In the seventeenth century and earlier, sulphur was believed to be the formative element of metals.
2 Here, as elsewhere, the earth, the center of the universe, according to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy.

1 The Pyramids.

And some the Architect. His hand was known
In Heaven by many a towered structure high,
Where sceptred Angels held their residence,
And sat as Princes, whom the supreme King
Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the Orders [1] bright.
Nor was his name [2] unheard or unadored
In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land
Men called him Mulciber; and how he fell
From Heaven they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day, and with the setting sun
Dropt from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos, the Ægæan isle. Thus they relate,
Erring; for he with this rebellious rout
Fell long before; nor aught availed him now
To have built in Heaven high towers; nor did he scape
By all his engines, but was headlong sent,
With his industrious crew, to build in Hell.
Meanwhile the wingèd Haralds, by command
Of sovran power, with awful ceremony
And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandæmonium, the high capital
Of Satan and his peers. Their summons called
From every band and squarèd regiment
By place or choice the worthiest: they anon
With hundreds and with thousands trooping came Attended. All access was thronged; the gates
And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall
(Though like a covered field, where champions bold
Wont ride in armed, and at the Soldan's chair
Defied the best of Panim chivalry
To mortal combat, or career with lance),
Thick swarmed, both on the ground and in the air,
Brushed with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees
In spring-time, when the Sun with Taurus rides,
Pour forth their populous youth about the hive
In clusters; they among fresh dews and flowers
Fly to and fro, or on the smoothèd plank,
The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
New rubbed with balm, expatiate, and confer
Their state-affairs: so thick the aerie crowd
Swarmed and were straitened; till, the signal given,
Behold a wonder! They but now who seemed
In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless — like that pygmean race
Beyond the Indian mount; or faery elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest-side
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees, while overhead the Moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the Earth
Wheels her pale course: they, on their mirth and dance
Intent, with jocund music charm his ear;
At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.
Thus incorporeal Spirits to smallest forms
Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large,
Though without number still, amidst the hall
Of that infernal court. But far within,
And in their own dimensions like themselves,
The great Seraphic Lords and Cherubim
In close recess [1] and secret conclave sat,
A thousand demi-gods on golden seats,
Frequent [2] and full. After short silence then,
And summons read, the great consult began.

1 The mediæval division of all celestial beings into three Hierarchies, each comprising three Orders, or Choirs, made the lowest Hierarchy include Angels, Archangels, Principalities; the next higher, Powers, Virtues, and Dominions; the highest included Thrones, Cherubim, and Seraphim.

2 Vulcan

BOOK II

THE ARGUMENT

The consultation begun, Satan debates whether another battle be to be hazarded for the recovery of Heaven: some advise it, others dissuade. A third proposal is preferred, mentioned before by Satan — to search the truth of that prophecy or tradition in Heaven concerning another world, and another kind of creature, equal, or not much inferior, to themselves, about this time to be created. Their doubt who shall be sent on this difficult search: Satan, their chief, undertakes alone the voyage; is honored and applauded. The council thus ended, the rest betake them several ways and to several employments, as their inclinations lead them, to entertain the time till Satan return. He passes on his journey to Hell-gates; finds them shut, and who sat there to guard them; by whom at length they are opened, and discover to him the great gulf between Hell and Heaven. With what difficulty he passes through, directed by Chaos, the Power of that place, to the sight of this new World which he sought.

1 retirement. 2 crowded.

High on a throne of royal state, which far
Outshone the wealth of Ormus [1] and of Ind,
Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
Satan exalted sat, by merit raised
To that bad eminence; and, from despair
Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires
Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue
Vain war with Heaven; and, by success [2] untaught,
His proud imaginations thus displayed: —
"Powers and Dominions, Deities of Heaven! —
For, since no deep within her gulf can hold
Immortal vigor, though oppressed and fallen,
I give not Heaven for lost: from this descent
Celestial Virtues rising will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall,
And trust themselves to fear no second fate! —
Me though just right, and the fixed laws of Heaven,
Did first create your leader — next, free choice,
With what besides in council or in fight
Hath been achieved of merit — yet this loss,
Thus far at least recovered, hath much more
Established in a safe, unenvied throne,
Yielded with full consent. The happier state
In Heaven, which follows dignity, might draw
Envy from each inferior; but who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim
Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share
Of endless pain? Where there is, then, no good
For which to strive, no strife can grow up there
From faction: for none sure will claim in Hell
Precedence; none whose portion is so small
Of present pain that with ambitious mind
Will covet more! With this advantage, then,
To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,
More than can be in Heaven, we now return
To claim our just inheritance of old,
Surer to prosper than prosperity
Could have assured us; and by what best way,
Whether of open war or covert guile,
We now debate. Who can advise may speak."
He ceased; and next him Moloch, sceptred king,
Stood up — the strongest and the fiercest Spirit
That fought in Heaven, now fiercer by despair.
His trust was with the Eternal to be deemed Equal in strength, and rather than be less
Cared not to be at all; with that care lost
Went all his fear: of God, or Hell, or worse,
He recked not, and these words thereafter spake: —
"My sentence is for open war. Of wiles,
More unexpert, I boast not: them let those Contrive who need, or when they need; not now.
For, while they sit contriving, shall the rest —
Millions that stand in arms, and longing wait
The signal to ascend — sit lingering here,
Heaven's fugitives, and for their dwelling-place
Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
The prison of His tyranny who reigns
By our delay? No! let us rather choose,
Armed with Hell-flames and fury, all at once
O'er Heaven's high towers to force resistless way,
Turning our tortures into horrid arms
Against the Torturer; when, to meet the noise
Of his almighty engine, he shall hear
Infernal thunder, and, for lightning, see
Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
Among his Angels, and his throne itself
Mixed with Tartarean sulphur and strange fire,
His own invented torments. But perhaps
The way seems difficult, and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe!
Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat; descent and fall
To us is adverse. [1] Who but felt of late,
When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear
Insulting, and pursued us through the Deep,
With what compulsion and laborious flight
We sunk thus low? The ascent is easy, then;
The event is feared! Should we again provoke

1 An island in the Persian Gulf. 2 outcome.

1 Refers to the mediæval conception that angels are not subject to natural laws, such as that of gravitation. Their tendency is upward, not downward.

Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may find
To our destruction, if there be in Hell
Fear to be worse destroyed! What can be worse
Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemned
In this abhorrèd deep to utter woe;
Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us without hope of end
The vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
Calls us to penance? More destroyed than thus,
We should be quite abolished, and expire.
What fear we then? what doubt we to incense
His utmost ire? which, to the highth enraged,
Will either quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential — happier far
Than miserable to have eternal being! —
Or, if our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing; and by proof we feel
Our power sufficient to disturb his Heaven,
And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible, his fatal Throne:
Which, if not victory, is yet revenge."
He ended frowning, and his look denounced [1]
Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
To less than gods. On the other side up rose Belial, in act more graceful and humane.
A fairer person lost not heaven; he seemed
For dignity composed, and high exploit.
But all was false and hollow; though his tongue
Dropt manna, and could make the worse appear
The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest counsels: for his thoughts were low —
To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Yet he pleased the ear,
And with persuasive accent thus began: —
"I should be much for open war, O Peers,
As not behind in hate, if what was urged
Main reason to persuade immediate war
Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast
Ominous conjecture on the whole success;
When he who most excels in fact of arms,
In what he counsels and in what excels
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.

1 threatened.

First, what revenge? The towers of Heaven are filled
With armèd watch, that render all access
Impregnable: oft on the bordering Deep
Encamp their legions, or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of Night,
Scorning surprise. Or, could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all Hell should rise
With blackest insurrection to confound
Heaven's purest light, yet our great Enemy
All incorruptible, would on his throne
Sit unpolluted, and the ethereal mould,
Incapable of stain, would soon expel
Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire,
Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
The Almighty Victor to spend all his rage;
And that must end us; that must be our cure —
To be no more. Sad cure! for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
In the wide womb of uncreated Night,
Devoid of sense and motion? And who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry Foe
Can give it, or will ever? [1] How he can
Is doubtful; that he never will is sure.
Will He, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
Belike through impotence or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger whom his anger saves
To punish endless? 'Wherefore cease we, then?'
Say they who counsel war; 'we are decreed,
Reserved, and destined to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
What can we suffer worse?' Is this, then, worst —
Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
What when we fled amain, pursued and strook
With Heaven's afflicting thunder, and besought
The Deep to shelter us? This Hell then seemed
A refuge from those wounds. Or when we lay Chained on the burning lake? That sure was worse.

1 The meaning here is "even granted that death is to be desired, who knows whether God has the power or the will to destroy angelic substances?"

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awaked, should blow them into sevenfold rage,
And plunge us in the flames; or from above
Should intermitted vengeance arm again
His red right hand to plague us? What if all
Her stores were opened, and this firmament
Of Hell should spout her cataracts of fire,
Impendent horrors, threatening hideous fall
One day upon our heads; while we perhaps,
Designing or exhorting glorious war,
Caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurled,
Each on his rock transfixed, the sport and prey
Of racking whirlwinds, or for ever sunk
Under yon boiling ocean, wrapt in chains,
There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved,
Ages of hopeless end? This would be worse.
War, therefore, open or concealed, alike
My voice dissuades; for what can force or guile
With Him, or who deceive His mind, whose eye
Views all things at one view? He from Heaven's highth
All these our motions vain sees and derides,
Not more almighty to resist our might
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
Shall we, then, live thus vile — the race of Heaven
Thus trampled, thus expelled, to suffer here
Chains and these torments? Better these than worse,
By my advice; since fate inevitable
Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
The Victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
Our strength is equal; nor the law unjust
That so ordains. This was at first resolved,
If we were wise, against so great a foe
Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.
I laugh when those who at the spear are bold
And venturous, if that fail them, shrink, and fear
What yet they know must follow — to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
The sentence of their conqueror. This is now
Our doom; which if we can sustain and bear,
Our Supreme Foe in time may much remit
His anger, and perhaps, thus far removed,
Not mind us not offending, satisfied
With what is punished; whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
Our purer essence then will overcome
Their noxious vapor; or, inured, not feel;
Or, changed at length, and to the place conformed
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat; and, void of pain,
This horror will grow mild, this darkness light;
Besides what hope the never-ending flight
Of future days may bring, what chance, what change
Worth waiting — since our present lot appears
For happy though but ill, for ill not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe."
Thus Belial, with words clothed in reason's garb,
Counselled ignoble ease and peaceful sloth,
Not peace; and after him thus Mammon spake: —
"Either to disenthrone the King of Heaven
We war, if war be best, or to regain
Our own right lost. Him to unthrone we then
May hope, when everlasting Fate shall yield
To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife.
The former, vain to hope, argues as vain
The latter; for what place can be for us
Within Heaven's bound, unless Heaven's Lord Supreme
We overpower? Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all, on promise made
Of new subjection; with what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive
Strict laws imposed, to celebrate his throne
With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead sing
Forced Halleluiahs, while he lordly sits
Our envied sovran, and his altar breathes
Ambrosial odors and ambrosial flowers,
Our servile offerings? This must be our task
In Heaven, this our delight. How wearisome
Eternity so spent in worship paid
To whom we hate! Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtained
Unacceptable, though in Heaven, our state
Of splendid vassalage; but rather seek
Our own good from ourselves, and from our own
Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,
Free and to none accountable, preferring
Hard liberty before the easy yoke
Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear
Then most conspicuous when great things of small,

Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse,
We can create, and in what place soe'er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain
Through labor and endurance. This deep world
Of darkness do we dread? How oft amidst Thick clouds and dark doth Heaven's all-ruling Sire
Choose to reside, his glory unobscured,
And with the majesty of darkness round
Covers his throne, from whence deep thunders roar,
Mustering their rage, and Heaven resembles Hell!
As He our darkness, cannot we His light
Imitate when we please? This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems and gold;
Nor want we skill or art from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can Heaven shew more?
Our torments also may, in length of time,
Become our elements, these piercing fires
As soft as now severe, our temper changed
Into their temper; which must needs remove
The sensible[1] of pain. All things invite
To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
Of order, how in safety best we may Compose our present evils, with regard
Of what we are and where, dismissing quite
All thoughts of war. Ye have what I advise."
He scarce had finished, when such murmur filled
The assembly as when hollow rocks retain
The sound of blustering winds, which all night long
Had roused the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Seafaring men o'erwatched, whose bark by chance,
Or pinnace, anchors in a craggy bay
After the tempest. Such applause was heard
As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleased,
Advising peace: for such another field[2]
They dreaded worse than Hell; so much the fear
Of thunder and the sword of Michaël
Wrought still within them; and no less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
By policy and long process' of time,
In emulation opposite to Heaven.
Which when Beëlzebub perceived — than whom,
Satan except, none higher sat — with grave
Aspect he rose, and in his rising seemed
A pillar of state. Deep on his front engraven
Deliberation sat, and public care;
And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
Majestic, though in ruin. Sage he stood,
With Atlantean shoulders, fit to bear
The weight of mightiest monarchies; his look
Drew audience and attention still as night
Or summer's noontide air, while thus he spake: —
"Thrones and Imperial Powers, Offspring of Heaven,
Ethereal Virtues! or these titles now
Must we renounce, and, changing style, be called Princes of Hell? for so the popular vote
Inclines — here to continue, and build up here
A growing empire; doubtless! while we dream,
And know not that the King of Heaven hath doomed
This place our dungeon — not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
From Heaven's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne, but to remain
In strictest bondage, though thus far removed,
Under the inevitable curb, reserved
His captive multitude. For He, be sure,
In highth or depth, still first and last will reign
Sole king, and of his kingdom lose no part
By our revolt, but over Hell extend
His empire, and with iron sceptre rule
Us here, as with his golden those in Heaven.
What[1] sit we then projecting peace and war?
War hath determined[2] us and foiled with loss
Irreparable; terms of peace yet none
Vouchsafed or sought; for what peace will be given
To us enslaved, but custody severe,
And stripes and arbitrary punishment
Inflicted? and what peace can we return,
But, to our power, hostility and hate,
Untamed reluctance, and revenge, though slow,
Yet ever plotting how the Conqueror least
May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
In doing what we most in suffering feel?
Nor will occasion want, nor shall we need
With dangerous expedition to invade

1 sense. 2 battle.

1 to what end, why. 2 undone, made an end of.

eaven, whose high walls fear no assault or siege, r ambush from the Deep. What if we find me easier enterprise? There is a place
f ancient and prophetic fame in Heaven rr not) — another World, the happy seat
f some new race, called Man, about this time
o be created like to us, though less n power and excellence, but favored more f Him who rules above; so was His will ronounced among the gods, and by an oath hat shook Heaven's whole circumference confirmed.
hither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn hat creatures there inhabit, of what mould
r substance, how endued, and what their power nd where their weakness: how attempted best,
y force or subtlety. Though Heaven be shut, nd Heaven's high Arbitrator sit secure n his own strength, this place may lie exposed, he utmost border of his kingdom, left o their defence who hold it: here, perhaps, ome advantageous act may be achieved
y sudden onset — either with Hell-fire
o waste his whole creation, or possess ll as our own, and drive, as we are driven,
he puny habitants; or, if not drive,
educe them to our party, that their God lay prove their foe, and with repenting hand bolish his own works. This would surpass ommon revenge, and interrupt His joy n our confusion, and our joy upraise
n His disturbance; when his darling sons, urled headlong to partake with us, shall curse heir frail original, and faded bliss — aded so soon! Advise if this be worth ttempting, or to sit in darkness here atching vain empires." Thus Beëlzebub leaded his devilish counsel — first devised
y Satan, and in part proposed: for whence, ut from the author of all ill, could spring
o deep a malice, to confound the race
f mankind in one root, and Earth with Hell o mingle and involve, done all to spite he great Creator? But their spite still serves is glory to augment. The bold design leased highly those Infernal States, and joy
Sparkled in all their eyes: with full assent
They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews: —
"Well have ye judged, well ended long debate,
Synod of Gods, and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolved, which from the lowest deep
Will once more lift us up, in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient Seat — perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence, with neighboring arms,
And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter Heaven; or else in some mild zone
Dwell, not unvisited of Heaven's fair light,
Secure, and at the brightening orient beam
Purge off this gloom: the soft delicious air,
To heal the scar of these corrosive fires,
Shall breathe her balm. But, first, whom shall we send
In search of this new World? whom shall we find Sufficient? who shall tempt with wandering feet
The dark, unbottomed, infinite Abyss,
And through the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way, or spread his aerie flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings
Over the vast Abrupt,[1] ere he arrive
The happy Isle? What strength, what art, can then Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
Through the strict senteries and stations thick
Of Angels watching round? Here he had need
All circumspection: and we now no less
Choice in our suffrage; for on whom we send
The weight of all, and our last hope, relies."
This said, he sat; and expectation held
His look suspense, awaiting who appeared
To second, or oppose, or undertake
The perilous attempt. But all sat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each
In other's countenance read his own dismay,
Astonished. None among the choice and prime
Of those Heaven-warring champions could be found
So hardy as to proffer or accept,
Alone, the dreadful voyage; till, at last,
Satan, whom now transcendent glory raised

1 That portion of chaos separating earth from Hell, which space is apparently conceived as a sort of chasm or gulf.

Above his fellows, with monarchal pride
Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus spake: —
"O Progeny of Heaven! Empyreal Thrones!
With reason hath deep silence and demur
Seized us, though undismayed. Long is the way
And hard, that out of Hell leads up to Light.
Our prison strong, this huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round
Ninefold; and gates of burning adamant,
Barred over us, prohibit all egress.
These passed, if any pass, the void profound
Of unessential Night[1] receives him next,
Wide-gaping, and with utter loss of being
Threatens him, plunged in that abortive gulf.
If thence he scape, into whatever world,
Or unknown region, what remains him less
Than unknown dangers, and as hard escape?
But I should ill become this throne, O Peers,
And this imperial sovranty, adorned
With splendor, armed with power, if aught proposed
And judged of public moment in the shape
Of difficulty or danger, could deter Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume
These royalties, and not refuse to reign,
Refusing to accept as great a share
Of hazard as of honor, due alike
To him who reigns, and so much to him due
Of hazard more as he above the rest
High honored sits? Go, therefore, mighty Powers, Terror of Heaven, though fallen; intend[2] at home,
While here shall be our home, what best may ease
The present misery, and render Hell
More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion: intermit no watch
Against a wakeful Foe, while I abroad
Through all the coasts of dark destruction seek Deliverance for us all. This enterprise
None shall partake with me." Thus saying, rose
The Monarch, and prevented all reply;
Prudent lest, from his resolution raised,[3]
Others among the chief might offer now,
Certain to be refused, what erst they feared,

1 having no real essence, or being. 2 consider.
3 encouraged by his resolute spirit.

And, so refused, might in opinion stand
His rivals, winning cheap the high repute
Which he through hazard huge must earn
But they
Dreaded not more the adventure than his voice
Forbidding; and at once with him they rose.
Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Towards him they bend
With awful reverence prone, and as a God
Extol him equal to the Highest in Heaven.
Nor failed they to express how much they praised
That for the general safety he despised
His own: for neither do the Spirits damned
Lose all their virtue; lest bad men should boast
Their specious deeds on earth, which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnished o'er with zeal.
Thus they their doubtful consultations dark
Ended, rejoicing in their matchless Chief:
As, when from mountain-tops the dusky clouds
Ascending, while the North-wind sleeps o'erspread
Heaven's cheerful face, the louring element
Scowls o'er the darkened landscape snow or shower,
If chance the radiant sun, with farewel sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings.
O shame to men! Devil with devil damned
Firm concord holds; men only disagree
Of creatures rational, though under hope
Of heavenly grace, and, God proclaiming peace,
Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars
Wasting the earth, each other to destroy:
As if (which might induce us to accord)
Man had not hellish foes enow besides,
That day and night for his destruction wait!
The Stygian council thus dissolved; and forth
In order came the grand Infernal Peers:
Midst came their mighty Paramount,[2] and seemed

1 lord, chief.

Alone the Antagonist of Heaven, nor less Than Hell's dread Emperor, with pomp supreme,
And god-like imitated state: him round
A globe of fiery Seraphim inclosed
With bright emblazonry, and horrent [1] arms.
Then of their session ended they bid cry
With trumpet's regal sound the great result:
Toward the four winds four speedy Cherubim
Put to their mouths the sounding alchymy,
By harald's voice explained; [2] the hollow Abyss
Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
With deafening shout returned them loud acclaim.
Thence more at ease their minds, and somewhat raised
By false presumptuous hope, the rangèd Powers
Disband; and, wandering, each his several way
Pursues, as inclination or sad choice
Leads him perplexed, where he may likeliest find Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, till his great Chief return.
Part on the plain, or in the air sublime,
Upon the wing or in swift race contend,
As at the Olympian games or Pythian fields;
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels, or fronted brigads form:
As when, to warn proud cities, war appears
Waged in the troubled sky, and armies rush
To battle in the clouds; before each van
Prick forth the aerie knights, and couch their spears,
Till thickest legions close; with feats of arms
From either end of heaven the welkin burns.
Others, with vast Typhœan [3] rage, more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind; Hell scarce holds the wild uproar: —
As when Alcides, from Œchalia crowned
With conquest, felt the envenomed robe, and tore
Through pain up by the roots Thessalian pines,
And Lichas from the top of Œta threw
Into the Euboic sea. Others, more mild,
Retreated in a silent valley, sing
With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroic deeds, and hapless fall
By doom of battle, and complain that Fate
Free Virtue should enthrall to Force or Chance.
Their song was partial; but the harmony
(What could it less when Spirits immortal sing?)
Suspended Hell, and took with ravishment
The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet
(For Eloquence the Soul, Song charms the Sense)
Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reasoned high
Of Providence, Foreknowledge, Will, and Fate —
Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute —
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.
Of good and evil much they argued then,
Of happiness and final misery,
Passion and apathy, and glory and shame:
Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy! —
Yet, with a pleasing sorcery, could charm
Pain for a while or anguish, and excite
Fallacious hope, or arm the obdurèd [1] breast
With stubborn patience as with triple steel.
Another part, in squadrons and gross bands,
On bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
Might yield them easier habitation, bend
Four ways their flying march, along the banks
Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
Into the burning lake their baleful streams —
Abhorrèd Styx, the flood of deadly hate;
Sad Acheron of sorrow, black and deep;
Cocytus, named of lamentation loud
Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegeton,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth, whereof who drinks
Forthwith his former state and being forgets —
Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and pain.
Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm land
Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound as that Serbonian [2] bog

1 bristling. 2 filled. 3 See Book I, l. 199.

1 hardened.

2 Lake Serbonis, between Damiata and Mount Casius, was sometimes so covered with sand that armies advanced upon it as upon solid ground.

Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,
Where armies whole have sunk: the parching air
Burns frore, and cold performs the effect of fire.
Thither, by harpy-footed Furies haled,
At certain revolutions all the damned
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immovable, infixed, and frozen round
Periods of time, — thence hurried back to fire.
They ferry over this Lethean sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
All in one moment, and so near the brink;
But Fate withstands, and, to oppose the attempt,
Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight, as once it fled
The lip of Tantalus. Thus roving on
In confused march forlorn, the adventrous bands,
With shuddering horror pale, and eyes aghast,
Viewed first their lamentable lot, and found
No rest. Through many a dark and dreary vale
They passed, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp,
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death —
A universe of death, which God by curse
Created evil, for evil only good;
Where all life dies, death lives, and Nature breeds,
Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feigned or fear conceived,
Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimæras dire.
Meanwhile the Adversary of God and Man,
Satan, with thoughts inflamed of highest design,
Puts on swift wings, and toward the gates of Hell
Explores his solitary flight: sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the left;
Now shaves with level wing the Deep, then soars
Up to the fiery concave towering high.
As when far off at sea a fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring
Their spicy drugs; they on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian [1] to the Cape,
Ply stemming nightly toward the pole: so seemed Far off the flying Fiend. At last appear
Hell-bounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice threefold the gates; three folds were brass,
Three iron, three of adamantine rock,
Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire,
Yet unconsumed. Before the gates there sat
On either side a formidable Shape.
The one seemed woman to the waist, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold,
Voluminous and vast — a serpent armed
With mortal sting. About her middle round
A cry of Hell-hounds never-ceasing barked
With wide Cerberean mouths full loud, and rung
A hideous peal; yet, when they list, would creep,
If aught disturbed their noise, into her womb,
And kennel there; yet there still barked and howled Within unseen. Far less abhorred than these Vexed Scylla, bathing in the sea that parts
Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore;
Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when, called
In secret, riding through the air she comes,
Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
With Lapland [2] witches, while the laboring moon
Eclipses at their charms. The other Shape —
If shape it might be called that shape had none
Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb;
Or substance might be called that shadow seemed,
For each seemed either — black it stood as Night,
Fierce as ten Furies, terrible as Hell,

1 Ethiopian Sea, or the Indian Ocean.
2 Lapland was long held to be the home and especial meeting-place of witches.

nd shook a dreadful dart: what seemed his head he likeness of a kingly crown had on.
atan was now at hand, and from his seat
he monster moving onward came as fast
Vith horrid strides; Hell trembled as he strode.
he undaunted Fiend what this might be admired — dmired, not feared (God and his Son except, reated thing naught valued he nor shunned), nd with disdainful look thus first began: —
"Whence and what art thou, execrable Shape, hat dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance hy miscreated front athwart my way
o yonder gates? Through them I mean to pass, hat be assured, without leave asked of thee.
etire; or taste thy folly, and learn by proof,
ell-born, not to contend with Spirits of Heaven."
To whom the Goblin,[1] full of wrath, replied: —
Art thou that Traitor-Angel, art thou he,
Vho first broke peace in Heaven and faith, till then nbroken, and in proud rebellious arms rew after him the third part of Heaven's sons, onjured[2] against the Highest — for which both thou nd they, outcast from God, are here condemned o waste eternal days in woe and pain?
nd reckon'st thou thyself with Spirits of Heaven,
ell-doomed, and breath'st defiance here and scorn, Vhere I reign king, and, to enrage thee more,
hy king and lord? Back to thy punishment,
alse fugitive; and to thy speed add wings, est with a whip of scorpions I pursue hy lingering, or with one stroke of this dart trange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before."
So spake the grisly Terror, and in shape,
o speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold lore dreadful and deform. On the other side,
Incensed with indignation, Satan stood
Unterrified, and like a comet burned,
That fires the length of Ophiuchus[1] huge
In the arctic sky, and from his horrid hair
Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the head
Levelled his deadly aim; their fatal hands
No second stroke intend; and such a frown
Each cast at the other as when two black clouds,
With heaven's artillery fraught, come rattling on
Over the Caspian, — then stand front to front
Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
To join their dark encounter in mid-air.
So frowned the mighty combatants that Hell
Grew darker at their frown; so matched they stood;
For never but once more was either like
To meet so great a foe. And now great deeds
Had been achieved, whereof all Hell had rung,
Had not the snaky Sorceress, that sat
Fast by Hell-gate and kept the fatal key,
Risen, and with hideous outcry rushed between.
"O father, what intends thy hand," she cried,
"Against thy only son? What fury, O son,
Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart
Against thy father's head? And know'st for whom?
For Him who sits above, and laughs the while
At thee, ordained his drudge to execute
Whate'er his wrath, which He calls justice, bids —
His wrath, which one day will destroy ye both!"
She spake, and at her words the hellish Pest Forbore: then these to her Satàn returned: —
"So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange
Thou interposest, that my sudden hand,
Prevented, spares to tell thee yet by deeds
What it intends, till first I know of thee
What thing thou art, thus double-formed, and why,
In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son.
I know thee not, nor ever saw till now
Sight more detestable than him and thee."
To whom thus the Portress of Hell-gate replied: —
"Hast thou forgot me, then; and do I seem

1 Used in the generic sense of demon or fiend.
2 bound by oath.

1 A large constellation of the northern hemisphere.

Now in thine eye so foul? — once deemed so fair
In Heaven, when at the assembly, and in sight
Of all the Seraphim with thee combined
In bold conspiracy against Heaven's King,
All on a sudden miserable pain
Surprised thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swum
In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast
Threw forth, till on the left side opening wide,
Likest to thee in shape and countenance bright,
Then shining heavenly fair, a goddess armed,
Out of thy head I sprung. Amazement seized
All the host of Heaven; back they recoiled afraid
At first, and called me Sin, and for a sign
Portentous held me; but, familiar-grown,
I pleased, and with attractive graces won
The most averse — thee chiefly, who, full oft
Thyself in me thy perfect image viewing,
Becam'st enamored; and such joy thou took'st
With me in secret that my womb conceived
A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose,
And fields were fought in Heaven: wherein remained (For what could else?) to our Almighty Foe
Clear victory; to our part loss and rout
Through all the Empyrean. Down they fell,
Driven headlong from the pitch of Heaven, down
Into this Deep; and in the general fall
I also: at which time this powerful Key
Into my hands was given, with charge to keep
These gates for ever shut, which none can pass
Without my opening. Pensive here I sat
Alone; but long I sat not, till my womb,
Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown,
Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes.
At last this odious offspring whom thou seest,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way,
Tore through my entrails, that, with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew
Transformed: but he my inbred enemy
Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart,
Made to destroy. I fled, and cried out Death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sighed
From all her caves, and back resounde Death!
I fled; but he pursued (though more, i seems, Inflamed with lust than rage), and, swifte far,
Me overtook, his mother, all dismayed,
And, in embraces forcible and foul
Engendering with me, of that rape begot
These yelling monsters, that with ceaseles cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st — hourly con ceived
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me: for, when they list, into the womb
That bred them they return, and howl, an gnaw
My bowels, their repast; then, burstin forth
Afresh, with conscious terrors vex me round
That rest or intermission none I find.
Before mine eyes in opposition sits
Grim Death, my son and foe, who sets then on,
And me, his parent, would full soon de vour
For want of other prey, but that he knows
His end with mine involved, and knows that Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,
Whenever that shall be: so Fate pronounced
But thou, O father, I forewarn thee, shun
His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
Though tempered heavenly; for that morta dint,
Save He who reigns above, none can resist."
She finished; and the subtle Fiend his lore
Soon learned, now milder, and thus answere smooth: —
"Dear daughter — since thou claim'st m for thy sire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dea pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in Heaven, an joys
Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change
Befallen us unforeseen, unthought-of — know,
I come no enemy, but to set free
From out this dark and dismal house of pai
Both him and thee, and all the Heavenly hos
Of Spirits that, in our just pretence armed,
Fell with us from on high. From them I g
This uncouth errand sole, and one for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread

he unfounded Deep, and through the void immense o search, with wandering quest, a place foretold hould be — and, by concurring signs, ere now reated vast and round — a place of bliss n the purlieues of Heaven; and therein placed race of upstart creatures, to supply erhaps our vacant room, though more removed, est Heaven, surcharged with potent multitude, light hap to move new broils. Be this, or aught han this more secret, now designed, I haste
o know; and, this once known, shall soon return, nd bring ye to the place where thou and Death hall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Ving silently the buxom,[1] air, imbalmed Vith odors. There ye shall be fed and filled mmeasurably; all things shall be your prey."
He ceased; for both seemed highly pleased, and Death
Grinned horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be filled, and blessed his maw
Destined to that good hour. No less rejoiced
His mother bad, and thus bespake her Sire:—
"The key of this infernal Pit, by due
And by command of Heaven's all-powerful King,
I keep, by Him forbidden to unlock
These adamantine gates; against all force
Death ready stands to interpose his dart,
Fearless to be o'ermatched by living might.
But what owe I to His commands above,
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down
Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,
To sit in hateful office here confined,
Inhabitant of Heaven and heavenly-born
Here in perpetual agony and pain,
With terrors and with clamors compassed round
Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed?
Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
But thee? whom follow? Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, as beseems
Thy daughter and thy darling, without end."
Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
And, toward the gate rolling her bestial train,
Forthwith the huge porcullis high up-drew,
Which, but herself, not all the Stygian Powers
Could once have moved; then in the keyhole turns
The intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
Unfastens. On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
Of Erebus. She opened; but to shut
Excelled her power: the gates wide open stood,
That with extended wings a bannered host,
Under spread ensigns marching, might pass through
With horse and chariots ranked in loose array;
So wide they stood, and like a furnace-mouth
Cast forth redounding[1] smoke and ruddy flame.
Before their eyes in sudden view appear
The secrets of the hoary Deep — a dark
Illimitable ocean, without bound,
Without dimension; where length, breadth, and highth,
And time, and place, are lost; where eldest Night
And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry, four champions fierce, Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms: they around the flag
Of each his faction, in their several clans,
Light-armed or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift, or slow,
Swarm populous, unnumbered as the sands
Of Barca or Cyrene's[2] torrid soil,
Levied to side with warring winds, and poise
Their lighter wings. To whom these most adhere
He rules a moment: Chaos umpire sits,

1 bending, or yielding.

1 rolling in billows. 2 Cities of northern Africa.

And by decision more imbroils the fray
By which he reigns: next him, high arbiter,
Chance governs all. Into this wild Abyss,
The womb of Nature, and perhaps her grave,
Of neither Sea, nor Shore, nor Air, nor Fire,
But all these in their pregnant causes mixed
Confusedly, and which thus must ever fight,
Unless the Almighty Maker them ordain
His dark materials to create more worlds —
Into this wild Abyss the wary Fiend
Stood on the brink of Hell and looked a while,
Pondering his voyage; for no narrow frith
He had to cross. Nor was his ear less pealed
With noises loud and ruinous (to compare Great things with small) than when Bellona storms
With all her battering engines, bent to rase
Some capital city; or less than if this frame
Of heaven were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast Earth. At last his sail-broad vans[1]
He spreads for flight, and, in the surging smoke
Uplifted, spurns the ground; thence many a league,
As in a cloudy chair, ascending rides
Audacious; but, that seat soon failing, meets
A vast vacuity. All unawares,
Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb-down he drops
Ten thousand fadom deep, and to this hour
Down had been falling, had not, by ill chance,
The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him
As many miles aloft. That fury stayed —
Quenched in a boggy Syrtis,[2] neither sea,
Nor good dry land — nigh foundered, on he fares,
Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
Half flying; behoves him now both oar and sail.
As when a gryphon through the wilderness
With wingèd course, o'er hill or moory dale,
Pursues the Arimaspian,[3] who by stealth
Had from his wakeful custody purloined
The guarded gold; so eagerly the Fiend
O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps or flies.
At length a universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confused
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Thither he plies
Undaunted, to meet there whatever Power
Or Spirit of the nethermost Abyss
Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
Which way the nearest coast of darkness lies
Bordering on light; when straight behold the throne
Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread
Wide on the wasteful Deep! With him enthroned
Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign; and by them stood
Orcus and Ades, and the dreaded name
Of Demogorgon; Rumor next, and Chance,
And Tumult, and Confusion, all embroiled,
And Discord with a thousand various mouths.

To whom Satan, turning boldly, thus: — "Ye Powers
And Spirits of this nethermost Abyss,
Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy
With purpose to explore or to disturb
The secrets of your realm; but, by constraint
Wandering this darksome desert, as my way
Lies through your spacious empire up to light,
Alone and without guide, half lost, I seek,
What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds
Confine with Heaven; or, if some other place
From your dominion won, the Ethereal King
Possesses lately, thither to arrive
I travel this profound. Direct my course:
Directed, no mean recompense it brings
To your behoof, if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expelled, reduce
To her original darkness and your sway
(Which is my present journey), and once more Erect the standard there of ancient Night.
Yours be the advantage all, mine the revenge!"

Thus Satan; and him thus the Anarch old,
With faltering speech and visage incomposed,
Answered: — "I know thee, stranger, who thou art —
That mighty leading Angel, who of late

1 wings.
2 Sandbanks and quick-sands off the Mediterranean coast of Africa.
3 The Arimaspians were a one-eyed people of Scythia, according to legend, who fought constantly with griffins for the gold guarded by these monsters.

Made head against Heaven's King, though overthrown.
I saw and heard; for such a numerous host Fled not in silence through the frighted Deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion worse confounded; and Heaven-gates
Poured out by millions her victorious bands,
Pursuing. I upon my frontiers here
Keep residence; if all I can will serve
That little which is left so to defend,
Encroached on still through our intestine broils
Weakening the sceptre of old Night: first, Hell,
Your dungeon, stretching far and wide beneath;
Now lately Heaven and Earth, another world
Hung o'er my realm, linked in a golden chain
To that side Heaven from whence your legions fell!
If that way be your walk, you have not far;
So much the nearer danger. Go, and speed;
Havoc, and spoil, and ruin, are my gain."
He ceased; and Satan staid not to reply,
But, glad that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity and force renewed
Springs upward, like a pyramid of fire,
Into the wild expanse, and through the shock
Of fighting elements, on all sides round
Environed, wins his way; harder beset
And more endangered than when Argo passed [1]
Through Bosporus betwixt the justling rocks,[2]
Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunned
Charybdis, and by the other Whirlpool steered.
So he with difficulty and labor hard
Moved on. With difficulty and labor he;
But, he once passed, soon after, when Man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain,
Following his track (such was the will of Heaven)
Paved after him a broad and beaten way
Over the dark Abyss, whose boiling gulf
Tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length,
From Hell continued, reaching the utmost Orb [3]
Of this frail World; by which the Spirits perverse
With easy intercourse pass to and fro
To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
God and good Angels guard by special grace.
But now at last the sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of Heaven
Shoots far into the bosom of dim Night
A glimmering dawn. Here Nature first begins
Her farthest verge, and Chaos to retire,
As from her outmost works, a broken foe,
With tumult less and with less hostile din;
That Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light,
And, like a weather-beaten vessel, holds [1]
Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn;
Or in the emptier waste, resembling air,
Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to behold
Far off the empyreal Heaven, extended wide
In circuit, undetermined square or round,
With opal towers and battlements adorned
Of living sapphire, once his native seat,
And, fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
This pendent World, in bigness as a star
Of smallest magnitude close by the moon.
Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurst, and in a cursèd hour, he hies.

1 An allusion to Jason and his search in the Argo for the golden fleece.

2 The Sympleglades, which moved together to crush boats sailing between.

3 The outermost of the ten concentric spheres surrounding the earth.

AREOPAGITICA

1644

Milton turned to pamphleteering in the service of his countrymen on his return from Italy. Recognizing as he says that there were three forms of liberty, ecclesiastical, domestic, and civil, he directed his efforts toward securing the first through the reform of the Church. Then occurred his unfortunate marriage, which brought to his mind strongly the necessity of the second. He published a series of pamphlets on the subject of divorce in which he discussed the relation of the individual and the State, arguing for large freedom of the former in matters concerning his own welfare and happiness. On account of the disturbed condition of the times the control of the press by the authorities had lapsed. In August, 1644, however, Parliament ordered that a new ordinance providing for the censorship of the press by the Stationers' Company should be prepared and directed that search should be made for the author and publisher of the divorce tracts. Upon this Milton published on November 24, 1644, his famous Areopagitica. It is in the form of an oration such as might have been delivered by one of the orators of Athens to the Areopagus, a representative assembly. In it Milton puts forth the arguments for individual freedom of opinion and expression, which are the basis of the liberal faith and the democratic theory of government. It will be noticed that Milton shows great and implicit faith in the individual, a faith which was stimulated by the example of his fellow citizens of London during the early, trying days of the Civil War, when the capture of the city was threatened by the royal forces. Later experience with the difficulties of government led Milton to modify his views of democracy and individual liberty. The Areopagitica, however, is a splendid monument to the English nation at a great moment of its history, and to Milton's own genius. The intellectual power of the argument and the sonorous style, formed on the model of the classical writers, mark it as one of the greatest examples of English prose.

1 makes for.

The Areopagitica is edited by J. W. Hales, published by the Clarendon Press. Another edition by Laura E. Lockwood is published in the Riverside College Classics by Houghton Mifflin Company.

A SPEECH FOR THE LIBERTY OF UNLICENSED PRINTING, TO THE PARLIAMENT OF ENGLAND

> This is true liberty, when free-born men,
> Having to advise the public, may speak free,
> Which he who can, and will, deserves high praise;
> Who neither can nor will, may hold his peace;
> What can be juster in a State than this?
> EURIPIDES, The Suppliants.

They who to states and governors of the Commonwealth direct their speech, High Court of Parliament, or, wanting such access in a private condition, write that which they foresee may advance the public good; I suppose them, as at the beginning of no mean endeavor, not a little altered [1] and moved inwardly in their minds: some with doubt of what will be the success,[2] others with fear of what will be the censure;[3] some with hope, others with confidence of what they have to speak. And me perhaps each of these dispositions, as the subject was whereon I entered, may have at other times variously affected; and likely might in these foremost expressions now also disclose which of them swayed most, but that the very attempt of this address thus made, and the thought of whom it hath recourse to, hath got the power within me to a passion, far more welcome than incidental to a preface.

Which though I stay not [4] to confess, ere any ask, I shall be blameless, if it be no other than the joy and gratulation which it brings to all who wish and promote their country's liberty; whereof this whole discourse proposed will be a certain testimony, if not a trophy. For this is not the liberty which we can hope, that no grievance ever should arise in the Commonwealth — that let no man in this world expect; but when complaints are freely heard, deeply considered, and speedily reformed, then is the utmost bound of civil liberty attained, that wise men look for. To which, if I now manifest by the very sound of this which I shall utter, that we are already in good part arrived, and yet from such a steep disadvantage of tyranny and superstition grounded into our principles as was beyond the manhood of a Roman recovery; [1] it will be attributed first, as is most due, to the strong assistance of God our deliverer, next to your faithful guidance and undaunted wisdom, Lords and Commons of England.

Neither is it, in God's esteem, the diminution of his glory, when honorable things are spoken of good men and worthy magistrates; which if I now first should begin to do, after so fair a progress of your laudable deeds, and such a long obligement upon the whole realm to [2] your indefatigable virtues, I might be justly reckoned among the tardiest and the unwillingest of them that praise ye.

Nevertheless, there being three principal things, without which all praising is but courtship and flattery: first, when that only is praised which is solidly worth praise; next, when greatest likelihoods are brought that such things are truly and really in those persons to whom they are ascribed; the other, when he who praises, by showing that such his actual persuasion is of whom he writes, can demonstrate that he flatters not; the former two of these I have heretofore endeavored, rescuing the employment from him [3] who went about to impair your merits with a trivial and malignant encomium; the latter, as belonging chiefly to mine own acquittal, that whom I so extolled I did not flatter, hath been reserved opportunely to this occasion. For he who freely magnifies what hath been nobly done, and fears not to declare as freely what might be done better, gives ye the best covenant of his fidelity; and that his loyalest affection and his hope waits on your proceedings. His highest praising is not flattery, and his plainest advice is a kind

1 disturbed. 2 outcome.
3 opinion. 4 hasten.

1 Rome failed to recover from conditions under the Emperors no worse than those under the Stuarts from which the English had just recovered.

2 for.

3 Joseph Hall (1574–1656), Bishop of Exeter and later of Norwich, a loyal Churchman, who wrote, at the request of Laud, in 1640, Episcopacy by Divine Right Asserted.

praising; for though I should affirm and ld by argument, that it would fare better th truth, with learning, and the Common- alth, if one of your published orders, which hould name, were called in; yet at the same me it could not but much redound to the stre of your mild and equal government, enas private persons are hereby animated think ye better pleased with public advice, an other statists [1] have been delighted here- fore with public flattery. And men will en see what difference there is between the agnanimity of a triennial [2] Parliament, and at jealous haughtiness of prelates and Cabin ounsellors [3] that usurped of late, whenas ey shall observe ye in the midst of your ctories and successes more gently brooking ritten exceptions against a voted order than her courts, which had produced nothing orth memory but the weak ostentation of ealth, would have endured the least signified slike at any sudden proclamation.

If I should thus far presume upon the eek demeanor of your civil and gentle reatness, Lords and Commons, as what your blished order hath directly said, that to ainsay, I might defend myself with ease, if ay should accuse me of being new or inso- nt, did they but know how much better I nd ye esteem it to imitate the old and ele- nt humanity of Greece, than the barbaric ride of a Hunnish and Norwegian statelі- ess. And out of those ages, to whose polite isdom and letters we owe that we are not et Goths and Jutlanders, I could name im [4] who from his private house wrote that iscourse to the Parliament of Athens, that ersuades them to change the form of de- nocraty which was then established. Such onor was done in those days to men who rofessed the study of wisdom and eloquence, ot only in their own country, but in other nds, that cities and seignories heard them adly, and with great respect, if they had ught in public to admonish the state. Thus id Dion [5] Prusæus, a stranger and a private rator, counsel the Rhodians against a former dict; and I abound with other like examples, hich to set here would be superfluous. But from the industry of a life wholly dedicated o studious labors, and those natural endow- ents haply not the worst for two and fifty degrees of northern latitude,[1] so much must be derogated, as to count me not equal to any of those who had this privilege, I would obtain to be thought not so inferior, as your- selves are superior to the most of them who received their counsel: and how far you excel them, be assured, Lords and Commons, there can no greater testimony appear, than when your prudent spirit acknowledges and obeys the voice of reason from what quarter soever it be heard speaking; and renders ye as willing to repeal any act of your own set- ting forth, as any set forth by your prede- cessors.

If ye be thus resolved, as it were injury to think ye were not, I know not what should withhold me from presenting ye with a fit instance wherein to show both that love of truth which ye eminently profess, and that uprightness of your judgment which is not wont to be partial to yourselves; by judging over again that Order which ye have ordained "to regulate Printing: that no book, pamph- let, or paper shall be henceforth printed, unless the same be first approved and licensed by such," or at least one of such as shall be thereto appointed. For that part which preserves justly every man's copy [2] to himself, or provides for the poor, I touch not, only wish they be not made pretences to abuse and persecute honest and painful [3] men, who offend not in either of these partic- ulars. But that other clause of Licensing Books, which we thought had died with his [4] brother quadragesimal [5] and matrimonial [6] when the prelates expired,[7] I shall now at- tend with such a homily, as shall lay before ye, first the inventors of it, to be those whom ye will be loth to own; next what is to be thought in general of reading, whatever sort the books be; and that this Order avails nothing to the suppressing of scandalous, seditious, and libellous books, which were mainly intended to be suppressed. Last, that it will be primely to the discouragement of all learning, and the stop of truth, not only by the disexercising and blunting our abilities in what we know already, but by hindering and cropping the discovery that might be yet further made both in religious and civil wisdom.

1 statesmen.
2 An act providing that Parliament should meet at ast once every three years was passed February 15, 1641.
3 A group of the King's favorites known, at that time, the Cabinet Council.
4 Isocrates.
5 Called Chrysostomus (the golden-tongued) because his eloquence; born at Prusa in Bithynia about 56 B.C.

1 Milton's opinion was that a cold climate is unfavor- able to literary production.
2 copyright. 3 painstaking. 4 its.
5 Lenten; referring to the observance of fast days during Lent.
6 Milton considered marriage a civil contract, entirely outside the church's jurisdiction.
7 The bill for the Exclusion of Bishops from Parlia- ment, passed February 5, 1642.

I deny not but that it is of greatest concernment in the Church and Commonwealth, to have a vigilant eye how books demean themselves as well as men; and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors. For books are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a potency of life in them to be as active as that soul was whose progeny they are; nay, they do preserve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively, and as vigorously productive, as those fabulous dragon's teeth; and being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men. And yet, on the other hand, unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as kill a good book: who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book, kills reason itself, kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious life-blood of a master spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. 'Tis true, no age can restore a life, whereof perhaps there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary, therefore, what persecution we raise against the living labors of public men, how we spill that seasoned life of man, preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of homicide may be thus committed, sometimes a martyrdom; and if it extend to the whole impression, a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at that ethereal and fifth essence,[1] the breath of reason itself, slays an immortality rather than a life. But lest I should be condemned of introducing licence, while I oppose licensing, I refuse not the pains to be so much historical, as will serve to show what hath been done by ancient and famous commonwealths against this disorder, till the very time that this project of licensing crept out of the Inquisition,[2] was caught up by our prelates, and hath caught some of our presbyters.[3]

In Athens, where books and wits were ever busier than in any other part of Greece, I find but only two sorts of writings which the magistrate cared to take notice of; those either blasphemous and atheistical, or libellous. Thus the books of Protagoras[1] were by the judges of Areopagus commanded to be burnt, and himself banished the territory for a discourse begun with his confessing not to know "whether there were gods, or whether not." And against defaming, it was agreed that none should be traduced by name, as was the manner of Vetus Comœdia,[2] whereby we may guess how they censured libelling; and this course was quick[3] enough, as Cicero writes,[4] to quell both the desperate wits of other atheists, and the open way of defaming, as the event showed. Of other sects and opinions, though tending to voluptuousness, and the denying of divine Providence, they took no heed. Therefore we do not read that either Epicurus, or that libertine school of Cyrene,[5] or what the Cynic impudence[6] uttered, was ever questioned by the laws. Neither is it recorded that the writings of those old comedians were suppressed, though the acting of them were forbid; and that Plato commended the reading of Aristophanes, the loosest of them all, to his royal scholar Dionysius,[7] is commonly known, and may be excused, if holy Chrysostom,[8] as is reported, nightly studied so much the same author, and had the art to cleanse a scurrilous vehemence into the style of a rousing sermon.

That other leading city of Greece, Lacedæmon, considering that Lycurgus their lawgiver was so addicted to elegant learning, as to have been the first that brought out of Ionia the scattered works of Homer, and sent the poet Thales[9] from Crete to prepare and mollify the Spartan surliness with his smooth songs and odes, the better to plant among them law and civility, it is to be wondered how museless and unbookish they were, minding nought but the feats of war. There needed no licensing of books among them, for they disliked all but their own

1 To the four elements known to the senses, Earth, Flood, Air, Fire, Aristotle added a fifth, ether, extending from the heaven of fixed stars to the moon.

2 From its early history, the Church of Rome encouraged a close supervision of all activities. At the Council of Toulouse in 1229 the Inquisition was organized.

3 Presbyterian elders, now in power, who were sponsoring this act.

1 Protagoras (c. 490 B.C.) of Thrace, one of the first sophists and teachers of rhetoric.

2 Classic Greek comedy, in which at first the comedians were licensed by law to make personal attacks.

3 powerful.

4 In De Natura Deorum, I, 23.

5 Aristippus (435?–399? B.C.) founded a school of philosophy at Cyrene which taught that pleasure was the highest good.

6 Antisthenes (b. 444 B.C.) founded the Cynic school at Athens which held that virtue, which consisted in a return to a state of nature, was the highest good.

7 Dionysius the elder (430?–367 B.C.), Tyrant of Syracuse.

8 John (347–407 A.D.), called Chrysostom (golden-tongued) on account of his eloquence, was Archbishop of Constantinople.

9 Thales, native of Crete, founded the second of the musical schools of Sparta.

ronic apothegms, and took a slight occaon to chase Archilochus [1] out of their city, rhaps for composing in a higher strain than eir own soldierly ballads and roundels could ach to; or if it were for his broad verses, ey were not therein so cautious, but they re as dissolute in their promiscuous conrsing; [2] whence Euripides affirms, in An-omache, that their women were all un-aste. Thus much may give us light after [3] at sort of books were prohibited among e Greeks.

The Romans also, for many ages trained only to a military roughness, resembling st of the Lacedæmonian guise, knew of rning little but what their Twelve Tables,[4] d the Pontific College with their augurs d flamens [5] taught them in religion and w; so unacquainted with other learning, at when Carneades and Critolaus,[6] with the oic Diogenes coming ambassadors to Rome, ok thereby occasion to give the city a taste their philosophy, they were suspected for ducers by no less a man than Cato the nsor, who moved it in the Senate to dis-iss them speedily, and to banish all such ttic babblers out of Italy. But Scipio and hers of the noblest senators withstood him
d his old Sabine austerity; honored and ad-ired the men; and the censor himself at st, in his old age, fell to the study of that hereof before he was so scrupulous. And t at the same time, Nævius and Plautus, e first Latin comedians, had filled the city ith all the borrowed scenes of Menander d Philemon.

Then began to be considered there also hat was to be done to libellous books and thors; for Nævius was quickly cast into ison for his unbridled pen, and released by e tribunes upon his recantation; we read so that libels were burnt, and the makers nished by Augustus. The like severity, doubt, was used, if aught were impiously ritten against their esteemed gods. Except these two points, how the world went in oks, the magistrate kept no reckoning.
nd therefore Lucretius [7] without impeachent versifies his Epicurism to Memmius, and had the honor to be set forth the second time by Cicero, so great a father of the commonwealth; although himself disputes [1] against that opinion in his own writings. Nor was the satirical sharpness or naked plainness of Lucilius, or Catullus, or Flaccus, by any order prohibited.

And for matters of state, the story [2] of Titus Livius, though it extolled that part which Pompey held, was not therefore suppressed by Octavius Cæsar of the other faction. But that Naso [3] was by him banished in his old age, for the wanton poems of his youth, was but a mere covert of state over some secret cause: and besides, the books were neither banished nor called in. From hence we shall meet with little else but tyranny in the Roman empire, that we may not marvel, if not so often bad as good books were silenced. I shall therefore deem to have been large enough, in producing what among the ancients was punishable to write, save only which, all other arguments were free to treat on.

By this time the emperors were become Christians,[4] whose discipline in this point I do not find to have been more severe than what was formerly in practice. The books of those whom they took to be grand heretics were examined, refuted, and condemned in the general councils; and not till then were prohibited, or burnt, by authority of the emperor. As for the writings of heathen authors, unless they were plain invectives against Christianity, as those of Porphyrius [5] and Proclus,[6] they met with no interdict that can be cited, till about the year 400, in a Carthaginian Council, wherein bishops themselves were forbid to read the books of Gentiles, but heresies they might read: while others long before them, on the contrary, scrupled more the books of heretics than of Gentiles. And that the primitive councils and bishops were wont only to declare what books were not commendable, passing no further, but leaving it to each one's conscience to read or to lay by, till after the year 800, is observed already by Padre Paolo,[7] the 1 Archilochus (c. 714–676 B.C.) one of the earliest lyric ets of Ionia.

2 conviviality. 3 as to.
4 Laws of Rome, engraved on bronze about 450 B.C., d studied in the schools until the time of Cicero.
5 Under the direction of the Pontific College, the prin- al college of priests in Rome, were the flamens, priests voted to the service of some particular deity, and the gurs, priests who foretold future events.
6 To protest against a fine imposed on the Athenians the destruction of Oropus.
7 In De Rerum Natura, a poem exalting Epicureanism d freedom from superstition.

1 In De Natura Deorum.
2 history.
3 Publius Ovidius Naso (43 B.C.–18 A.D.), the poet, known as Ovid, exiled from Rome in 8 A.D. for secret cause.
4 With Constantine, who issued the edict of toleration in 313.
5 Against the Christians by Porphyrius (233?–304?) was burned by order of the Emperor Theodosius in 435.
6 Proclus (411–495), like Porphyrius, one of the Neo-Platonists.
7 Padre Paolo (1552–1623), the name taken as a Servite monk by Pietro Sarpi. His History of the Council of Trent was published by Nathaniel Brent in London, 1620.

great unmasker of the Trentine Council.[1] After which time the Popes of Rome, engrossing what they pleased of political rule into their own hands, extended their dominion over men's eyes, as they had before over their judgments, burning and prohibiting to be read what they fancied not; yet sparing in their censures, and the books not many which they so dealt with; till Martin V,[2] by his bull, not only prohibited, but was the first that excommunicated the reading of heretical books; for about that time Wyclif and Huss growing terrible, were they who first drove the Papal Court to a stricter policy of prohibiting. Which course Leo X and his successors followed, until the Council of Trent and the Spanish Inquisition, engendering together, brought forth, or perfected those catalogues, and expurging indexes, that rake through the entrails of many an old good author, with a violation worse than any could be offered to his tomb.

Nor did they stay in matters heretical, but any subject that was not to their palate, they either condemned in a Prohibition,[3] or had it straight into the new Purgatory of an Index.[4] To fill up the measure of encroachment, their last invention was to ordain that no book, pamphlet, or paper should be printed (as if St. Peter had bequeathed them the keys of the press also out of Paradise) unless it were approved and licensed under the hands of two or three glutton friars. For example:

> Let the Chancellor Cini be pleased to see if in this present work be contained aught that may withstand the printing.
>
> Vincent Rabbatta, Vicar of Florence.
>
> I have seen this present work, and find nothing athwart the Catholic faith and good manners: in witness whereof I have given, &c.
>
> Nicolo Cini, Chancellor of Florence.
>
> Attending the precedent relation, it is allowed that this present work[5] of Davanzati may be printed.
>
> Vincent Rabatta, &c.
>
> It may be printed, July 15.
>
> Friar Simon Mompei d'Amelia,
>
> Chancellor of the Holy Office in Florence.

Sure they have a conceit, if he of the bottomless pit had not long since broke prison, that this quadruple exorcism would bar him down. I fear their next design will be to get into their custody the licensing of that which they say Claudius intended, but went not through with. Vouchsafe to see another of their forms, the Roman stamp:

> Imprimatur,[1] If it seem good to the reverend Master of the Holy Palace,
>
> Belcastro, Vicegerent.
>
> Imprimatur,
>
> Friar Nicolo Rodolphi,
>
> Master of the Holy Palace.

Sometimes five Imprimaturs are seen together, dialoguewise, in the piazza of one title-page, complimenting and ducking each to other with their shaven reverences, whether the author, who stands by in perplexity at the foot of his epistle, shall to the press or to the sponge. These are the prettie responsories, these are the dear antiphonies that so bewitched of late our prelates and their chaplains, with the goodly echo they made; and besotted us to the gay imitation of a lordly Imprimatur, one from Lambeth House,[2] another from the west end of Paul's; so apishly Romanising, that the word of command still was set down in Latin; as if the learned grammatical pen that wrote it would cast no ink without Latin; or perhaps, as they thought, because no vulgar[4] tongue was worthy to express the pure conceit[5] of an Imprimatur; but rather, as I hope, for that our English, the language of men, ever famous and foremost in the achievements of liberty, will not easily find servile letters enow to spell such a dictatory presumption English.

And thus ye have the inventors and the original of book-licensing ripped up and drawn as lineally as any pedigree. We have it not, that can be heard of, from any ancient state, or polity, or church, nor by any statute left us by our ancestors elder or later; nor from the modern custom of any reformed city or church abroad; but from the most anti-christian council and the most tyrannous inquisition that ever inquired.

Till then books were ever as freely admitted into the world as any other birth; the issue of the brain was no more stifled than the issue of the womb; no envious Juno[6] sat

1 The Council of Trent (1545–63).

2 Martin V. was Pope from 1417 to 1431.

3 The Index Librorum Prohibitorum, the list of books a Roman Catholic is forbidden to read.

4 The Index Expurgatorius, containing passages to be expurgated from books otherwise permitted to be read.

5 This was Dello Scismo d'Inghilterra, a history of the Church in England from 1501 to the death of Henry VIII.

1 "Let it be printed." The official licenser's mark.

2 The London residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

3 The palace of the Bishop of London, near St. Paul's Church.

4 other than Latin, the language of the learned.

5 idea, thought.

6 Alcmena was about to give birth to Heracles, son of Zeus, when jealous Hera attempted to hinder the birth for seven days, so that Eurystheus might be born first and win the powers that Jove had promised to the first descendant of Perseus.

oss-legged over the nativity of any man's ellectual offspring; but if it proved a mon-r, who denies but that it was justly burnt, sunk into the sea. But that a book, in rse condition than a peccant soul, should to stand before a jury ere it be born to the rld, and undergo yet in darkness the judg-ent of Radamanth [1] and his colleagues, ere can pass the ferry backward into light, was ver heard before, till that mysterious ini-ity,[2] provoked and troubled at the first trance of reformation, sought out new nbos and new hells wherein they might clude our books also within the number of eir damned. And this was the rare morsel officiously snatched up, and so ill-favoredly itated by our inquisiturient [3] bishops, and e attendant minorities,[4] their chaplains.
hat ye like not now these most certain thors of this licensing order, and that all nister intention was far distant from your oughts, when ye were importuned the pass-g it, all men who know the integrity of ur actions, and how ye honor truth, will ar ye readily.

But some will say, what though the inntors were bad, the thing for all that may good. It may so; yet if that thing be no ch deep invention, but obvious and easy r any man to light on, and yet best and isest commonwealths through all ages and casions have forborne to use it, and falsest ducers and oppressors of men were the first ho took it up, and to no other purpose but obstruct and hinder the first approach of formation; I am of those who believe, it ill be a harder alchymy than Lullius [5] ever ew, to sublimate any good use out of such invention. Yet this only is what I reuest to gain from this reason, that it may be eld a dangerous and suspicious fruit, as rtainly it deserves, for the tree that bore
, until I can dissect one by one the propties it has. But I have first to finish, as as propounded, what is to be thought in eneral of reading books, whatever sort they e, and whether be more the benefit or the arm that thence proceeds?

Not to insist upon the examples of Moses, aniel, and Paul, who were skilful in all the learning of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Greeks, which could not probably be without reading their books of all sorts; in Paul especially, who thought it no defilement to insert into Holy Scripture the sentences of three Greek poets, and one of them a tragedian; the question was notwithstanding sometimes controverted among the primitive doctors, but with great odds on that side which affirmed it both lawful and profitable, as was then evidently perceived, when Julian the Apostate and subtlest enemy to our faith, made a decree forbidding Christians the study of heathen learning; for, said he, they wound us with our own weapons, and with our own arts and sciences they overcome us. And, indeed, the Christians were put so to their shifts by this crafty means, and so much in danger to decline into all ignorance, that the two Apollinarii were fain, as a man may say, to coin all the seven liberal sciences [1] out of the Bible, reducing it into divers forms of orations, poems, dialogues, even to the calculating of a new Christian grammar. But, saith the historian Socrates,[2] the providence of God provided better than the industry of Apollinarius and his son, by taking away that illiterate law with the life of him who devised it.

So great an injury they then held it to be deprived of Hellenic learning; and thought it a persecution more undermining, and secretly decaying the Church, than the open cruelty of Decius or Diocletian. And perhaps it was the same politic drift that the devil whipped St. Jerome in a Lenten dream, for reading Cicero; or else it was a phantasm bred by the fever which had then seized him. For had an angel been his discipliner, unless it were for dwelling too much upon Ciceronianisms, and had chastised the reading, not the vanity, it had been plainly partial; first to correct him for grave Cicero, and not for scurril Plautus, whom he confesses to have been reading, not long before; next to correct him only, and let so many more ancient fathers wax old in those pleasant and florid studies without the lash of such a tutoring apparition; insomuch that Basil [3] teaches how some good use may be made of Margites, a sportful poem, not now extant, writ by Homer; and why not then of Morgante,[4] an

1 Son of Zeus and Europa, one of the judges of the lower orld.

2 The woman of Revelations XVII, identified with the apacy by sixteenth century Church reformers.

3 Of an inquisitorial tendency.

4 Friars Minor, or Franciscans. The position of the aplains Milton makes analogous to that of the Minorites in the Inquisition.

5 Raymond Lully (1235?–1315), inventor of a mechanical system of logic by which an answer to any uestion could be obtained.

1 These, the requirements of a liberal education, were then the Trivium: Grammar, Logic, Rhetoric; and the Quadrivium: Arithmetic, Geometry, Astronomy, Music.

2 Socrates Scholasticus (385?–440?), whose History embraces the period from 306 to 439.

3 Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, 370–79.

4 Morgante Maggiore, by Luigi Pulci (1431–87) a satirical romance, burlesquing romantic poetry.

Italian romance much to the same purpose?

But if it be agreed we shall be tried by visions, there is a vision recorded by Eusebius,[1] far ancienter than this tale of Jerome to the nun Eustochium, and, besides, has nothing of a fever in it. Dionysius[2] Alexandrinus was, about the year 240, a person of great name in the church for piety and learning, who had wont to avail himself much against heretics by being conversant in their books; until a certain presbyter laid it scrupulously to his conscience, how he durst venture himself among those defiling volumes. The worthy man, loth to give offence,[3] fell into a new debate with himself what was to be thought; when suddenly a vision sent from God (it is his own epistle that so avers it) confirmed him in these words: "Read any books whatever come to thy hands, for thou art sufficient both to judge aright, and to examine each matter." To this revelation he assented the sooner, as he confesses, because it was answerable to that of the Apostle to the Thessalonians: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

And he might have added another remarkable saying of the same author: "To the pure, all things are pure"; not only meats and drinks, but all kind of knowledge whether of good or evil; the knowledge cannot defile, nor consequently the books, if the will and conscience be not defiled. For books are as meats and viands are; some of good, some of evil substance; and yet God in that unapocryphal vision, said without exception, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat,"[4] leaving the choice to each man's discretion. Wholesome meats to a vitiated stomach differ little or nothing from unwholesome; and best books to a naughty mind are not unappliable to occasions of evil. Bad meats will scarce breed good nourishment in the healthiest concoction;[5] but herein the difference is of bad books, that they to a discreet and judicious reader serve in many respects to discover, to confute, to forewarn, and to illustrate.

Whereof what better witness can ye expect I should produce, than one of your own now sitting in Parliament, the chief of learned men reputed in this land, Mr. Selden;[6] whose volume of natural and national laws proves, not only by great authorities brought together, but by exquisite reasons and theorems almost mathematically demonstrative, that all opinions, yea errors, known, read, and collated, are of main service and assistance toward the speedy attainment of what is truest.

I conceive, therefore, that when God did enlarge the universal diet of man's body saving ever the rules of temperance, he then also, as before, left arbitrary the dieting and repasting of our minds; as wherein every mature man might have to exercise his own leading capacity. How great a virtue is temperance, how much of moment through the whole life of man! Yet God commits the managing so great a trust, without particular law or prescription, wholly to the demeanor[1] of every grown man. And therefore, when he himself tabled the Jews from heaven, that omer,[2] which was every man's daily portion of manna, is computed to have been more than might have well sufficed the heartiest feeder thrice as many meals. For those actions which enter into a man, rather than issue out of him, and therefore defile not, God uses not to captivate under a perpetual childhood of prescription, but trusts him with the gift of reason to be his own chooser; there were but little work left for preaching, if law and compulsion should grow so fast upon those things which heretofore were governed only by exhortation. Solomon informs us, that much reading is a weariness to the flesh; but neither he nor other inspired author tells us that such or such reading is unlawful, yet certainly had God thought good to limit us herein, it had been much more expedient to have told us what was unlawful, than what was wearisome.

As for the burning of those Ephesian books by St. Paul's converts; 'tis replied the books were magic, the Syriac so renders them. It was a private act, a voluntary act, and leaves us to a voluntary imitation: the men in remorse burnt those books which were their own; the magistrate by this example is not appointed;[3] these men practised the books, another might perhaps have read them in some sort usefully.

Good and evil we know in the field of this world grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil, and in so many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned, that those confused seeds which were imposed upon Psyche as an incessant

1 Bishop of Cæsarea, 314–340, sometimes called the Father of Ecclesiastical History.
2 Bishop of Alexandria, 247–265.
3 be the cause of sin. 4 Acts x, 9–16.
5 digestion.
6 John Selden (1584–1654), lawyer and member of Parliament.

1 management. 2 Cf. Exodus xvi, 16–36.
3 determined.

bor to cull out, and sort asunder, were not ore intermixed. It was from out the rind one apple tasted, that the knowledge of od and evil as two twins cleaving together, aped forth into the world. And perhaps is is that doom which Adam fell into of nowing good and evil, that is to say, of nowing good by evil.

As, therefore, the state of man now is; hat wisdom can there be to choose, what ntinence to forbear without the knowledge evil? He that can apprehend and consider ce with all her baits and seeming pleasures, nd yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet efer that which is truly better, he is the ue wayfaring Christian. I cannot praise a gitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised nd unbreathed, that never sallies out and es her adversary, but slinks out of the race, here that immortal garland is to be run for, ot without dust and heat. Assuredly we ring not innocence into the world; we bring npurity much rather; that which purifies s is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. hat virtue, therefore, which is but a young- ng in the contemplation of evil, and knows ot the utmost that vice promises to her fol- wers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, ot a pure; her whiteness is but an excre- ental [1] whiteness; which was the reason why ur sage and serious poet Spenser, whom I are be known to think a better teacher than cotus [2] or Aquinas, describing true temper- nce under the person of Guion, brings him with his palmer through the cave of Mam- ion,[3] and the bower of earthly bliss, that he ight see and know, and yet abstain.

Since, therefore, the knowledge and survey f vice is in this world so necessary to the onstituting of human virtue, and the scan- ing of error to the confirmation of truth, ow can we more safely, and with less dan- er, scout into the regions of sin and falsity, han by reading all manner of tractates and earing all manner of reason? And this is he benefit which may be had of books pro- miscuously read.

But of the harm that may result hence, hree kinds are usually reckoned. First, is eared the infection that may spread; but hen all human learning and controversy in eligious points must remove out of the vorld, yea the Bible itself; for that ofttimes relates blasphemy not nicely, it describes the carnal sense of wicked men not unelegantly, it brings in holiest men passionately murmuring against Providence through all the arguments of Epicurus; in other great disputes it answers dubiously and darkly to the common reader; and asks a Talmudist what ails the modesty of his marginal Keri,[1] that Moses and all the prophets cannot persuade him to pronounce the textual Chetiv.[2] For these causes we all know the Bible itself put by the Papist into the first rank of prohibited books. The ancientest fathers must be next removed, as Clement of Alexandria,[3] and that Eusebian book of Evangelic preparation [4] transmitting our ears through a hoard of heathenist obscenities to receive the Gospel. Who finds not that Irenæus, Epiphanius,[5] Jerome, and others discover more heresies than they well confute, and that oft for heresy which is the truer opinion?

Nor boots it to say for these, and all the heathen writers of greatest infection, if it must be thought so, with whom is bound up the life of human learning, that they writ in an unknown tongue, so long as we are sure those languages are known as well to the worst of men, who are both most able and most diligent to instil the poison they suck, first into the courts of princes, acquainting them with the choicest delights, and criticisms [6] of sin. As perhaps did that Petronius whom Nero called his Arbiter, the master of his revels; and the notorious ribald of Arezzo,[7] dreaded and yet dear to the Italian courtiers. I name not him for posterity's sake, whom Henry VIII named in merriment his Vicar of hell.[8] By which compendious way all the contagion that foreign books can infuse, will find a passage to the people far easier and shorter than an Indian voyage, though it could be sailed either by the north of Cathay eastward, or of Canada westward, while our Spanish licensing gags the English press never so severely.

1 superficial. Hair, mustaches, finger nails, were referred to in this period as excrement.

2 John Duns Scotus (1265?–1308), a Franciscan, and Thomas Aquinas (1225?–74), famous teachers and theologians, and founders of the opposing schools of Scotists and Thomists.

3 Cf. Spenser's Faerie Queen, II, VII.

1 That which is read.

2 That which is written. In the Talmud, if a passage seemed unfit to read, a gloss (Keri) was written in the margin.

3 Clement of Alexandria (about 200 A.D.), in order to convert the Greeks, described in his Horiatory Address to the Greeks the obscenity of many of their religious practices.

4 The Preparatio Evangelica, a collection of quotations from pagan philosophers.

5 Irenæus (140?–202?), Bishop of Lyons, and Epiphanius (315–403), Bishop of Constantia, both wrote works describing and confuting heresies.

6 subtle points.

7 Pietro Aretino (1492–1557), banished from Arezzo and later from Rome for his satires.

8 The allusion here is uncertain, possibly to Wolsey or to Thomas Cromwell.

But, on the other side, that infection which is from books of controversy in religion, is more doubtful and dangerous to the learned than to the ignorant; and yet those books must be permitted untouched by the licenser. It will be hard to instance where any ignorant man hath been ever seduced by papistical book in English, unless it were commended and expounded to him by some of that clergy; and indeed all such tractates, whether false or true, are as the prophecy of Isaiah was to the eunuch,[1] "not to be understood without a guide." But of our priests and doctors how many have been corrupted by studying the comments of Jesuits and Sorbonists,[2] and how fast they could transfuse that corruption into the people, our experience is both late and sad. It is not forgot, since the acute and distinct Arminius[3] was perverted merely by the perusing of a nameless[4] discourse written at Delft, which at first he took in hand to confute.

Seeing, therefore, that those books, and those in great abundance, which are likeliest to taint both life and doctrine, cannot be suppressed without the fall of learning, and of all ability in disputation; and that these books of either sort are most and soonest catching to the learned, from whom to the common people whatever is heretical or dissolute may quickly be conveyed; and that evil manners are as perfectly learned without books a thousand other ways which cannot be stopped; and evil doctrine not with books can propagate, except a teacher guide, which he might also do without writing, and so beyond prohibiting: I am not able to unfold, how this cautelous[5] enterprise of licensing can be exempted from the number of vain and impossible attempts. And he who were pleasantly disposed, could not well avoid to liken it to the exploit of that gallant man, who thought to pound up the crows by shutting his park gate.

Besides another inconvenience, if learned men be the first receivers out of books and dispreaders both of vice and error, how shall the licensers themselves be confided in, unless we can confer upon them, or they assume to themselves above all others in the land, the grace of infallibility and uncorruptedness? And again, if it be true, that a wise man, like a good refiner, can gather gold out of the drossiest volume, and that a fool will be a fool with the best book, yea or without book, there is no reason that we should deprive a wise man of any advantage to his wisdom, while we seek to restrain from a fool that which being restrained will be no hindrance to his folly. For if there should be so much exactness always used to keep that from him which is unfit for his reading, we should, in the judgment of Aristotle not only, but of Solomon and of our Saviour, not vouchsafe him good precepts, and by consequence not willingly admit him to good books; as being certain that a wise man will make better use of an idle pamphlet, than a fool will do of sacred Scripture.

'Tis next alleged we must not expose ourselves to temptations without necessity, and next to that, not employ our time in vain things. To both these objections one answer will serve, out of the grounds already laid; that to all men such books are not temptations nor vanities, but useful drugs and materials wherewith to temper, and compose effective and strong medicines, which man's life cannot want.[1] The rest, as children and childish men, who have not the art to qualify[2] and prepare these working minerals, well may be exhorted to forbear, but hindered forcibly they cannot be by all the licensing that sainted Inquisition could ever yet contrive. Which is what I promised to deliver next: that this order of licensing conduces nothing to the end for which it was framed and hath almost prevented me by being clear already, while thus much hath been explaining. See the ingenuity[3] of Truth, who, when she gets a free and willing hand, opens herself faster than the pace of method and discourse can overtake her.

It was the task which I began with, to show that no nation, or well instituted state, if they valued books at all, did ever use this way of licensing; and it might be answered that this is a piece of prudence lately discovered. To which I return, that as it was a thing slight and obvious to think on, so if it had been difficult to find out, there wanted not among them long since who suggested such a course; which they not following, leave us a pattern of their judgment that it was not the not knowing, but the not approving, which was the cause of their not using it.

Plato, a man of high authority indeed, but least of all for his commonwealth, in the book

1 Acts VIII, 28–35.

2 Students at the school founded in 1252 by Robert de Sorbon especially for poor students.

3 Arminius (1560–1609), a Dutch theologian, who, during his studies to defend the doctrine of predestination, lost his own conviction, and finally rejected it.

4 anonymous. 5 deceitful.

1 be without. 2 moderate the strength of.
3 ingenuousness. 4 reasoning.

his laws, which no city ever yet received, il his fancy with making many edicts to his ry burgomasters, which they who otherse admire him, wish had been rather buried d excused in the genial cups of an Acamic [1] night sitting. By which laws [2] he ems to tolerate no kind of learning, but by alterable decree, consisting most of practal traditions, to the attainment whereof a rary of smaller bulk than his own dialogues uld be abundant. And there also enacts, at no poet should so much as read to any ivate man what he had written, until the lges and law-keepers had seen it, and alved it; but that Plato meant this law pecurly to that commonwealth which he had agined, and to no other, is evident. Why s he not else a lawgiver to himself, but a nsgressor, and to be expelled by his own agistrates; both for the wanton epigrams d dialogues which he made, and his pertual reading of Sophron [3] Mimus, and ristophanes, books of grossest infamy; and so for commending the latter of them, ough he were the malicious libeller of his ief friends, to be read by the tyrant Dionys, who had little need of such trash to end his time on? But that he knew this censing of poems had reference and dendence to many other provisos there set wn in his fancied republic, which in this orld could have no place; and so neither he mself, nor any magistrate, or city ever imited that course, which, taken apart from ose other collateral injunctions, must needs e vain and fruitless.

For if they fell upon [4] one kind of strictss, unless their care were equal to regulate l other things of like aptness to corrupt the ind, that single endeavor they knew would e but a fond labor; to shut and fortify one ate against corruption, and be necessitated leave others round about wide open. If e think to regulate printing, thereby to ctify manners, we must regulate all recretions and pastimes, all that is delightful to an. No music must be heard, no song be et or sung, but what is grave and Doric.[5] here must be licensing dancers, that no sture, motion, or deportment be taught ur youth, but what by their allowance shall e thought honest; for such Plato was pro-

1 Plato founded the famous Academy at Athens in 387 B.C.

2 Plato: Laws, VII, 808–12.

3 Of Syracuse (5th century B.C.), whose Mimes, or mimic dialogues, are supposed to have been very coarse and lively, and were studied by Plato to give animation to his own dialogues.

4 decided on. 5 severe.

vided of. It will ask more than the work of twenty licensers to examine all the lutes, the violins, and the guitars in every house; they must not be suffered to prattle as they do, but must be licensed what they may say. And who shall silence all the airs and madrigals that whisper softness in chambers? The windows also, and the balconies must be thought on; these are shrewd [1] books, with dangerous frontispieces, set to sale; who shall prohibit them, shall twenty licensers? The villages also must have their visitors [2] to inquire what lectures the bagpipe and the rebeck reads even to the ballatry,[3] and the gamut of every municipal fiddler, for these are the countryman's Arcadias,[4] and his Monte Mayors.[5]

Next, what more national corruption, for which England hears ill [6] abroad, than household gluttony? Who shall be the rectors of our daily rioting? And what shall be done to inhibit the multitudes that frequent those houses where drunkenness is sold and harbored? Our garments also should be referred to the licensing of some more sober workmasters, to see them cut into a less wanton garb. Who shall regulate all the mixed conversation [7] of our youth, male and female together, as is the fashion of this country? Who shall still appoint what shall be discoursed, what presumed, and no further? Lastly, who shall forbid and separate all idle resort,[8] all evil company? These things will be, and must be; but how they shall be least hurtful, how least enticing, herein consists the grave and governing wisdom of a state.

To sequester out of the world into Atlantic [9] and Utopian [10] polities, which never can be drawn into use, will not mend our condition; but to ordain wisely as in this world of evil, in the midst whereof God hath placed us unavoidably. Nor is it Plato's licensing of books will do this, which necessarily pulls along with it so many other kinds of licensing, as will make us all both ridiculous and weary, and yet frustrate; but those unwritten, or at least unconstraining, laws of virtuous education, religious and civil nurture,

1 mischievous.

2 An odious word in England since Laud's visitors were sent out to oversee the morals of the people.

3 ballad poetry.

4 Sidney's Arcadia, published 1590.

5 Jorge de Montemayor (1520?–61), whose Diana Enamorada started the vogue of the prose pastoral romance.

6 is reputed ill.

7 conviviality.

8 those frequenting a certain place.

9 Bacon's New Atlantis, the story of an ideal commonwealth.

10 Sir Thomas More's Utopia.

which Plato there mentions[1] as the bonds and ligaments of the commonwealth, the pillars and the sustainers of every written statute; these they be which will bear chief sway in such matters as these, when all licensing will be easily eluded. Impunity and remissness, for certain, are the bane of a commonwealth; but here the great art lies, to discern in what the law is to bid restraint and punishment, and in what things persuasion only is to work. If every action which is good or evil in man at ripe years, were to be under pittance and prescription and compulsion, what were virtue but a name, what praise could be then due to well-doing, what gramercy[2] to be sober, just, or continent?

Many there be that complain of divine Providence for suffering Adam to transgress. Foolish tongues! when God gave him reason, he gave him freedom to choose, for reason is but choosing; he had been else a mere artificial Adam, such an Adam as he is in the motions.[3] We ourselves esteem not of that obedience, or love, or gift, which is of force; God, therefore, left him free, set before him a provoking[4] object, ever almost in his eyes; herein consisted his merit, herein the right of his reward, the praise of his abstinence. Wherefore did he create passions within us, pleasures round about us, but that these rightly tempered are the very ingredients of virtue? They are not skilful considerers of human things, who imagine to remove sin by removing the matter of sin; for, besides that it is a huge heap increasing under the very act of diminishing, though some part of it may for a time be withdrawn from some persons, it cannot from all, in such a universal thing as books are; and when this is done, yet the sin remains entire. Though ye take from a covetous man all his treasure, he has yet one jewel left, ye cannot bereave him of his covetousness. Banish all objects of lust, shut up all youth into the severest discipline that can be exercised in any hermitage, ye cannot make them chaste, that came not thither so: such great care and wisdom is required to the right managing of this point.

Suppose we could expel sin by this means; look how much we thus expel of sin, so much we expel of virtue: for the matter of them both is the same; remove that, and ye remove them both alike. This justifies the high providence of God, who, though he commands us temperance, justice, continence, yet pours out before us, even to a profuseness, all desirable things, and gives [illegible] minds that can wander beyond all limit and satiety. Why should we then affect a rigor contrary to the manner of God and of nature by abridging or scanting those means, which books freely permitted are, both to the trial of virtue, and the exercise of truth?

It would be better done, to learn that the law must needs be frivolous,[1] which goes to restrain things, uncertainly and yet equally working to good and to evil. And were I the chooser, a dram of well doing should be preferred before many times as much the forcible hindrance of evil doing. For God sure esteems the growth and completing of one virtuous person, more than the restraint of ten vicious. And albeit whatever thing we hear or see, sitting, walking, travelling, or conversing, may be fitly called our book, and is of the same effect that writings are; yet grant the thing to be prohibited were only books, it appears that this order hitherto is far insufficient to the end which it intends. Do we not see, not once or oftener, but weekly that continued court-libel[2] against the Parliament and City, printed, as the wet sheets can witness, and dispersed among us, for all that licensing can do? Yet this is the prime service a man would think, wherein this Order should give proof of itself. If it were executed, you'll say. But certain, if execution be remiss or blindfold now, and in this particular, what will it be hereafter and in other books?

If then the Order shall not be vain and frustrate, behold a new labor, Lords and Commons; ye must repeal and proscribe all scandalous and unlicensed books already printed and divulged; [3] after ye have drawn them up into a list, that all may know which are condemned, and which not; and ordain that no foreign books be delivered out of custody, till they have been read over. This office will require the whole time of not a few overseers, and those no vulgar men. There be also books which are partly useful and excellent, partly culpable and pernicious; this work will ask as many more officials, to make expurgations and expunctions, that the commonwealth of learning be not damnified.[4] In fine, when the multitude of books increase upon their hands, ye must be fain to catalogue all those printers who are found fre-

1 Plato, Republic, IV, 424; Laws, I, 643.
2 thanks. 3 puppet shows. 4 provocative.

1 unimportant.
2 Refers to the Mercurius Aulicus, a weekly newspaper published by Sir John Birkenhead (1616–79) virulently Royalist in policy, and attacking Parliament in every possible way.
3 published. 4 injured.

iently offending, and forbid the importa-on of their whole suspected typography.
a word, that this your Order may be exact,
d not deficient, ye must reform it perfectly cording to the model of Trent and Seville, nich I know ye abhor to do.

Yet, though ye should condescend [1] to this, nich God forbid, the Order still would be t fruitless and defective to that end nereto ye meant it. If to prevent sects and hisms, who is so unread or so uncatechized story, that hath not heard of many sects fusing books as a hindrance, and preserving eir doctrine unmixed for many ages, only unwritten traditions? The Christian ith, for that was once a schism, is not un-own to have spread all over Asia, ere any ospel or Epistle was seen in writing. If e amendment of manners be aimed at, look to Italy and Spain, whether those places be e scruple the better, the honester, the ser, the chaster, since all the inquisitional gor that hath been executed upon books.

Another reason, whereby to make it plain at this Order will miss the end it seeks, nsider by the quality which ought to be in ery licenser. It cannot be denied but that e who is made judge to sit upon the birth or eath of books, whether they may be wafted to this world or not, had need to be a man ove the common measure, both studious, arned, and judicious; there may be else no
ean mistakes in the censure of what is pass-le or not; which is also no mean injury. If e be of such worth as behoves him, there nnot be a more tedious and unpleasing urney-work,[2] a greater loss of time levied on his head, than to be made the perpetual ader of unchosen books and pamphlets, ttimes huge volumes. There is no book at is acceptable unless at certain seasons;
t to be enjoined the reading of that at all mes, and in a hand scarce legible, whereof ree pages would not down at any time in e fairest print, is an imposition which I canot believe how he that values time and his n studies, or is but of a sensible[3] nostril, ould be able to endure.

In this one thing I crave leave of the present ensers to be pardoned for so thinking; who oubtless took this office up, looking on it rough their obedience to the Parliament, hose command perhaps made all things em easy and unlaborious to them; but that is short trial hath wearied them out al-eady, their own expressions and excuses to them who make so many journeys to solicit their license, are testimony enough. Seeing, therefore, those who now possess the employment, by all evident signs wish themselves well rid of it, and that no man of worth, none that is not a plain unthrift of his own hours is ever likely to succeed them, except he mean to put himself to the salary of a press corrector, we may easily foresee what kind of licensers we are to expect hereafter, either ignorant, imperious, and remiss, or basely pecuniary. This is what I had to show, wherein this Order cannot conduce to that end, whereof it bears the intention.

I lastly proceed from the no good it can do, to the manifest hurt it causes, in being first the greatest discouragement and affront that can be offered to learning and to learned men.

It was the complaint and lamentation of prelates, upon every least breath of a motion to remove pluralities, and distribute more equally church revenues, that then all learning would be for ever dashed and discouraged. But as for that opinion, I never found cause to think that the tenth part of learning stood or fell with the clergy; nor could I ever but hold it for a sordid and unworthy speech of any churchman who had a competency left him. If, therefore, ye be loth to dishearten heartily and discontent, not the mercenary crew of false pretenders to learning, but the free and ingenuous sort of such as evidently were born to study, and love learning for itself, not for lucre, or any other end, but the service of God and of truth, and perhaps that lasting fame and perpetuity of praise which God and good men have consented shall be the reward of those whose published labors advance the good of mankind; then know, that so far to distrust the judgment and the honesty of one who hath but a common repute in learning, and never yet offended, as not to count him fit to print his mind, without a tutor and examiner, lest he should drop a schism, or something of corruption, is the greatest displeasure and indignity to a free and knowing spirit that can be put upon him.

What advantage is it to be a man over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only escaped the ferula to come under the fescue [1] of an Imprimatur; if serious and elaborate writings, as if they were no more than the theme of a grammar-lad under his pedagogue, must not be uttered without the cursory eyes of a

1 agree. 2 work of a journeyman.
3 sensitive.

1 A twig; it came to mean the pointer used in pointing out letters to children learning to read.

temporizing and extemporizing licenser? He who is not trusted with his own actions, his drift not being known to be evil, and standing to [1] the hazard of law and penalty, has no great argument to think himself reputed, in the commonwealth wherein he was born, for other than a fool or a foreigner. When a man writes to the world, he summons up all his reason and deliberation to assist him; he searches, meditates, is industrious, and likely consults and confers with his judicious friends; after all which done he takes himself to be informed in what he writes, as well as any that writ before him; if in this the most consummate act of his fidelity and ripeness, no years, no industry, no former proof of his abilities can bring him to that state of maturity, as not to be still mistrusted and suspected, unless he carry all his considerate [2] diligence, all his midnight watchings, and expense of Palladian oil,[3] to the hasty view of an unleisured licenser, perhaps much his younger, perhaps far his inferior in judgment, perhaps one who never knew the labor of book-writing; and if he be not repulsed, or slighted, must appear in print like a puny [4] with his guardian, and his censor's hand on the back of his title to be his bail and surety, that he is no idiot, or seducer; it cannot be but a dishonor and derogation to the author, to the book, to the privilege and dignity of learning.

And what if the author shall be one so copious of fancy, as to have many things well worth the adding, come into his mind after licensing, while the book is yet under the press, which not seldom happens to the best and diligentest writers; and that perhaps a dozen times in one book. The printer dares not go beyond his licensed copy; so often then must the author trudge to his leave-giver, that those his new insertions may be viewed; and many a jaunt will be made, ere that licenser, for it must be the same man, can either be found, or found at leisure; meanwhile, either the press must stand still, which is no small damage, or the author lose his accuratest thoughts, and send the book forth worse than he had made it, which to a diligent writer is the greatest melancholy [5] and vexation that can befall.

And how can a man teach with authority, which is the life of teaching, how can he be a doctor in his book as he ought to be, or else had better be silent, whenas all he teaches, all he delivers, is but under the tuition, under the correction of his patriarchal licenser to blot or alter what precisely accords not with the hide-bound humor which he calls his judgment? When every acute reader upon the first sight of a pedantic license, will be ready with these like words to ding [1] the book a quoit's distance from him; "I hate a pupil teacher, I endure not an instructor that comes to me under the wardship of an overseeing fist.[2] I know nothing of the licenser, but that I have his own hand here for his arrogance; who shall warrant me his judgment?"

"The State, sir," replies the stationer,[3] but has a quick return: "The State shall be my governors, but not my critics; they may be mistaken in the choice of a licenser, as easily as this licenser may be mistaken in an author; this [4] is some common stuff"; and he might add from Sir Francis Bacon, "That such authorized books are but the language of the times." For though a licenser should happen to be judicious more than ordinary, which will be a great jeopardy of the next succession,[5] yet his very office, and his commission enjoins him to let pass nothing but what is vulgarly [6] received already.

Nay, which is more lamentable, if the works of any deceased author, though never so famous in his lifetime, and even to this day, come to their hands for licence to be printed or reprinted; if there be found in his book one sentence of a venturous edge, uttered in the height of zeal, and who knows whether it might not be the dictate of a divine spirit, yet not suiting with every low, decrepit humor of their own, though it were Knox himself, the reformer of a kingdom, that spake it, they will not pardon him their dash; the sense of that great man shall to all posterity be lost, for the fearfulness, or the presumptuous rashness, of a perfunctory licenser. And to what an author this violence hath been lately done, and in what book of greatest consequence to be faithfully published, I could now instance, but shall forbear till a more convenient season.

Yet if these things be not resented seriously and timely by them who have the remedy in their power, but that such iron

1 taking the chance of. 2 careful.
3 Pallas, to whom the olive was sacred, taught mortals the means of extracting the oil. The phrase implies wisdom in both words, since Pallas was the goddess of wisdom, and oil the light by which men read.
4 a minor. 5 humiliation.

1 Not an English word; probably, to throw.
2 handwriting. 3 publisher, bookseller.
4 "particular book" implied.
5 Implying that if one licenser is very good the succeeding one will appear very bad in comparison.
6 commonly, generally.
7 line drawn through censored material.

oulds[1] as these shall have authority to aw out the choicest periods of exquisite ooks, and to commit such a treacherous aud against the orphan remainders of rthiest men after death, the more sorrow ll belong to that hapless race of men, hose misfortune it is to have understand-g. Henceforth, let no man care to learn, care to be more than worldly wise; for rtainly in higher matters to be ignorant d slothful, to be a common steadfast nce, will be the only pleasant life, and only request.

And as it is a particular disesteem of every owing person alive, and most injurious to e written labors and monuments of the ead, so to me it seems an undervaluing and lifying of the whole nation. I cannot set light by all the invention, the art, the wit, e grave and solid judgment which is in ngland, that it can be comprehended in y twenty capacities how good soever; uch less that it should not pass except their perintendence be over it, except it be sifted nd strained with their strainers; that it hould be uncurrent without their manual amp. Truth and understanding are not ch wares as to be monopolised and traded by tickets[2] and statutes and standards. We must not think to make a staple com-odity of all the knowledge in the land, to ark and license it like our broadcloth and r woolpacks. What is it but a servitude ke that imposed by the Philistines,[3] not to allowed the sharpening of our own axes nd coulters,[4] but we must repair from all uarters to twenty licensing forges.

Had any one written and divulged erro-eous things and scandalous to honest life, isusing and forfeiting the esteem had of his eason among men; if, after conviction, this ly censure were adjudged him, that he hould never henceforth write, but what ere first examined by an appointed officer, hose hand should be annexed to pass his edit for him, that now he might be safely ead; it could not be apprehended less than disgraceful punishment.

Whence, to include the whole nation, and hose that never yet thus offended, under ch a diffident[5] and suspectful prohibition, ay plainly be understood what a disparage-ent it is. So much the more, whenas ebtors and delinquents may walk abroad ithout a keeper, but unoffensive books must not stir forth without a visible jailor in their title. Nor is it to the common people less than a reproach; for if we be so jealous[1] over them, as that we dare not trust them with an English pamphlet, what do we but censure them for a giddy, vicious, and ungrounded people; in such a sick and weak state of faith and discretion, as to be able to take nothing down but through the pipe[2] of a licenser. That this is care or love of them, we cannot pretend, whenas in those popish places where the laity are most hated and despised, the same strictness is used over them. Wisdom we cannot call it, because it stops but one breach of licence, nor that neither; whenas those corruptions which it seeks to prevent, break in faster at other doors which cannot be shut.

And in conclusion, it reflects to the disrepute of our ministers also, of whose labors we should hope better, and of the proficiency which their flock reaps by them, than that after all this light of the Gospel which is, and is to be, and all this continual preaching, they should be still frequented with such an unprincipled, unedified, and laic rabble, as that the whiff of every new pamphlet should stagger them out of their catechism and Christian walking. This may have much reason to discourage the ministers, when such a low conceit[3] is had of all their exhortations, and the benefiting of their hearers, as that they are not thought fit to be turned loose to three sheets of paper without a licenser; that all the sermons, all the lectures preached, printed, vented in such numbers, and such volumes, as have now well-nigh made all other books unsaleable, should not be armor enough against one single enchiridion, without the castle of St. Angelo of an Imprimatur.[4]

And lest some should persuade ye, Lords and Commons, that these arguments of learned men's discouragement at this your Order are mere flourishes, and not real, I could recount what I have seen and heard in other countries, where this kind of inquisition tyrannises; when I have sat among their learned men, for that honor I had, and been counted happy to be born in such a place of philosophic freedom, as they supposed England was, while themselves did nothing but bemoan the servile condition into which learning amongst them was brought; that 1 rust. 2 special permissions.

3 See I Sam XIII, 19–22.
4 plowshares. 5 distrustful.

1 suspicious. 2 tube for swallowing medicine.
3 conception, idea.
4 The phrase means: without the protection of a Papal license. The Castle of Saint Angelo, built in 136 A.D. by Hadrian, was used until 217 as the tomb of the Emperors. From 1389 to 1404 it was held by the Popes as a stronghold; in Milton's time it was the Papal prison.

this was it which had damped the glory of Italian wits; that nothing had been there written now these many years but flattery and fustian. There it was that I found and visited the famous Galileo,[1] grown old, a prisoner to the Inquisition, for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licensers thought. And though I knew that England then[2] was groaning loudest under the prelatical yoke, nevertheless I took it as a pledge of future happiness, that other nations were so persuaded of her liberty.

Yet was it beyond my hope that those worthies were then breathing in her air, who should be her leaders to such a deliverance, as shall never be forgotten by any revolution of time that this world hath to finish. When that was once begun, it was as little in my fear, that what words of complaint I heard among learned men of other parts uttered against the Inquisition, the same I should hear by as learned men at home uttered in time of Parliament against an order of licensing; and that so generally, that when I had disclosed myself a companion of their discontent, I might say, if without envy,[3] that he whom an honest quæstorship had endeared to the Sicilians, was not more by them importuned against Verres,[4] than the favorable opinion which I had among many who honor ye, and are known and respected by ye, loaded me with entreaties and persuasions, that I would not despair to lay together that which just reason should bring into my mind, toward the removal of an undeserved thraldom upon learning.

That this is not, therefore, the disburdening of a particular fancy, but the common grievance of all those who had prepared their minds and studies above the vulgar pitch to advance truth in others, and from others to entertain it, thus much may satisfy. And in their name I shall for neither friend nor foe conceal what the general murmur is; that if it come to inquisitioning again and licensing, and that we are so timorous of ourselves, and so suspicious of all men, as to fear each book, and the shaking of every leaf, before we know what the contents are; if some who but of late were little better than silenced from preaching, shall come now to silence us from reading, except what they please, it cannot be guessed what is intended by some but a second tyranny over learning; and will soon put it out of controversy, that bishops and presbyters are the same to us both name and thing.

That those evils of prelaty which before from five or six and twenty sees were distributively charged upon the whole people will now light wholly upon learning, is not obscure to us; whenas now the pastor of a small unlearned parish, on the sudden, shall be exalted archbishop over a large diocese of books, and yet not remove, but keep his other cure too, a mystical[1] pluralist. He who but of late cried down the sole ordination of every novice bachelor of art, and denied sole jurisdiction over the simplest parishioner, shall now at home in his private chair assume both these over worthiest and excellentest books, and ablest authors that write them. This is not, ye covenants and protestations[2] that we have made! This is not to put down prelaty; this is but to chop[3] an episcopacy; this is but to translate the palace metropolitan from one kind of dominion into another; this is but an old canonical sleight of commuting our penance.[4] To startle thus betimes at a mere unlicensed pamphlet will after a while be afraid of every conventicle,[5] and a while after will make a conventicle of every Christian meeting.

But I am certain that a state governed by the rules of justice and fortitude, or a church built and founded upon the rock of faith and true knowledge, cannot be so pusillanimous. While things are yet not constituted[6] in religion, that freedom of writing should be restrained by a discipline imitated from the prelates, and learnt by them from the Inquisition, to shut us up all again into the breast of a licenser, must needs give cause of doubt and discouragement to all learned and religious men. Who cannot but discern the fineness of this politic drift, and who are

1 Galileo (1564–1642). Milton saw Galileo when he was living in retirement after 1632, when he had published his Dialogo dei due Massimi Sistemi del Mondo in defiance of an edict by which he was distrained from writing anything in accordance with the Copernican theory, as a result of which he was forced to recant before the Inquisition.

2 In 1638, under the domination of Laud.

3 without exciting malice.

4 C. Cornelius Verres, against whose bad government in Sicily Cicero directed his seven famous orations.

1 mysterious, or, perhaps, inexplicable.

2 Including the National Covenant, signed in Scotland in 1638, for the purpose of recovering the purity and liberty of the Gospel; the Solemn League and Covenant, between the English and Scottish nations, of 1643–44; the Protestation of the House of Commons in 1641, in which it was vowed "to maintain . . . the true Reformed Protestant Religion . . . against all Popery and Popish innovations."

3 exchange one episcopacy for another.

4 exchanging one penance for another, permitted by the Canon Law.

5 In Milton's time the significance of this word had been narrowed down from "meeting" to a meeting prohibited by law, of Nonconformists or Dissenters.

6 settled.

contrivers: that while bishops were to be ted down,[1] then all the presses might be n; it was the people's birthright and privi- e in time of Parliament, it was the break- forth of light?

But now, the bishops abrogated and voided of the Church, as if our reformation ght no more, but to make room for others their seats under another name, the scopal arts begin to bud again;[2] the se of truth must run no more oil;[3] liberty printing must be enthraled again under a latical commission of twenty,[4] the privi- e of the people nullified; and, which is rse, the freedom of learning must groan in, and to her old fetters: all this the Par- ment yet sitting. Although their own late uments and defences against the prelates ght remember[5] them, that this obstruct- violence meets for the most part with an ent utterly opposite to the end which it ves at; instead of suppressing sects and isms, it raises them and invests them with reputation: "The punishing of wits en- nces their authority," saith the Viscount Albans; "and a forbidden writing is ought to be a certain spark of truth that s up in the faces of them who seek to ad it out."[6]

This Order, therefore, may prove a nurs- mother to sects, but I shall easily show w it will be a stepdame to Truth; and first disenabling us to[7] the maintenance of at is known already.

Well knows he who uses to consider, that r faith and knowledge thrives by exercise, well as our limbs and complexion.[8] Truth compared in Scripture to a steaming foun- n; if her waters flow not in a perpetual gression, they sicken into a muddy pool conformity and tradition. A man may be heretic in the truth; and if he believe things ly because his pastor says so, or the As- mbly so determines, without knowing other ason, though his belief be true, yet the very ith he holds becomes his heresy. There is t any burden that some would gladlier st off to another, than the charge and care their religion. There be, who knows not at there be, of Protestants and professors[9] who live and die in as arrant an implicit faith,[1] as any lay Papist of Loreto.[2]

A wealthy man addicted to his pleasure and to his profits, finds religion to be a traffic so entangled, and of so many piddling accounts, that of all mysteries[3] he cannot skill to keep a stock going upon that trade. What should he do? Fain he would have the name to be religious; fain he would bear up with his neighbors in that. What does he, therefore, but resolves to give over toiling, and to find himself out some factor, to whose care and credit he may commit the whole managing of his religious affairs; some Divine of note and estimation that must be. To him he adheres, resigns the whole warehouse of his religion, with all the locks and keys into his custody; and indeed makes the very person of that man his religion; esteems his associating with him a sufficient evidence and commendatory of his own piety. So that a man may say his religion is now no more within himself, but is become a dividual[4] movable, and goes and comes near him, according as that good man frequents the house. He entertains him, gives him gifts, feasts him, lodges him; his religion comes home at night, prays, is liberally supped, and sumptuously laid to sleep, rises, is saluted, and after the malmsey, or some well-spiced brewage, and better breakfasted than he whose morning appetite would have gladly fed on green figs between Bethany and Jerusalem, his religion walks abroad at eight, and leaves his kind entertainer in the shop trading all day without his religion.

Another sort there be, who, when they hear that all things shall be ordered, all things regulated and settled, nothing written but what passes through the custom-house of certain publicans[5] that have the tonnaging and poundaging[6] of all free-spoken truth, will straight give themselves up into your hands, make 'em and cut 'em out what religion ye please; there be delights, there be recreations and jolly pastimes that will fetch the day about from sun to sun, and rock the tedious year as in a delightful dream. What need they torture their heads with that which others have taken so strictly, and so unalterably into their own purveying? These are the fruits which a dull ease and cessation

1 An expression taken from the sport of bear-baiting, pular in Elizabeth's time.
2 See Num. XVII, 6–8. 3 See I Kings XVII, 9–15.
3 Under the decree of the Star Chamber 1637, the num- r of printers in London was limited to twenty.
5 remind.
6 From An Advertisement touching the Controversies of Church of England.
7 in regard to. 8 state of physical health.
9 Protestants, or those who then professed religion enly, as opposed to Roman Catholics.

1 A faith resting on the authority of another, as opposed to a revealed belief.
2 The Casa Santa or Holy House, believed to be the birthplace of the Virgin Mary, carried by angels to Loreto.
3 arts, occupations.
4 that may be separated from him.
5 tax collectors.
6 the laying of duties on exports and imports.

of our knowledge will bring forth among the people. How goodly, and how to be wished, were such an obedient unanimity as this, what a fine conformity would it starch us all into! Doubtless a staunch and solid piece of framework, as any January could freeze together.

Nor much better will be the consequence even among the clergy themselves; it is no new thing never heard of before, for a parochial minister, who has his reward, and is at his Hercules pillars [1] in a warm benefice, to be easily inclinable, if he have nothing else that may rouse up his studies, to finish his circuit [2] in an English concordance and a topic folio,[3] the gatherings and savings of a sober graduateship,[4] a harmony [5] and a catena,[6] treading the constant round of certain common doctrinal heads, attended with their uses, motives, marks, and means; out of which, as out of an alphabet or sol-fa,[7] by forming and transforming, joining and disjoining variously a little bookcraft, and two hours' meditation, might furnish him unspeakably to the performance of more than a weekly charge of sermoning; not to reckon up the infinite helps of interlinearies, breviaries, synopses, and other loitering gear.[8]

But as for the multitude of sermons ready printed and piled up, on every text that is not difficult, our London trading Saint Thomas [9] in his vestry,[10] and add to boot Saint Martin and Saint Hugh, have not within their hallowed limits more vendible ware of all sorts ready made; so that penury he never need fear of pulpit provision, having where so plenteously to refresh his magazine. But if his rear and flanks be not impaled,[11] if his back door be not secured by the rigid licenser, but that a bold book may now and then issue forth, and give the assault to some of his old collections in their trenches; it will concern him then to keep waking, to stand in watch, to set good guards and sentinels about his received opinions, to walk the round and counter-round with his fellow inspectors, fearing lest any of his flock be seduced, who also then would be better instructed, better exercised and disciplined. And God fe that the fear of this diligence, which mu then be used, do not make us affect the la ness of a licensing church.

For if we be sure we are in the right, a do not hold the truth guiltily, which becom not, if we ourselves condemn not our o weak and frivolous teaching, and the peop for an untaught and irreligious, gaddi rout, what can be more fair, than when man judicious, learned, and of a conscienc for aught we know, as good as theirs th taught us what we know, shall not privil from house to house, which is more dange ous, but openly by writing, publish to th world what his opinion is, what his reason and wherefore that which is now thoug cannot be sound? Christ urged it as where with to justify himself, that he preached i public;[1] yet writing is more public tha preaching; and more easy to refutation, need be, there being so many whose busines and profession merely it is, to be the cham pions of truth; which if they neglect, wha can be imputed but their sloth, or unabil ity?

Thus much we are hindered and disinure by this course of licensing toward the tru knowledge of what we seem to know. Fo how much it hurts and hinders the licenser themselves in the calling of their ministry more than any secular employment, if they will discharge that office as they ought, s that of necessity they must neglect eithe the one duty or the other, I insist not, be cause it is a particular,[2] but leave it to thei own conscience, how they will decide i there.

There is yet behind of what I purposed t lay open, the incredible loss and detriment that this plot of licensing puts us to. More than if some enemy at sea should stop up al our havens, and ports, and creeks, it hinders and retards the importation of our richest merchandise, truth; nay, it was first established and put in practice by Antichristian malice and mystery,[3] on set purpose to extinguish, if it were possible, the light of reformation, and to settle [4] falsehood; little differing from that policy wherewith the Turk upholds his Alcoran, by the prohibition of printing. 'Tis not denied, but gladly confessed, we are to send our thanks and vows to Heaven, louder than most of nations, for that great measure of truth which we enjoy,

1 The rocks on either side of the Strait of Gibraltar, i.e., the far limits of the ancient world, came to signify the highest ambition or desire.
2 the course of his studies. 3 a notebook.
4 course at the University.
5 A work showing how the four gospels agree in their accounts of the life of Christ.
6 A series of extracts from the writings of the Fathers, arranged in the form of a commentary on the Scriptures.
7 scale, gamut. 8 help to idleness.
9 Saint Thomas, Saint Martin, and Saint Hugh refer to shopping districts of London.
10 clothes-press. 11 fenced in with stakes.

1 See John xviii, 19–21.
2 personal matter or concern.
3 underhand practices. 4 establish.

pecially in those main points between us d the Pope, with his appurtenances the elates; but he who thinks we are to pitch r tent here, and have attained the utmost lospect of reformation, that the mortal ass wherein we contemplate can show us, il we come to beatific vision,[1] that man by is very opinion declares, that he is yet far ort of truth.

Truth indeed came once into the world th her divine Master, and was a perfect ape most glorious to look on; but when he cended, and his apostles after him were d asleep, then straight arose a wicked race deceivers, who, as that story goes of the gyptian Typhon[2] with his conspirators, w they dealt with the good Osiris, took the rgin Truth, hewed her lovely form into a ousand pieces, and scattered them to the ur winds. From that time ever since, the d friends of Truth, such as durst appear, itating the careful[3] search that Isis made r the mangled body of Osiris, went up and wn gathering up limb by limb still as they uld find them. We have not yet found em all, Lords and Commons, nor ever shall , till her Master's second coming; he shall ing together every joint and member, and all mould them into an immortal feature[4] loveliness and perfection. Suffer not these ensing prohibitions to stand at every place opportunity, forbidding and disturbing em that continue seeking, that continue to our obsequies to the torn body of our artyred saint.

We boast our light; but if we look not isely on the sun itself, it smites us into dark- ess. Who can discern those planets that re oft combust,[5] and those stars of brightest agnitude that rise and set with the sun, ntil the opposite motion of their orbs bring em to such a place in the firmament, where ey may be seen evening or morning. The ght which we have gained, was given us, ot to be ever staring on, but by it to dis- over onward things more remote from our nowledge. It is not the unfrocking of a priest, the unmitring of a bishop, and the removing him from off the Presbyterian shoulders that will make us a happy nation; no, if other things as great in the Church, and in the rule of life both economical and political, be not looked into and reformed, we have looked so long upon the blaze that Zwinglius and Calvin hath beaconed up to us, that we are stark blind.

There be who perpetually complain of schisms and sects, and make it such a calamity that any man dissents from their maxims. 'Tis their own pride and ignorance which causes the disturbing, who neither will hear with meekness, nor can convince, yet all must be suppressed which is not found in their syntagma.[1] They are the troublers, they are the dividers of unity, who neglect and permit not others to unite those dissevered pieces which are yet wanting to the body of Truth. To be still searching[2] what we know not, by what we know, still closing up truth to truth as we find it (for all her body is homogeneal and proportional),[3] this is the golden rule[4] in theology as well as in arithmetic, and makes up the best harmony in a church; not the forced and outward union of cold and neutral and inwardly divided minds.

Lords and Commoners of England consider what nation it is whereof ye are, and whereof ye are the governors; a nation not slow and dull, but of a quick, ingenious, and piercing spirit, acute to invent, subtle and sinewy to discourse,[5] not beneath the reach of any point the highest that human capacity can soar to. Therefore the studies of learning in her deepest sciences have been so ancient, and so eminent among us, that writers of good antiquity, and ablest judgment have been persuaded that even the school of Pythagoras, and the Persian wisdom, took beginning from the old philosophy of this island. And that wise and civil Roman, Julius Agricola,[6] who governed once here for Cæsar, preferred the natural wits of Britain, before the labored studies of the French. Nor is it for nothing that the grave and frugal Transylvanian sends out yearly from as far as the mountainous borders of Russia, and beyond the Hercynian wilderness, not their

1 the face of God.

2 Typhon, the god of Evil; Osiris, the god of Good. hile Osiris was on a journey round the earth, Typhon d a beautiful chest made to the measurements of Osiris, d on the latter's return, offered to present it to the per- n who could lie down in it. It fitted nobody but Osiris, d when he was in it, Typhon and his conspirators ked him in, and threw the chest into the river. Isis, e sister and wife of Osiris, sought for the chest, and ter finding it, did it reverence. But Typhon managed seize it in her absence, and tore the body into fourteen eces and scattered them abroad.

3 anxious. 4 form, shape.

5 When within 8° 30′ of the sun, a planet is said to be mbust, or its influence destroyed. Venus, Mercury, d Vulcan are those most often combust.

1 handbooks. 2 investigating.

3 All the parts of the same kind, and each proportional to the whole.

4 the rule of three. 5 to reason.

6 Consul in Britain from 78 to 85, not under Cæsar, but under Emperors Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian. He is said by Tacitus to have provided "a liberal education for the sons of their chieftains, preferring the natural genius of the Britains to the attainments of the Gauls."

youth, but their staid men, to learn our language and our theologic arts.

Yet that which is above all this, the favor and the love of Heaven, we have great argument to think in a peculiar manner propitious and propending [1] towards us. Why else was this nation chosen before any other, that out of her as out of Sion should be proclaimed and sounded forth the first tidings and trumpet of reformation to all Europe? And had it not been the obstinate perverseness of our prelates against the divine and admirable spirit of Wyclif, to suppress him as a schismatic and innovator, perhaps neither the Bohemian Huss and Jerome, no, nor the name of Luther, or of Calvin, had been ever known; the glory of reforming all our neighbors had been completely ours. But now, as our obdurate clergy have with violence demeaned [2] the matter, we are become hitherto the latest and backwardest scholars, of whom God offered to have made us the teachers.

Now once again by all concurrence of signs, and by the general instinct of holy and devout men, as they daily and solemnly express their thoughts, God is decreeing to begin some new and great period in his Church, even to the reforming of reformation itself. What does he then but reveal himself to his servants, and, as his manner is, first to his Englishmen; I say, as his manner is, first to us, though we mark not the method of his counsels, and are unworthy. Behold now this vast city, a city of refuge, the mansion house of liberty, encompassed and surrounded with his protection; the shop of war hath not there more anvils and hammers waking, to fashion out the plates [3] and instruments of armed justice in defence of beleaguered truth, than there be pens and heads there, sitting by their studious lamps, musing, searching, revolving new notions and ideas wherewith to present, as with their homage and their fealty, the approaching reformation; others as fast reading, trying all things, assenting to the force of reason and convincement.

What could a man require more from a nation so pliant and so prone to seek after knowledge? What wants there to such a towardly and pregnant soil, but wise and faithful laborers, to make a knowing people, a nation of prophets, of sages, and of worthies? We reckon more than five months yet to harvest; there need not be five weeks, had we but eyes to lift up; the fields are whi already. Where there is much desire t learn, there of necessity will be much arg ing, much writing, many opinions; for opi ion in good men is but knowledge in th making. Under these fantastic terrors o sect and schism, we wrong the earnest an zealous thirst after knowledge and unde standing which God hath stirred up in th city. What some lament of, we rather shoul rejoice at, should rather praise this piou forwardness among men, to reassume the il deputed care of their religion into their ow hands again. A little generous prudence, a lit tle forbearance of one another, and some grai of charity might win all these diligences t join and unite in one general and brotherl search after truth; could we but forego thi prelatical tradition of crowding free con sciences and Christian liberties into canon and precepts of men. I doubt not, if som great and worthy stranger should come among us, wise to discern the mould and temper of a people, and how to govern it observing the high hopes and aims, the dili gent alacrity of our extended thoughts and reasonings in the pursuance of truth and freedom, but that he would cry out as Pyrrhus did, admiring the Roman docility and courage. "If such were my Epirots, I would not despair the greatest design that could be attempted to make a church or kingdom happy."

Yet these are the men cried out against for schismatics and sectaries; as if, while the temple [1] of the Lord was building, some cutting, some squaring the marble, others hewing the cedars, there should be a sort [2] of irrational men who could not consider there must be many schisms and many dissections made in the quarry and in the timber, ere the house of God can be built. And when every stone is laid artfully together, it cannot be united into a continuity, it can but be contiguous in this world; neither can every piece of the building be of one form; nay rather the perfection consists in this, that out of many moderate [3] varieties and brotherly dissimilitudes that are not vastly disproportional, arises the goodly and the graceful symmetry that commends the whole pile and structure.

Let us, therefore, be more considerate builders, more wise in spiritual architecture, when great reformation is expected. For now the time seems come, wherein Moses, the great prophet, may sit in heaven rejoic-

1 favorably inclined. 2 conducted.
3 breast-plates.

1 See II Chron. II, 5–9. 2 company.
3 not greatly different.

ng to see that memorable and glorious wish [1] f his fulfilled, when not only our seventy lders but all the Lord's people, are become rophets. No marvel then though some nen, and some good men too, perhaps, but oung in goodness, as Joshua then was, envy hem.[2] They fret, and out of their own veakness are in agony, lest those divisions nd subdivisions will undo us. The adver- ary [3] again applauds, and waits the hour, vhen they have branched themselves out, aith he, small enough into parties and par- itions, then will be our time. Fool! he sees ot the firm root, out of which we all grow, hough into branches; nor will beware until he see our small divided maniples [4] cutting hrough at every angle of his ill-united and nwieldy brigade. And that we are to hope etter of all these supposed sects and schisms, nd that we shall not need that solicitude, onest perhaps, though over-timorous, of hem that vex in this behalf, but shall laugh n the end at those malicious applauders of our differences, I have these reasons to per- uade me.

First, when a city shall be as it were be- ieged and blocked about,[5] her navigable iver infested, inroads and incursions round, lefiance and battle oft rumored to be marching up even to her walls and suburb renches; that then the people, or the greater part, more than at other times, wholly taken up with the study of highest and most im- portant matters to be reformed, should be disputing, reasoning, reading, inventing, dis- coursing, even to a rarity and admiration, things not before discoursed or written of, argues at first a singular goodwill, contented- ness and confidence in your prudent fore- sight, and safe government, Lords and Com- mons; and from thence derives itself [6] to a gallant bravery and well grounded contempt of their enemies, as if there were no small number of as great spirits among us, as his was, who, when Rome was nigh besieged by Hannibal, being in the city, bought that piece of ground at no cheap rate whereon Hannibal himself encamped his own regi- ment.

Next, it is a lively and cheerful presage of our happy success and victory. For as in a body, when the blood is fresh, the spirits pure and vigorous, not only to vital, but to rational faculties, and those in the acutest and the pertest [7] operations of wit and sub- tlety, it argues in what good plight and constitution the body is; so when the cheerful- ness of the people is so sprightly up, as that it has, not only wherewith to guard well its own freedom and safety, but to spare, and to bestow upon the solidest and sublimest points of controversy and new invention, it betokens us, not degenerated, nor drooping to a fatal decay, but casting off the old and wrinkled skin of corruption to outlive these pangs, and wax young again, entering the glorious ways of truth and prosperous virtue, destined to become great and honorable in these latter ages.

Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks; [1] methinks I see her as an eagle mew- ing [2] her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full midday beam; purging and unscaling her long-abused sight at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance; while the whole noise [3] of timorous and flock- ing birds, with those also that love the twilight, flutter about, amazed at what she means, and in their envious gabble would prognosticate a year of sects and schisms.

What should ye do then, should ye sup- press all this flowery crop of knowledge and new light sprung up and yet springing daily in this city; should ye set an oligarchy of twenty engrossers [4] over it, to bring a famine upon our minds again, when we shall know nothing but what is measured to us by their bushel? Believe it, Lords and Commons, they who counsel ye to such a suppressing, do as good as bid ye suppress yourselves; and I will soon show how.

If it be desired to know the immediate cause of all this free writing and free speak- ing, there cannot be assigned a truer than your own mild and free and humane govern- ment; it is the liberty, Lords and Commons, which your own valorous and happy counsels have purchased [5] us, liberty which is the nurse of all great wits; this is that which hath rarefied and enlightened our spirits like the influence [6] of heaven; this is that which hath enfranchised, enlarged, and lifted up our ap- prehensions degrees above themselves. Ye cannot make us now less capable, less know- ing, less eagerly pursuing of the truth, unless

1 See Num. XI, 24–29. 2 bear them ill will.
3 The Church of Rome. 4 handfuls.
5 The situation of London, in 1642.
6 proceeds. 7 liveliest.

1 See Judges XVI, 13, 14, 19, and 20.
2 Perhaps "renewing by the process of moulting."
3 company, concert.
4 Those who buy in large quantities, in order to control trade: the modern Trust.
5 procured.
6 Referring to the belief of astrologers that the position of the planets affects human destiny.

ye first make yourselves, that made us so, less the lovers, less the founders of our true liberty. We can grow ignorant again, brutish, formal, and slavish, as ye found us; but you then must first become that which ye cannot be, oppressive, arbitrary, and tyrannous; as they were from whom ye have freed us. That our hearts are now more capacious, our thoughts more erected to the search and expectation of greatest and exactest things, is the issue of your own virtue propagated in us; ye cannot suppress that unless ye reinforce an abrogated and merciless law, that fathers may despatch at will their own children.[1] And who shall then stick closest to ye, and excite others? not he who takes up arms for coat and conduct,[2] and his four nobles[3] of Danegelt.[4] Although I dispraise not the defence of just immunities, yet love my peace better, if that were all. Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.

What would be best advised, then, if it be found so hurtful and so unequal[5] to suppress opinions for the newness, or the unsuitableness to a customary acceptance, will not be my task to say; I only shall repeat what I have learned from one of your own honorable number, a right noble and pious lord, who, had he not sacrificed his life and fortunes to the Church and Commonwealth, we had not now missed and bewailed a worthy and undoubted patron of this argument. Ye know him I am sure; yet I for honor's sake, and may it be eternal to him, shall name him the Lord Brook.[6] He, writing of Episcopacy, and by the way treating of sects and schisms, left ye his vote,[7] or rather now the last words of his dying charge, which I know will ever be of dear and honored regard with ye, so full of meekness and breathing charity, that next to his last testament, who bequeathed love and peace to his disciples, I cannot call to mind where I have read or heard words more mild and peaceful. He there exhorts us to hear with patience and humility those, however they be miscalled, that desire to live purely, in such a use of God's ordinances, as the best guidance of their conscience gives them, and to tolerate them, though in some disconformity to ourselves. The book itself will tell us more at large, being published to the world, and dedicated to the Parliament by him who, both for his life and for his death, deserves that what advice he left be not laid by without perusal.

And now the time in special is,[1] by privilege to write and speak what may help to the further discussing of matters in agitation. The temple of Janus[2] with his two controversal faces might now not unsignificantly be set open. And though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worse, in a free and open encounter? Her confuting[3] is the best and surest suppressing. He who hears what praying there is for light and clearer knowledge to be sent down among us, would think of other matters to be constituted beyond the discipline[4] of Geneva, framed and fabriced[5] already to our hands.

Yet when the new light which we beg for shines in upon us, there be who envy and oppose, if it come not first in at their casements. What a collusion is this, whenas we are exhorted by the wise man to use diligence, to seek for wisdom as for hidden treasures early and late, that another order shall enjoin us to know nothing but by statute? When a man hath been laboring the hardest labor in the deep mines of knowledge, hath furnished out his findings in all their equipage, drawn forth his reasons as it were a battle[6] ranged, scattered, and defeated all objections in his way, calls out his adversary into the plain, offers him the advantage of wind and sun, if he please; only that he may try the matter by dint of argument, for his opponents then to sculk, to lay ambushments, to keep a narrow bridge of licensing where the challenger should pass, though it be valor enough in soldiership, is but weakness and cowardice in the wars of Truth. For who knows not that Truth is strong, next to the Almighty; she needs no policies, no stratagems, nor licensings to make her victorious; those are the shifts and

1 A Roman law, not repealed until 318 A.D.
2 The tax levied for the clothing and transportation of the army was very unpopular.
3 A noble was an English coin current from the reign of Edward III, value, 6 s. 8 d.
4 money paid to buy the Danes off.
5 unfair.
6 Robert Greville, second Lord Brooke, greatly beloved in England, was general of the Parliamentary forces in the Civil War, and was killed in an attack on the royal forces, March 2, 1643.
7 earnest wish.

1 "fitting" understood.
2 Roman god with two faces. The gates of his temple in the Forum were closed in time of peace, open in time of war.
3 disproof.
4 the system by which the practices of a church are regulated.
5 fabricated. 6 army.

ne defences that error uses against her ower: give her but room, and do not bind r when she sleeps, for then she speaks not ue, as the old Proteus [1] did, who spake acles only when he was caught and bound, ut then rather she turns herself into all apes, except her own, and perhaps tunes
r voice according to the time, as Micaiah d before Ahab,[2] until she be adjured into r own likeness.

Yet is it not impossible that she may have ore shapes than one. What else is all that nk of things indifferent, wherein Truth ay be on this side, or on the other, without ing unlike herself? What but a vain adow else is the abolition of those ordi-nces, that hand-writing nailed to the cross;
hat great purchase [3] is this Christian lib-ty which Paul so often boasts of? His octrine is, that he who eats, or eats not, re-rds a day, or regards it not, may do either the Lord. How many other things might tolerated in peace, and left to conscience, d we but charity, and were it not the chief ronghold of our hypocrisy to be ever judg-g one another. I fear yet this iron yoke of utward conformity hath left a slavish print on our necks; the ghost of a linen decency et haunts us. We stumble and are impaent at the least dividing of one visible conregation from another, though it be not in ndamentals; and through our forwardness suppress, and our backwardness to re-over, any enthralled piece of truth out of ne gripe of custom, we care not to keep uth separated from truth, which is the ercest rent and disunion of all. We do not e that while we still affect by all means a gid external formality, we may as soon fall gain into a gross conforming stupidity, a ark and dead congealment of wood, and ay, and stubble forced and frozen together, hich is more to the sudden degenerating a church than many subdichotomies [4] of etty schisms.

Not that I can think well of every light paration, or that all in a church is to be xpected gold and silver and precious stones:
is not possible for man to sever the wheat om the tares,[5] the good fish from the other y; that must be the angels' ministry at the d of mortal things. Yet if all cannot be of ne mind, — as who looks they should be? — this doubtless is more wholesome, more prudent, and more Christian, that many be tolerated, rather than all compelled. I mean not tolerated popery [1] and open superstition, which, as it extirpates all religions and civil supremacies, so itself should be extirpate; provided first that all charitable and compassionate means be used to win and regain the weak and the misled; that also which is impious or evil absolutely, either against faith or manners,[2] no law can possibly permit, that intends not to unlaw itself; but those neighboring differences, or rather indifferences, are what I speak of, whether in some point of doctrine or of discipline, which though they may be many, yet need not interrupt the unity of spirit, if we could but find among us the bond of peace.

In the meanwhile, if any one would write, and bring his helpful hand to the slow-moving reformation which we labor under, if truth have spoken to him before others, or but seemed at least to speak, who hath so bejesuited us that we should trouble that man with asking license to do so worthy a deed? And not consider this, that if it come to prohibiting, there is not aught more likely to be prohibited than truth itself; whose first appearance to our eyes bleared and dimmed with prejudice and custom, is more unsightly and unplausible than many errors, even as the person is of many a great man slight and contemptible to see to. And what do they tell us vainly of new opinions, when this very opinion of theirs, that none must be heard but whom they like, is the worst and newest opinion of all others; and is the chief cause why sects and schisms do so much abound, and true knowledge is kept at distance from us; besides yet a greater danger which is in it. For when God shakes a kingdom with strong and healthful commotions to a general reforming, 'tis not untrue that many sectaries and false teachers are then busiest in seducing; but yet more true it is, that God then raises to his own work men of rare abilities, and more than common industry, not only to look back, and revise what hath been taught heretofore, but to gain further, and go on some new enlightened steps in the discovery of truth.

For such is the order of God's enlightening his church, to dispense and deal out by degrees his beam, so as our earthly eyes may best sustain it. Neither is God appointed

1 The sea-god who tended the flocks of Poseidon. He id the power of assuming any shape to avoid the necesty of prophesying, but when caught and held, would tell uly of the future.
2 See I Kings XXII, 1–28.
3 advantage. 4 subdivisions.
5 See Matt. XIII, 24–30, 37–43.

1 Milton's idea of religious toleration never included Catholicism.
2 conduct, in a moral sense.

and confined, where and out of what place these his chosen shall be first heard to speak; for he sees not as man sees, chooses not as man chooses, lest we should devote ourselves again to set places, and assemblies, and outward callings of men; planting our faith one while in the old Convocation house,[1] and another while in the Chapel[2] at Westminster; when all the faith and religion that shall be there canonized,[3] is not sufficient without plain convincement and the charity of patient instruction, to supple the least bruise of conscience, to edify the meanest Christian who desires to walk in the Spirit, and not in the letter of human trust, for all the number of voices that can be there made; no, though Harry VII himself there, with all his liege tombs[4] about him, should lend them voices from the dead, to swell their number.

And if the men be erroneous who appear to be the leading schismatics, what withholds us but our sloth, our self-will, and distrust in the right cause, that we do not give them gentle meetings and gentle dismissions, that we debate not and examine the matter thoroughly with liberal and frequent audience; if not for their sakes, yet for our own? Seeing no man who hath tasted learning, but will confess the many ways of profiting by those who, not contented with stale receipts, are able to manage, and set forth new positions to the world. And were they but as the dust and cinders of our feet, so long as in that notion[5] they may serve to polish and brighten the armory of Truth, even for that respect they were not utterly to be cast away. But if they be of those whom God hath fitted for the special use of these times with eminent and ample gifts, and those perhaps neither among the priests, nor among the pharisees, and we in the haste of a precipitant zeal shall make no distinction, but resolve to stop their mouths, because we fear they come with new and dangerous opinions, as we commonly forejudge them ere we understand them, no less than woe to us, while thinking thus to defend the Gospel, we are found the persecutors.

There have been not a few since the beginning of this Parliament, both of the Presbytery and others, who by their unlicensed books, to the contempt of an Imprimatur, first broke that triple ice clung about our hearts, and taught the people to see day; I hope that none of those were the persuaders to renew upon us this bondage which they themselves have wrought so much good by contemning. But if neither the check that Moses gave to young Joshua, nor the countermand which our Saviour gave to young John,[1] who was so ready to prohibit those whom he thought unlicensed, be not enough to admonish our elders how unacceptable to God their testy mood of prohibiting is; if neither their own remembrance what evil hath abounded in the church by this let[2] of licensing, and what good they themselves have begun by transgressing it, be not enough, but that they will persuade, and execute the most Dominican part of the Inquisition over us, and are already with one foot in the stirrup so active at suppressing, it would be no unequal distribution, in the first place, to suppress the suppressors themselves; whom the change of their condition hath puffed up, more than their late experience of harder times hath made wise.

¶ And as for regulating the press, let no man think to have the honor of advising ye better than yourselves have done in that order published next before this, "that no book be printed, unless the printer's and the author's name, or at least the printer's be registered." Those which otherwise come forth, if they be found mischievous and libellous, the fire and the executioner will be the timeliest and the most effectual remedy that man's prevention can use. For this authentic Spanish policy of licensing books, if I have said aught, will prove the most unlicensed book itself within a short while; and was the immediate image of a Star Chamber decree to that purpose made in those very times when that Court did the rest of those her pious works, for which she is now fallen from the stars with Lucifer. Whereby ye may guess what kind of state prudence, what love of the people, what care of religion or good manners there was at the contriving, although with singular hypocrisy it pretended to bind books to their good behavior. And how it got the upper hand of your precedent order so well constituted before, if we may believe those men whose profession gives them cause to inquire most, it may be doubted there was in it the fraud of some old patentees and monopolisers

1 The assembly of the clergy of the Church of England met in the Chapter House of Westminster Cathedral.

2 The Assembly of Divines of the Presbyterian Church, which supplanted the Convocation, met in Henry VII's Chapel.

3 admitted to the canon, or body of ecclesiastical laws.

4 Henry VII had buried near him his wife, Elizabeth of York, his mother, Margaret Beaufort, Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Prince Henry, Anne of Denmark, and King James I.

5 conception.

1 See Luke IX, 49, 50.

2 hindrance.

the trade of bookselling; who under pre-nce of the poor in their Company not to be frauded, and the just retaining of each man s several copy, which God forbid should be insaid, brought divers glosing colors to the use, which were indeed but colors, and rving to no end except it be to exercise a periority over their neighbors; men who do t, therefore, labor in an honest profession which learning is indebted, that they ould be made other men's vassals. Another d is thought was aimed at by some of em in procuring by petition this Order, at having power in their hands, malignant oks might the easier scape abroad, as the ent shows.

But of these sophisms and elenchs [1] of merchandise I skill not. This I know, that errors in a good government and in a bad are equally almost incident; for what magistrate may not be misinformed, and much the sooner, if liberty of printing be reduced into the power of a few; but to redress willingly and speedily what hath been erred, and in highest authority to esteem a plain advertisement more than others have done a sumptuous bribe, is a virtue, honored Lords and Commons, answerable to your highest actions, and whereof none can participate but greatest and wisest men.

1 sophistical arguments.

SAMUEL PEPYS (1633–1703)

The steadily increasing fame of Pepys as author of the famous diary has tended to obscure the ct that he was an able government official, especially as Secretary of the Admiralty during a time en Great Britain's sea-power was being strengthened considerably; that he was a discriminating llector of books and manuscripts, which he left to his college in Cambridge University; and that was esteemed highly enough as a scholar to be elected president of the Royal Society.

Still, it is for the vivid pictures of the times and his fascinating personality as disclosed in the ary that Pepys is famous. This diary he kept from January 1, 1660, to May 31, 1669, in shortnd. It was not published until 1825, when Lord Braybrooke first issued the diary, cut to about lf its size by omissions. The extract given below is from this well-known version.

The best edition of the complete diary is H. B. Wheatley's in eight volumes (G. Bell and Sons). xcellent biographical studies of Pepys have been written by Gamaliel Bradford, The Soul of muel Pepys (Houghton Mifflin Company), and by Jean Lucas-Dubreton (Putnam.)

DIARY OF SAMUEL PEPYS

1665–66

January 1st. Called up by five o'clock by r. Tooker, who wrote, while I dictated to m, my business of the Pursers; and so, ithout eating or drinking, till three in the ternoon, to my great content, finished it.[1] 2d. Up by candle-light again, and my siness being done, to my Lord Brouncker's, d there find Sir J. Minnes and all his comany, and Mr. Boreman and Mrs. Turner, t, above all, my dear Mrs. Knipp, with hom I sang, and in perfect pleasure I was hear her sing, and especially her little otch song of "Barbary Allen"; and to ake our mirth the completer, Sir J. Minnes as in the highest pitch of mirth, and his mimicall tricks, that ever I saw, and most excellent pleasant company he is, and the best musique that ever I saw, and certainly would have made an excellent actor, and now would be an excellent teacher of actors. Then, it being past night, against my will, took leave.

3d. I to the Duke of Albemarle and back again: and, at the Duke's, with great joy, I received the good news of the decrease of the plague this week to 70, and but 253 in all; which is the least Bill hath been known these twenty years in the City, though the want of people in London is it, that must make it so low, below the ordinary number for Bills. So home, and find all my good company I had bespoke, as Colman and his wife, and Laneare, Knipp and her surly husband; and good musick we had, and among other things, Mr. Coleman sang my words I set, of "Beauty, retire," and they praise it mightily. Then to dancing and supper, and mighty merry till Mr. Rolt come in, whose pain of the toothache made him no company, and spoilt ours: so he away, and then my wife's teeth fell of aching, and she to bed. So forced to break up all with a good song, and so to bed.

1 This document is in the British Museum (Harleian S., 6287), and is entitled, "A letter from Mr. Pepys, ted at Greenwich, 1st Jan., 1665–6, which he calls his w Year's Gift to his hon. friend, Sir Wm. Coventry, erein he lays down a Method of securing his Majesty husbandly execution of the Victualling Part of the val Expence." It consists of nineteen closely written o pages, and is a remarkable specimen of Pepys's busiss habits. — (Braybrooke's note.)

5th. I with my Lord Brouncker and Mrs. Williams by coach with four horses to London, to my Lord's house in Covent Garden. But, Lord! what staring to see a nobleman's coach come to town! And porters every where bow to us; and such begging of beggars! And delightful it is to see the town full of people again; and shops begin to open, though in many places seven or eight together, and more, all shut; but yet the town is full, compared with what it used to be. I mean the City[1] end: for Covent Garden and Westminster are yet very empty of people, no Court nor gentry being there. Home, thinking to get Mrs. Knipp, but could not, she being busy with company, but sent me a pleasant letter, writing herself "Barbary Allen." Reading a discourse about the river of Thames, the reason of its being choked up in several places with shelfes: which is plain is, by the encroachments made upon the River, and running out of causeways into the River, at every wood-wharfe: which was not heretofore, when Westminster Hall and White Hall were built, and Redriffe Church, which now are sometimes overflown with water.

6th. To a great dinner and much company. Mr. Cuttle and his lady and I went, hoping to get Mrs. Knipp to us, having wrote a letter to her in the morning, calling myself "Dapper Dicky,"[2] in answer to her's of "Barbary Allen," but could not, and am told by the boy that carried my letter, that he found her crying; and I fear she lives a sad life with that ill-natured fellow her husband: so we had a great, but I a melancholy dinner. After dinner to cards, and then comes notice that my wife is come unexpectedly to me to town: so I to her. It is only to see what I do, and why I come not home; and she is in the right that I would have a little more of Mrs. Knipp's company before I go away. My wife to fetch away my things from Woolwich, and I back to cards, and after cards to choose King and Queene, and a good cake there was, but no marks found; but I privately found the clove, the mark of the knave, and privately put it into Captain Cocke's piece, which made some mirth, because of his lately being known by his buying of clove and mace of the East India prizes. At night home to my lodging, where I find my wife returned with my things. It being Twelfth-Night,[1] they had got the fiddler, and mighty merry they were; and I above, come not to them, leaving them dancing, and choosing King and Queene.

7th. (Lord's day.) The town talks of my Lord Craven being to come into Sir G. Carteret's place; but sure it cannot be true. But I do fear those two families, his and my Lord Sandwich's, are quite broken; and I must now stand upon my own legs. With my wife and Mercer took boat and away home; but in the evening, before I went, comes Mrs. Knipp, just to speak with me privately, to excuse her not coming to me yesterday, complaining how like a devil her husband treats her, but will be with us in town a week hence.

8th. To Bennett's, in Paternoster Row, few shops there being yet open, and there bought velvett for a coat, and camelott for a cloak for myself; and thence to a place to look over some fine counterfeit damasks to hang my wife's closet, and pitched upon one.

9th. To the office, where we met first since the plague, which God preserve us in! Pierce tells me how great a difference hath been between the Duke and Duchess, he suspecting her to be naught with Mr. Sidney. But some way or other the matter is made up; but he [Sidney] was banished the Court, and the Duke for many days did not speak to the Duchess at all. He tells me that my Lord Sandwich is lost there at Court, though the King is particularly his friend. But people do speak every where slightly of him; which is a sad story to me, but I hope it may be better again. And that Sir G. Carteret is neglected, and hath great enemies at work against him. That matters must needs go bad, while all the town, and every boy in the street, openly cries, "The King cannot go away till my Lady Castlemaine be ready to come along with him;" she being lately put to bed. And that he visits her and Mrs. Stewart every morning before he eats his breakfast.

10th. I do find Sir G. Downing to be a mighty talker, more than is true, which I now know to be so, and suspected it before. To my Lord Brouncker's house in Covent Garden. The plague is encreased this week from seventy to eighty-nine. We have also great fear of our Hambrough fleete, of their meeting with the Dutch; as also have certain

1 The "City" (still so called) is the old part of London lying east of Temple Bar. It is the business district.

2 A song called "Dapper Dick" is in the British Museum; it begins, "In a barren tree." It was printed in 1710. — (Braybrooke's note.)

1 i.e., the twelfth after Christmas.

ews, that by storms Sir Jer. Smith's [1] fleete scattered, and three of them come without asts back to Plymouth. Seeing and salut-g Mrs. Stokes, my little goldsmith's wife in aternoster Row, and there bespoke a silver afing-dish for warming plates. To the uke of Albemarle. Here I saw Sir W. oventry's kind letter to him concerning my aper, and among other of his letters, which saw all, and that is a strange thing, that hatever is writ to this Duke Albemarle, all ne world may see; for this very night he did ve me Mr. Coventry's letter to read soon as come to his hand, before he had read it imself, and bid me take out of it what con-erned the Navy, and many things there was it, which I should not have thought fit for im to have let anybody so suddenly see; ut, among other things, find him profess imself to the Duke a friend into the inquir-g further into the business of prizes, and dvises that it may be publick, for the right-g the King, and satisfying the people — ne blame to be rightly laid where it should e, which strikes very hard upon my Lord andwich, and troubles me to read it. Be-des, the Duchess cried mightily out against he having of gentlemen captains with eathers and ribbands, and wished the King ould send her husband to sea with the old lain sea Captains that he served with for-herly, that would make their ships swim ith blood, though they could not make agues as Captains now-a-days can.

11th. At noon to dinner all of us by invita-on to Sir W. Pen's, and much company. mong others, Lieutenant of the Tower, and room, his poet, and Dr. Whistler and his Sir William Pen's] son-in-law Lowther, ervant to Mrs. Margaret Pen, and Sir Ed-ard Spragg, a merry man, that sang a leasant song pleasantly.

12th. I and my Lord Brouncker by coach little way, for discourse sake, till our coach roke, and tumbled me over him quite down ne side of the coach, falling on the ground bout the stockes, but up again. To my oor wife, who works all day at home like a orse, at the making of her hangings for our hamber and the bed.

13th. Home with his Lordship to Mrs. Villiams's, in Covent Garden, to dinner, the rst time I ever was there, and there met aptain Cocke; and pretty merry, though ot perfectly so, because of the fear that there is of a great encrease again of the plague this week. And again my Lord Brouncker do tell us, that he hath it from Sir John Baber, who is related to my Lord Craven, that my Lord Craven do look after Sir G. Carteret's place, and do reckon himself sure of it.

14th. (Lord's day.) Long in bed, till raised by my new taylor, Mr. Penny, who comes and brings me my new velvet coat, very handsome, but plain. At noon eat the second of the two cygnets Mr. Shepley sent us for a new year's gift. This afternoon, after sermon, comes my dear fair beauty of the Exchange, Mrs. Batelier, brought by her sister, an acquaintance of Mercer's, to see my wife. I saluted her with as much pleasure as I had done any a great while. We sat and talked together an hour, with infinite pleasure to me, and so the fair creature went away, and proves one of the modestest women and pretty, that ever I saw in my life, and my wife judges her so, too.

15th. To Mrs. Pierce, to her new house in Covent Garden, a very fine place and fine house. Took her thence home to my house, and so by water to Boreman's by night, where the greatest disappointment that ever I saw in my life — much company, a good supper provided, and all come with expectation of excess of mirth, but all blank through the waywardnesse of Mrs. Knipp, who, though she had appointed the night, could not be got to come. Not so much as her husband could get her to come; but, which was a pleasant thing in all my anger, I asking him, while we were in expectation what answer one of our many messengers would bring, what he thought, whether she would come or no, he answered that, for his part, he could not so much as think. At last, very late, and supper done, she come undressed, but it brought me no mirth at all; only, after all being done, without singing, or very little, and no dancing, Pierce and I to bed together, and he and I very merry to find how little and thin clothes they give us to cover us, so that we were fain to lie in our stockings and drawers, and lay all our coats and clothes upon the bed.

16th. Mightily troubled at the news of the plague's being encreased, and was much the saddest news that the plague hath brought me from the beginning of it; because of the lateness of the year, and the fear we may with reason have of its continuing with us the next summer. The total being now 375, and the plague 158.

17th. After dinner, late took horse, and I

[1] Admiral Sir Jeremy Smith, mentioned October 13 1665 ante, commanded a fleet in the Streights at this time, and another in the Channel in 1668. — (Braybrooke's note.)

rode to Dagenhams in the dark. It was my Lord Crewe's desire that I should come, and chiefly to discourse with me of my Lord Sandwich's matters; and therein to persuade, what I had done already, that my Lord should sue out a pardon for his business of the prizes, as also for Bergen, and all he hath done this year past, before he begins his Embassy to Spain; for it is to be feared that the Parliament will fly out against him, and particular men, the next Session. He is glad also that my Lord is clear of his sea-imployment, though sorry, as I am, only in the manner of its bringing about. After supper, up to wait on my Lady Crewe, who is the same weak silly lady as ever, asking such saintly questions.

18th. To Captain Cocke's, where Mrs. Williams was, and Mrs. Knipp. I was not heartily merry, though a glass of wine did a little cheer me. After dinner to the office. Anon comes to me thither my Lord Brouncker, Mrs. Williams, and Knipp. I brought down my wife in her night-gown, she not being indeed very well, to the office to them. My wife and I anon and Mercer, by coach, to Pierce's, where mighty merry, and sing and dance with great pleasure; and I danced, who never did in company in my life.

19th. It is a remarkable thing how infinitely naked all that end of the town, Covent Garden, is, at this day, of people, while the City is almost as full again of people as ever it was.

20th. I sent my boy home for some papers, where, he staying longer than I would have him, I become angry, and boxed my boy when he come, that I do hurt my thumb so much, that I was not able to stir all the day after, and in great pain.

22d. At noon my Lord Brouncker did come, but left the keys of the chest we should open, at Sir G. Carteret's lodgings, of my Lord Sandwich's, wherein Howe's supposed jewels are; so we could not, according to my Lord Arlington's order, see them today: but we parted, resolving to meet here at night: my Lord Brouncker being going with Dr. Wilkins, Mr. Hooke, and others, to Colonel Blunt's, to consider again of the business of chariots, and to try their new invention, which I saw here my Lord Brouncker ride in; where the coachman sits astride upon a pole over the horse, but do not touch the horse, which is a pretty odde thing; but it seems it is most easy for the horse, and, as they say, for the man also. The first meeting of Gresham College[1] since the plague: Dr. Goddard did fill us with talk, in defence of his and his fellow physicians going out of town in the plague-time; saying, that their particular patients were most gone out of town, and they left at liberty; and a great deal more. But what, among other fine discourse, pleased me most, was Sir G. Ent,[2] about respiration; that it is not to this day known, or concluded on, among physicians, nor to be done either, how the action is managed by nature, or for what use it is.

23d. Good news beyond all expectation of the decrease of the plague, being now but 79, and the whole but 272. So home with comfort to bed. A most furious storme all night and morning.

24th. My Lord [Brouncker] and I, the weather being a little fairer, by water to Deptford, to Sir G. Carteret's house, where W. Howe met us, and there we opened the chests, and saw the poor sorry rubys which have caused all this ado to the undoing of W. Howe; though I am not much sorry for it, because of his pride and ill nature. About 200 of these very small stones, and a cod[3] of muske, which it is strange I was not able to smell, is all we could find; so locked them up again, and my Lord and I, the wind being again very furious, so as we durst not go by water, walked to London quite round the bridge, no boat being able to stirre; and, Lord! what a dirty walk we had, and so strong the wind, that in the fields we many times could not carry our bodies against it, but were driven backwards. We went through Horslydowne, where I never was since a boy, that I went to enquire after my father, whom we did give over for lost coming from Holland. It was dangerous to walk the streets, the bricks and tiles falling from the houses, that the whole streets were covered with them; and whole chimneys, nay, whole houses, in two or three places, blowed down. But, above all, the pales of London Bridge, on both sides, were blown away, so that we were fain to stoop very low for fear of blowing off of the bridge. We could see no boats in the Thames afloat, but what were broke loose, and carried through the bridge, it being ebbing water. And the greatest sight of all was, among other parcels of ships driven here and there in clusters together; one was quite overset, and lay with her

1 Founded in 1579 by Sir Thomas Gresham, to provide for lectures by seven professors.

2 Sir George Ent, F.R.S., President of the College of Physicians. He died in 1689. — (Braybrooke's note.)

3 sack.

sts all along in the water, and keel above ter.

25th. It is now certain that the King of ance hath publickly declared war against and God knows how little fit we are for 26th. Pleased mightily with what my poor e hath been doing these eight or ten days h her own hands, like a drudge, in fitting new hangings of our bedchamber of blue, d putting the old red ones into my ssing-room.

28th. (Lord's day.) Took coach, and to mpton Court, where we find the King, and ke, and Lords, all in council; so we walked and down: there being none of the ladies ne, and so much the more business I hope l be done. The Council being up, out nes the King, and I kissed his hand, and grasped me very kindly by the hand. The ke also, I kissed his, and he mighty kind, d Sir W. Coventry. I found my Lord ndwich there, poor man! I see with a lancholy face, and suffers his beard to w on his upper lip more than usual. I k him a little aside, to know when I ould wait on him, and where: he told me, at it would be best to meet at his lodgings, thout being seen to walk together, which I ed very well; and, Lord! to see in what fficulty I stand, that I dare not walk with W. Coventry, for fear my Lord or Sir Carteret should see me; nor with either of em, for fear Sir W. Coventry should. I nt down into one of the Courts, and there t the King and Duke; and the Duke lled me to him. And the King come to e of himself, and told me, "Mr. Pepys," ys he, "I do give you thanks for your good rvice all this year, and I assure you I am ry sensible of it." And the Duke of York d tell me with pleasure, that he had read er my discourse about pursers, and would ve it ordered in my way, and so fell from e discourse to another. I walked with em quite out of the Court into the fields, d then back, and to my Lord Sandwich's amber, where I find him very melancholy, d not well satisfied, I perceive, with my rriage to Sir G. Carteret, but I did satisfy m that I have a very hard game to play; d he told me that he was sorry to see it, d the inconveniences which likely may fall on me with him; but, for all that, I am not uch afraid, if I can but keep out of harm's ay. He hath got over the business of the izes, so far as to have a privy seal passed r all that was in his distribution to the officers, which I am heartily glad of; and, for the rest, he must be answerable for what he is proved to have. But for his pardon for anything else, he thinks it not seasonable to ask it, and not useful to him; because that will not stop a Parliament's mouth, and for the King, he is not sure of him. Took boat, and by water to Kingston, and so to our lodgings.

29th. Up, and to Court by coach, where to council before the Duke of York, the Duke of Albemarle with us. My Lord Sandwich come in, in the middle of the business, and, poor man, very melancholy, methought, and said little at all, or to the business, and sat at the lower end, just as he come, no room being made for him, only I did give him my stool, and another was reached me. Mr. Evelyn and I into my Lord Brouncker's coach, and rode together with excellent discourse till we come to Clapham, talking of the vanity and vices of the Court, which makes it a most contemptible thing; and, indeed, in all his discourse, I find him a most worthy person. Particularly he entertained me with discourse of an Infirmary, which he hath projected for the sick and wounded seamen against the next year, which I mightily approve of; and will endeavour to promote it, being a worthy thing, and of use, and will save money. He set me down at Mr. Gauden's, where I took a book and into the gardens, and there walked and read till dark. Anon come in Creed and Mr. Gauden, and his sons, and then they bring in three ladies, who were in the house, but I do not know them — his [Gauden's] daughter and two nieces, daughters of Dr. Whistler's, with whom and Creed mighty sport at supper, the ladies very pretty and mirthfull. After supper, I made the ladies sing, yet it was the saddest stuff I ever heard. However, we sat up late, and then I, in the best chamber, like a prince, to bed, and Creed with me, and, being sleepy, talked but little.

30th. Home, finding the town keeping the day solemnly, it being the day of the King's murther; and they being at church, I presently into the church. This is the first time I have been in the church since I left London for the plague, and it frighted me indeed to go through the church more than I thought it could have done, to see so many graves lie so high upon the churchyards, where people have been buried of the plague. I was much troubled at it, and do not think to go through it again a good while.

31st. I find many about the City that live near the churchyards solicitous to have the churchyards covered with lime, and I think it is needfull, and ours, I hope, will be done. To my Lord Chancellor's new house which he is building, only to view it, hearing so much from Mr. Evelyn of it; and, indeed, it is the finest pile I ever did see in my life, and will be a glorious house. To White Hall and, to my great joy, people begin to bustle up and down there, the King holding his resolution to be in town to-morrow, and hath good encouragement, blessed be God! to do so, the plague being decreased this week to 56, and the total to 227.

JOHN DRYDEN (1631–1700)

Dryden was the foremost literary man of his time, in verse, in prose, and in the drama. Much that he wrote was so wrapped up in the politics and religious discussions of the day that it is hard reading for one not thoroughly acquainted with the period; but there is enough besides of so universal a quality as to justify amply Dryden's high place in the literature of Great Britain.

He was born August 9 (?), 1631, in Northamptonshire and educated at Westminster and Trinity College, Cambridge, from which he received his B.A. in 1654. His literary career really began in 1658 with Heroic Stanzas on the Death of Oliver Cromwell. Two years later, he celebrated the return of King Charles in Astræa Redux. This apparently sudden shift in politics, and his going over to the Church of Rome later in life, have caused many readers to regard Dryden as a time-server, like the Vicar of Bray in the old song.

In 1663 Dryden began his career as a playwright. For over a score of years he was the chief dramatist of the Restoration. Among his many plays the most striking are The Rival Ladies, The Indian Emperor, The Conquest of Granada, and All for Love, his most representative tragedy, a version that he made in 1678 of Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra. It is a typical "heroic play": in its setting, in its approximate employment of the unities of time and place, in its treatment of the love and ambition of titanic characters, and in the manner in which it was produced — in a large theater, with actresses (unlike the Elizabethan custom), with incidental music, with movable scenery, and whatever else would add to the spectacle. Unlike other heroic plays, however, it is written, not in couplets, but in blank verse. Dryden also made an operatic version of Shakespeare's The Tempest with D'Avenant and an alteration of Troilus and Cressida.

Of Dryden's many other works the following are the most significant: Annus Mirabilis, 1666, a vivid account of the year 1666, the year of the Dutch war, the plague, and the great fire of London; the Essay of Dramatic Poesy, 1668; Absalom and Achitophel, 1681, a political allegory attacking those who planned to put the Duke of Monmouth on the throne; MacFlecknoe, a literary satire in which he attacked Shadwell particularly; Religio Laici, 1683, a defense of his religion, followed four years later, after his conversion to Catholicism, by The Hind and the Panther, in which he defended the Church of Rome; his translation of Virgil, 1697; the incomparable lyrics, The Ode for St. Cecilia's Day and Alexander's Feast; and the Fables, 1700.

Dryden is distinctly a product of his time. As a writer of heroic couplets, a satirist and controversialist, he is supreme. As a critic, he followed the neo-classic rules, yet showed original insight into many literary problems. In the drama, for which he was temperamentally unfitted, he overshadowed all his contemporaries. His clear, crisp essays and prefaces were a new and vital influence in the development of prose style. He was the literary dictator of an age that worshiped reason and craftsmanship, often at the expense of imagination; but he can still be read with pleasure and profit by a modern reader who is willing and able to make the intellectual adjustment necessary.

The best one-volume edition of Dryden's poems is the Cambridge (Houghton Mifflin Company); of his plays, Noyes' (Scott Foresman). His complete works, with a biography, were edited by Sir Walter Scott, and revised by Professor Saintsbury. Dr. Johnson included him in his Lives of the Poets. The most recent studies of Dryden are by T. S. Eliot and Mark van Doren.

MAC FLECKNOE

OR, A SATIRE UPON THE TRUE-BLUE-PROTESTANT POET

T. S.

BY THE AUTHOR OF ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL

After the charge of high treason against Shaftesbury (whom Dryden had attacked in Absalom and Achitophel) had been dropped, a medal was struck in honor of the event. Dryden wrote a satire on the proceedings, The Medal (1682), which Shadwell answered with a vitriolic and coarse poem, The Medal of John Bayes. Dryden's reply was the following poem, a good example of the personal satire of the times.

All human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons, monarchs must obey.

'his Flecknoe[1] found, who, like Augustus, young las called to empire, and had governed long;
prose and verse, was owned, without dispute,
hro' all the realms of Nonsense, absolute.
his aged prince, now flourishing in peace,
d blest with issue of a large increase;
orn out with business, did at length debate settle the succession of the State; d, pond'ring which of all his sons was fit reign, and wage immortal war with wit, ied: "'Tis resolved; for nature pleads, that he ould only rule, who most resembles me.
—— [2] alone my perfect image bears,
ature in dulness from his tender years:
—— alone, of all my sons, is he ho stands confirmed in full stupidity.
e rest to some faint meaning make pretense,
t Sh—— never deviates into sense.
me beams of wit on other souls may fall,
rike thro', and make a lucid interval;
t Sh——'s genuine night admits no ray,
s rising fogs prevail upon the day.
sides, his goodly fabric[3] fills the eye, d seems designed for thoughtless majesty;
oughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain,
d, spread in solemn state, supinely reign.
eywood and Shirley[4] were but types of thee,
ou last great prophet of tautology.
en I, a dunce of more renown than they,
as sent before but to prepare thy way;
d, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget,[5] came teach the nations in thy greater name.
y warbling lute, the lute I whilom strung, hen to King John of Portugal I sung,[6]
as but the prelude to that glorious day, hen thou on silver Thames didst cut thy way,
ith well-timed oars before the royal barge,
relled with the pride of thy celestial charge; d big with hymn, commander of a host,
e like was ne'er in Epsom blankets[7] tossed.
Methinks I see the new Arion[1] sail,
The lute still trembling underneath thy nail.
At thy well-sharpened thumb from shore to shore
The treble squeaks for fear, the basses roar;
Echoes from Pissing Alley Sh—— call,
And Sh—— they resound from Aston Hall.
About thy boat the little fishes throng,
As at the morning toast that floats along.
Sometimes, as prince of thy harmonious band,
Thou wield'st thy papers in thy threshing hand.
St. André's[2] feet ne'er kept more equal time,
Not ev'n the feet of thy own Psyche's[3] rhyme;
Tho' they in number as in sense excel:
So just, so like tautology, they fell,
That, pale with envy, Singleton[4] forswore
The lute and sword, which he in triumph bore,
And vowed he ne'er would act Villerius[5] more."
Here stopped the good old sire, and wept for joy
In silent raptures of the hopeful boy.
All arguments, but most his plays, persuade,
That for anointed dulness he was made.
Close to the walls which fair Augusta[6] bind,
(The fair Augusta much to fears[7] inclined,)
An ancient fabric raised t' inform the sight,
There stood of yore, and Barbican it hight:
A watchtower once; but now, so fate ordains,
Of all the pile an empty name remains.
From its old ruins brothel-houses rise,
Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys,
Where their vast courts the mother-strumpets keep,
And, undisturbed by watch, in silence sleep.
Near these a Nursery[8] erects its head,
Where queens are formed, and future heroes bred;
Where unfledged actors learn to laugh and cry,
Where infant punks their tender voices try,
And little Maximins[9] the gods defy.

[1] An insignificant miscellaneous writer (d. 1678), who is not as bad, however, as Dryden pictures him.
[2] Obviously, Shadwell, 1642?-92, poet and dramatist, who, in 1688, succeeded Dryden as Poet Laureate.
[3] Shadwell was a large man.
[4] Later Elizabethan dramatists; both, especially Heywood, were far better than Dryden admits.
[5] rough, woolen cloth.
[6] Flecknoe had actually been at the King of Portugal's court.
[7] Why the epithet "Epsom" is used is not clear, except as a poor allusion to Shadwell's play, Epsom Wells.

[1] The Greek musician of the seventh century B.C., saved from drowning, according to the fable, by a dolphin charmed by his music.
[2] A French dancing teacher.
[3] Psyche is a little-known play of Shadwell's.
[4] A contemporary actor.
[5] A character in Davenant's The Siege of Rhodes, 1656.
[6] London.
[7] i.e., of plots to put a Catholic on the throne.
[8] A school for actors.
[9] Maximin is a character in Dryden's Tyrannic Love, 1669.

Great Fletcher[1] never treads in buskins[2] here,
Nor greater Jonson dares in socks[3] appear;
But gentle Simkin[4] just reception finds
Amidst this monument of vanished minds:
Pure clinches[5] the suburbian Muse affords,
And Panton[6] waging harmless war with words.
Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiously designed his Sh——'s throne;
For ancient Dekker[7] prophesied long since,
That in this pile should reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense;
To whom true dulness should some Psyches owe,
But worlds of Misers[8] from his pen should flow;
Humorists and hypocrites it should produce,
Whole Raymond families, and tribes of Bruce.
Now Empress Fame had published the renown
Of Sh——'s coronation thro' the town.
Roused by report of Fame, the nations meet,
From near Bunhill,[9] and distant Watling Street.[10]
No Persian carpets spread th' imperial way,
But scattered limbs of mangled poets lay;
From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and relics of the bum.
Much Heywood, Shirley, Ogleby[11] there lay,
But loads of Sh—— almost choked the way.
Bilked[12] stationers for yeomen stood prepared,
And Herringman[13] was captain of the guard.
The hoary prince in majesty appeared,
High on a throne of his own labors reared.
At his right hand our young Ascanius[14] sate,
Rome's other hope, and pillar of the State.
His brows thick fogs, instead of glories, grace,
And lambent dulness played around his face.
As Hannibal did to the altars come,
Sworn by his sire a mortal foe to Rome;

1 Beaumont's collaborator. 2 i.e., in tragedy.
3 in comedy. 4 A low-comedy actor.
5 clenches, or puns. 6 A forgotten writer.
7 The Elizabethan dramatist.
8 The Miser and The Humorists are plays by Shadwell.
9 An old burial ground near the center of London.
10 A street, dating from Roman times, at the edge of the town.
11 A forgotten writer. 12 cheated.
13 A publisher of the day.
14 Æneas's son; the heir apparent.

So Sh—— swore, nor should his vow be vain,
That he till death true dulness would maintain;
And, in his father's right, and realm's defense,
Ne'er to have peace with wit, nor truce with sense.
The king himself the sacred unction made,
As king by office, and as priest by trade.
In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
He placed a mighty mug of potent ale;
Love's Kingdom[1] to his right he did convey,
At once his scepter, and his rule of sway;
Whose righteous lore the price had practice young,
And from whose loins recorded Psyche sprung.
His temples, last, with poppies were o'erspread,
That nodding seemed to consecrate his head.
Just at that point of time, if fame not lie,
On his left hand twelve reverend owls did fly.
So Romulus, 'tis sung, by Tiber's brook,
Presage of sway from twice six vultures took.
Th' admiring throng loud acclamations make,
And omens of his future empire take.
The sire then shook the honors of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed
Full on the filial dulness: long he stood,
Repelling from his breast the raging god;
At length burst out in this prophetic mood:
"Heavens bless my son, from Ireland let him reign
To far Barbadoes on the western main;
Of his dominion may no end be known,
And greater than his father's be his throne;
Beyond Love's Kingdom let him stretch his pen!"
He paused, and all the people cried "Amen."
Then thus continued he: "My son, advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry.
Let Virtuosos[2] in five years be writ;
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit.
Let gentle George[3] in triumph tread the stage,
Make Dorimant betray, and Loveit rage;

1 A play by Shadwell.
2 Shadwell wrote a play The Virtuoso, 1676.
3 Sir George Etherege (1635?–91), the author of three popular, but excellent, comedies in prose.

et Cully, Cockwood, Fopling,[1] charm the pit, nd in their folly shew the writer's wit.
et still thy fools shall stand in thy defense,
nd justify their author's want of sense.
et 'em be all by thy own model made
f dulness, and desire no foreign aid;
hat they to future ages may be known,
ot copies drawn, but issue of thy own.
ay, let thy men of wit too be the same,
ll full of thee, and differing but in name.
ut let no alien S—dl—y[2] interpose,
o lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose.
nd when false flowers of rhetoric thou wouldst cull,
rust nature, do not labor to be dull;
ut write thy best, and top; and, in each line, r Formal's[3] oratory will be thine:
r Formal, tho' unsought, attends thy quill,
nd does thy northern dedications fill.
or let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
y arrogating Jonson's[4] hostile name.
et father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
nd uncle Ogleby thy envy raise.
hou art my blood, where Jonson has no part:
/hat share have we in nature, or in art?
/here did his wit on learning fix a brand,
nd rail at arts he did not understand?
/here made he love in Prince Nicander's[5] vein,
r swept the dust in Psyche's humble strain?
/here sold he bargains, 'whip-stitch, kiss my arse,' romis'd a play and dwindled to a farce?
/hen did his Muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
s thou whole Eth'rege dost transfuse to thine?
ut so transfused, as oil on water's flow,
is always floats above, thine sinks below.
his is thy province, this thy wondrous way,
ew humors to invent for each new play:
his is that boasted bias of thy mind,
y which one way, to dulness, 'tis inclined;
/hich makes thy writings lean on one side still,
nd, in all changes, that way bends thy will.
or let thy mountain-belly make pretense
f likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin[1] of wit.
Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep;
Thy tragic Muse gives smiles, thy comic sleep,
With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite.
In thy felonious heart tho' venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies.
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambics, but mild anagram.
Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command
Some peaceful province in acrostic land.
There thou may'st wings display and altars raise,
And torture one poor word ten thousand ways.
Or, if thou wouldst thy diff'rent talents suit,
Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute."

He said: but his last words were scarcely heard;
For Bruce and Longvil[2] had a trap prepared,
And down they sent the yet declaiming bard.

Sinking he left his drugget robe behind,
Borne upwards by a subterranean wind.
The mantle fell to the young prophet's part,
With double portion of his father's art.

1682

1 These are characters in contemporary plays.
2 Sir Charles Sedley, a witty courtier and minor writer, who is said to have helped Shadwell in his writing. He is the Lisideius of Dryden's Essay of Dramatic Poesy.
3 A character in Shadwell's The Virtuoso.
4 Shadwell was an admirer and follower of Ben Jonson.
5 A character in Shadwell's Psyche.

1 a small barrel. 2 Characters in The Virtuoso.

A SONG FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1687

This ode, and the next, were written for a London musical society which celebrated every year the day of St. Cecilia, the patroness of music. Both odes were set to music and performed in public.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony
This universal frame began;
When Nature underneath a heap
Of jarring atoms lay,
And could not heave her head,
The tuneful voice was heard from high,
"Arise, ye more than dead."

Then cold and hot and moist and dry
In order to their stations leap,
And Music's power obey.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in Man.

What passion cannot Music raise and quell!
When Jubal[1] struck the chorded shell,
His listening brethren stood around,
And, wondering, on their faces fell
To worship that celestial sound:
Less than a god they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell,
That spoke so sweetly, and so well.
What passion cannot Music raise and quell!

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms
With shrill notes of anger
And mortal alarms.
The double, double, double beat
Of the thundering drum
Cries, "Hark! the foes come;
Charge, charge, 'tis too late to retreat!"

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whispered by the warbling lute.

Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs and desperation,
Fury, frantic indignation,
Depth of pains and height of passion,
For the fair, disdainful dame.

But oh! what art can teach,
What human voice can reach
The sacred organ's praise?
Notes inspiring holy love,
Notes that wing their heavenly ways
To mend the choirs above.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees unrooted left their place,
Sequacious[2] of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia raised the wonder higher;
When to her organ vocal breath was given,
An angel heard, and straight appeared,
Mistaking earth for heaven.

GRAND CHORUS

As from the power of sacred lays
The spheres began to move,
And sung that great Creator's praise
To all the blessed above;
So, when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And Music shall untune the sky.

1687?; pub. 1693

ALEXANDER'S FEAST; OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC

A SONG IN HONOR OF ST. CECILIA'S DAY, 1697

'Twas at the royal feast, for Persia won
By Philip's warlike son:[1]
Aloft in awful state
The godlike hero sate
On his imperial throne;
His valiant peers were placed around;
Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound:
(So should desert in arms be crowned.)
The lovely Thais,[2] by his side,
Sate like a blooming Eastern bride,
In flower of youth and beauty's pride.
Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.

CHORUS

Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.

Timotheus,[3] placed on high
Amid the tuneful quire,
With flying fingers touched the lyre:
The trembling notes ascend the sky,
And heavenly joys inspire.
The song began from Jove,
Who left his blissful seats above,
(Such is the power of mighty love).
A dragon's fiery form belied the god:
Sublime on radiant spires he rode,
When he to fair Olympia[4] pressed;
And while he sought her snowy breast,
Then round her slender waist he curled,
And stamped an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.
The listening crowd admire the lofty sound,

1 See Gen. IV, 21. "He was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ."
2 following.

1 Alexander. 2 The Greek courtesan.
3 Alexander's favorite musician.
4 Alexander's mother.

"A present deity," they shout around;
"A present deity," the vaulted roofs rebound:
With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

CHORUS

With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,
Of Bacchus ever fair, and ever young.
The jolly god in triumph comes;
Sound the trumpets, beat the drums;
Flushed with a purple grace
He shows his honest face:
Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes.
Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain;
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure;
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

CHORUS

Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure;
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Soothed with the sound the king grew vain;
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain.
The master saw the madness rise,
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heaven and earth defied,
Changed his hand, and checked his pride.
He chose a mournful Muse,
Soft pity to infuse;
He sung Darius[1] great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
Fallen from his high estate,
And weltering in his blood;
Deserted at his utmost need
By those his former bounty fed;
On the bare earth exposed he lies,
With not a friend to close his eyes.

With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
Revolving in his altered soul
The various turns of chance below;
And, now and then, a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

CHORUS

Revolving in his altered soul
The various turns of chance below;
And, now and then, a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

The mighty master smiled to see
That love was in the next degree;
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love.
Softly sweet, in Lydian[1] measures,
Soon he soothed his soul to pleasures.
"War," he sung, "is toil and trouble;
Honor but an empty bubble;
Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying:
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, O think it worth enjoying:
Lovely Thais sits beside thee,
Take the good the gods provide thee."

The many rend the skies with loud applause;
So Love was crowned, but Music won the cause.
The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,
And sighed and looked, sighed and looked,
Sighed and looked, and sighed again;
At length, with love and wine at once oppressed,
The vanquished victor sunk upon her breast.

CHORUS

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,
And sighed and looked, sighed and looked,
Sighed and looked, and sighed again;
At length, with love and wine at once oppressed,
The vanquished victor sunk upon her breast.

Now strike the golden lyre again;
A louder yet, and yet a louder strain.

1 Conquered by Alexander.

1 gentle, sensuous.

Break his bands of sleep asunder,
And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.
Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has raised up his head;
As awaked from the dead,
And, amazed, he stares around.
"Revenge, revenge!" Timotheus cries;
"See the Furies arise;
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair,
And the sparkles that flash from their eyes?
Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand!
Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,
And unburied remain
Inglorious on the plain:
Give the vengeance due
To the valiant crew.
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes,
And glittering temples of their hostile gods!"
The princes applaud with a furious joy;
And the king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy.

CHORUS

And the king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way,
To light him to his prey,
And, like another Helen, fired another Troy.

Thus long ago,
Ere heaving bellows learned to blow,
While organs yet were mute,
Timotheus, to his breathing flute
And sounding lyre,
Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With Nature's mother wit, and arts unknown before.
Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown:
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down.

GRAND CHORUS

At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With Nature's mother wit, and arts unknown before.
Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown:
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down.

AH, HOW SWEET IT IS TO LOVE!

This song is from the play, Tyrannic Love.

Ah, how sweet it is to love!
Ah, how gay is young Desire!
And what pleasing pains we prove
When we first approach Love's fire!
Pains of love be sweeter far
Than all other pleasures are.

Sighs which are from lovers blown
Do but gently heave the heart:
Ev'n the tears they shed alone
Cure, like trickling balm, their smart:
Lovers, when they lose their breath,
Bleed away in easy death.

Love and Time with reverence use,
Treat them like a parting friend;
Nor the golden gifts refuse,
Which in youth sincere they send:
For each year their price is more,
And they less simple than before.

Love, like spring-tides full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again:
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear.

EPIGRAM ON MILTON

These lines were printed under the engraved portrait of Milton in the folio edition of Paradise Lost, 1688.

Three poets, in three distant ages born,
Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
The first [1] in loftiness of thought surpassed,
The next [2] in majesty, in both the last.
The force of Nature could no farther go;
To make a third she joined the former two.

1 Homer. 2 Virgil.

AN ESSAY OF DRAMATIC POESY
(1668)

This famous essay is one of the best that Dryden wrote. It is cast in the form of a conversation carried on by Eugenius (Lord Buckhurst), Crites (Sir Robert Howard), Lisideius (Sir Charles Sedley), and Neander (Dryden), while they are boating on the Thames. The passage below is the last third of the essay.

"But to return whence I [1] have digressed: I dare boldly affirm these two things of the English drama: — First, that we have many plays of ours as regular as any of theirs,[2] and which, besides, have more variety of plot and characters; and secondly, that in most of the regular plays of Shakespeare or Fletcher (for Ben Jonson's are for the most part regular), there is a more masculine fancy and greater spirit in the writing than there is in any of the French. I could produce, even in Shakespeare's and Fletcher's works, some plays which are almost exactly formed; as The Merry Wives of Windsor, and The Scornful Lady: but because (generally speaking) Shakespeare, who writ first, did not perfectly observe the laws of comedy, and Fletcher, who came nearer to perfection, yet through carelessness made many faults; I will take the pattern of a perfect play from Ben Jonson, who was a careful and learned observer of the dramatic laws, and from all his comedies I shall select The Silent Woman; of which I will make a short examen, according to those rules which the French observe."

As Neander was beginning to examine The Silent Woman, Eugenius, earnestly regarding him; "I beseech you, Neander," said he, "ratify the company, and me in particular, so far, as before you speak of the play, to give us a character of the author; and tell us frankly your opinion, whether you do not think all writers, both French and English, ought to give place to him."

"I fear," replied Neander, "that in obeying your commands I shall draw some envy upon myself. Besides, in performing them, it will be first necessary to speak somewhat of Shakespeare and Fletcher, his rivals in poesy; and one of them, in my opinion, at least his equal, perhaps his superior.

"To begin, then, with Shakespeare. He was the man who of all modern, and perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul. All the images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them, not laboriously, but luckily; when he describes anything, you more than see it, you feel it too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning, give him the greater commendation: he was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards, and found her there. I cannot say he is everywhere alike; were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat, insipid; his comic wit degenerating into clenches,[1] his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him; no man can say he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets,

Quantum lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.[2]

The consideration of this made Mr. Hales [3] of Eton say, that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakespeare; and however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him Fletcher and Jonson, never equalled them to him in their esteem: and in the last king's [4] court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakespeare far above him.

"Beaumont and Fetcher, of whom I am next to speak, had, with the advantage of Shakespeare's wit, which was their precedent, great natural gifts, improved by study: Beaumont especially being so accurate a judge of plays, that Ben Jonson, while he lived, submitted all his writings to his censure, and, 'tis thought, used his judgment in correcting, if not contriving, all his plots. What value he had for him, appears by the verses he writ to him; and therefore I need speak no farther of it. The first play that brought Fletcher and him in esteem was their Philaster: for before that, they had written two or three very unsuccessfully, as the like is reported of Ben Jonson, before he writ Every Man in his Humour. Their plots were generally more regular than Shakespeare's, especially those which were made before Beaumont's death; and they understood and imitated the conversation of gentlemen much

1 Neander (Dryden). 2 The French.

1 A clench is a play on words, "false wit."
2 As cypresses are accustomed among bending shrubs.
3 John Hales, 1584–1656, learned theologian and fellow of Eton College, who, according to tradition, was present when Ben Jonson talked of Shakespeare's lack of learning.
4 Charles I.

better; whose wild debaucheries, and quickness of wit in repartees, no poet before them could paint as they have done. Humor, which Ben Jonson derived from particular persons, they made it not their business to describe: they represented all the passions very lively, but above all, love. I am apt to believe the English language in them arrived to its highest perfection: what words have since been taken in, are rather superfluous than ornamental. Their plays are now the most pleasant and frequent entertainments of the stage, two of theirs being acted through the year for one of Shakespeare's or Jonson's. The reason is, because there is a certain gaiety in their comedies, and pathos in their more serious plays, which suit generally with all men's humors. Shakespeare's language is likewise a little obsolete, and Ben Jonson's wit comes short of theirs.

"As for Jonson, to whose character I am now arrived, if we look upon him while he was himself (for his last plays were but his dotages), I think him the most learned and judicious writer which any theater ever had. He was a most severe judge of himself, as well as others. One cannot say he wanted wit, but rather that he was frugal of it. In his works you find little to retrench or alter. Wit, and language, and humor also in some measure, we had before him; but something of art was wanting to the drama till he came. He managed his strength to more advantage than any who preceded him. You seldom find him making love in any of his scenes, or endeavoring to move the passions; his genius was too sullen and saturnine to do it gracefully, especially when he knew he came after those who had performed both to such an height. Humor was his proper sphere; and in that he delighted most to represent mechanic people. He was deeply conversant in the ancients, both Greek and Latin, and he borrowed boldly from them. There is scarce a poet or historian among the Roman authors of those times whom he has not translated in Sejanus and Catiline. But he has done his robberies so openly, that one may see he fears not to be taxed by any law. He invades authors like a monarch; and what would be theft in other poets is only victory in him. With the spoils of these writers he so represents old Rome to us, in its rites, ceremonies, and customs, that if one of their poets had written either of his tragedies, we had seen less of it than in him. If there was any fault in his language, 'twas that he weaved it too closely and laboriously, in his comedies especially. Perhaps, too, he did a little too much Romanize our tongue, leaving the words which he translated almost as much Latin as he found them: wherein, though he learnedly followed their language, he did not enough comply with the idiom of ours. If I would compare him with Shakespeare, I must acknowledge him the more correct poet, but Shakespeare the greater wit. Shakespeare was the Homer, or father of our dramatic poets; Jonson was the Virgil, the pattern of elaborate writing; I admire him, but I love Shakespeare. To conclude of him, as he has given us the most correct plays, so in the precepts which he has laid down in his Discoveries, we have as many and profitable rules for perfecting the stage, as any where with the French can furnish us.

"Having thus spoken of the author, I proceed to the examination of his comedy, The Silent Woman.

. . . . . .

[Here follows a careful analysis of Jonson's play.]

. . . . . .

This was the substance of what was then spoken on that occasion; and Lisideius, I think, was going to reply, when he was prevented thus by Crites: "I am confident," said he, "that the most material things that can be said have been already urged on either side; if they have not, I must beg of Lisideius that he will defer his answer till another time: for I confess I have a joint quarrel to you both, because you have concluded, without any reason given for it, that rhyme is proper for the stage. I will not dispute how ancient it hath been among us to write this way; perhaps our ancestors knew no better till Shakespeare's time. I will grant it was not altogether left by him, and that Fletcher and Ben Jonson used it frequently in their Pastorals, and sometimes in other plays. Farther, — I will not argue whether we received it originally from our own countrymen, or from the French; for that is an inquiry of as little benefit, as theirs who, in the midst of the great plague, were not so solicitous to provide against it, as to know whether we had it from the malignity of our own air, or by transportation from Holland. I have therefore only to affirm, that it is not allowable in serious plays; for comedies, I find you already concluding with me. To prove this, I might satisfy myself to tell you, how much in vain it is for you to strive against the stream of the people's inclination; the greatest part of which are prepossessed so much h those excellent plays of Shakespeare, tcher, and Ben Jonson, which have been tten out of rhyme, that except you could ng them such as were written better in it, l those too by persons of equal reputation h them, it will be impossible for you to n your cause with them, who will still be ges. This it is to which, in fine, all your sons must submit. The unanimous con- t of an audience is so powerful, that even ius Cæsar (as Macrobius reports of him), en he was perpetual dictator, was not able balance it on the other side; but when berius, a Roman Knight, at his request tended in the Mime[1] with another poet, was forced to cry out, Etiam favente me tus es, Laberi.[2] But I will not on this asion take the advantage of the greater nber, but only urge such reasons against yme, as I find in the writings of those who ve argued for the other way. First, then, m of opinion that rhyme is unnatural in a y, because dialogue there is presented as effect of sudden thought: for a play is imitation of nature; and since no man, thout premeditation, speaks in rhyme, ther ought he to do it on the stage. This ders not but the fancy may be there ele- ed to an higher pitch of thought than it is ordinary discourse; for there is a probabil- that men of excellent and quick parts y speak noble things extempore: but those oughts are never fettered with the numbers sound of verse without study, and there- e it cannot be but unnatural to present the st free way of speaking in that which is the st constrained. For this reason, says istotle, 'tis best to write tragedy in that d of verse which is the least such, or which nearest prose: and this amongst the an- nts was the Iambic, and with us is blank rse, or the measure of verse kept exactly thout rhyme. These numbers therefore e fittest for a play; the others for a paper of rses, or a poem; blank verse being as much low them as rhyme is improper for the ama. And if it be objected that neither e blank verses made extempore, yet, as near- nature, they are still to be preferred. — t there are two particular exceptions, hich many besides myself have had to rse; by which it will appear yet more ainly how improper it is in plays. And e first of them is grounded on that very ason for which some have commended rhyme; they say, the quickness of repartees in argumentative scenes receives an ornament from verse. Now what is more unreasonable than to imagine that a man should not only light upon the wit, but the rhyme too, upon the sudden? This nicking of him who spoke before both in sound and measure, is so great an happiness, that you must at least suppose the persons of your play to be born poets: Arcades omnes, et cantare pares, et respondere parati:[1] they must have arrived to the degree of quicquid conabar dicere;[2] — to make verses almost whether they will or no. If they are anything below this, it will look rather like the design of two, than the answer of one: it will appear that your actors hold intelligence together; that they perform their tricks like fortune-tellers, by confederacy. The hand of art will be too visible in it, against that maxim of all professions — Ars est celare artem:[3] that it is the greatest perfection of art to keep itself undiscovered. Nor will it serve you to object, that however you manage it, 'tis still known to be a play; and, consequently, the dialogue of two persons understood to be the labor of one poet. For a play is still an imitation of nature; we know we are to be deceived, and we desire to be so; but no man ever was deceived but with a probability of truth; for who will suffer a gross lie to be fastened on him? Thus we sufficiently understand that the scenes which represent cities and countries to us are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvas; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Nay, rather ought they not be labored with so much the more diligence and exactness, to help the imagination? since the mind of man does naturally tend to truth; and therefore the nearer anything comes to the imitation of it, the more it pleases.

"Thus, you see, your rhyme is incapable of expressing the greatest thoughts naturally, and the lowest it cannot with any grace: for what is more unbefitting the majesty of verse, than to call a servant, or bid a door be shut in rhyme? and yet you are often forced on this miserable necessity. But verse, you say, circumscribes a quick and luxuriant fancy, which would extend itself too far on every subject, did not the labor which is required to well-turned and polished rhyme, set bounds satiric play.

2 Even with me in your favor, you are defeated, berius.

1 Both young Arcadians, both alike inspired
To sing, and answer as the song required.
Virgil's Seventh Eclogue, Dryden's translation.

2 Whatever I tried to express [became poetry].
Ovid, Tristia, IV.

3 The business of art is to conceal art.

to it. Yet this argument, if granted, would only prove that we may write better in verse, but not more naturally. Neither is it able to evince that; for he who wants judgment to confine his fancy in blank verse, may want it as much in rhyme: and he who has it will avoid errors in both kinds. Latin verse was as great a confinement to the imagination of those poets as rhyme to ours; and yet you find Ovid saying too much on every subject. Nescivit (says Seneca) quod bene cessit relinquere: [1] of which he gives you one famous instance in his description of the deluge:

Omnia pontus erat, deerant quoque litora ponto.
Now all was sea, nor had that sea a shore.

Thus Ovid's fancy was not limited by verse, and Virgil needed not verse to have bounded his.

"In our own language we see Ben Jonson confining himself to what ought to be said, even in the liberty of blank verse; and yet Corneille,[2] the most judicious of the French poets, is still varying the same sense in hundred ways, and dwelling eternally on the same subject, though confined by rhyme. Some other exceptions I have to verse; but since these I have named are for the most part already public, I conceive it reasonable they should first be answered."

"It concerns me less than any," said Neander (seeing he had ended), "to reply to this discourse; because when I should have proved that verse may be natural in plays, yet I should always be ready to confess, that those which I have written in this kind [3] come short of that perfection which is required. Yet since you are pleased I should undertake this province, I will do it, though with all imaginable respect and deference, both to that person from whom you have borrowed your strongest arguments, and to whose judgment, when I have said all, I finally submit. But before I proceed to answer your objections, I must first remember you, that I exclude all comedy from my defence; and next that I deny not but blank verse may be also used; and content myself only to assert, that in serious plays where the subject and characters are great, and the plot unmixed with mirth, which might allay or divert these concernments which are produced, rhyme is there as natural and more effectual than blank verse.

"And now having laid down this as a foundation, — to begin with Crites, — I must crave leave to tell him, that some of his arguments against rhyme reach no farther than, from the faults or defects of ill rhyme, to conclude against the use of it in general. May not I conclude against blank verse by the same reason? If the words of some poets who write in it are either ill chosen, or ill placed, which makes not only rhyme, but all kind of verse in any language unnatural, shall I, for their vicious affectation, condemn those excellent lines of Fletcher, which are written in that kind? Is there anything in rhyme more constrained than this line in blank verse? — I heaven invoke, and strong resistance make; where you see both the clauses are placed unnaturally, that is, contrary to the common way of speaking, and that without the excuse of a rhyme to cause it: yet you would think me very ridiculous, if I should accuse the stubbornness of blank verse for this, and not rather the stiffness of the poet. Therefore, Crites, you must either prove that words, though well chosen, and duly placed, yet render not rhyme natural in itself; or that, however natural and easy the rhyme may be, yet it is not proper for a play. If you insist on the former part, I would ask you, what other conditions are required to make rhyme natural in itself, besides an election of apt words, and a right disposition of them? For the due choice of your words expresses your sense naturally, and the due placing them adapts the rhyme to it. If you object that one verse may be made for the sake of another, though both the words and rhyme be apt, I answer, it cannot possibly so fall out; for either there is a dependence of sense betwixt the first line and the second, or there is none: if there be that connection, then in the natural position of the words the latter line must of necessity flow from the former; if there be no dependence, yet still the due ordering of words makes the last line as natural in itself as the other: so that the necessity of a rhyme never forces any but bad or lazy writers to say what they would not otherwise. 'Tis true, there is both care and art required to write in verse. A good poet never establishes the first line till he has sought out such a rhyme as may fit the sense, already prepared to heighten the second: many times the close of the sense falls into the middle of the next verse, or farther off, and he may often prevail himself of the same advantages in English which Virgil had in Latin, — he may break off in the hemistich,[1]

1 He did not know when to leave off.
2 The well-known French tragic dramatist, 1606–84.
3 In Dryden's best play, All for Love, he abandoned heroic couplets, which he is here defending, in favor of blank verse.

1 half line.

and begin another line. Indeed, the not observing these two last things makes plays which are writ in verse so tedious: for though, most commonly, the sense is to be confined to the couplet, yet nothing that does perpetuo tenore fluere,[1] run in the same channel, can please always. 'Tis like the murmuring of a stream, which not varying in the fall, causes at first attention, at last drowsiness. Variety of cadences is the best rule; the greatest help to the actors, and refreshment to the audience.

"If, then, verse may be made natural in itself, how becomes it unnatural in a play? You say the stage is the representation of nature, and no man in ordinary conversation speaks in rhyme. But you foresaw when you said this, that it might be answered — neither does any man speak in blank verse, or in measure without rhyme. Therefore you concluded, that which is nearest nature is still to be preferred. But you took no notice that rhyme might be made as natural as blank verse, by the well placing of the words, etc. All the difference between them, when they are both correct, is, the sound in one, which the other wants; and if so, the sweetness of it, and all the advantage resulting from it, which are handled in the Preface to The Rival Ladies,[2] will yet stand good. As for that place of Aristotle, where he says, plays should be writ in that kind of verse which is nearest prose, it makes little for you; blank verse being properly but measured prose. Now measure alone, in any modern language, does not constitute verse; those of the ancients in Greek and Latin consisted in quantity of words, and a determinate number of feet. But when, by the inundation of the Goths and Vandals into Italy, new languages were introduced, and barbarously mingled with the Latin, of which the Italian, Spanish, French, and ours (made out of them and the Teutonic) are dialects, a new way of poesy was practised; new, I say, in those countries, for in all probability it was that of the conquerors in their own nations: at least we are able to prove, that the eastern people have used it from all antiquity. This new way consisted in measure or number of feet, and rhyme; the sweetness of rhyme, and observation of accent, supplying the place of quantity in words, which could neither exactly be observed by those barbarians, who knew not the rules of it, neither was it suitable to their tongues, as it had been to the Greek and Latin. No man is tied in modern poesy to observe any farther rule in the feet of his verse, but that they be dissyllables; whether Spondee, Trochee, or Iambic, it matters not; only he is obliged to rhyme: neither do the Spanish, French, Italian, or Germans, acknowledge at all, or very rarely, any such kind of poesy as blank verse amongst them. Therefore, at most 'tis but a poetic prose, a sermo pedestris; and as such, most fit for comedies, where I acknowledge rhyme to be improper. — Farther: as to that quotation of Aristotle, our couplet verses may be rendered as near prose as blank verse itself, by using those advantages I lately named, — as breaks in an hemistich, or running the sense into another line, — thereby making art and order appear as loose and free as nature: or not tying ourselves to couplets strictly, we may use the benefit of the Pindaric way practised in The Siege of Rhodes,[1] where the numbers vary, and the rhyme is disposed carelessly, and far from often chiming. Neither is that other advantage of the ancients to be despised, of changing the kind of verse when they please, with the change of the scene, or some new entrance; for they confine not themselves always to iambics, but extend their liberty to all lyric numbers, and sometimes even to hexameter. But I need not go so far to prove that rhyme, as it succeeds to all other offices of Greek and Latin verse, so especially to this of plays, since the custom of nations at this day confirms it; the French, Italian, and Spanish tragedies are generally writ in it; and sure the universal consent of the most civilised parts of the world, ought in this, as it doth in other customs, to include the rest.

"But perhaps you may tell me, I have proposed such a way to make rhyme natural, and consequently proper to plays, as is unpracticable; and that I shall scarce find six or eight lines together in any play, where the words are so placed and chosen as is required to make it natural. I answer, no poet need constrain himself at all times to it. It is enough he makes it his general rule; for I deny not but sometimes there may be a greatness in placing the words otherwise; and sometimes they may sound better; sometimes also the variety itself is excuse enough. But if, for the most part, the words be placed as they are in the negligence of prose, it is sufficient to denominate the way practicable; for we esteem that to be such, which in the trial oftener succeeds than misses. And thus far you may find the practice made good in many 1 flow in an even stream.

2 One of Dryden's first plays, a tragicomedy.

1 Davenant's play, the first English opera, 1656.

plays: where you do not, remember still, that if you cannot find six natural rhymes together, it will be as hard for you to produce as many lines in blank verse, even among the greatest of our poets, against which I cannot make some reasonable exception.

"And this, Sir, calls to my remembrance the beginning of your discourse, where you told us we should never find the audience favorable to this kind of writing, till we could produce as good plays in rhyme as Ben Jonson, Fletcher, and Shakespeare had writ out of it. But it is to raise envy to the living, to compare them with the dead. They are honored, and almost adored by us, as they deserve; neither do I know any so presumptuous of themselves as to contend with them. Yet give me leave to say thus much, without injury to their ashes; that not only we shall never equal them, but they could never equal themselves, were they to rise and write again. We acknowledge them our fathers in wit; but they have ruined their estates themselves, before they came to their children's hands. There is scarce an humor, a character, or any kind of plot, which they have not used. All comes sullied or wasted to us: and were they to entertain this age, they could not now make so plenteous treatments out of such decayed fortunes. This therefore will be a good argument to us, either not to write at all, or to attempt some other way. There is no bays to be expected in their walks: tentanda via est, qua me quoque possum tollere humo.[1]

"This way of writing in verse they have only left free to us; our age is arrived to a perfection in it, which they never knew; and which (if we may guess by what of theirs we have seen in verse, as The Faithful Shepherdess,[2] and Sad Shepherd[3]) 'tis probable they never could have reached. For the genius of every age is different; and though ours excel in this, I deny not but to imitate nature in that perfection which they did in prose, is a greater commendation than to write in verse exactly. As for what you have added — that the people are not generally inclined to like this way, — if it were true, it would be no wonder, that betwixt the shaking off an old habit, and the introducing of a new, there should be difficulty. Do we not see them stick to Hopkins' and Sternhold's psalms,[4] and forsake those of David, I mean Sandys[1] his translation of them? If by the people you understand the multitude, the οἱ πολλοί,[2] 'tis no matter what they think; they are sometimes in the right, sometimes in the wrong: their judgment is a mere lottery. Est ubi plebs recte putat, est ubi peccat.[3] Horace says it of the vulgar, judging poesy. But if you mean the mixed audience of the populace and the noblesse, I dare confidently affirm that a great part of the latter sort are already favorable to verse; and that no serious plays written since the king's return have been more kindly received by them than The Siege of Rhodes,[4] the Mustapha,[5] The Indian Queen,[6] and Indian Emperor.[7]

"But I come now to the inference of your first argument. You said that the dialogue of plays is presented as the effect of sudden thought, but no man speaks suddenly, or extempore, in rhyme; and you inferred from thence, that rhyme, which you acknowledge to be proper to epic poesy, cannot equally be proper to dramatic, unless we could suppose all men born so much more than poets, that verses should be made in them, not by them.

"It has been formerly urged by you, and confessed by me, that since no man spoke any kind of verse extempore, that which was nearest nature was to be preferred. I answer you, therefore, by distinguishing betwixt what is nearest to the nature of comedy, which is the imitation of common persons and ordinary speaking, and what is nearest the nature of a serious play: this last is indeed the representation of nature, but 'tis nature wrought up to a higher pitch. The plot, the characters, the wit, the passions, the descriptions, are all exalted above the level of common converse, as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimility. Tragedy, we know, is wont to image to us the minds and fortunes of noble persons, and to portray these exactly; heroic rhyme is nearest nature, as being the noblest kind of modern verse.

> Indignatur enim privatis et prope socco
> Dignis carminibus narrari cœna Thyestæ [8]

1 A path must be tried where I too can rise from the earth. (Virgil, Georgics, III.)

2 By Fletcher. 3 Jonson's last, uncompleted play.

4 Hopkins and Sternhold together translated the Psalms into verse in the first half of the sixteenth century.

1 Sandys, who for a while was connected with the Virginia colony, made a paraphrase in verse of the Psalms as well as of the Canticles.

2 literally, the many; the common people or multitude.

3 When the common people think correctly, it is then that they are wrong.

4 By Davenant.

5 By Roger Boyle, first Earl of Orrery.

6 By Dryden and Sir Robert Howard, the Crites in this essay.

7 By Dryden.

8 From Horace, Ars Poetica: The Thyestean feast no less disdains, The vulgar vehicle of comic strains. (Conington.)

ys Horace: and in another place,

Effutire leves indigna tragœdia versus.[1]

lank verse is acknowledged to be too low r a poem, nay more, for a paper of verses; it if too low for an ordinary sonnet, how uch more for tragedy, which is by Aristotle, the dispute betwixt the epic poesy and the ramatic, for many reasons he there alleges, nked above it?

"But setting this defence aside, your ar- ument is almost as strong against the use of yme in poems as in plays; for the epic way everywhere interlaced with dialogue, or scoursive scenes; and therefore you must ther grant rhyme to be improper there, hich is contrary to your assertion, or admit into plays by the same title which you have ven it to poems. For though tragedy be stly preferred above the other, yet there is great affinity between them, as may easily e discovered in that definition of a play hich Lisideius gave us. The genus of them the same — a just and lively image of uman nature, in its actions, passions, and raverses of fortune: so is the end — namely, r the delight and benefit of mankind. The naracters and persons are still the same, iz., the greatest of both sorts; only the man- er of acquainting us with those actions, pas- ons, and fortunes, is different. Tragedy erforms it viva voce, or by action, in dialogue; herein it excels the epic poem, which does chiefly by narration, and therefore is not lively an image of human nature. How- ver, the agreement betwixt them is such, hat if rhyme be proper for one, it must be r the other. Verse, 'tis true, is not the fect of sudden thought; but this hinders ot that sudden thought may be represented n verse, since those thoughts are such as ust be higher than nature can raise them ithout premeditation, especially to a con- inuance of them, even out of verse; and con- quently you cannot imagine them to have een sudden either in the poet or in the ctors. A play, as I have said, to be like ature, is to be set above it; as statues which re placed on high are made greater than the fe, that they may descend to the sight in heir just proportion.

"Perhaps I have insisted too long on this bjection; but the clearing of it will make my tay shorter on the rest. You tell us, Crites, hat rhyme appears most unnatural in re- partees, or short replies: when he who an- swers (it being presumed he knew not what the other would say, yet) makes up that part of the verse which was left incomplete, and supplies both the sound and measure of it. This, you say, looks rather like the confed- eracy of two, than the answer of one.

"This, I confess, is an objection which is in every man's mouth, who loves not rhyme: but suppose, I beseech you, the repartee were made only in blank verse, might not part of the same argument be turned against you? for the measure is as often supplied there as it is in rhyme; the latter half of the hemi- stich as commonly made up, or a second line subjoined as a reply to the former; which any one leaf in Jonson's plays will sufficiently clear to you. You will often find in the Greek tragedians, and in Seneca, that when a scene grows up into the warmth of repartees which is the close fighting of it, the latter part of the trimeter is supplied by him who answers; and yet it was never observed as a fault in them by any of the ancient or modern critics. The case is the same in our verse, as it was in theirs; rhyme to us being in lieu of quantity to them. But if no latitude is to be allowed a poet, you take from him not only his licence of quidlibet audendi,[1] but you tie him up in a straiter compass than you would a philosopher. This is indeed Musas colere severiores.[2] You would have him fol- low nature, but he must follow her on foot: you have dismounted him from his Pegasus. But you tell us, this supplying the last half of a verse, or adjoining a whole second to the former, looks more like the design of two, than the answer of one. Suppose we ac- knowledge it: how comes this confederacy to be more displeasing to you, than in a dance which is well contrived? You see there the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated them- selves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross: the confederacy is plain amongst them, for chance could never produce anything so beautiful; and yet there is nothing in it that shocks your sight. I acknowledge the hand of art appears in re- partee, as of necessity it must in all kind of verse. But there is also the quick and poign- ant brevity of it (which is an high imitation of nature in those sudden gusts of passion) to mingle with it; and this, joined with the cadency and sweetness of the rhyme, leaves nothing in the soul of the hearer to desire. 'Tis an art which appears; but it appears only like the shadowings of painture, which being

1 Light verses, poured forth, are not befitting to tragedy.

1 of trying anything.
2 cultivating the very stern Muses.

to cause the rounding of it, cannot be absent; but while that is considered, they are lost: so while we attend to the other beauties of the matter, the care and labor of the rhyme is carried from us, or at least drowned in its own sweetness, as bees are sometimes buried in their honey. When a poet has found the repartee, the last perfection he can add to it, is to put it into verse. However good the thought may be, however apt the words in which 'tis couched, yet he finds himself at a little unrest, while rhyme is wanting: he cannot leave it till that comes naturally, and then is at ease, and sits down contented.

"From replies, which are the most elevated thoughts of verse, you pass to those which are most mean, and which are common with the lowest of household conversation. In these, you say, the majesty of verse suffers. You instance in the calling of a servant, or commanding a door to be shut, in rhyme. This, Crites, is a good observation of yours, but no argument: for it proves no more but that such thoughts should be waived, as often as may be, by the address of the poet. But suppose they are necessary in the places where he uses them, yet there is no need to put them into rhyme. He may place them in the beginning of a verse, and break it off, as unfit, when so debased, for any other use: or granting the worst, — that they require more room than the hemistich will allow, yet still there is a choice to be made of the best words, and least vulgar (provided they be apt), to express such thoughts. Many have blamed rhyme in general, for this fault, when the poet with a little care might have redressed it. But they do it with no more justice than if English poesy should be made ridiculous for the sake of the Water-poet's[1] rhymes. Our language is noble, full, and significant; and I know not why he who is master of it may not clothe ordinary things in it as decently as the Latin, if he use the same diligence in his choice of words: delectus verborum origo est eloquentiæ.[2] It was the saying of Julius Cæsar, one so curious in his, that none of them can be changed but for a worse. One would think, unlock the door, was a thing as vulgar as could be spoken; and yet Seneca could make it sound high and lofty in his Latin:

> Reserate clusos regii postes laris.
> Set wide the palace gates.

"But in turn from this conception, both because it happens not above twice or thri in any play that those vulgar thoughts a used; and then too (were there no other ap logy to be made, yet), the necessity of ther which is alike in all kind of writing, may e cuse them. For if they are little and mea in rhyme, they are, of consequence, such i blank verse. Besides that the great eage ness and precipitation with which they ar spoken, makes us rather mind the substanc than the dress; that for which they ar spoken, rather than what is spoken. Fc they are always the effect of some hast concernment, and something of consequenc depends on them.

"Thus, Crites, I have endeavored to an swer your objections; it remains only tha I should vindicate an argument for verse which you have gone about to overthrow It had formerly been said that the easiness o blank verse renders the poet too luxuriant but that the labor of rhyme bounds and cir cumscribes an over-fruitful fancy; the sens there being commonly confined to the coup let, and the words so ordered that the rhym naturally follows them, not they the rhyme To this you answered, that it was no argu ment to the question in hand; for the dispute was not which way a man may write best but which is most proper for the subject or which he writes.

"First, give me leave, Sir, to remember you that the argument against which you raised this objection was only secondary: it was built on this hypothesis, — that to write in verse was proper for serious plays. Which supposition being granted (as it was briefly made out in that discourse, by showing how verse might be made natural), it asserted, that this way of writing was an help to the poet's judgment, by putting bounds to a wild overflowing fancy. I think, therefore, it will not be hard for me to make good what it was to prove on that supposition. But you add, that were this let pass, yet he who wants judgment in the liberty of his fancy, may as well show the defect of it when he is confined to verse; for he who has judgment will avoid errors, and he who has it not, will commit them in all kinds of writing.

"This argument, as you have taken it from a most acute person,[1] so I confess it carries much weight in it: but by using the word judgment here indefinitely, you seem to have put a fallacy upon us. I grant, he who has judgment, that is, so profound, so strong, or rather so infallible a judgment, that he needs

1 John Taylor (1580–1653), called the "Water Poet" because he had been a ferryman on the Thames.

2 Choice of words is the source of eloquence.

1 Sir Robert Howard.

helps to keep it always poised and upright, I commit no faults either in rhyme or out it. And on the other extreme, he who has udgment so weak and crazed that no helps n correct or amend it, shall write scurvily t of rhyme, and worse in it. But the first these judgments is nowhere to be found, d the latter is not fit to write at all. To ak therefore of judgment as it is in the st poets; they who have the greatest pro- rtion of it, want other helps than from it, thin. As for example, you would be loth say that he who is endued with a sound dgment has no need of history, geography, moral philosophy, to write correctly. dgment is indeed the master-workman in play; but he requires many subordinate nds, many tools to his assistance. And rse I affirm to be one of these; 'tis a rule d line by which he keeps his building com- ct and even, which otherwise lawless imag- nation would raise either irregularly or osely; at least, if the poet commits errors th this help, he would make greater and ore without it: 'tis, in short, a slow and inful, but the surest kind of working. vid, whom you accuse for luxuriancy in rse, had perhaps been farther guilty of it, d he writ in prose. And for your instance Ben Jonson, who, you say, writ exactly ithout the help of rhyme; you are to remem- r, 'tis only an aid to a luxuriant fancy, hich his was not: as he did not want imagination, so none ever said he had much to spare. Neither was verse then refined so much, to be an help to that age, as it is to ours. Thus then the second thoughts being usually the best, as receiving the maturest digestion from judgment, and the last and most mature product of those thoughts being artful and labored verse, it may well be inferred, that verse is a great help to a luxuriant fancy; and this is what that argument which you opposed was to evince."

Neander was pursuing this discourse so eagerly that Eugenius had called to him twice or thrice, ere he took notice that the barge stood still, and that they were at the foot of Somersetstairs, where they had appointed it to land. The company were all sorry to separate so soon, though a great part of the evening was already spent; and stood a-while looking back on the water, upon which the moonbeams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver: at last they went up through a crowd of French people, who were merrily dancing in the open air, and nothing concerned for the noise of guns [1] which had alarmed the town that afternoon. Walking thence together to the Piazze, they parted there; Eugenius and Lisideius to some pleasant appointment they had made, and Crites and Neander to their several lodgings.

1 Dryden began his essay: "It was that memorable day, in the first summer of the late war, when our navy engaged the Dutch." The noise of the battle could be heard easily in London.

JOHN BUNYAN (1628–1688)

John Bunyan, the son of a tinker, was born in the village of Elstow, in 1628. As a boy he took rt in the Civil War, undoubtedly on the Parliamentary side. His real life, however, was in his ligious experience, narrated in Grace Abounding. He married a pious woman who brought him her dowry certain religious books. Reading these brought Bunyan into that agony of soul hich, as with so many of his contemporaries, followed a conviction of sin and doubt as to salvaon. Under the ministrations of Mr. Gifford, pastor of a Baptist congregation at Bedford, he beme converted, and in turn began to preach the gospel. In 1660, after the Restoration, he was rrested under the law which prohibited religious meetings except those of the Established Church, nd held in somewhat loose confinement for twelve years. After his release he resumed preaching, hich he continued until his death in 1688.

Bunyan's writings are entirely concerned with what to him was the great reality of life, the relaon of the soul to God. He began to write tracts shortly after his conversion, among which A Few ighs from Hell, or the Groans of a Damned Soul, reminds us by its title of the fearful issue involved this relation. During his imprisonment he published Grace Abounding (1666). The great reigious allegory, The Pilgrim's Progress, followed in 1678; The Life and Death of Mr. Badman in 680; and a second allegory, The Holy War, in 1682. Grace Abounding, of which the first third is ere printed, is one of the most remarkable autobiographies ever written. It illustrates perfectly he spiritual excitement of the seventeenth century of which the Puritan character was the result. Bunyan's religious experience was intimate and personal, a quality reflected in his simple, realistic, omespun style. Woven through this groundwork, however, are strains of poetic splendor and eauty which Bunyan owed to his study of the King James Version of the Bible. This combination of naïve reflection of life and richness of imagination gives to The Pilgrim's Progress its pr eminence as an allegory.

Grace Abounding is edited by E. C. Baldwin in Ginn's Standard English Classics; The Pilgrim Progress, by W. V. Moody, in the Riverside Literature Series. Lives of Bunyan by Robe Southey, by John Brown, by J. A. Froude (English Men of Letters Series), and E. Venables (Gre Writers Series) are available. The essays by Macaulay, John Tulloch (Puritanism and Its Leaders and Edward Dowden (Puritan and Anglican) may be noted.

GRACE ABOUNDING TO THE CHIEF OF SINNERS

OR,

A BRIEF RELATION OF THE EXCEEDING MERCY OF GOD IN CHRIST, TO HIS POOR SERVANT, JOHN BUNYAN

In this my relation of the merciful working of God upon my soul, it will not be amiss, if, in the first place, I do, in a few words, give you a hint of my pedigree, and manner of bringing up; that thereby the goodness and bounty of God towards me, may be the more advanced and magnified before the sons of men.

For my descent then, it was, as is well known by many, of a low and inconsiderable generation; my father's house being of that rank that is meanest, and most despised of all the families in the land. Wherefore I have not here, as others, to boast of noble blood, or of a high-born state, according to the flesh; though, all things considered, I magnify the heavenly Majesty, for that by this door he brought me into this world, to partake of the grace and life that is in Christ by the Gospel.

But yet, notwithstanding the meanness and inconsiderableness of my parents, it pleased God to put it into their hearts to put me to school, to learn both to read and write; the which I also attained, according to the rate of other poor men's children, though to my shame I confess, I did soon lose that little I learnt, even almost utterly, and that long before the Lord did work his gracious work of conversion upon my soul.

As for my own natural life, for the time that I was without God in the world, it was, indeed, "according to the course of this world, and the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience."[1] It was my delight to be "taken captive by the devil at his will,"[2] being filled with all unrighteousness; the which did also so strongly work, and put forth itself, both in my heart and life, and that from a child, that I had but few equals (especially considering my years, which were tender, being few), both for cursin swearing, lying, and blaspheming the ho name of God.

Yea, so settled and rooted was I in the things, that they became as a second natu to me. The which, as I also have with sobe ness considered since, did so offend the Lor that even in my childhood he did scare a affright me with fearful dreams, and d terrify me with dreadful visions. For ofte after I had spent this and the other day sin, I have in my bed been greatly afflicte while asleep, with the apprehensions devils and wicked spirits, who still, as I th thought, labored to draw me away wi them, of which I could never be rid.

Also I should, at these years, be great afflicted and troubled with the thoughts the Day of Judgment, and that both nig and day, and should tremble at the thoug of the fearful torments of hell-fire; still fe ing that it would be my lot to be found last among those devils and hellish fien who are there bound down with the chai and bonds of darkness, unto the judgme of the great day.

These things, I say, when I was but child, about nine or ten years old, did so d tress my soul, that then, in the midst of r many sports and childish vanities, amic my vain companions, I was often much c down, and afflicted in my mind therewit yet could I not let go my sins. Yea, I was al then so overcome with despair of life a heaven, that I should often wish, either th there had been no hell, or that I had beer devil; supposing they were only tormento that if it must needs be, that I went thith I might be rather a tormentor, than be t mented myself.

A while after, these terrible dreams d leave me, which also I soon forgot; for n pleasures did quickly cut off the remei brance of them, as if they had never bee Wherefore with more greediness, accordi to the strength of nature, I did still let loo the reins to my lust, and delighted in transgression against the law of God: so th until I came to the state of marriage, was the very ringleader of all the youth th ot me company, in all manner of vice and godliness.

1 Ephesians II, 2, 3. 2 II Timothy II, 26.

Yea, such prevalency had the lusts and its of the flesh in this poor soul of mine, t had not a miracle of precious grace prevented, I had not only perished by the stroke eternal justice, but had also laid myself en even to the stroke of those laws which ng some to disgrace and open shame ore the face of the world.

n these days the thoughts of religion were y grievous to me. I could neither endure myself, nor that any other should. So that en I have seen some read in those books t concerned Christian piety, it would be it were a prison to me. Then I said unto d, "Depart from me, for I desire not the owledge of thy ways."[1] I was now void all good consideration, heaven and hell re both out of sight and mind; and as for ring and damning, they were least in my oughts. "O Lord, thou knowest my life, d my ways were not hid from thee."

Yet this I well remember, that though I ild myself sin with the greatest delight d ease, and also take pleasure in the vileess of my companions; yet, even then, if I d at any time seen wicked things, by those o professed goodness, it would make my rit tremble. As once above all the rest, en I was in my heighth of vanity, yet hearg one to swear that was reckoned for a reious man, it had so great a stroke upon my rit, that it made my heart to ake.

But God did not utterly leave me, but folved me still, not now with convictions, but dgments; yet such as were mixed with rcy. For once I fell into a crick of the r, and hardly escaped drowning. Another ne I fell out of a boat into Bedford river, t mercy yet preserved me alive. Besides, other time, being in the field with one of y companions, it chanced that an adder ssed over the highway; so I having a stick my hand, struck her over the back, and ving stunned her, I forced open her mouth th my stick, and plucked her sting out th my fingers; by which act, had not God en merciful unto me, I might, by my desrateness, have brought myself to mine end. This also have I taken notice of with anksgiving. When I was a soldier, I, with hers, were drawn out to go to such a place besiege it; but when I was just ready to , one of the company desired to go in my om; to which, when I had consented, he ok my place; and coming to the siege, as he stood sentinel, he was shot into the head with a musket bullet, and died.

Here, as I said, were judgments and mercy, but neither of them did awaken my soul to righteousness; wherefore I sinned still, and grew more and more rebellious against God, and careless of mine own salvation.

Presently after this, I changed my condition into a married state, and my mercy was to light upon a wife whose father was counted godly. This woman and I, though we came together as poor as poor might be (not having so much household stuff as a dish or spoon betwixt us both), yet this she had for her part, The Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven, and The Practice of Piety, which her father had left her when he died. In these two books I should sometimes read with her, wherein I also found some things that were somewhat pleasing to me; (but all this while I met with no conviction). She also would be often telling of me what a godly man her father was, and how he would reprove and correct vice, both in his house, and amongst his neighbors; what a strict and holy life he lived in his days, both in word and deed.

Wherefore these books, with this relation, though they did not reach my heart, to awaken it about my sad and sinful state, yet they did beget within me some desires to religion: so that, because I knew no better, I fell in very eagerly with the religion of the times; to wit, to go to church twice a day, and that too with the foremost; and there should very devoutly both say and sing as others did, yet retaining my wicked life. But withal, I was so overrun with the spirit of superstition, that I adored, and that with great devotion, even all things (both the high place, priest, clerk, vestments, service, and what else) belonging to the church; counting all things holy that were therein contained, and especially, the priest and clerk most happy, and without doubt greatly blessed, because they were the servants, as I then thought, of God, and were principal in the holy temple to do his work therein.

This conceit grew so strong in little time upon my spirit, that had I but seen a priest (though never so sordid and debauched in his life), I should find my spirit fall under him, reverence him, and knit unto him. Yea, I thought, for the love I did bear unto them (supposing they were the ministers of God) I could have lain down at their feet and have been trampled upon by them; their name, their garb, and work did so intoxicate and bewitch me.

[1] Job xxi. 14.

After I had been thus for some considerable time, another thought came in my mind; and that was, whether we were of the Israelites or no? For finding in the Scriptures that they were once the peculiar people of God, thought I, if I were once of this race, my soul must needs be happy. Now again, I found within me a great longing to be resolved about this question, but could not tell how I should. At last I asked my father of it, who told me, no, we were not. Wherefore, then I fell in my spirit as to the hopes of that and so remained.

But all this while, I was not sensible of the danger and evil of sin. I was kept from considering that sin would damn me, what religion soever I followed, unless I was found in Christ. Nay, I never thought of him, nor whether there was such an one, or not. "Thus man while blind doth wander, but wearieth himself with vanity, for he knoweth not the way to the city of God." [1]

But one day, amongst all the sermons our parson made, his subject was to treat of the sabbath-day, and of the evil of breaking that, either with labor, sports, or otherwise. Now I was, notwithstanding my religion, one that took much delight in all manner of vice, and especially, that was the day that I did solace myself therewith. Wherefore I fell in my conscience under his sermon, thinking and believing that he made that sermon on purpose to show me my evil-doing. And at that time I felt what guilt was, though never before, that I can remember. But then I was, for the present, greatly loaden therewith, and so went home when the sermon was ended, with a great burden upon my spirit.

This, for that instant, did benumb the sinews of my best delights, and did imbitter my former pleasures to me. But behold, it lasted not; for before I had well dined, the trouble began to go off my mind, and my heart returned to its old course. But oh! how glad was I, that this trouble was gone from me, and that the fire was put out, that I might sin again without control! Wherefore, when I had satisfied nature with my food, I shook the sermon out of my mind, and to my old custom of sports and gaming I returned with great delight.

But the same day, as I was in the midst of a game at Cat, and having struck it one blow from the hole, just as I was about to strike it the second time, a voice did suddenly dart from heaven into my soul, which said, "Wilt thou leave thy sins and go to heaven, or have thy sins and go to hell?" At this I was p to an exceeding maze. Wherefore, leav my cat upon the ground, I looked up heaven, and was as if I had, with the e of my understanding, seen the Lord Je looking down upon me, as being very ho displeased with me, and as if he did sever threaten me with some grievous punishm for these and other my ungodly practices.

I had no sooner thus conceived in my mi but suddenly this conclusion was fastened my spirit, (for the former hint did set sins again before my face) that I had be a great and grievous sinner, and that it w now too late for me to look after heaven; Christ would not forgive me, nor pardon transgressions. Then I fell to musing up this also. And while I was thinking of it, a fearing lest it should be so, I felt my he sink in despair, concluding it was too la and therefore I resolved in my mind I wo go on in sin. For, thought I, if the case thus, my state is surely miserable; misera if I leave my sins, and but miserable if I f low them. I can but be damned, and i must be so, I had as good be damned many sins, as be damned for a few.

Thus I stood in the midst of my play, b fore all that then were present; but yet I t them nothing. But I say, I having ma this conclusion, I returned desperately to sport again; and I well remember, th presently this kind of despair did so posse my soul, that I was persuaded I could ne attain to other comfort than what I shou get in sin; for heaven was gone already, that on that I must not think. Wherefo I found within me a great desire to take n fill of sin, still studying what sin was yet to committed, that I might taste the sweetne of it. And I made as much haste as I cou to fill my belly with its delicates, lest I shou die before I had my desire; for that I fear greatly. In these things, I protest befo God I lie not, neither do I feign this sort speech. These were really, strongly, a with all my heart, my desires. The goo Lord, whose mercy is unsearchable, forgi me my transgressions!

And I am very confident that this tempt tion of the devil is more usual amongst po creatures than many are aware of, even overrun their spirits with a scurfy and seare frame of heart, and benumbing of conscienc which frame he stilly and slyly supplie with such despair, that though not muc guilt attendeth souls, yet they continuall have a secret conclusion within them, tha

[1] Ecclesiastes x, 15.

ere is no hopes for them; for they have ved sins, therefore after them they will go.[1] Now therefore I went on in sin with great eedíness of mind, still grudging that I could t be so satisfied with it as I would. This did ntinue with me about a month, or more. it one day, as I was standing at a neigh-r's shop-window, and there cursing and earing, and playing the madman, after my nted manner, there sat within the woman the house, and heard me; who, though she s a very loose and ungodly wretch, yet otested that I swore and cursed at that most arful rate, that she was made to tremble hear me; and told me further, that I was e ungodliest fellow for swearing, that ever e heard in all her life; and that I, by thus ing, was able to spoil all the youth in the hole town, if they came but in my company. At this reproof I was silenced, and put to cret shame, and that too, as I thought, be-re the God of heaven. Wherefore, while I ood there, and hanging down my head, I ished with all my heart that I might be a tle child again, that my father might learn e to speak without this wicked way of earing; for, thought I, I am so accustomed it, that it is in vain for me to think of a formation, for I thought it could never be. But, how it came to pass I know not, I did om this time forward so leave my swearing, at it was a great wonder to myself to ob-rve it. And whereas before I knew not w to speak unless I put an oath before, and nother behind, to make my words have thority; now I could, without it, speak tter, and with more pleasantness, than er I could before. All this while I knew t Jesus Christ, neither did I leave my orts and plays.

But quickly after this, I fell in company ith one poor man that made profession of ligion; who, as I then thought, did talk easantly of the Scriptures, and of the mat-rs of religion; wherefore, falling into some ve and liking to what he said, I betook me my Bible, and began to take great pleasure reading; but especially with the historical art thereof. For, as for Paul's Epistles, and uchlike Scriptures, I could not away with hem, being as yet but ignorant, either of the orruptions of my nature or of the want and orth of Jesus Christ to save me.

Wherefore I fell to some outward reforma-ion, both in my words and life, and did set he commandments before me for my way to eaven; which commandments I also did strive to keep, and, as I thought, did keep them pretty well sometimes, and then I should have comfort; yet now and then should break one, and so afflict my conscience; but then I should repent, and say I was sorry for it, and promise God to do better next time, and there get help again, for then I thought I pleased God as well as any man in England.

Thus I continued about a year; all which time our neighbors did take me to be a very godly man, a new and religious man, and did marvel much to see such a great and famous alteration in my life and manners. And indeed so it was, though yet I knew not Christ, nor grace, nor faith, nor hope. And, truly, as I have well seen since, had I then died, my state had been most fearful. Well, this, I say, continued about a twelvemonth or more.

But, I say, my neighbors were amazed at this my great conversion, from prodigious profaneness to something like a moral life. And truly, so they well might; for this my conversion was as great, as for Tom of Bethlem to become a sober man. Now therefore they began to praise, to commend, and to speak well of me, both to my face, and behind my back. Now I was, as they said, become godly; now I was become a right honest man. But oh! when I understood that these were their words and opinions of me, it pleased me mighty well. For though, as yet, I was nothing but a poor painted hypocrite, yet I loved to be talked of as one that was truly godly. I was proud of my godliness, and indeed I did all I did, either to be seen of, or to be well spoken of, by men; and thus I continued for about a twelvemonth, or more.

Now you must know, that before this I had taken much delight in ringing, but my conscience beginning to be tender, I thought such practice was but vain, and therefore forced myself to leave it, yet my mind hankered. Wherefore, I should go to the steeple house and look on it, though I durst not ring. But I thought this did not become religion neither, yet I forced myself, and would look on still. But quickly after, I began to think, how if one of the bells should fall? Then I chose to stand under a main beam, that lay overthwart the steeple, from side to side, thinking there I might stand sure. But then I should think again, should the bell fall with a swing, it might first hit the wall, and then rebounding upon me, might kill me for all this beam. This made me stand in the steeple-door; and now, thought

[1] Jeremiah II, 25, XVIII, 12.

I, I am safe enough; for if a bell should then fall I can slip out behind these thick walls, and so be preserved notwithstanding.

So after this I would yet go to see them ring, but would not go further than the steeple-door; but then it came into my head, how if the steeple itself should fall? And this thought, It may fall for ought I know, when I stood and looked on, did continually so shake my mind, that I durst not stand at the steeple-door any longer, but was forced to flee, for fear the steeple should fall upon my head.

Another thing was my dancing. I was a full year before I could quite leave that. But all this while, when I thought I kept this or that commandment, or did, by word or deed anything that I thought was good, I had great peace in my conscience; and should think with myself, God cannot choose but be now pleased with me; yea, to relate it in mine own way, I thought no man in England could please God better than I.

But poor wretch as I was, I was all this while ignorant of Jesus Christ, and going about to establish my own righteousness; and had perished therein, had not God in mercy showed me more of my state by nature.

But upon a day, the good providence of God did cast me to Bedford, to work on my calling, and in one of the streets of that town, I came where there were three or four poor women sitting at a door in the sun, talking about the things of God; and being now willing to hear them discourse, I drew near to hear what they said, for I was now a brisk talker also myself, in the matters of religion. But I may say, "I heard, but I understood not;" for they were far above, out of my reach. Their talk was about a new birth, the work of God on their hearts, also how they were convinced of their miserable state by nature. They talked how God had visited their souls with his love in the Lord Jesus, and with what words and promises they had been refreshed, comforted and supported against the temptations of the devil. Moreover they reasoned of the suggestions and temptations of Satan in particular; and told to each other by which they had been afflicted, and how they were borne up under his assaults. They also discoursed of their own wretchedness of heart, of their unbelief; and did contemn, slight and abhor their own righteousness, as filthy and insufficient to do them any good.

And methought they spake as if joy did make them speak; they spake with such pleasantness of Scripture language, and with such appearance of grace in all they said that they were to me, as if they had found a new world; as if they were "people that dwelt alone, and were not to be reckoned amongst their neighbors."[1]

At this I felt my own heart began to shake and mistrust my condition to be naught; for I saw that in all my thoughts about religion and salvation, the new birth did never enter into my mind; neither knew I the comfort of the word and promise, nor the deceitfulness and treachery of my own wicked heart. And for secret thoughts, I took no notice of them; neither did I understand what Satan's temptations were, nor how they were to be withstood and resisted, &c.

Thus, therefore, when I had heard and considered what they said, I left them, and went about my employment again, but their talk and discourse went with me; also my heart would tarry with them, for I was greatly affected with their words, both because by them I was convinced that I wanted the true tokens of a truly godly man, and also because by them I was convinced of the happy and blessed condition of him that was such an one.

Therefore I should often make it my business to be going again and again into the company of these poor people; for I could not stay away; and the more I went amongst them the more I did question my condition and as I still do remember, presently I found two things within me, at which I did sometimes marvel, (especially considering what a blind, ignorant, sordid, and ungodly wretch but just before I was); the one was a very great softness and tenderness of heart, which caused me to fall under the conviction of what by Scripture they asserted; and the other was a great bending in my mind, to continual meditating on them, and on all other good things which at any time I heard or read of.

By these things my mind was now so turned that it lay like a horse-leech at the vein, still crying out, Give, give[2]; yea, it was so fixed on eternity, and on the things about the kingdom of heaven, (that is, so far as I knew, though as yet, God knows, I knew but little); that neither pleasures, nor profits, nor persuasions, nor threats could loose it, or make it let go his hold. And though I may speak it with shame, yet it is in very deed a certain truth, it would then have been as icult for me to have taken my mind from ven to earth, as I have found it often e to get it again from earth to heaven.

1 Numbers xxiii, 9. 2 Proverbs xxx, 15.

One thing I may not omit. There was a ng man in our town, to whom my heart s knit more than to any other, but he ng a most wicked creature for cursing l swearing and whoring, I now shook him and forsook his company; but about a rter of a year after I had left him, I met n in a certain lane, and asked him how he ; he, after his old swearing and mad way, swered, he was well. "But, Harry," said Why do you swear and curse thus? What l become of you if you die in this condi- n?" He answered me in a great chafe, What would the devil do for company, if it re not for such as I am?"

About this time I met with some Ranters' ks, that were put forth by some of our ntrymen, which books were also highly esteem by several old professors;[1] some of se I read, but was not able to make a lgment about them. Wherefore as I read them, and thought upon them (feeling my- f unable to judge), I should betake myself hearty prayer in this manner: "O Lord, I a fool, and not able to know the truth m error. Lord, leave me not to my own ndness, either to approve of, or condemn s doctrine; if it be of God, let me not de- se it; if it be of the devil, let me not em- ice it. Lord, I lay my soul in this matter ly at thy foot; let me not be deceived, I mbly beseech thee." I had one religious in- nate companion all this while, and that was e poor man that I spoke of before. But out this time, he also turned a most devilish nter, and gave himself up to all manner of hiness, especially uncleanness. He would so deny that there was a God, angel, or irit; and would laugh at all exhortations sobriety. When I labored to rebuke his ckedness, he would laugh the more, and etend that he had gone through all re- ions, and could never light on the right now. He told me also, that in a little me I should see all professors turn to the ys of the Ranters. Wherefore, abomi- ting these cursed principles, I left his com- ny forthwith, and became to him as great stranger, as I had been before a familiar.

Neither was this man only a temptation to e; but my calling lying in the country, I ppened to light into several people's com- ny, who, though strict in religion formerly, t were also swept away by these Ranters. These would also talk with me of their ways, and condemn me as legal and dark; pretending that they only had attained to perfection, that could do what they would and not sin. Oh! These temptations were suitable to my flesh, I being but a young man, and my nature in its prime. But God, who had, as I hope, designed me for better things, kept me in the fear of his name, and did not suffer me to accept of such cursed principles. And blessed be God, who put it into my heart to cry to him to be kept and directed, still distrusting mine own wisdom; for I have since seen even the effect of that prayer, in his preserving me, not only from Ranting errors, but from those also that have sprung up since. The Bible was precious to me in those days.

And now, methought, I began to look into the Bible with new eyes, and read as I never did before; and especially the epistles of the Apostle St. Paul were sweet and pleasant to me; and indeed I was then never out of the Bible, either by reading or meditation; still crying out to God that I might know the truth, and way to heaven and glory.

And as I went on and read, I lighted on that passage, "To one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit; and to another faith," &c.[1] And though, as I have since seen, that by this Scripture the Holy Ghost intends, in special things extraordinary, yet on me it then did fasten with conviction, that I did want things ordinary, even that understanding and wisdom that other Christians had. On this word I mused, and could not tell what to do; especially this word [faith] put me to it, for I could not help it, but sometimes must question, whether I had any faith, or no. For I feared it shut me out of all the blessings that other good people had given them of God. But I was loth to conclude I had no faith; for if I do so, thought I, then I shall count myself a very cast-away indeed.

No, said I, with myself, though I am convinced that I am an ignorant sot, and that I want those blessed gifts of knowledge and understanding that other good people have; yet at a venture, I will conclude I am not altogether faithless, though I know not what faith is. For it was showed me, and that too (as I have seen since) by Satan, that those who conclude themselves in a faithless state, have neither rest nor quiet in their souls; and I was loth to fall quite into despair.

Wherefore by this suggestion, I was for a

- professing Christians.

[1] I Corinthians XII. 8, 9.

while made afraid to see my want of faith. But God would not suffer me thus to undo and destroy my soul, but did continually, against this my blind and sad conclusion, create still within me such suppositions, insomuch that I could not rest content, until I did now come to some certain knowledge, whether I had faith or no; this always running in my mind, "But how if you want faith indeed? But how can you tell you have faith?" And besides, I saw for certain, if I had it not, I was sure to perish for ever.

So that though I endeavored at the first to look over the business of faith, yet in a little time, I better considering the matter, was willing to put myself upon the trial, whether I had faith or no. But alas, poor wretch, so ignorant and brutish was I, that I knew to this day no more how to do it, than I know how to begin and accomplish that rare and curious piece of art, which I never yet saw or considered.

Wherefore, while I was thus considering, and being put to my plunge about it (for you must know, that as yet I had in this matter broken my mind to no man, only did hear and consider), the tempter came in with this delusion, "that there was no way for me to know I had faith, but by trying to work some miracle"; urging those Scriptures that seem to look that way, for the enforcing and strengthening his temptation. Nay, one day, as I was betwixt Elstow and Bedford, the temptation was hot upon me, to try if I had faith, by doing of some miracle; which miracle at that time was this, I must say to the puddles that were in the horse-pads, be dry; and to the dry places, be you the puddles. And truly, one time I was going to say so indeed; but just as I was about to speak, this thought came into my mind, "But go under yonder hedge and pray first, that God would make you able." But when I had concluded to pray, this came hot upon me, that if I prayed, and came again, and tried to do it, and yet did nothing notwithstanding, then be sure I had no faith, but was a cast-away, and lost. Nay, thought I, if it be so, I will never try yet, but will stay a little longer.

So I continued at a great loss; for I thought, if they only had faith, which could do so wonderful things, then I concluded, that, for the present, I neither had it, nor yet, for time to come, were ever like to have it. Thus I was tossed betwixt the devil and my own ignorance, and so perplexed, especially at some times, that I could not tell what to do.

About this time, the state and happiness of these poor people at Bedford was thus, in a dream or vision, presented to me. I saw as if they were set on the sunny side of some high mountain, there refreshing themselves with the pleasant beams of the sun, while I was shivering and shrinking in the cold, afflicted with frost, snow, and dark clouds. Methought also, betwixt me and them, I saw a wall that did compass about this mountain; now, through this wall, my soul did greatly desire to pass; concluding, that if I could, I would go even into the very midst of them, and there also comfort myself with the heat of their sun.

About this wall I thought myself to go again and again, still prying as I went, to see if I could find some way or passage, by which I might enter therein; but none could I find for some time. At the last, I saw, as it were, a narrow gap, like a little doorway in the wall, through which I attempted to pass. Now the passage being very straight and narrow, I made many offers to get in, but all in vain, even until I was well nigh quite beat out, by striving to get in. At last, with great striving, methought I at first did get in my head, and after that, by a sideling striving, my shoulders and my whole body. Then was I exceeding glad, and went and sat down in the midst of them, and so was comforted with the light and heat of their sun.

Now this mountain, and wall, &c., was thus made out to me: the mountain signified the church of the living God; the sun that shone thereon, the comfortable shining of his merciful face on them that were therein; the wall, I thought, was the word, that did make separation between the Christians and the world; and the gap which was in this wall, I thought, was Jesus Christ, who is the way to God the Father.[1] But forasmuch as the passage was wonderful narrow, even so narrow, that I could not but with great difficulty enter in thereat, it showed me, that none could enter into life, but those that were in downright earnest, and unless also they left this wicked world behind them; for here was only room for body and soul, but not for body and soul, and sin.

This resemblance abode upon my spirit many days; all which time, I saw myself in a forlorn and sad condition, but yet was provoked to a vehement hunger and desire to be one of that number that did sit in the sunshine. Now also I should pray wherever I was, whether at home or abroad, in house or

[1] John xiv, 6; Matthew vii, 14.

, and should also often, with lifting up of rt, sing that of the fifty-first Psalm, "O d, consider my distress;" for as yet I w not where I was.

either as yet could I attain to any com-able persuasion that I had faith in ist; but instead of having satisfaction,
I began to find my soul to be assaulted fresh doubts about my future happi-
; especially with such as these, "Whether as elected? But how if the day of grace ld now be past and gone?"

y these two temptations I was very much cted and disquieted; sometimes by one sometimes by the other of them. And , to speak of that about my questioning election, I found at this time that though as in a flame to find the way to heaven glory, and though nothing could beat me from this, yet this question did so offend discourage me, that I was, especially at e times, as if the very strength of my body had been taken away by the force and ver thereof. This Scripture did also seem ne to trample upon all my desires: "It is ther in him that willeth, nor in him that neth, but in God that showeth mercy."[1]
With this Scripture I could not tell what to for I evidently saw that unless the great d, of his infinite grace and bounty, had untarily chosen me to be a vessel of rcy, though I should desire and long and or until my heart did break, no good could ne of it. Therefore, this would still stick h me, "How can you tell you are elected?
d what if you should not? How then?"
O Lord, thought I, what if I should not, eed? It may be you are not, said the npter; it may be so, indeed, thought I.
y then, said Satan, you had as good leave and strive no further; for if, indeed, you uld not be elected and chosen of God, re is no talk of your being saved: "For it is ither in him that willeth, nor in him that neth; but in God that showeth mercy."
By these things I was driven to my wits' d, not knowing what to say, or how to swer these temptations. (Indeed, I little ought that Satan had thus assaulted me, t that rather it was my own prudence us to start the question;) for, that the ect only obtained eternal life, that I, with-t scruple, did heartily close withal; but at myself was one of them, there lay all the estion.

Thus, therefore, for several days, I was eatly assaulted and perplexed, and was often, when I have been walking, ready to sink where I went, with faintness in my mind. But one day, after I had been so many weeks oppressed and cast down therewith, as I was now quite giving up the ghost of all my hopes of ever attaining life, that sentence fell with weight upon my spirit. "Look at the generations of old and see; did ever any trust in God, and were confounded?"

At which I was greatly lightened, and encouraged in my soul; for thus, at that very instant, it was expounded to me, "Begin at the beginning of Genesis, and read to the end of the Revelations, and see if you can find that there was ever any that trusted in the Lord, and was confounded." So, coming home, I presently went to my Bible, to see if I could find that saying, not doubting but to find it presently; for it was so fresh, and with such strength and comfort on my spirit, that I was as if it talked with me.

Well, I looked, but I found it not; only it abode upon me. Then I did ask first this good man, and then another, if they knew where it was, but they knew no such place. At this I wondered that such a sentence should so suddenly, and with such comfort and strength, seize and abide upon my heart, and yet that none could find it. For I doubted not but it was in holy Scripture.

Thus I continued above a year, and could not find the place; but at last, casting my eye into the Apocrypha books, I found it in Ecclesiasticus.[1] This, at the first, did somewhat daunt me; but because by this time I had got more experience of the love and kindness of God, it troubled me the less; especially when I considered that though it was not in those texts that we call holy and canonical, yet, forasmuch as this sentence was the sum and substance of many of the promises, it was my duty to take the comfort of it. And I bless God for that word, for it was of God to me. That word doth still, at times, shine before my face.

After this, that other doubt did come with strength upon me, "But how if the day of grace should be past and gone? How if you have overstood the time of mercy?" Now, I remember that one day, as I was walking into the country, I was much in the thoughts of this, "But how if the day of grace be past?" And to aggravate my trouble, the tempter presented to my mind those good people of Bedford, and suggested thus unto me, that these being converted already, they were all that God would save in those parts;

[1] Romans ix, 16.

[1] Ecclesiasticus ii, 10.

and that I came too late for these had got the blessing before I came.

Now was I in great distress, thinking in very deed that this might well be so. Wherefore I went up and down bemoaning my sad condition, counting myself far worse than a thousand fools, for standing off thus long, and spending so many years in sin as I have done; still crying out, Oh! that I had turned sooner! Oh! that I had turned seven years ago! It made me also angry with myself, to think that I should have no more wit, but to trifle away my time till my soul and heaven were lost.

But when I had been long vexed with this fear, and was scarce able to take one step more, just about the same place where I received my other encouragement, these words broke in upon my mind, "Compel them to come in, that my house may be filled; and yet there is room."[1] These words, but especially them, "And yet there is room," were sweet words to me; for, truly, I thought that by them I saw that there was place enough in heaven for me; and, moreover, that when the Lord Jesus did speak these words, he then did think of me; and that he knowing the time would come that I should be afflicted with fear that there was no place left for me in his bosom, did before speak this word, and leave it upon record, that I might find help thereby against this vile temptation. This, I then verily believed.

In the light and encouragement of this word, I went a pretty while; and the comfort was the more, when I thought that the Lord Jesus should think on me so long ago, and that he should speak them words on purpose for my sake. For I did then think verily that he did on purpose speak them to encourage me withal.

But I was not without my temptations to go back again. Temptations, I say, both from Satan, mine own heart, and carnal acquaintance. But I thank God these were out-weighed by that sound sense of death and of the day of judgment, which abode, as it were, continually in my view. I should often also think on Nebuchadnezzar, of whom it is said, "He had given him all the kingdoms of the earth."[2] Yet, thought I, if this great man had all his portion in this world, one hour in hell-fire would make him forget all. Which consideration was a great help to me.

I was almost made, about this time, to see something concerning the beasts that Moses counted clean and unclean. I thought those beasts were types of men; the clea types of them that were the people of Go but the unclean, types of such as were t children of the wicked one. Now, I re that the clean beasts "chewed the cud that is, thought I, they show us, we mu feed upon the word of God. They al "parted the hoof;" I thought that signifi we must part, if we would be saved, with t ways of ungodly men. And also, in furth reading about them I found, that though did chew the cud as the hare, yet if we walk with claws like a dog, or if we did part t hoof like the swine, yet if we did not che the cud as the sheep, we were still, for all tha but unclean:[1] for I thought the hare to a type of those that talk of the word, y walk in ways of sin; and that the swi was like him that parteth with his outwa pollutions, but still wanteth the word faith, without which there could be no w of salvation, let a man be never so devou After this I found, by reading the word, th those that must be glorified with Christ another world must be called by him her called to the partaking of a share in his wo and righteousness, and to the comforts a first-fruits of his Spirit, and to a peculiar i terest in all those heavenly things which indeed fore-fit the soul for that rest, a house of glory which is in heaven above.

Here, again, I was at a very great stan not knowing what to do, fearing I was n called; "for," thought I, "if I be not calle what then can do me good? None but tho who are effectually called, inherit the kin dom of heaven." But oh! how I now love those words that spake of a Christian calling! as when the Lord said to on "Follow me·" and to another, "Come aft me." "And oh," thought I, "that he wou say so to me too, how gladly would I ru after him!"

I cannot now express with what longing and breathings in my soul I cried to Christ t call me. Thus I continued for a time, all o a flame to be converted to Jesus Christ; an did also see all that day, such glory in a cor verted state, that I could not be contente without a share therein. Gold! could it hav been gotten for gold, what could I have give for it! Had I had a whole world, it had a gone ten thousand times over for this, tha my soul might have been in a converte state.

How lovely now was every one in my eye that I thought to be converted men an

1 Luke XIV, 22, 23. 2 Daniel V, 18, 19.

1 Deuteronomy XIV, 6, 8.

men! they shone, they walked like people t carried the broad seal of heaven about m. Oh! I saw the lot was fallen to them pleasant places, and they had a goodly itage.[1] But that which made me sick, was t of Christ, in Mark, "He went up into nountain, and called to him whom he uld, and they came unto him."[2]

This Scripture made me faint and fear, yet kindled fire in my soul. That which de me fear was this, lest Christ should e no liking to me, for he called whom he uld. But oh! the glory that I saw in that dition did still so engage my heart that I ld seldom read of any that Christ did call : I presently wished, "Would I had been n in their clothes; would I had been born er; would I had been born John; or, would ad been by and had heard him when he led them, how would I have cried, O Lord, l me also!" But, oh! I feared he would t call me.

And truly, the Lord let me go thus many nths together and showed me nothing, ner that I was already, or should be called reafter. But at last, after much time nt, and many groans to God, that I might made partaker of the holy and heavenly ling, that word came in upon me: "I will anse their blood, that I have not cleansed, the Lord dwelleth in Zion."[3] These rds I thought were sent to encourage me wait still upon God, and signified unto me, t if I were not already, yet time might me, I might be in truth converted unto rist.

About this time I began to break my mind those poor people in Bedford, and to tell em my condition; which when they had ard, they told Mr. Gifford of me, who him- f also took occasion to talk with me, and s willing to be well persuaded of me, though think but from little grounds. But he in- ted me to his house, where I should hear m confer with others, about the dealings of d with their souls, from all which I still ceived more conviction, and from that time gan to see something of the vanity and ward wretchedness of my wicked heart, for yet I knew no great matter therein; but w it began to be discovered unto me, and so to work at that rate for wickedness as never did before. Now I evidently found, at lusts and corruptions would strongly it forth themselves within me, in wicked oughts and desires, which I did not re- rd before; my desires also for heaven and life began to fail. I found also, that whereas before my soul was full of longings after God, now my heart began to hanker after every foolish vanity; yea, my heart would not be moved to mind that that was good; it began to be careless, both of my soul and heaven; it would now continually hang back, both to, and in every duty; and was as a clog on the leg of a bird, to hinder her from flying.

Nay, thought I, now I grow worse and worse; now am I farther from conversion than ever I was before. Wherefore I began to sink greatly in my soul, and began to entertain such discouragement in my heart as laid me as low as hell. If now I should have burned at the stake, I could not believe that Christ had love for me; alas, I could neither hear him, nor see him, nor feel him, nor savor any of his things. I was driven as with a tempest: my heart would be unclean: the Canaanites would dwell in the land.

Sometimes I would tell my condition to the people of God, which, when they heard, they would pity me, and would tell me of the promises. But they had as good have told me, that I must reach the sun with my finger as have bidden me receive or rely upon the promise; and as soon I should have done it, all my sense and feeling was against me; and I saw I had an heart that would sin, and that lay under a law that would condemn.

These things have often made me think of the child which the father brought to Christ, "who, while he was yet a coming to him, was thrown down by the devil,[1] and also so rent and torn by him, that he lay and wallowed foaming."[2]

Further, in these days, I should find my heart to shut itself up against the Lord, and against his holy word. I have found my unbelief to set, as it were, the shoulder to the door to keep him out, and that too even then, when I have with many a bitter sigh cried, "Good Lord, break it open; Lord, break these gates of brass, and cut these bars of iron asunder."[3] Yet that word would sometimes create in my heart a peaceable pause, "I girded thee, though thou hast not known me."[4]

But all this while as to the act of sinning, I never was more tender than now. My hinder parts were inward. I durst not take a pin or stick, though but so big as a straw, for my conscience now was sore and would smart at every touch; I could not now tell how to

1 Psalm XVI, 6. 2 Mark III, 13. 3 Joel III, 21.
1 Luke IX, 42. 2 Mark IX, 20.
3 Psalm CVII, 16. 4 Isaiah XLV, 5.

speak my words, for fear I should misplace them. Oh, how gingerly did I then go in all I did or said! I found myself as on a miry bog that shook if I did but stir; and was as there left both of God and Christ, and the Spirit, and all good things.

But, I observe, though I was such a great sinner before conversion, yet God never much charged the guilt of the sins of my ignorance upon me; only he showed me I was lost if I had not Christ, because I had been a sinner. I saw that I wanted a perfect righteousness to present me without fault before God; and this righteousness was nowhere to be found, but in the person of Jesus Christ.

But my original and inward pollution, that, that was my plague and my affliction; that I say, at a dreadful rate, always putting forth itself within me; that I had the guilt of, to amazement; by reason of that, I was more loathsome in my own eyes than was a toad; and I thought I was so in God's eyes too. Sin and corruption, I said, would as naturally bubble out of my heart as water would bubble out of a fountain. I thought now that every one had a better heart than I had; and could have changed heart with any body. I thought none but the devil himself could equalize me for inward wickedness and pollution of mind. I fell, therefore, at the sight of my own vileness deeply into despair; for I concluded that this condition that I was in could not stand with a state of grace. Sure, thought I, I am forsaken of God; sure, I am given up to the devil, and to a reprobate mind. And thus I continued a long while, even for some years together.

While I was thus afflicted with the fears of my own damnation, there were two things would make me wonder; the one was, when I saw old people hunting after the things of this life, as if they should live here always; the other was, when I found professors much distressed and cast down, when they met with outward losses; as of husband, wife, child, &c. "Lord," thought I, "what ado is here about such little things as these! What seeking after carnal things by some, and what grief in others for the loss of them! If they so much labor after, and spend so many tears for the things of this present life, how am I to be bemoaned, pitied, and prayed for! My soul is dying, my soul is damning. Were my soul but in a good condition, and were I but sure of it, ah! how rich should I esteem myself, though blessed with bread and water! I should count those but small afflictions, and should bear them as little burthens. wounded spirit who can bear?"

And though I was thus troubled, and tosse and afflicted, with the sight and sense a terror of my own wickedness, yet I w afraid to let this sense and sight go quite my mind; for I found that unless guilt of co science was taken off the right way, that by the blood of Christ, a man grew rath worse for the loss of his trouble of mind, th better. Wherefore, if my guilt lay ha upon me, then I should cry that the blood Christ might take it off; and if it was goi off without it, (for the sense of sin would sometimes as if it would die, and go qui away) then I would also strive to fetch upon my heart again, by bringing the pu ishment for sin in hell-fire upon my spiri and should cry, "Lord, let it not go off m heart, but the right way, but by the bloo of Christ, and by the application of th mercy, through him, to my soul"; for tha Scripture lay much upon me, "Witho shedding of blood is no remission."[1] An that which made me the more afraid this was, because I had seen some, wh though when they were under wounds conscience, then they would cry and pra yet, seeking rather present ease from the trouble than pardon for their sin, cared n how they lost their guilt so they got it ou of their mind; now, having got it off th wrong way, it was not sanctified unto them but they grew harder and blinder and mor wicked after their trouble. This made m afraid, and made me cry to God the more that it might not be so with me.

And now was I sorry that God had mad me a man, for I feared I was a reprobate. counted man as unconverted, the most dole ful of all creatures. Thus being afflicted an tossed about my sad condition, I counte myself alone, and above the most of me unblessed.

Yea, I thought it impossible that ever should attain to so much goodness of heart as to thank God that he had made me a man Man indeed is the most noble by creation o all creatures in the visible world; but by si he had made himself the most ignoble. Th beasts, birds, fishes, &c., I blessed their con dition, for they had not a sinful nature, they were not obnoxious to the wrath of God; they were not to go to hell-fire after death. could therefore have rejoiced, had my condi tion been as any of theirs.

In this condition I went a great while; but

1 Hebrews IX, 22.

en the comforting time was come, I heard e preach a sermon upon those words in the ng, "Behold, thou art fair, my love; be- d, thou art fair." [1] But at that time he de these two words, "my love," his chief d subject matter; from which, after he had ittle opened the text, he observed these veral conclusions: "1. That the church, d so every saved soul, is Christ's love, en loveless. 2. Christ's love without a use. 3. Christ's love when hated of the rld. 4. Christ's love when under tempta- n, and under desertion. 5. Christ's love, m first to last."

But I got nothing by what he said at esent; only when he came to the applica- n of the fourth particular, this was the rd he said: "If it be so, that the saved soul Christ's love when under temptation and sertion; then, poor tempted soul, when thou t assaulted and afflicted with temptations, d the hidings of God's face, yet think on ese two words, 'my love,' still."

So as I was a going home, these words came ain into my thoughts; and I well remem- r, as they came in, I said thus in my heart, What shall I get by thinking on these two rds?" This thought had no sooner passed rough my heart, but these words began us to kindle in my spirit: "Thou art my ve, thou art my love," twenty times to- gether; and still as they ran thus in my mind, they waxed stronger and warmer, and began to make me look up. But being as yet between hope and fear, I still replied in my heart, "But is it true? but is it true?" At which, that sentence fell in upon me, "He wist not that it was true which was done by the angel." [1]

Then I began to give place to the word, which, with power, did over and over make this joyful sound within my soul, "Thou art my love, thou art my love, and nothing shall separate thee from my love." And with that Romans eight, thirty-nine, came into my mind. Now was my heart filled full of comfort and hope, and now I could believe that my sins should be forgiven me; yea, I was now so taken with the love and mercy of God, that I remember I could not tell how to contain till I got home. I thought I could have spoken of his love, and have told of his mercy to me, even to the very crows that sat upon the ploughed lands before me, had they been capable to have understood me; wherefore I said in my soul, with much gladness, "Well, I would I had a pen and ink here, I would write this down before I go any further, for surely I will not forget this forty years hence." But alas! within less than forty days I began to question all again; and by times, fell to my old courses again; which made me begin to question all still.

[1] Song of Solomon IV, 1.

[1] Acts XII, 9.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

The reign of Queen Anne (1702–14) coincides with the appearance of one of the most brilliant groups of writers which has ever graced English letters. In 1704 were published Swift's Tale of a Tub and Battle of the Books. From 1709 till 1712 Steele and Addison were delighting all England with the kindly wit of The Tatler and The Spectator. In 1709 young Mr. Pope won instant recognition by the poetry of his Pastorals, which were shortly followed by the Essay on Criticism (1711) and The Rape of the Lock (1712). Among the names of lesser note one should not forget John Gay, whose Shepherd's Week was published in 1714.

It was a period of great political unrest, in which each of the parties sought to win and hold public opinion by the aid of literature; so that much of the literary energies of the Tory Swift and the Whig Addison was diverted into partisan propaganda, until, with the death of Anne and the accession of the German prince George I, England entered on a long period of all but undisputed Whig ascendency, during which the politicians no longer needed literary allies. During the reigns of George I (1714–27) and George II (1727–60), the court played a negligible part in literary history, except as the great minister, Sir Robert Walpole, served as target of much brilliant literary satire.

During the period of the Commonwealth, the people of England had been subjected to the austere régime of Puritan prohibitions. With the Restoration of 1660 came, as a natural reaction, a time when — at any rate in those fashionable circles which most influence literature — the life of England was marked by general profligacy and by a cynical disregard of moral principles. It was the task of the early decades of the eighteenth century to reëstablish a reasonable balance in the moral life of the nation. The Queen Anne wits were neither Puritans nor libertines, but sober-minded and accomplished men of the world. To them both Puritan "enthusiasm" and the profligacy of the Restoration "fop" were equally offenses against good taste and good sense. It was the avowed purpose of Addison and Steele in The Spectator to make vice ridiculous, and to bring to the cause of decency and virtue the powerful allies of wit and good breeding.

Both in England and in France it was a time when reason, and its practical corollary good sense, were the final court of appeal in matters of belief and conduct, and of art and literature also. The philosophical rationalism of Descartes, the empiricism of Hobbes and Locke, the newly awakened interest in the natural sciences of which Sir Isaac Newton is a great exemplar, and in England the reaction against seventeenth-century preoccupation with questions of religion, all conspired to turn men's minds away from the mysteries of life and to focus their attention on the real and actual. And so the literature of eighteenth-century England is primarily concerned with the everyday facts and interests of well-ordered, civilized human life, as it transacts itself in London and in the quiet English countryside. It is much given to moralizing — too much so for our modern taste — but its morality is that of enlightened worldliness, with small admixture of mystic yearning. Until Wesley and his Methodists began (1740) their appeal to men's hearts, the Christian religion had become in eighteenth-century pulpits so coldly rational that the orthodox churchman is hardly distinguishable from the "free-thinking" Deist with his reasoned "religion of nature." The prevailing school of ethics was a calculating utilitarianism, such as that which expresses itself in Franklin's famous dictum that "honesty is the best policy." For the foreign-born and dull-witted Hanoverian kings, with their stupid profligacies, it was impossible to feel an intense personal loyalty. In religion, in ethics, and in politics, the deeper springs of life had gone dry. There remained life's many-colored surface; and on that the literature of the period turned its brilliant searchlight.

It is preëminently a social literature, whose school is the coffeehouse and tavern or the polite salon. Swift sends his Gulliver to strange lands of fancy only that we may thus see contemporary England from a new angle of vision. The supreme masterpiece of Pope's art lays its scene in a fashionable drawing-room. Thomson, to be sure, turns his back on the life of the city, but only that he may record with perfect fidelity to truth the varying phenomena of the shifting seasons.

This complete devotion to the real and actual, this preoccupation with the everyday life of normal men and women, closed the doors to romance and discouraged the more giddy flights of poetical imagination; but it gave us instead, by way of compensation, much shrewd wisdom, sound sense, and flashing wit. It made possible such a great biography as Boswell's completely realistic portrait of Johnson and his contemporaries; it encouraged the kindly human art of letter-writing and gave us such great collections of personal letters as those of Gray, Horace Walpole, and Cowper; it expressed itself in the charming familiar essays of Addison and Goldsmith; chief of all, it enabled the eighteenth century to discover for us the modern novel. Fictitious narratives in prose had, of course, been written long before the eighteenth century; but they had been deliberately romantic and far from everyday reality. The modern novel, even when its scene is far-away or long-ago, gives us always, if its art be good, a compelling sense of actuality. Its persons live in a real world and behave as we think we should behave if put in their places. It was Defoe and Richardson who discovered this art, and Fielding who brought it in Tom Jones (1749) to a degree of perfection that has seldom since been equaled.

The temper of the eighteenth century was in a high degree critical; and this critical temper expressed itself in brilliant, witty satire, which ranges all the way from the fierce indignation of a Swift, and the keen rapier strokes of Pope and Sheridan, to the kindly, humorous satire of Addison and Goldsmith. Eighteenth-century literature is often serious, but it is seldom solemn. Its prevailing spirit is the spirit of comedy — of wit and humor and daring jest. The most brilliant jester in our literature is an eighteenth-century parson, Laurence Sterne.

These qualities which mark the eighteenth century were less favorable to poetry than to prose. For good sense is the foe of enthusiasm, and enthusiasm rather than the spirit of comedy leads to the higher realms of poetry. The great bulk of eighteenth-century poetry — Pope, Gay, Goldsmith, Cowper, and much of Burns — keeps near the earth, and deals frequently with materials which the nineteenth century would have thought better suited for prose. When the poets of this period leave the lower levels, they too often mark their more ambitious flights by a speciously elevated diction — unfamiliar polysyllables of Latin derivation, studied departure from the normal word-order, the grandiose paraphrasing of simple ideas which substitutes for so commonplace a word as "birds" such phrases as "plumy people" or "tuneful choir." From these mannerisms Pope, except in his translations of Homer, is for the most part free; but they seriously mar the poetry of Thomson, the Pindaric odes of Gray and Collins, and the verse of a great company of minor poets. They are particularly frequent in poems written in blank verse — a metrical form which from 1730 on shares with the heroic couplet of Pope in general use for longer poems — and clearly have their origin in a mistaken attempt to imitate the poetical manner of Milton. Another vice of eighteenth-century poetry, the extravagant use of personified abstractions such as "pale Envy" and "wan Despair," springs from the influence of Milton's minor poems and from that of Spenser, who shared with Milton the literary devotion of poets and critics who preferred not to follow in the steps of Dryden and Pope.

Pope lived till 1744; and the prestige of his genius, and that of his master Dryden, dominates the first half of the century. To the body of critical principles which underlie Pope's poetry, the principles that are formulated in his Essay on Criticism and in the Art Poétique of the French poet-critic Boileau, literary historians have given the name "neo-classicism." Like all such labels, the term "neo-classical" is not easy to define, for within the school are included several varying sects; but the chief qualities implied by it are good sense, reasonableness, scrupulous fidelity to the truth of ascertained fact and to the normal and constant sentiments of human nature, adherence to the form and spirit of the great writers of classical antiquity who seemed most completely to exemplify the principles of reasonableness and truth to nature. Neo-classicism is the foe of obscurity and bombast, of the far-fetched "conceits" of the seventeenth-century "metaphysical" poets such as Donne and Herbert, of all that is improbable, abnormal, not immediately recognizable by the average intelligent man as part of the universal experience of human nature. In particular, it had nothing but scorn for the extravagant adventures of medieval romance. In so far as this school of criticism has made for sanity and clarity, its influence on literature has been a wholesome one; but its principles, when narrowly applied, unduly restrict the field of poetry. For the human spirit must be free to range beyond the region of established fact, to concern itself with realities which transcend everyday experience, to explore even such a world of dream as that in which Kubla Khan decreed his stately pleasure-dome.

In the second half of the eighteenth century this neo-classic theory of literature, though still, under the sturdy championship of Samuel Johnson, the dominant one, was increasingly subject to dissent and open attack. If Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard (1751) conforms in the main to its principles, his Bard (1757) is in a totally foreign spirit, and his latest poems revert to the mystical stories of the pagan North. Cowper mingles with his neo-classical fidelity to fact a tender but intense religious fervor. The cult of "sensibility," or sentimentality, as exemplified by Sterne substitutes for sound reason the caprice of random feeling. Macpherson's "Ossian" (1761) glorifies the virtues of primitive Caledonian chieftains. Bishop Percy revived the popular ballads (1765). Horace Walpole in his Castle of Otranto (1764) brings back the supernatural horrors of medieval romance. The disciples of Rousseau preach a "return to nature" which means profound distrust of all the conventions of civilized society, and the exaltation of the simple rustic and the "noble savage." When in 1786 Burns published his Kilmarnock volume of poems, written on rural themes and in a rustic dialect, he was hailed as the "plowman poet," the "child of nature," who owed nothing to Aristotle and the schools. Though Burns is for the most part realistic rather than romantic, though he owes much to the tradition of eighteenth-century poetry, he is none the less a very different sort of poet from the polished, courtly Pope. In his verses we hear also the echoes of the French Revolution, which was ushering in a new period of European history, and with it a new set of literary ideals.

For the history of the period the standard work is W. E. H. Lecky's History of England in the ighteenth Century in seven volumes. A briefer account may be found in pp. 701–806 of J. R. reen's Short History of the English People. Another standard work is Sir Leslie Stephen's English hought in the Eighteenth Century. For the literary history of the century, see Volumes IX and X the Cambridge History of English Literature. G. Saintsbury's Peace of the Augustans is "a survey eighteenth-century literature as a place of rest and refreshment." Thackeray's English Humorts of the Eighteenth Century is stimulating and delightful, but not always trustworthy. An exllent account of manners and customs may be found in Sir Walter Besant's London in the Eighnth Century. Austin Dobson's Eighteenth Century Vignettes, in three small volumes, leads one to amusing out-of-the-way corners.

JONATHAN SWIFT (1667–1745)

Swift lies buried in St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin, "where fierce indignation cannot further cerate his heart." These words, translated from the Latin epitaph which he himself composed, re the key to his character and to his writings. So relentlessly does this "sæva indignatio" tear is heart, that to a careless observer he seems heartless. Nothing could seem more heartless than is Modest Proposal (1729) — that the poverty-stricken children of Ireland should be sold for utcher's meat to the landlords. Yet in every line of it is throbbing an intense and passionate inignation at the social and economic evils of eighteenth-century Ireland. The proposal is no more hocking than the condition which calls it forth.

Swift's life was a mixture of galling disappointments and hollow triumphs. He was born in 1667 Ireland, though of English ancestry, and was educated, with the financial help of a rich uncle, at rinity College, Dublin. At the age of twenty-two he entered the household of Sir William emple, statesman and author, at Moor Park near London, to whom he became private secretary, here with several interruptions he continued for ten years till Sir William's death. He was now hirty-two, with no prospect of success. While still in Temple's employ, he was ordained priest in he Church of England.

In 1704, he published anonymously the Tale of a Tub, a very vigorous and brilliant, but irrevernt and often coarse satire on the divisions of the Christian Church — Roman, Anglican, Presbyerian. This satire, which goes far beyond its immediate subject and includes a scathing analysis f many aspects of human life, is in some ways the most masterly expression of Swift's great powers. n the same year was published the Battle of the Books, a brilliant satire on literary controversy. n 1708 was published the Argument against Abolishing Christianity, a masterpiece of comic irony.

At last, during the Tory ministry of 1710–14, Swift had his day of triumph, when his enormous owers of intellect had a chance to make themselves felt. It was essential to the Government that t should win and hold public opinion. Swift's vitriolic pen became its chief support. It is no exggeration to say that he kept the Tory ministry in office. Cabinet ministers sought not only his id as pamphleteer but his shrewd advice. He was actually the most powerful man in England. He writes exultantly, but scornfully, of it all in the Journal to Stella, a diary addressed to his dearst friend, Miss Esther Johnson. Swift's devotion to "Stella" is a fascinating but baffling romance. There is some reason to believe that he was secretly married to her; but no marriage was ever acknowledged; and the friendship, which began when Stella was a little girl and continued till her death in 1728, was free from any breath of scandal.

Swift had struggled through poverty and bad health to gain power. By the time he had achieved t, he had developed such a contempt for humanity and all its pettiness that he despised the plaudits of his Lilliputian countrymen. For his services to the Government he expected to be rewarded by appointment to a bishopric; but instead he was given only the deanship of St. Patrick's, Dublin. Thither he went on the death of Queen Anne in 1714, and lived there the rest of his life, with only occasional visits to England. This life seemed to him little better than exile; he was a bitter, disappointed man. But he none the less identified himself with the interests of Ireland. In the Drapier's Letters (1724) he vigorously espoused the cause of Ireland against English injustice and oppression. He became the most popular figure in Dublin and in all Ireland; but he scorned this popularity even more than he had the deference paid to him during the period of his political power in London.

In 1726, appeared the Travels of Lemuel Gulliver, his most famous work, written, he tells us, "to vex the world rather than divert it." It is a satire on government and society, and on the fundamental and universal qualities of human nature. In Lilliput we see through the eyes of Gulliver the essential pettiness of our life. The account of this land of pygmies, where all nature is reduced to a scale of inches for feet, is elaborated with such delightful wit and fancy that one is in danger of forgetting the bitter satire, the pessimism and misanthropy, which underlie it — qualities which come out with increasing clearness in the three remaining voyages, of which the last has been called "a libel on human nature." The attitude of the Lilliputians towards Gulliver — first fear, then admiration, and at last ingratitude and enmity veiled under the pretense of legal procedure — is the type of the reception which a great man may expect from ordinary humanity.

After Stella's death in 1728, Swift's gloom and bitterness increased. The last years of his life were made more terrible by mental disease. His mind was clouded, his speech nearly gone; he lived in a dreadful apathy. He died in 1745, leaving his property of some ten thousand pounds to found a hospital in Dublin for lunatics and incurables.

Swift is one of the world's greatest satirists; he is also one of the greatest masters of English prose.

The standard edition of his works is that of Temple Scott in the Bohn Library. The best biography is that of Craik.

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS

1726

Gulliver's Travels purports to be the adventures, related by the traveler himself, of one Captain Lemuel Gulliver, whose portrait was prefixed to the first edition. Swift's name did not appear, though his authorship was not long a secret. The book was an immediate and great success, and has ever since been one of the great classics of English prose. In it Swift is making fun of the many books of travel, spiced with marvelous adventure, which were popular in his day. But the satire goes much deeper than that; everywhere Swift exposes by subtle irony and delicate insinuation the vices and follies of our own human society. Lilliput stands for England, and the neighboring kingdom of Blefuscu for France; Whigs and Tories have their counterpart in the Lilliputian parties of low-heels and high; religious dissension and bitter persecution appear in the dispute as to the proper end at which one should break one's breakfast egg. If pride of place and petty jealousy are ridiculous in Lilliput, are they less ridiculous in us merely because we and our world happen to be constructed on a somewhat larger scale of bigness? On his second voyage, Gulliver visits a land of giants, who listen with contemptuous scorn to his glowing account of European civilization, and conclude that our humanity is "the most pernicious race of little odious vermin that Nature ever suffered to crawl upon the surface of the earth."

Part I

A Voyage to Lilliput

CHAPTER I

The Author gives some account of himself and family, his first inducements to travel. He is shipwrecked, and swims for his life, gets safe on shore in the country of Lilliput, is made a prisoner, and is carried up country.

My father had a small estate in Nottinghamshire; I was the third of five sons. He sent me to Emanuel College in Cambridge, at fourteen years old, where I resided three years, and applied myself close to my studies; but the charge of maintaining me (although I had a very scanty allowance) being too great for a narrow fortune, I was bound apprentice to Mr. James Bates, an eminent surgeon in London, with whom I continued four years; and my father now and then sending me small sums of money, I laid them out in learning navigation, and other parts of the mathematics, useful to those who intend to travel, as I always believed it would be some time or other my fortune to do. When I left Mr. Bates, I went down to my father; where, by the assistance of him and my uncle John, and some other relations, I got forty pounds, and a promise of thirty pounds a year to maintain me at Leyden; there I studied physic two years and seven months, knowing it would be useful in long voyages.

Soon after my return from Leyden, I was recommended by my good master, Mr. Bates, to be surgeon to the Swallow, Captain Abraham Pannell, commander; with whom I continued three years and a half, making a voyage or two into the Levant, and some other parts. When I came back I resolved to settle in London, to which Mr. Bates, my master, encouraged me, and by him I was recommended to several patients. I took part of a small house in the Old Jury; and being advised to alter my condition, I married Mrs. Mary Burton, second daughter to Mr. Edmund Burton, hosier, in Newgate-street, with whom I received four hundred pounds for a portion.

But, my good master Bates dying in two years after, and I having few friends, my business began to fail; for my conscience would not suffer me to imitate the bad practice of too many among my brethren. Having therefore consulted with my wife, and some of my acquaintance, I determined to go again to sea. I was surgeon successively in two ships, and made several voyages, for six years, to the East and West-Indies, by which I got some addition to my fortune. My hours of leisure I spent in reading the best authors, ancient and modern, being always provided with a good number of books; and when I was ashore, in observing the manners and dispositions of the people, as well as learning

eir language, wherein I had a great facility
r the strength of my memory.

The last of these voyages not proving very rtunate, I grew weary of the sea, and in-nded to stay at home with my wife and mily. I removed from the Old Jury to tter-Lane, and from thence to Wapping, pping to get business among the sailors; but would not turn to account. After three ars expectation that things would mend, I cepted an advantageous offer from Captain illiam Prichard, master of the Antelope, ho was making a voyage to the South-Sea.
e set sail from Bristol, May 4, 1699, and ir voyage at first was very prosperous.

It would not be proper, for some reasons, trouble the reader with the particulars of ir adventures in those seas: let it suffice to form him, that in our passage from thence the East-Indies, we were driven by a olent storm to the north-west of Van Dieen's Land. By an observation, we found urselves in the latitude of 30 degrees 2 min-tes south. Twelve of our crew were dead by nmoderate labor, and ill food; the rest were a very weak condition. On the fifth of ovember, which was the beginning of sumer in those parts, the weather being very azy, the seamen spied a rock, within half a able's length of the ship; but the wind was strong, that we were driven directly upon
, and immediately split. Six of the crew,
f whom I was one, having let down the boat nto the sea, made a shift to get clear of the ip, and the rock. We rowed, by my com-utation, about three leagues, till we were ble to work no longer, being already spent ith labor while we were in the ship. We herefore trusted ourselves to the mercy of he waves, and in about half an hour the boat as overset by a sudden flurry from the orth. What became of my companions in he boat, as well as of those who escaped on he rock, or were left in the vessel, I cannot ell; but conclude they were all lost. For y own part, I swam as fortune directed me, nd was pushed forward by wind and tide.
often let my legs drop, and could feel no ottom: but when I was almost gone, and ble to struggle no longer, I found myself within my depth; and by this time the storm as much abated. The declivity was so mall, that I walked near a mile before I got o the shore, which I conjectured was about ight a clock in the evening. I then adanced forward near half a mile, but could ot discover any sign of houses or inhabitnts; at least I was in so weak a condition, that I did not observe them. I was extremely tired, and with that, and the heat of the weather, and about half a pint of brandy that I drank as I left the ship, I found myself much inclined to sleep. I lay down on the grass, which was very short and soft, where I slept sounder than ever I remember to have done in my life, and, as I reckoned, about nine hours; for when I awaked, it was just daylight. I attempted to rise, but was not able to stir: for as I happened to lie on my back, I found my arms and legs were strongly fastened on each side to the ground; and my hair, which was long and thick, tied down in the same manner. I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs. I could only look upwards, the sun began to grow hot, and the light offended my eyes. I heard a confused noise about me, but in the posture I lay, could see nothing except the sky. In a little time I felt something alive moving on my left leg, which advancing gently forward over my breast, came almost up to my chin; when bending my eyes downwards as much as I could, I perceived it to be a human creature not six inches high, with a bow and arrow in his hands, and a quiver at his back. In the mean time, I felt at least forty more of the same kind (as I conjectured) following the first. I was in the utmost astonishment, and roared so loud, that they all ran back in a fright; and some of them, as I was afterwards told, were hurt with the falls they got by leaping from my sides upon the ground.
However, they soon returned, and one of them, who ventured so far as to get a full sight of my face, lifting up his hands and eyes by way of admiration, cried out in a shrill, but distinct voice, Hekinah degul: the others repeated the same words several times, but then I knew not what they meant. I lay all this while, as the reader may believe, in great uneasiness: at length, struggling to get loose, I had the fortune to break the strings, and wrench out the pegs that fastened my left arm to the ground: for, by lifting it up to my face, I discovered the methods they had taken to bind me, and at the same time with a violent pull, which gave me excessive pain,
I a little loosened the strings that tied down my hair on the left side, so that I was just able to turn my head about two inches. But the creatures ran off a second time, before I could seize them; whereupon there was a great shout in a very shrill accent, and after it ceased, I heard one of them cry aloud Tolgo phonac; when in an instant I felt above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, which pricked me like so many needles; and besides, they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs in Europe, whereof many, I suppose, fell on my body, (though I felt them not) and some on my face, which I immediately covered with my left hand. When this shower of arrows was over, I fell a groaning with grief and pain, and then striving again to get loose, they discharged another volley larger than the first, and some of them attempted with spears to stick me in the sides; but, by good luck, I had on a buff jerkin, which they could not pierce. I thought it the most prudent method to lie still, and my design was to continue so till night, when, my left hand being already loose, I could easily free myself: and as for the inhabitants, I had reason to believe I might be a match for the greatest armies they could bring against me, if they were all of the same size with him that I saw. But fortune disposed otherwise of me. When the people observed I was quiet, they discharged no more arrows; but, by the noise I heard, I knew their numbers increased; and about four yards from me, over-against my right ear, I heard a knocking for above an hour, like that of people at work; when turning my head that way, as well as the pegs and strings would permit me, I saw a stage erected, about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it: from whence one of them, who seemed to be a person of quality, made me a long speech, whereof I understood not one syllable. But I should have mentioned, that before the principal person began his oration, he cried out three times, Langro dehul san: (these words and the former were afterwards repeated and explained to me). Whereupon immediately about fifty of the inhabitants came and cut the strings that fastened the left side of my head, which gave me the liberty of turning it to the right, and of observing the person and gesture of him that was to speak. He appeared to be of a middle age, and taller than any of the other three who attended him, whereof one was a page that held up his train, and seemed to be somewhat longer than my middle finger; the other two stood one on each side to support him. He acted every part of an orator, and I could observe many periods of threatenings, and others of promises, pity, and kindness. I answered in a few words, but in the most submissive manner, lifting up my left hand, and both my eyes to the sun, as calling him for a witness; and being almost famished with hunger, having not eaten a morsel for some hours before I left the ship, I found the demands of nature so strong upon me, that I could not forbear showing my impatience (perhaps against the strict rules of decency) by putting my finger frequently on my mouth, to signify that I wanted food. The Hurgo (for so they call a great lord, as I afterwards learnt) understood me very well. He descended from the stage and commanded that several ladders should be applied to my sides, on which above an hundred of the inhabitants mounted and walked towards my mouth, laden with baskets full of meat, which had been provided and sent thither by the King's orders, upon the first intelligence he received of me. I observed there was the flesh of several animals, but could not distinguish them by the taste. There were shoulders, legs, and loins, shaped like those of mutton, and very well dressed, but smaller than the wings of a lark. I eat them by two or three at a mouthful, and took three loaves at a time, about the bigness of musket bullets. They supplied me as fast as they could, showing a thousand marks of wonder and astonishment at my bulk and appetite. I then made another sign that I wanted drink. They found by my eating, that a small quantity would not suffice me; and being a most ingenious people, they slung up with great dexterity one of their largest hogsheads, then rolled it towards my hand, and beat out the top; I drank it off at a draught, which I might well do, for it did not hold half a pint, and tasted like a small wine of Burgundy, but much more delicious. They brought me a second hogshead, which I drank in the same manner, and made signs for more, but they had none to give me. When I had performed these wonders, they shouted for joy, and danced upon my breast, repeating several times as they did at first, Hekinah degul. They made me a sign that I should throw down the two hogsheads, but first warning the people below to stand out of the way, crying aloud, Borach mivola, and when they saw the vessels in the air, there was an universal shout of Hekinah degul. I confess I was often tempted while they were passing backwards and forwards on my body, to seize forty or fifty of the first that came in my reach, and dash them against the ground. But the remembrance of what I had felt, which probably might not be the worst they could do, and the promise of honor I made them, for so I interpreted my submissive behavior, soon drove out these imaginations.

sides, I now considered myself as bound by laws of hospitality to a people who had ated me with so much expense and mag- icence. However, in my thoughts, I could sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of se diminutive mortals, who durst venture mount and walk upon my body, while one my hands was at liberty, without tremb- g at the very sight of so prodigious a crea- e as I must appear to them. After some ne, when they observed that I made no re demands for meat, there appeared be- e me a person of high rank from his Im- rial Majesty. His Excellency, having unted on the small of my right leg, ad- nced forwards up to my face, with about lozen of his retinue. And producing his edentials under the Signet Royal, which applied close to my eyes, spoke about ten nutes, without any signs of anger, but th a kind of determinate resolution; often inting forwards, which, as I afterwards und, was towards the capital city, about lf a mile distant, whither it was agreed by s Majesty in council that I must be con- yed. I answered in few words, but to no rpose, and made a sign with my hand that as loose, putting it to the other (but over s Excellency's head for fear of hurting him his train) and then to my own head and dy, to signify that I desired my liberty. appeared that he understood me well ough, for he shook his head by way of dis- probation, and held his hand in a posture show that I must be carried as a prisoner. owever, he made other signs to let me under- and that I should have meat and drink ough, and very good treatment. Where- on I once more thought of attempting to eak my bonds; but again, when I felt the art of their arrows, upon my face and nds, which were all in blisters, and many of e darts still sticking in them, and observing kewise that the number of my enemies in- eased, I gave tokens to let them know that ey might do with me what they pleased. pon this, the Hurgo and his train withdrew, ith much civility and cheerful countenances. oon after I heard a general shout, with fre- uent repetitions of the words, Peplom selan, nd I felt great numbers of people on my left de relaxing the cords to such a degree, that was able to turn upon my right, and to ease yself with making water; which I very lentifully did, to the great astonishment of he people, who conjecturing by my motions vhat I was going to do, immediately opened o the right and left on that side to avoid the torrent which fell with such noise and violence from me. But before this, they had daubed my face and both my hands with a sort of ointment very pleasant to the smell, which in a few minutes removed all the smart of their arrows. These circumstances, added to the refreshment I had received by their victuals and drink, which were very nourishing, disposed me to sleep. I slept about eight hours, as I was afterwards assured; and it was no wonder, for the physicians, by the Emperor's order, had mingled a sleepy potion in the hogshead of wine.

It seems that upon the first moment I was discovered sleeping on the ground after my landing, the Emperor had early notice of it by an express; and determined in council that I should be tied in the manner I have related, (which was done in the night while I slept) that plenty of meat and drink should be sent to me, and a machine prepared to carry me to the capital city.

This resolution perhaps may appear very bold and dangerous, and I am confident would not be imitated by any prince in Europe on the like occasion; however, in my opinion, it was extremely prudent, as well as generous: for supposing these people had endeavored to kill me with their spears and arrows while I was asleep, I should certainly have awaked with the first sense of smart, which might so far have roused my rage and strength, as to have enabled me to break the strings wherewith I was tied; after which, as they were not able to make resistance, so they could expect no mercy.

These people are most excellent mathematicians, and arrived to a great perfection in mechanics, by the countenance and encouragement of the Emperor, who is a renowned patron of learning. This prince hath several machines fixed on wheels, for the carriage of trees and other great weights. He often builds his largest men of war, whereof some are nine foot long, in the woods where the timber grows, and has them carried on these engines three or four hundred yards to the sea. Five hundred carpenters and engineers were immediately set at work to prepare the greatest engine they had. It was a frame of wood raised three inches from the ground, about seven foot long and four wide, moving upon twenty-two wheels. The shout I heard was upon the arrival of this engine, which it seems set out in four hours after my landing. It was brought parallel to me as I lay. But the principal difficulty was to raise and place me in this vehicle. Eighty poles, each of one foot high, were erected for this purpose, and very strong cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened by hooks to many bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck, my hands, my body, and my legs. Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pulleys fastened on the poles, and thus, in less than three hours, I was raised and slung into the engine, and there tied fast. All this I was told, for, while the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Fifteen hundred of the Emperor's largest horses, each about four inches and a half high, were employed to draw me towards the metropolis, which, as I said, was half a mile distant.

About four hours after we began our journey, I awaked by a very ridiculous accident; for the carriage being stopped a while to adjust something that was out of order, two or three of the young natives had the curiosity to see how I looked when I was asleep; they climbed up into the engine, and advancing very softly to my face, one of them, an officer in the guards, put the sharp end of his halfpike a good way up into my left nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently: whereupon they stole off unperceived, and it was three weeks before I knew the cause of my awaking so suddenly. We made a long march the remaining part of that day, and rested at night with five hundred guards on each side of me, half with torches, and half with bows and arrows, ready to shoot me if I should offer to stir. The next morning at sun-rise we continued our march, and arrived within two hundred yards of the city gates about noon. The Emperor, and all his court, came out to meet us; but his great officers would by no means suffer his Majesty to endanger his person by mounting on my body.

At the place where the carriage stopped, there stood an ancient temple, esteemed to be the largest in the whole kingdom; which having been polluted some years before by an unnatural murder, was, according to the zeal of those people, looked upon as profane, and therefore had been applied to common uses, and all the ornaments and furniture carried away. In this edifice it was determined I should lodge. The great gate fronting to the north was about four foot high, and almost two foot wide, through which I could easily creep. On each side of the gate was a small window not above six inches from the ground: into that on the left side, the King's smit conveyed fourscore and eleven chains, li those that hang to a lady's watch in Euro and almost as large, which were locked to left leg with six and thirty padlocks. Ov against this temple, on the other side of t great highway, at twenty foot distance, the was a turret at least five foot high. He the Emperor ascended, with many princip lords of his court, to have an opportunity viewing me, as I was told, for I could not s them. It was reckoned that above an hu dred thousand inhabitants came out of th town upon the same errand; and, in spite my guards, I believe there could not be few than ten thousand at several times, wh mounted my body by the help of ladder But a proclamation was soon issued to forbi it upon pain of death. When the workme found it was impossible for me to break loos they cut all the strings that bound m whereupon I rose up, with as melancholy disposition as ever I had in my life. But th noise and astonishment of the people at see ing me rise and walk, are not to be expressed The chains that held my left leg were abou two yards long, and gave me not only th liberty of walking backwards and forwards i a semicircle; but, being fixed within fou inches of the gate, allowed me to creep in and lie at my full length in the temple.

CHAPTER II

The Emperor of Lilliput, attended by several o the nobility, comes to see the Author in his con finement. The Emperor's person and habi described. Learned men appointed to teac the Author their language. He gains favo by his mild disposition. His pockets ar searched, and his sword and pistols taken from him.

When I found myself on my feet, I looke about me, and must confess I never beheld a more entertaining prospect. The country round appeared like a continued garden, and the inclosed fields, which were generally forty foot square, resembled so many beds o flowers. These fields were intermingled with woods of half a stang,[1] and the tallest trees as I could judge, appeared to be seven foot high. I viewed the town on my left hand, which looked like the painted scene of a city in a theatre.

I had been for some hours extremely pressed by the necessities of nature; which was no wonder, it being almost two days since I had last disburthened myself. I was under reat difficulties between urgency and shame. he best expedient I could think on, was to eep into my house, which I accordingly did; nd shutting the gate after me, I went as far s the length of my chain would suffer, and ischarged my body of that uneasy load. ut this was the only time I was ever guilty f so uncleanly an action; for which I cannot ut hope the candid reader will give some al- owance, after he hath maturely and im- artially considered my case, and the distress was in. From this time my constant prac- ice was, as soon as I rose, to perform that usiness in open air, at the full extent of my hain, and due care was taken every morning efore company came, that the offensive natter should be carried off in wheel-barrows, y two servants appointed for that purpose. would not have dwelt so long upon a circum- tance, that perhaps at first sight may appear ot very momentous, if I had not thought it ecessary to justify my character in point of leanliness to the world; which I am told ome of my maligners have been pleased, pon this and other occasions, to call in uestion.

1 A stang is a pole or perch; sixteen feet and a half.

When this adventure was at an end, I came ack out of my house, having occasion for resh air. The Emperor was already de- cended from the tower, and advancing on horseback towards me, which had like to have cost him dear; for the beast, though very well trained, yet wholly unused to such a sight, which appeared as if a mountain moved before him, reared up on his hinder feet: but that prince, who is an excellent horseman, kept his seat, till his attendants ran in, and held the bridle, while his Majesty had time to dismount. When he alighted, he sur- veyed me round with great admiration,[1] but kept beyond the length of my chain. He ordered his cooks and butlers, who were already prepared, to give me victuals and drink, which they pushed forward in a sort of vehicles upon wheels, till I could reach them. I took these vehicles, and soon emptied them all; twenty of them were filled with meat, and ten with liquor; each of the former afforded me two or three good mouthfuls, and I emp- tied the liquor of ten vessels, which was con- tained in earthen vials, into one vehicle, drinking it off at a draught; and so I did with the rest. The Empress, and young Princes of the blood of both sexes, attended by many ladies, sat at some distance in their chairs; but upon the accident that happened to the Emperor's horse, they alighted, and came near his person, which I am now going to describe. He is taller by almost the breadth of my nail, than any of his court; which alone is enough to strike an awe into the beholders. His features are strong and masculine, with an Austrian lip and arched nose, his complex- ion olive, his countenance erect, his body and limbs well proportioned, all his motions graceful, and his deportment majestic. He was then past his prime, being twenty-eight years and three quarters old, of which he had reigned about seven, in great felicity, and generally victorious. For the better con- venience of beholding him, I lay on my side, so that my face was parallel to his, and he stood but three yards off: however, I have had him since many times in my hand, and therefore cannot be deceived in the descrip- tion. His dress was very plain and simple, and the fashion of it between the Asiatic and the European: but he had on his head a light helmet of gold, adorned with jewels, and a plume on the crest. He held his sword drawn in his hand, to defend himself, if I should happen to break loose; it was almost three inches long, the hilt and scabbard were gold enriched with diamonds. His voice was shrill, but very clear and articulate, and I could distinctly hear it when I stood up. The ladies and courtiers were all most mag- nificently clad, so that the spot they stood upon seemed to resemble a petticoat spread on the ground, embroidered with figures of gold and silver. His Imperial Majesty spoke often to me, and I returned answers, but neither of us could understand a syllable. There were several of his priests and lawyers present (as I conjectured by their habits) who were commanded to address themselves to me, and I spoke to them in as many languages as I had the least smattering of, which were High and Low Dutch, Latin, French, Spanish, Italian, and Lingua Franca; but all to no purpose. After about two hours the court retired, and I was left with a strong guard, to prevent the impertinence, and probably the malice of the rabble, who were very impatient to crowd about me as near as they durst, and some of them had the impu- dence to shoot their arrows at me as I sat on the ground by the door of my house, whereof one very narrowly missed my left eye. But the colonel ordered six of the ringleaders to be seized, and thought no punishment so proper as to deliver them bound into my hands, which some of his soldiers accordingly did, pushing them forwards with the butt- ends of their pikes into my reach; I took them all in my right hand, put five of them into my coat-pocket, and as to the sixth, I made a countenance as if I would eat him alive. The poor man squalled terribly, and the colonel and his officers were in much pain, especially when they saw me take out my pen-knife: but I soon put them out of fear: for, looking mildly, and immediately cutting the strings he was bound with, I set him gently on the ground, and away he ran. I treated the rest in the same manner, taking them one by one out of my pocket, and I observed both the soldiers and people were highly obliged at this mark of my clemency, which was represented very much to my advantage at court.

[1] wonder.

Towards night I got with some difficulty into my house, where I lay on the ground, and continued to do so about a fortnight; during which time the Emperor gave orders to have a bed prepared for me. Six hundred beds of the common measure were brought in carriages, and worked up in my house; an hundred and fifty of their beds sewn together made up the breadth and length, and these were four double, which however kept me but very indifferently from the hardness of the floor, that was of smooth stone. By the same computation they provided me with sheets, blankets, and coverlets, tolerable enough for one who had been so long inured to hardships as I.

As the news of my arrival spread through the kingdom, it brought prodigious numbers of rich, idle, and curious people to see me; so that the villages were almost emptied, and great neglect of tillage and household affairs must have ensued, if his Imperial Majesty had not provided, by several proclamations and orders of state, against this inconveniency. He directed that those who had already beheld me should return home, and not presume to come within fifty yards of my house without licence from court; whereby the secretaries of state got considerable fees.

In the mean time, the Emperor held frequent councils to debate what course should be taken with me; and I was afterwards assured by a particular friend, a person of great quality, who was looked upon to be as much in the secret as any, that the court was under many difficulties concerning me. They apprehended my breaking loose, that my diet would be very expensive, and might cause a famine. Sometimes they determined to starve me, or at least to shoot me in the face and hands with poisoned arrows, which would soon dispatch me; but again they considered, that the stench of so large a carcass might produce a plague in the metropolis, and probably spread through the whole kingdom. In the midst of these consultations, several officers of the army went to the door of the great council-chamber; and two of them being admitted, gave an account of my behavior to the six criminals above-mentioned, which made so favorable an impression in the breast of his Majesty and the whole board, in my behalf, that an Imperial Commission was issued out, obliging all the villages nine hundred yards around the city, to deliver in every morning six beeves, forty sheep, and other victuals for my sustenance, together with a proportionable quantity of bread, and wine, and other liquors; for the due payment of which his Majesty gave assignments upon his treasury. For this prince lives chiefly upon his own demesnes, seldom, except upon great occasions, raising any subsidies upon his subjects, who are bound to attend him in his wars at their own expense. An establishment was also made of six hundred persons to be my domestics, who had board-wages allowed for their maintenance, and tents built for them very conveniently on each side of my door. It was likewise ordered, that three hundred tailors should make me a suit of clothes after the fashion of the country: that six of his Majesty's greatest scholars should be employed to instruct me in their language: and, lastly, that the Emperor's horses, and those of the nobility, and troops of guards, should be frequently exercised in my sight, to accustom themselves to me. All these orders were duly put in execution, and in about three weeks I made a great progress in learning their language; during which time, the Emperor frequently honored me with his visits, and was pleased to assist my masters in teaching me. We began already to converse together in some sort; and the first words I learnt were to express my desire that he would please to give me my liberty, which I every day repeated on my knees. His answer, as I could comprehend it, was, that this must be a work of time, not to be thought on without the advice of his council, and that first I must Lumos kelmin pesso desmar lon emposo; that is, swear a peace with him and his kingdom. However, that I should be used with all kindness; and he advised me to acquire, by my patience and discreet behavior, the good opinion of himself and his subjects. He desired I would not take it ill, if he gave orders to certain proper officers to search me; for rbably I might carry about me several apons, which must needs be dangerous ngs, if they answered the bulk of so prodi-us a person. I said, his Majesty should be isfied, for I was ready to strip myself, and n up my pockets before him. This I deered part in words, and part in signs. He lied, that by the laws of the kingdom I st be searched by two of his officers; that knew this could not be done without my nsent and assistance; that he had so good opinion of my generosity and justice, as to st their persons in my hands: that what-er they took from me should be returned en I left the country, or paid for at the e which I would set upon them. I took up two officers in my hands, put them first o my coat-pockets, and then into every ner pocket about me, except my two fobs, d another secret pocket which I had no nd should be searched, wherein I had some tle necessaries that were of no consequence any but myself. In one of my fobs there s a silver watch, and in the other a small antity of gold in a purse. These gentle-en, having pen, ink, and paper about them, ade an exact inventory of every thing they w; and when they had done, desired I would t them down, that they might deliver it to e Emperor. This inventory I afterwards nslated into English, and is word for word follows:

Imprimis, In the right coat-pocket of the reat Man-Mountain (for so I interpret the ords Quinbus Flestrin) after the strictest arch, we found only one great piece of arse cloth, large enough to be a foot-cloth r your Majesty's chief room of state. In e left pocket we saw a huge silver chest, ith a cover of the same metal, which we, the archers, were not able to lift. We desired should be opened, and one of us stepping to it, found himself up to the mid leg in a rt of dust, some part whereof flying up to ur faces, set us both a sneezing for several mes together. In his right waistcoat-ocket we found a prodigious bundle of white in substances, folded one over another, bout the bigness of three men, tied with a trong cable, and marked with black figures;
which we humbly conceive to be writings,
very letter almost half as large as the palm f our hands. In the left there was a sort of ngine, from the back of which were extended wenty long poles, resembling the palisadoes efore your Majesty's court; wherewith we onjecture the Man-Mountain combs his head; for we did not always trouble him with questions, because we found it a great difficulty to make him understand us. In the large pocket on the right side of his middle cover (so I translate the word ranfu-lo, by which they meant my breeches) we saw a hollow pillar of iron, about the length of a man, fastened to a strong piece of timber, larger than the pillar; and upon one side of the pillar were huge pieces of iron sticking out, cut into strange figures, which we know not what to make of. In the left pocket, another engine of the same kind. In the smaller pocket on the right side, were several round flat pieces of white and red metal, of different bulk; some of the white, which seemed to be silver, were so large and heavy, that my comrade and I could hardly lift them. In the left pocket were two black pillars irregularly shaped: we could not, without difficulty, reach the top of them as we stood at the bottom of his pocket. One of them was covered, and seemed all of a piece: but at the upper end of the other, there appeared a white round substance, about twice the bigness of our heads. Within each of these was enclosed a prodigious plate of steel; which, by our orders, we obliged him to show us, because we apprehended they might be dangerous engines. He took them out of their cases, and told us, that in his own country his practice was to shave his beard with one of these, and cut his meat with the other. There were two pockets which we could not enter: these he called his fobs; they were two large slits cut into the top of his middle cover, but squeezed close by the pressure of his belly. Out of the right fob hung a great silver chain, with a wonderful kind of engine at the bottom. We directed him to draw out whatever was fastened to that chain; which appeared to be a globe, half silver, and half of some transparent metal; for, on the transparent side, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. He put this engine to our ears, which made an incessant noise like that of a water-mill. And we conjecture it is either some unknown animal, or the god that he worships; but we are more inclined to the latter opinion, because he assured us, (if we understood him right, for he expressed himself very imperfectly) that he seldom did any thing without consulting it. He called it his oracle, and said it pointed out the time for every action of his life. From the left fob he took out a net almost large enough for a fisherman, but contrived to open and shut like a purse, and served him for the same use: we found therein several massy pieces of yellow metal, which, if they be real gold, must be of immense value.

Having thus, in obedience to your Majesty's commands, diligently searched all his pockets, we observed a girdle about his waist made of the hide of some prodigious animal; from which, on the left side, hung a sword of the length of five men; and on the right, a bag or pouch divided into two cells, each cell capable of holding three of your Majesty's subjects. In one of these cells were several globes or balls of a most ponderous metal, about the bigness of our heads, and requiring a strong hand to lift them: the other cell contained a heap of certain black grains, but of no great bulk or weight, for we could hold about fifty of them in the palms of our hands.

This is an exact inventory of what we found about the body of the Man-Mountain, who used us with great civility, and due respect to your Majesty's Commission. Signed and sealed on the fourth day of the eighty-ninth moon of your Majesty's auspicious reign.

CLEFRIN FRELOCK, MARSI FRELOCK.

When this inventory was read over to the Emperor, he directed me, although in very gentle terms, to deliver up the several particulars. He first called for my scimitar, which I took out, scabbard and all. In the mean time he ordered three thousand of his choicest troops (who then attended him) to surround me at a distance, with their bows and arrows just ready to discharge: but I did not observe it, for my eyes were wholly fixed upon his Majesty. He then desired me to draw my scimitar, which, although it had got some rust by the sea-water, was in most parts exceeding bright. I did so, and immediately all the troops gave a shout between terror and surprise; for the sun shone clear, and the reflection dazzled their eyes, as I waved the scimitar to and fro in my hand. His Majesty, who is a most magnanimous prince, was less daunted than I could expect; he ordered me to return it into the scabbard, and cast it on the ground as gently as I could, about six foot from the end of my chain. The next thing he demanded, was one of the hollow iron pillars, by which he meant my pocket-pistols. I drew it out, and at his desire, as well as I could, expressed to him the use of it; and charging it only with powder, which, by the closeness of my pouch, happened to escape wetting in the sea (an inconvenience against which all prudent mariners take special care to provide,) I first cautioned the Emperor not to be afraid, and then I let it off in the air. The astonishment here was much greater than at the sight of my scimitar. Hundreds fell down as if they had been struck dead; and even the Emperor, although he stood his ground, could not recover himself in some time. I delivered up both my pistols in the same manner as I had done my scimitar, and then my pouch of powder and bullets; begging him that the former might be kept from fire, for it would kindle with the smallest spark, and blow up his imperial palace into the air. I likewise delivered up my watch, which the Emperor was very curious to see, and commanded two of his tallest yeomen of the guards to bear it on a pole upon their shoulders, as draymen in England do a barrel of ale. He was amazed at the continual noise it made, and the motion of the minute-hand, which he could easily discern; for their sight is much more acute than ours: and asked the opinions of his learned men about him, which were various and remote, as the reader may well imagine without my repeating; although indeed I could not very perfectly understand them. I then gave up my silver and copper money, my purse, with nine large pieces of gold, and some smaller ones; my knife and razor, my comb and silver snuff-box, my handkerchief and journal-book. My scimitar, pistols, and pouch, were conveyed in carriages to his Majesty's stores; but the rest of my goods were returned to me.

I had, as I before observed, one private pocket which escaped their search, wherein there was a pair of spectacles, (which I sometimes use for the weakness of my eyes) a pocket perspective, and several other little conveniences; which being of no consequence to the Emperor, I did not think myself bound in honor to discover, and I apprehended they might be lost or spoiled if I ventured them out of my possession.

CHAPTER III

The Author diverts the Emperor, and his nobility of both sexes, in a very uncommon manner. The diversions of the court of Lilliput described. The Author has his liberty granted him upon certain conditions.

My gentleness and good behavior had gained so far on the Emperor and his court, and indeed upon the army and people in general, that I began to conceive hopes of ng my liberty in a short time. I took all ible methods to cultivate this favorable osition. The natives came by degrees to ess apprehensive of any danger from me. uld sometimes lie down, and let five or of them dance on my hand. And at last oys and girls would venture to come and at hide and seek in my hair. I had now e a good progress in understanding and king their language. The Emperor had ind one day to entertain me with several ne country shows, wherein they exceed all ons I have known, both for dexterity and nificence. I was diverted with none so h as that of the rope-dancers, performed n a slender white thread, extended about foot, and twelve inches from the ground. on which I shall desire liberty, with the ler's patience, to enlarge a little.

his diversion is only practised by those sons who are candidates for great employnts, and high favor, at court. They are ned in this art from their youth, and are always of noble birth, or liberal educan. When a great office is vacant, either death or disgrace, (which often happens) or six of those candidates petition the peror to entertain his Majesty and the rt with a dance on the rope, and whoever aps the highest without falling, succeeds he office. Very often the chief ministers mselves are commanded to show their l, and to convince the Emperor that they e not lost their faculty. Flimnap, the asurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the ight rope, at least an inch higher than other lord in the whole empire.[1] I have n him do the summerset several times toher upon a trencher fixed on the rope, ich is no thicker than a common packead in England. My friend Reldresal, ncipal Secretary for Private Affairs, is, in opinion, if I am not partial, the second er the Treasurer; the rest of the great ofrs are much upon a par.

These diversions are often attended with al accidents, whereof great numbers are on ord. I myself have seen two or three ndidates break a limb. But the danger is ch greater when the ministers themselves commanded to show their dexterity; for, contending to excel themselves and their ows, they strain so far, that there is hardly e of them who hath not received a fall, and ne of them two or three. I was assured t a year or two before my arrival, Flimnap would have infallibly broke his neck, if one of the King's cushions, that accidentally lay on the ground, had not weakened the force of his fall.[1]

There is likewise another diversion, which is only shown before the Emperor and Empress, and first minister, upon particular occasions. The Emperor lays on the table three fine silken threads of six inches long. One is blue, the other red, and the third green.[2] These threads are proposed as prizes for those persons whom the Emperor hath a mind to distinguish by a peculiar mark of his favor. The ceremony is performed in his Majesty's great chamber of state, where the candidates are to undergo a trial of dexterity very different from the former, and such as I have not observed the least resemblance of in any other country of the old or the new world. The Emperor holds a stick in his hands, both ends parallel to the horizon, while the candidates advancing one by one, sometimes leap over the stick, sometimes creep under it backwards and forwards several times, according as the stick is advanced or depressed. Sometimes the Emperor holds one end of the stick, and his first minister the other; sometimes the minister has it entirely to himself. Whoever performs his part with most agility, and holds out the longest in leaping and creeping, is rewarded with the blue-colored silk; the red is given to the next, and the green to the third, which they all wear girt twice round about the middle; and you see few great persons about this court, who are not adorned with one of these girdles.

The horses of the army, and those of the royal stables, having been daily led before me, were no longer shy, but would come up to my very feet without starting. The riders would leap them over my hand as I held it on the ground, and one of the Emperor's huntsmen, upon a larger courser, took my foot, shoe and all; which was indeed a prodigious leap. I had the good fortune to divert the Emperor one day after a very extraordinary manner. I desired he would order several sticks of two foot high, and the thickness of an ordinary cane, to be brought me; whereupon his Majesty commanded the master of his woods to give directions accordingly; and the next morning six woodmen arrived with as many carriages, drawn by eight horses to each. I took nine of these sticks, fixing them

Flimnap is probably intended to suggest Sir Robert Walpole.

1 At one crisis of his career, Walpole was helped by the Duchess of Kendall, mistress of George I.

2 The ribbons of the orders of the Garter, the Bath, the Thistle.

firmly in the ground in a quadrangular figure, two foot and a half square. I took four other sticks, and tied them parallel at each corner, about two foot from the ground; then I fastened my handkerchief to the nine sticks that stood erect, and extended it on all sides, till it was tight as the top of a drum; and the four parallel sticks rising about five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. When I had finished my work, I desired the Emperor to let a troop of his best horse, twenty-four in number, come and exercise upon this plain. His Majesty approved of the proposal, and I took them up, one by one, in my hands, ready mounted and armed, with the proper officers to exercise them. As soon as they got into order, they divided into two parties, performed mock skirmishes, discharged blunt arrows, drew their swords, fled and pursued, attacked and retired, and in short discovered the best military discipline I ever beheld. The parallel sticks secured them and their horses from falling over the stage; and the Emperor was so much delighted that he ordered this entertainment to be repeated several days, and once was pleased to be lifted up and give the word of command; and, with great difficulty, persuaded even the Empress herself to let me hold her in her close chair within two yards of the stage, from whence she was able to take a full view of the whole performance. It was my good fortune that no ill accident happened in these entertainments, only once a fiery horse, that belonged to one of the captains, pawing with his hoof, struck a hole in my handkerchief, and his foot slipping, he overthrew his rider and himself; but I immediately relieved them both, and covering the hole with one hand, I set down the troop with the other, in the same manner as I took them up. The horse that fell was strained in the left shoulder, but the rider got no hurt, and I repaired my handkerchief as well as I could: however, I would not trust to the strength of it any more in such dangerous enterprises.

About two or three days before I was set at liberty, as I was entertaining the court with these kind of feats, there arrived an express to inform his Majesty, that some of his subjects riding near the place where I was first taken up, had seen a great black substance lying on the ground, very oddly shaped, extending its edges round as wide as his Majesty's bedchamber, and rising up in the middle as high as a man; that it was no living creature, as they at first apprehended, for it lay on the grass without motion, and some of them had walked round it several times: that by mounting upon each other's shoulders, they had got to the top, which was flat and even, and stamping upon it they found it was hollow within; that they humbly conceived it might be something belonging to the Man-Mountain; and if his Majesty pleased, they would undertake to bring it with only five horses. I presently knew what they meant, and was glad at heart to receive this intelligence. It seems upon my first reaching the shore after our shipwreck, I was in such confusion, that before I came to the place where I went to sleep, my hat, which I had fastened with a string to my head while I was rowing, and had stuck on all the time I was swimming, fell off after I came to land; the string, as conjecture, breaking by some accident which I never observed, but thought my hat had been lost at sea. I intreated his Imperial Majesty to give orders it might be brought to me as soon as possible, describing to him the use and the nature of it: and the next day the waggoners arrived with it, but not in a very good condition; they had bored two holes in the brim, within an inch and half of the edge, and fastened two hooks in the holes; these hooks were tied by a long cord to the harness, and thus my hat was dragged along for above half an English mile; but the ground in that country being extremely smooth and level, it received less damage than I expected.

Two days after this adventure, the Emperor having ordered that part of his army which quarters in and about his metropolis, to be in readiness, took a fancy of diverting himself in a very singular manner. He desired I would stand like a Colossus, with my legs as far asunder as I conveniently could. He then commanded his General (who was an old experienced leader, and a great patron of mine) to draw up the troops in close order, and march them under me; the foot by twenty-four in a breast, and the horse by sixteen, with drums beating, colors flying, and pikes advanced. This body consisted of three thousand foot, and a thousand horse. His Majesty gave orders, upon pain of death, that every soldier in his march should observe the strictest decency with regard to my person; which, however, could not prevent some of the younger officers from turning up their eyes as they passed under me. And, to confess the truth, my breeches were at that time in so ill a condition, that they afforded some opportunities for laughter and admiration.

had sent so many memorials and petis for my liberty, that his Majesty at th mentioned the matter, first in his net, and then in a full council; where it opposed by none, except Skyresh Bolgo-who was pleased, without any provoca-
, to be my mortal enemy. But it was ied against him by the whole board, and irmed by the Emperor. That minister Galbet, or Admiral of the Realm, very h in his master's confidence, and a person versed in affairs, but of a morose and complexion. However, he was at length uaded to comply; but prevailed that the les and conditions upon which I should et free, and to which I must swear, should rawn up by himself. These articles were ught to me by Skyresh Bolgolam in per-attended by two under-secretaries, and ral persons of distinction. After they read, I was demanded to swear to the formance of them; first in the manner of own country, and afterwards in the thod prescribed by their laws; which was hold my right foot in my left hand, to e the middle finger of my right hand on crown of my head, and my thumb on the of my right ear. But because the reader be curious to have some idea of the e and manner of expression peculiar to people, as well as to know the articles n which I recovered my liberty, I have le a translation of the whole instrument d for word, as near as I was able, which I offer to the public.

OLBASTO MOMAREM EVLAME GURDILO
FIN MULLY ULLY GUE, most mighty Em-or of Lilliput, delight and terror of the erse, whose dominions extend five thou-l blustrugs (about twelve miles in circum-nce) to the extremities of the globe;
narch of all monarchs, taller than the sons hen; whose feet press down to the centre, whose head strikes against the sun; at se nod the princes of the earth shake their es; pleasant as the spring, comfortable he summer, fruitful as autumn, dreadful winter. His most sublime Majesty proeth to the Man-Mountain, lately arrived our celestial dominions, the following ares, which by a solemn oath he shall be ged to perform.

irst, The Man-Mountain shall not depart n our dominions, without our licence un-our great seal.

d, He shall not presume to come into our tropolis, without our express order; at which time, the inhabitants shall have two hours warning to keep within their doors.

3rd, The said Man-Mountain shall confine his walks to our principal high roads, and not offer to walk or lie down in a meadow or field of corn.

4th, As he walks the said roads, he shall take the utmost care not to trample upon the bodies of any of our loving subjects, their horses, or carriages, nor take any of our subjects into his hands, without their own consent.

5th, If an express requires extraordinary dispatch, the Man-Mountain shall be obliged to carry in his pocket the messenger and horse a six days journey once in every moon, and return the said messenger back (if so required) safe to our Imperial Presence.

6th, He shall be our ally against our enemies in the Island of Blefuscu, and do his utmost to destroy their fleet, which is now preparing to invade us.

7th, That the said Man-Mountain shall, at his times of leisure, be aiding and assisting our workmen, in helping to raise certain great stones, towards covering the wall of the principal park, and other our royal buildings.

8th, That the said Man-Mountain shall, in two moons' time, deliver in an exact survey of the circumference of our dominions by a computation of his own paces round the coast.

Lastly, That upon his solemn oath to observe all the above articles, the said Man-Mountain shall have a daily allowance of meat and drink sufficient for the support of 1728 of our subjects, with free access to our Royal Person, and other marks of our favor. Given at our Palace at Belfaborac the twelfth day of the ninety-first moon of our reign.

I swore and subscribed to these articles with great cheerfulness and content, although some of them were not so honorable as I could have wished; which proceeded wholly from the malice of Skyresh Bolgolam, the High-Admiral: whereupon my chains were immediately unlocked, and I was at full liberty; the Emperor himself in person did me the honor to be by at the whole ceremony. I made my acknowledgements by prostrating myself at his Majesty's feet: but he commanded me to rise; and after many gracious expressions, which, to avoid the censure of vanity, I shall not repeat, he added, that he hoped I should prove a useful servant, and well deserve all the favors he had already conferred upon me, or might do for the future.

The reader may please to observe, that in the last article for the recovery of my liberty, the Emperor stipulates to allow me a quantity of meat and drink sufficient for the support of 1728 Lilliputians. Some time after, asking a friend at court how they came to fix on that determinate number; he told me that his Majesty's mathematicians, having taken the height of my bod by the help of a quadrant, and finding it to exceed theirs in the proportion of twelve to one they concluded from the similarity of their bodies, that mine must contain at least 1728 of theirs, and consequently would require as much food as was necessary to support that number of Lilliputians. By which, the reader may conceive an idea of the ingenuity of that people, as well as the prudent and exact economy of so great a prince.

CHAPTER IV

Mildendo, the metropolis of Lilliput, described, together with the Emperor's palace. A conversation between the Author and a principal Secretary, concerning the affairs of that empire. The Author's offer to serve the Emperor in his wars.

The first request I made after I had obtained my liberty, was, that I might have licence to see Mildendo, the metropolis; which the Emperor easily granted me, but with a special charge to do no hurt either to the inhabitants or their houses. The people had notice by proclamation of my design to visit the town. The wall which encompassed it, is two foot and a half high, and at least eleven inches broad, so that a coach and horses may be driven very safely round it; and it is flanked with strong towers at ten foot distance. I stepped over the great Western Gate, and passed very gently, and sideling through the two principal streets, only in my short waistcoat, for fear of damaging the roofs and eaves of the houses with the skirts of my coat. I walked with the utmost circumspection, to avoid treading on any stragglers, that might remain in the streets, although the orders were very strict, that all people should keep in their houses, at their own peril. The garret windows and tops of houses were so crowded with spectators, that I thought in all my travels I had not seen a more populous place. The city is an exact square, each side of the wall being five hundred foot long. The two great streets, which run cross and divide it into four quarters, are five foot wide. The lanes and alleys, which I could not enter, but only viewe them as I passed, are from twelve to eightee inches. The town is capable of holding fiv hundred thousand souls. The houses ar from three to five stories. The shops an markets well provided.

The Emperor's palace is in the centre c the city, where the two great streets mee It is inclosed by a wall of two foot high, an twenty foot distant from the buildings. had his Majesty's permission to step ove this wall; and the space being so wide be tween that and the palace, I could easily vie it on every side. The outward court is square of forty foot, and includes two othe courts: in the inmost are the royal apar ments, which I was very desirous to see, bu found it extremely difficult; for the grea gates, from one square into another, were bu eighteen inches high, and seven inches wid Now the buildings of the outer court were a least five foot high, and it was impossible fo me to stride over them without infinite dan age to the pile, though the walls were strongl built of hewn stone, and four inches thic At the same time the Emperor had a gre desire that I should see the magnificence o his palace; but this I was not able to do ti three days after, which I spent in cuttin down with my knife some of the largest tre in the royal park, about an hundred yar distant from the city. Of these trees I mad two stools, each about three foot high, an strong enough to bear my weight. Th people having received notice a second tim I went again through the city to the palac with my two stools in my hands. When came to the side of the outer court, I stoo upon one stool, and took the other in m hand: this I lifted over the roof, and gent set it down on the space between the first an second court, which was eight foot wide. then stept over the buildings very conve iently from one stool to the other, and dre up the first after me with a hooked stick. I this contrivance I got into the inmost cou and lying down upon my side, I applied m face to the windows of the middle stori which were left open on purpose, and d covered the most splendid apartments th can be imagined. There I saw the Empre and the young Princes, in their several loc ings, with their chief attendants about the Her Imperial Majesty was pleased to sm very graciously upon me, and gave me out the window her hand to kiss.

But I shall not anticipate the reader wi farther descriptions of this kind, because I serve them for a greater work, which is now almost ready for the press, containing a general description of this empire, from its first erection, through a long series of princes, with a particular account of their wars and politics, laws, learning, and religion: their plants and animals, their peculiar manners and customs, with other matters very curious and useful; my chief design at present being only to relate such events and transactions as happened to the public, or to myself, during a residence of about nine months in that empire.

One morning, about a fortnight after I had obtained my liberty, Reldresal, Principal Secretary (as they style him) of Private Affairs, came to my house attended only by one servant. He ordered his coach to wait at a distance, and desired I would give him an hour's audience; which I readily consented to, on account of his quality and personal merits, as well as the many good offices he had done me during my solicitations at court. I offered to lie down, that he might the more conveniently reach my ear; but he chose rather to let me hold him in my hand during our conversation. He began with compliments on my liberty; said he might pretend to some merit in it: but, however, added, that if it had not been for the present situation of things at court, perhaps I might not have obtained it so soon. For, said he, as flourishing a condition as we may appear to be in to foreigners, we labor under two mighty evils; a violent faction at home, and the danger of an invasion by a most potent enemy from abroad. As to the first, you are to understand, that for about seventy moons past there have been two struggling parties in this empire, under the names of Tramecksan and Slamecksan, from the high and low heels on their shoes, by which they distinguish themselves.[1] It is alleged indeed, that the high heels are most agreeable to our ancient constitution: but however this be, his Majesty hath determined to make use of only low heels in the administration of the government, and all offices in the gift of the Crown, as you cannot but observe; and particularly, that his Majesty's Imperial heels are lower at least by a drurr than any of his court; (drurr is a measure about the fourteenth part of an inch). The animosities between these two parties run so high, that they will neither eat nor drink, nor talk with each other. We compute the Tramecksan, or High-Heels, to exceed us in number; but the power is wholly on our side. We apprehend his Imperial Highness, the Heir to the Crown, to have some tendency towards the High-Heels; at least we can plainly discover one of his heels higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait.[1] Now, in the midst of these intestine disquiets, we are threatened with an invasion from the Island of Blefuscu,[2] which is the other great empire of the universe, almost as large and powerful as this of his Majesty. For as to what we have heard you affirm, that there are other kingdoms and states in the world inhabited by human creatures as large as yourself, our philosophers are in much doubt, and would rather conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars; because it is certain, that an hundred mortals of your bulk would, in a short time, destroy all the fruits and cattle of his Majesty's dominions. Besides, our histories of six thousand moons make no mention of any other regions, than the two great empires of Lilliput and Blefuscu. Which two mighty powers have, as I was going to tell you, been engaged in a most obstinate war for six and thirty moons past. It began upon the following occasion. It is allowed on all hands, that the primitive way of breaking eggs, before we eat them, was upon the larger end: but his present Majesty's grandfather,[3] while he was a boy, going to eat an egg, and breaking it according to the ancient practice, happened to cut one of his fingers. Whereupon the Emperor his father published an edict, commanding all his subjects, upon great penalties, to break the smaller end of their eggs. The people so highly resented this law, that our histories tell us there have been six rebellions raised on that account; wherein one Emperor lost his life, and another his crown.[4] These civil commotions were constantly fomented by the monarchs of Blefuscu; and when they were quelled, the exiles always fled for refuge to that empire. It is computed, that eleven thousand persons have, at several times, suffered death, rather than submit to break their eggs at the smaller end. Many hundred large volumes have been published upon this controversy: but the books of the Big-Endians have been long forbidden, and the whole party rendered incapable by law of holding employments. During the course of these

1 Tories and Whigs.

1 George II, while Prince of Wales, had a foot in each political camp.

2 Blefuscu stands for France, the hereditary foe of England.

3 Henry VIII. The Little-Endians are the Protestants; the Big-Endians, the Roman Catholics.

4 Charles I and James II.

troubles, the Emperors of Blefuscu did frequently expostulate by their ambassadors, accusing us of making a schism in religion, by offending against a fundamental doctrine of our great prophet Lustrog, in the fifty-fourth chapter of the Blundecral (which is their Alcoran). This, however, is thought to be a mere strain upon the text: for the words are these; That all true believers break their eggs at the convenient end: and which is the convenient end, seems, in my humble opinion, to be left to every man's conscience, or at least in the power of the chief magistrate to determine. Now the Big-Endian exiles have found so much credit in the Emperor of Blefuscu's court, and so much private assistance and encouragement from their party here at home, that a bloody war has been carried on between the two empires for six and thirty moons with various success; during which time we have lost forty capital ships, and a much greater number of smaller vessels, together with thirty thousand of our best seamen and soldiers; and the damage received by the enemy is reckoned to be somewhat greater than ours. However, they have now equipped a numerous fleet, and are just preparing to make a descent upon us; and his Imperial Majesty, placing great confidence in your valor and strength, has commanded me to lay this account of his affairs before you.

I desired the Secretary to present my humble duty to the Emperor, and to let him know, that I thought it would not become me, who was a foreigner, to interfere with parties; but I was ready, with the hazard of my life, to defend his person and state against all invaders.

CHAPTER V

The Author, by an extraordinary stratagem, prevents an invasion. A high title of honor is conferred upon him. Ambassadors arrive from the Emperor of Blefuscu, and sue for peace. The Empress's apartment on fire by an accident; the Author instrumental in saving the rest of the palace.

The Empire of Blefuscu is an island situated to the north north-east side of Lilliput, from whence it is parted only by a channel of eight hundred yards wide. I had not yet seen it, and upon this notice of an intended invasion, I avoided appearing on that side of the coast, for fear of being discovered by some of the enemy's ships, who had received no intelligence of me, all intercourse between the two empires having been strictly forbidden during the war, upon pain of death, and an embargo laid by our Emperor upon all vessels whatsoever. I communicated to his Majesty a project I had formed of seizing the enemy's whole fleet: which, as our scouts assured us, lay at anchor in the harbor ready to sail with the first fair wind. I consulted the most experienced seamen, upon the depth of the channel, which they had often plumbed, who told me, that in the middle at high-water it was seventy glumgluffs deep, which is about six foot of European measure; and the rest of it fifty glumgluffs at most. I walked towards the north-east coast over against Blefuscu; and lying down behind a hillock, took out my small pocket perspective-glass, and viewed the enemy's fleet at anchor, consisting of about fifty men of war, and a great number of transports: I then came back to my house, and gave order (for which I had a warrant) for a great quantity of the strongest cable and bars of iron. The cable was about as thick as packthread, and the bars of the length and size of a knitting-needle. I trebled the cable to make it stronger, and for the same reason I twisted three of the iron bars together, binding the extremities into a hook. Having thus fixed fifty hooks to as many cables, I went back to the north-east coast, and putting off my coat, shoes, and stockings, walked into the sea in my leathern jerkin, about half an hour before high water. I waded with what haste I could, and swam in the middle about thirty yards till I felt ground; I arrived at the fleet in less than half an hour. The enemy was so frighted when they saw me, that they leaped out of their ships, and swam to shore, where there could not be fewer than thirty thousand souls. I then took my tackling, and fastening a hook to the hole at the prow of each, I tied all the cords together at the end. While I was thus employed, the enemy discharged several thousand arrows, many of which stuck in my hands and face; and besides the excessive smart, gave me much disturbance in my work. My greatest apprehension was for my eyes, which I should have infallibly lost, if I had not suddenly thought of an expedient. I kept among other little necessaries a pair of spectacles in a private pocket, which, as I observed before, had scaped the Emperor's searchers. These I took out and fastened as strongly as I could upon my nose, and thus armed went on boldly with my work in spite of the enemy's arrows, many of which struck against the glasses of my spectacles but without any other effect, further than a little to discompose them. I had now fastened all the hooks, and taking the knot in my hand, began to pull; but not a ship would stir, for they were all too fast held by their anchors, so that the boldest part of my enterprise remained. I therefore let go the cord, and leaving the hooks fixed to the ships, I resolutely cut with my knife the cables that fastened the anchors, receiving about two hundred shots in my face and hands; then I took up the knotted end of the cables, to which my hooks were tied, and with great ease drew fifty of the enemy's largest men of war after me.

The Blefuscudians, who had not the least imagination of what I intended, were at first confounded with astonishment. They had seen me cut the cables, and thought my design was only to let the ships run a-drift, or fall foul on each other: but when they perceived the whole fleet moving in order, and saw me pulling at the end, they set up such a scream of grief and despair, that it is almost impossible to describe or conceive. When I had got out of danger, I stopped awhile to pick out the arrows that stuck in my hands and face; and rubbed on some of the same ointment that was given me at my first arrival, as I have formerly mentioned. I then took off my spectacles, and waiting about an hour, till the tide was a little fallen, I waded through the middle with my cargo, and arrived safe at the royal port of Lilliput.

The Emperor and his whole court stood on the shore, expecting the issue of this great adventure. They saw the ships move forward in a large half-moon, but could not discern me, who was up to my breast in water. When I advanced in the middle of the channel, they were yet in more pain, because I was under water to my neck. The Emperor concluded me to be drowned, and that the enemy's fleet was approaching in a hostile manner: but he was soon eased of his fears, for the channel growing shallower every step I made, I came in a short time within hearing, and holding up the end of the cable by which the fleet was fastened, I cried in a loud voice, Long live the most puissant Emperor of Lilliput! This great prince received me at my landing with all possible encomiums, and created me a Nardac upon the spot, which is the highest title of honor among them.

His Majesty desired I would take some other opportunity of bringing all the rest of his enemy's ships into his ports. And so unmeasurable is the ambition of princes, that he seemed to think of nothing less than reducing the whole empire of Blefuscu into a province, and governing it by a viceroy; of destroying the Big-Endian exiles, and compelling the people to break the smaller end of their eggs, by which he would remain the sole monarch of the whole world. But I endeavored to divert him from this design, by many arguments drawn from the topics of policy as well as justice; and I plainly protested, that I would never be an instrument of bringing a free and brave people into slavery. And when the matter was debated in council, the wisest part of the ministry were of my opinion.

This open bold declaration of mine was so opposite to the schemes and politics of his Imperial Majesty, that he could never forgive it; he mentioned it in a very artful manner at council, where I was told that some of the wisest appeared, at least by their silence, to be of my opinion; but others, who were my secret enemies, could not forbear some expressions, which by a side-wind reflected on me. And from this time began an intrigue between his Majesty and a junto of ministers maliciously bent against me, which broke out in less than two months, and had like to have ended in my utter destruction. Of so little weight are the greatest services to princes, when put into the balance with a refusal to gratify their passions.

About three weeks after this exploit, there arrived a solemn embassy from Blefuscu, with humble offers of a peace; which was soon concluded upon conditions very advantageous to our Emperor, wherewith I shall not trouble the reader. There were six ambassadors, with a train of about five hundred persons, and their entry was very magnificent, suitable to the grandeur of their master, and the importance of their business. When their treaty was finished, wherein I did them several good offices by the credit I now had, or at least appeared to have at court, their Excellencies, who were privately told how much I had been their friend, made me a visit in form. They began with many compliments upon my valor and generosity, invited me to that kingdom in the Emperor their master's name, and desired me to show them some proofs of my prodigious strength, of which they had heard so many wonders; wherein I readily obliged them, but shall not trouble the reader with the particulars.

When I had for some time entertained their Excellencies, to their infinite satisfaction and surprise, I desired they would do me the honor to present my most humble respects to the Emperor their master, the renown of whose virtues had so justly filled the whole world with admiration, and whose royal person I resolved to attend before I returned to my own country: accordingly, the next time I had the honor to see our Emperor, I desired his general licence to wait on the Blefuscudian monarch, which he was pleased to grant me, as I could perceive, in a very cold manner; but could not guess the reason, till I had a whisper from a certain person that Flimnap and Bolgolam had represented my intercourse with those ambassadors as a mark of disaffection, from which I am sure my heart was wholly free. And this was the first time I began to conceive some imperfect idea of courts and ministers.

It is to be observed, that these ambassadors spoke to me by an interpreter, the languages of both empires differing as much from each other as any two in Europe, and each nation priding itself upon the antiquity, beauty, and energy of their own tongues, with an avowed contempt for that of their neighbor; yet our Emperor, standing upon the advantage he had got by the seizure of their fleet, obliged them to deliver their credentials, and make their speech in the Lilliputian tongue. And it must be confessed, that from the great intercourse of trade and commerce between both realms, from the continual reception of exiles, which is mutual among them, and from the custom in each empire to send their young nobility and richer gentry to the other, in order to polish themselves by seeing the world, and understanding men and manners; there are few persons of distinction, or merchants, or seamen, who dwell in the maritime parts, but what can hold conversation in both tongues; as I found some weeks after, when I went to pay my respects to the Emperor of Blefuscu, which in the midst of great misfortunes, through the malice of my enemies, proved a very happy adventure to me, as I shall relate in its proper place.

The reader may remember, that when I signed those articles upon which I recovered my liberty, there were some which I disliked upon account of their being too servile, neither could anything but an extreme necessity have forced me to submit. But being now a Nardac of the highest rank in that empire, such offices were looked upon as below my dignity, and the Emperor (to do him justice) never once mentioned them to me. However, it was not long before I had an opportunity of doing his Majesty, at least, as I then thought, a most signal service. I was alarmed at midnight with the cries of many hundred people at my door; by which being suddenly awaked, I was in some kind of terror. I heard the word burglum repeated incessantly: several of the Emperor's court, making their way through the crowd, entreated me to come immediately to the palace, where her Imperial Majesty's apartment was on fire, by the carelessness of a maid of honor, who fell asleep while she was reading a romance. I got up in an instant; and orders being given to clear the way before me, and it being likewise a moonshine night, I made a shift to get to the palace without trampling on any of the people. I found they had already applied ladders to the walls of the apartment, and were well provided with buckets, but the water was at some distance. These buckets were about the size of a large thimble, and the poor people supplied me with them as fast as they could; but the flame was so violent that they did little good. I might easily have stifled it with my coat, which I unfortunately left behind me for haste, and came away only in my leathern jerkin. The case seemed wholly desperate and deplorable; and this magnificent palace would have infallibly been burnt down to the ground, if, by a presence of mind, unusual to me, I had not suddenly thought of an expedient. I had the evening before drunk plentifully of a most delicious wine, called glimigrim, (the Blefuscudians call it flunec, but ours is esteemed the better sort) which is very diuretic. By the luckiest chance in the world, I had not discharged myself of any part of it. The heat I had contracted by coming very near the flames, and by laboring to quench them, made the wine begin to operate by urine; which I voided in such a quantity, and applied so well to the proper places, that in three minutes the fire was wholly extinguished, and the rest of that noble pile, which had cost so many ages in erecting, preserved from destruction.

It was now day-light, and I returned to my house without waiting to congratulate with the Emperor: because, although I had done a very eminent piece of service, yet I could not tell how his Majesty might resent the manner by which I had performed it: for, by the fundamental laws of the realm, it is capital in any person, of what quality soever, to make water within the precincts of the palace. But I was a little comforted by a message from his Majesty, that he would give orders to the Grand Justiciary for passing my pardon in form; which, however, I could not obtain. And I was privately assured, that the Empress, conceiving the greatest abhorrence of what I had done, removed to the most distant side of the court, firmly resolved that those buildings should never be repaired for her use; and, in the presence of her chief confidents could not forbear vowing revenge.

CHAPTER VI

Of the inhabitants of Lilliput; their learning, laws, and customs, the manner of educating their children. The Author's way of living in that country. His vindication of a great lady.

Although I intend to leave the description of this empire to a particular treatise, yet in the mean time I am content to gratify the curious reader with some general ideas. As the common size of the natives is somewhat under six inches high, so there is an exact proportion in all other animals, as well as plants and trees: for instance, the tallest horses and oxen are between four and five inches in height, the sheep an inch and a half, more or less: their geese about the bigness of a sparrow, and so the several gradations downwards till you come to the smallest, which, to my sight, were almost invisible; but nature hath adapted the eyes of the Lilliputians to all objects proper for their view: they see with great exactness, but at no great distance. And to show the sharpness of their sight towards objects that are near, I have been much pleased with observing a cook pulling a lark, which was not so large as a common fly; and a young girl threading an invisible needle with invisible silk. Their tallest trees are about seven foot high: I mean some of those in the great royal park, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinched. The other vegetables are in the same proportion; but this I leave to the reader's imagination.

I shall say but little at present of their learning, which for many ages hath flourished in all its branches among them: but their manner of writing is very peculiar, being neither from the left to the right, like the Europeans; nor from the right to the left, like the Arabians; nor from up to down, like the Chinese; nor from down to up, like the Cascagians; but aslant from one corner of the paper to the other, like ladies in England.

They bury their dead with their heads directly downwards, because they hold an opinion, that in eleven thousand moons they are all to rise again, in which period the earth (which they conceive to be flat) will turn upside down, and by this means they shall, at their resurrection, be found ready standing on their feet. The learned among them confess the absurdity of this doctrine, but the practice still continues, in compliance to the vulgar.

There are some laws and customs in this empire very peculiar; and if they were not so directly contrary to those of my own dear country, I should be tempted to say a little in their justification. It is only to be wished, that they were as well executed. The first I shall mention, relates to informers. All crimes against the state are punished here with the utmost severity; but if the person accused maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuser is immediately put to an ignominious death; and out of his goods or lands, the innocent person is quadruply recompensed for the loss of his time, for the danger he underwent, for the hardship of his imprisonment, and for all the charges he hath been at in making his defence. Or, if that fund be deficient, it is largely supplied by the Crown. The Emperor does also confer on him some public mark of his favor, and proclamation is made of his innocence through the whole city.

They look upon fraud as a greater crime than theft, and therefore seldom fail to punish it with death; for they allege, that care and vigilance, with a very common understanding, may preserve a man's goods from thieves, but honesty has no fence against superior cunning; and since it is necessary that there should be a perpetual intercourse of buying and selling, and dealing upon credit, where fraud is permitted and connived at, or hath no law to punish it, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. I remember when I was once interceding with the Emperor for a criminal who had wronged his master of a great sum of money, which he had received by order, and ran away with; and happening to tell his Majesty, by way of extenuation, that it was only a breach of trust; the Emperor thought it monstrous in me to offer, as a defence, the greatest aggravation of the crime: and truly I had little to say in return, farther than the common answer, that different nations had different customs; for, I confess, I was heartily ashamed.

Although we usually call reward and punishment the two hinges upon which all government turns, yet I could never observe this maxim to be put in practice by any nation except that of Lilliput. Whoever can there bring sufficient proof that he hath strictly observed the laws of his country for seventy-three moons, hath a claim to certain privileges, according to his quality and condition of life, with a proportionable sum of money out of a fund appropriated for that use: he likewise acquires the title of Snilpall, or Legal, which is added to his name, but does not descend to his posterity. And these people thought it a prodigious defect of policy among us, when I told them that our laws were enforced only by penalties, without any mention of reward. It is upon this account that the image of Justice, in their courts of judicature, is formed with six eyes, two before, as many behind, and on each side one, to signify circumspection; with a bag of gold open in her right hand, and a sword sheathed in her left, to show she is more disposed to reward than to punish.

In choosing persons for all employments, they have more regard to good morals than to great abilities; for, since government is necessary to mankind, they believe that the common size of human understandings is fitted to some station or other, and that Providence never intended to make the management of public affairs a mystery, to be comprehended only by a few persons of sublime genius, of which there seldom are three born in an age: but they suppose truth, justice, temperance, and the like, to be in every man's power; the practice of which virtues, assisted by experience and a good intention, would qualify any man for the service of his country, except where a course of study is required. But they thought the want of moral virtues was so far from being supplied by superior endowments of the mind, that employments could never be put into such dangerous hands as those of persons so qualified; and at least, that the mistakes committed by ignorance in a virtuous disposition, would never be of such fatal consequence to the public weal, as the practices of a man whose inclinations led him to be corrupt, and had great abilities to manage, and multiply, and defend his corruptions.

In like manner, the disbelief of a Divine Providence renders a man uncapable of holding any public station; for, since kings avow themselves to be the deputies of Providence, the Lilliputians think nothing can be more absurd than for a prince to employ such men as disown the authority under which he acts.

In relating these and the following laws, I would only be understood to mean the original institutions, and not the most scandalous corruptions into which these people are fallen by the degenerate nature of man. For as to that infamous practice of acquiring great employments by dancing on the ropes or badges of favor and distinction by leaping over sticks and creeping under them, the reader is to observe, that they were first introduced by the grandfather of the Emperor now reigning, and grew to the present height by the gradual increase of party and faction.

Ingratitude is among them a capital crime as we read it to have been in some other countries: for they reason thus, that whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to the rest of mankind, from whom he hath received no obligation, and therefore such a man is not fit to live.

Their notions relating to the duties of parents and children differ extremely from ours. For, since the conjunction of male and female is founded upon the great law of nature, in order to propagate and continue the species, the Lilliputians will needs have it, that men and women are joined together like other animals, by the motives of concupiscence; and that their tenderness towards their young proceeds from the like natural principle: for which reason they will never allow, that a child is under any obligation to his father for begetting him, or to his mother for bringing him into the world, which, considering the miseries of human life, was neither a benefit in itself, nor intended so by his parents, whose thoughts in their love-encounters were otherwise employed. Upon these, and the like reasonings, their opinion is, that parents are the last of all others to be trusted with the education of their own children; and therefore they have in every town public nurseries where all parents, except cottagers and laborers, are obliged to send their infants of both sexes to be reared and educated when they come to the age of twenty moons, at which time they are supposed to have some rudiments of docility. These schools are of several kinds, suited to different qualities and to both sexes. They have certain professors well skilled in preparing children for such a condition of life as befits the rank of their parents, and their own capacities as well as inclinations. I shall first say something of the male nurseries, and then of the female.

The nurseries for males of noble or eminent birth, are provided with grave and learned professors, and their several deputies. The clothes and food of the children are plain and simple. They are bred up in the principles of honor, justice, courage, modesty, clemency, religion, and love of their country; they are always employed in some business, except in the times of eating and sleeping, which are very short, and two hours for diversions, consisting of bodily exercises. They are dressed by men till four years of age, and then are obliged to dress themselves, although their quality be ever so great; and the women attendants, who are aged proportionably to ours at fifty, perform only the most menial offices. They are never suffered to converse with servants, but go together in small or greater numbers to take their diversions, and always in the presence of a professor, or one of his deputies; whereby they avoid those early bad impressions of folly and vice to which our children are subject. Their parents are suffered to see them only twice a year; the visit is to last but an hour. They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by on those occasions, will not suffer them to whisper, or use any fondling expressions, or bring any presents of toys, sweetmeats, and the like.

The pension from each family for the education and entertainment of a child, upon failure of due payment, is levied by the Emperor's officers.

The nurseries for children of ordinary gentlemen, merchants, traders, and handicrafts, are managed proportionably after the same manner; only those designed for trades, are put out apprentices at eleven years old, whereas those of persons of quality continue in their exercises till fifteen, which answers to one and twenty with us: but the confinement is gradually lessened for the last three years.

In the female nurseries, the young girls of quality are educated much like the males, only they are dressed by orderly servants of their own sex; but always in the presence of a professor or deputy, till they come to dress themselves, which is at five years old. And if it be found that these nurses ever presume to entertain the girl with frightful or foolish stories, or the common follies practiced by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped thrice about the city, imprisoned for a year, and banished for life to the most desolate part of the country. Thus the young ladies there are as much ashamed of being cowards and fools, as the men, and despise all personal ornaments beyond decency and cleanliness: neither did I perceive any difference in their education, made by their difference of sex, only that the exercises of the females were not altogether so robust; and that some rules were given them relating to domestic life, and a smaller compass of learning was enjoined them: for their maxim is, that among people of quality, a wife should be always a reasonable and agreeable companion, because she cannot always be young. When the girls are twelve years old, which among them is the marriageable age, their parents or guardians take them home, with great expressions of gratitude to the professors, and seldom without tears of the young lady and her companions.

In the nurseries of females of the meaner sort, the children are instructed in all kinds of works proper for their sex, and their several degrees: those intended for apprentices, are dismissed at seven years old, the rest are kept to eleven.

The meaner families who have children at these nurseries, are obliged, besides their annual pension, which is as low as possible, to return to the steward of the nursery a small monthly share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child; and therefore all parents are limited in their expenses by the law. For the Lilliputians think nothing can be more unjust, than for people, in subservience to their own appetites, to bring children into the world, and leave the burthen of supporting them on the public. As to persons of quality, they give security to appropriate a certain sum for each child, suitable to their condition; and these funds are always managed with good husbandry, and the most exact justice.

The cottagers and laborers keep their children at home, their business being only to till and cultivate the earth, and therefore their education is of little consequence to the public; but the old and diseased among them are supported by hospitals: for begging is a trade unknown in this empire.

And here it may perhaps divert the curious reader, to give some account of my domestic, and my manner of living in this country, during a residence of nine months and thirteen days. Having a head mechanically turned, and being likewise forced by necessity, I had made for myself a table and chair convenient enough, out of the largest trees in the royal park. Two hundred sempstresses were employed to make me shirts, and linen for my bed and table, all of the strongest and coarsest kind they could get; which, however, they were forced to quilt together in several folds, for the thickest was some degrees finer than lawn. Their linen was usually three inches wide, and three foot make a piece. The sempstresses took my measure as I lay on the ground, one standing at my neck, and another at my mid-leg, with a strong cord extended, that each held by the end, while the third measured the length of the cord with a rule an inch long. Then they measured my right thumb, and desired no more; for by a mathematical computation, that twice round the thumb is once round the wrist, and so on to the neck and the waist, and by the help of my old shirt, which I displayed on the ground before them for a pattern, they fitted me exactly. Three hundred tailors were employed in the same manner to make me clothes; but they had another contrivance for taking my measure. I kneeled down, and they raised a ladder from the ground to my neck; upon this ladder one of them mounted, and let fall a plumb-line from my collar to the floor, which just answered the length of my coat: but my waist and arms I measured myself. When my clothes were finished, which was done in my house, (for the largest of theirs would not have been able to hold them) they looked like the patch-work made by the ladies in England, only that mine were all of a color.

I had three hundred cooks to dress my victuals, in little convenient huts built about my house, where they and their families lived, and prepared me two dishes a-piece. I took up twenty waiters in my hand, and placed them on the table: an hundred more attended below on the ground, some with dishes of meat, and some with barrels of wine, and other liquors, slung on their shoulders; all which the waiters above drew up as I wanted, in a very ingenious manner, by certain cords, as we draw the bucket up a well in Europe. A dish of their meat was a good mouthful, and a barrel of their liquor a reasonable draught. Their mutton yields to ours, but their beef is excellent. I have had a sirloin so large, that I have been forced to make three bites of it; but this is rare. My servants were astonished to see me eat it bones and all, as in our country we do the leg of a lark. Their geese and turkeys I usually eat at a mouthful, and I must confess they far exceed ours. Of their smaller fowl I could take up twenty or thirty at the end of my knife.

One day his Imperial Majesty, being informed of my way of living, desired that himself and his Royal Consort, with the young Princes of the blood of both sexes, might have the happiness (as he was pleased to call it) of dining with me. They came accordingly, and I placed them in chairs of state on my table, just over against me, with their guards about them. Flimnap, the Lord High Treasurer, attended there likewise with his white staff; and I observed he often looked on me with a sour countenance, which I would not seem to regard, but eat more than usual, in honor to my dear country, as well as to fill the court with admiration. I have some private reasons to believe, that this visit from his Majesty gave Flimnap an opportunity of doing me ill offices to his master. That minister had always been my secret enemy, though he outwardly caressed me more than was usual to the moroseness of his nature. He represented to the Emperor the low condition of his treasury; that he was forced to take up money at great discount; that exchequer bills would not circulate under nine per cent. below par; that in short I had cost his Majesty above a million and a half of sprugs (their greatest gold coin, about the bigness of a spangle); and upon the whole, that it would be advisable in the Emperor to take the first fair occasion of dismissing me.

I am here obliged to vindicate the reputation of an excellent lady, who was an innocent sufferer upon my account. The Treasurer took a fancy to be jealous of his wife, from the malice of some evil tongues, who informed him that her Grace had taken a violent affection for my person; and the court-scandal ran for some time, that she once came privately to my lodging. This I solemnly declare to be a most infamous falsehood, without any grounds, farther than that her Grace was pleased to treat me with all innocent marks of freedom and friendship. I own she came often to my house, but always publicly, nor ever without three more in the coach, who were usually her sister and young daughter, and some particular acquaintance; but this was common to many other ladies of the court. And I still appeal to my servants round, whether they at any time saw a coach at my door without knowing what persons were in it. On those occasions, when a servant had given me notice, my custom was to go immediately to the door; and, after paying my respects, to take up the coach and two horses very carefully in my hands, (for, if there were six horses, the postillion always unharnessed four) and place them on a table, where I had fixed a movable rim quite round, of five inches high, to prevent accidents. And I have often had four coaches and horses at once on my table full of company, while I sat in my chair leaning my face towards them; and when I was engaged with one set, the coachmen would gently drive the others round my table. I have passed many an afternoon very agreeably in these conversations. But I defy the Treasurer, or his two informers (I will name them, and let them make their best of it) Clustril and Drunlo, to prove that any person ever came to me incognito, except the secretary Reldresal, who was sent by express command of his Imperial Majesty, as I have before related. I should not have dwelt so long upon this particular, if it had not been a point wherein the reputation of a great lady is so nearly concerned, to say nothing of my own; though I then had the honor to be a Nardac, which the Treasurer himself is not; for all the world knows he is only a Glumglum, a title inferior by one degree, as that of a Marquis is to a Duke in England, although I allow he preceded me in right of his post. These false informations, which I afterwards came to the knowledge of, by an accident not proper to mention, made Flimnap, the Treasurer, show his lady for some time an ill countenance, and me a worse; and although he were at last undeceived and reconciled to her, yet I lost all credit with him, and found my interest decline very fast with the Emperor himself, who was indeed too much governed by that favorite.

CHAPTER VII

The Author, being informed of a design to accuse him of high-treason, makes his escape to Blefuscu. His reception there.

Before I proceed to give an account of my leaving this kingdom, it may be proper to inform the reader of a private intrigue which had been for two months forming against me.

I had been hitherto all my life a stranger to courts, for which I was unqualified by the meanness of my condition. I had indeed heard and read enough of the dispositions of great princes and ministers; but never expected to have found such terrible effects of them in so remote a country, governed, as I thought, by very different maxims from those in Europe.

When I was just preparing to pay my attendance on the Emperor of Blefuscu, a considerable person at court (to whom I had been very serviceable at a time when he lay under the highest displeasure of his Imperial Majesty) came to my house very privately at night in a close chair, and without sending his name, desired admittance. The chairmen were dismissed; I put the chair, with his Lordship in it, into my coat-pocket: and giving orders to a trusty servant to say I was indisposed and gone to sleep, I fastened the door of my house, placed the chair on the table, according to my usual custom, and sat down by it. After the common salutations were over, observing his Lordship's countenance full of concern, and enquiring into the reason, he desired I would hear him with patience in a matter that highly concerned my honor and my life. His speech was to the following effect, for I took notes of it as soon as he left me:

"You are to know," said he, "that several Committees of Council have been lately called in the most private manner on your account; and it is but two days since his Majesty came to a full resolution.

"You are very sensible that Skyresh Bolgolam (Galbet, or High-Admiral) hath been your mortal enemy almost ever since your arrival. His original reasons I know not; but his hatred is much increased since your great success against Blefuscu, by which his glory, as Admiral, is obscured. This Lord, in conjunction with Flimnap the High-Treasurer, whose enmity against you is notorious on account of his lady, Limtoc the General, Lalcon the Chamberlain, and Balmuff the Grand Justiciary, have prepared articles of impeachment against you, for treason, and other capital crimes."

This preface made me so impatient, being conscious of my own merits and innocence, that I was going to interrupt; when he entreated me to be silent, and thus proceeded:

"Out of gratitude for the favors you have done me, I procured information of the whole proceedings, and a copy of the articles, wherein I venture my head for your service."

Articles of Impeachment against Quinbus Flestrin (the Man-Mountain.)

ARTICLE I

Whereas, by a statute made in the reign of his Imperial Majesty Calin Deffar Plune, it is enacted, that whoever shall make water within the precincts of the royal palace, shall be liable to the pains and penalties of high treason; notwithstanding, the said Quinbus Flestrin, in open breach of the said law, under color of extinguishing the fire kindled in the apartment of his Majesty's most dear Imperial Consort, did maliciously, traitorously, and devilishly, by discharge of his urine, put out the said fire kindled in the said apartment, lying and being within the precincts of the said royal palace, against the statute in that case provided, etc. against the duty, etc.

ARTICLE II

That the said Quinbus Flestrin having brought the imperial fleet of Blefuscu into the royal port, and being afterwards commanded by his Imperial Majesty to seize all the other ships of the said empire of Blefuscu, and reduce that empire to a province, to be governed by a viceroy from hence, and to destroy and put to death not only all the Big-Endian exiles, but likewise all the people of that empire, who would not immediately forsake the Big-Endian heresy: He, the said Flestrin, like a false traitor against his most Auspicious, Serene, Imperial Majesty, did petition to be excused from the said service, upon pretence of unwillingness to force the consciences, or destroy the liberties and lives of an innocent people.

ARTICLE III

That, whereas certain ambassadors arrived from the court of Blefuscu, to sue for peace in his Majesty's court: He, the said Flestrin, did, like a false traitor, aid, abet, comfort, and divert the said ambassadors, although he knew them to be servants to a Prince who was lately an open enemy to his Imperial Majesty, and in open war against his said Majesty.

ARTICLE IV

That the said Quinbus Flestrin, contrary to the duty of a faithful subject, is now preparing to make a voyage to the court and empire of Blefuscu, for which he hath received only verbal licence from his Imperial Majesty; and under color of the said licence, doth falsely and traitorously intend to take the said voyage, and thereby to aid, comfort, and abet the Emperor of Blefuscu, so late an enemy, and in open war with his Imperial Majesty aforesaid.

"There are some other articles, but these are the most important, of which I have read you an abstract.

"In the several debates upon this impeachment, it must be confessed that his Majesty gave many marks of his great lenity, often urging the services you had done him, and endeavoring to extenuate your crimes. The Treasurer and Admiral insisted that you should be put to the most painful and ignominious death, by setting fire on your house at night, and the General was to attend with twenty thousand men armed with poisoned arrows to shoot you on the face and hands. Some of your servants were to have private orders to strew a poisonous juice on your shirts, which would soon make you tear your own flesh, and die in the utmost torture. The General came into the same opinion; so that for a long time there was a majority against you. But his Majesty resolving, if possible, to spare your life, at last brought off the Chamberlain.

"Upon this incident, Reldresal, Principal Secretary for Private Affairs, who always approved himself your true friend, was commanded by the Emperor to deliver his opinion, which he accordingly did; and therein justified the good thoughts you have of him. He allowed your crimes to be great, but that still there was room for mercy, the most commendable virtue in a prince, and for which his Majesty was so justly celebrated. He said, the friendship between you and him was so well known to the world, that perhaps the most honorable board might think him partial: however, in obedience to the command he had received, he would freely offer his sentiments. That if his Majesty, in consideration of your services, and pursuant to his own merciful disposition, would please to spare your life, and only give orders to put out both your eyes, he humbly conceived, that by this expedient, justice might in some measure be satisfied, and all the world would applaud the lenity of the Emperor, as well as the fair and generous proceedings of those who have the honor to be his counsellors. That the loss of your eyes would be no impediment to your bodily strength, by which you might still be useful to his Majesty. That blindness is an addition to courage, by concealing dangers from us; that the fear you had for your eyes, was the greatest difficulty in bringing over the enemy's fleet, and it would be sufficient for you to see by the eyes of the ministers, since the greatest princes do no more.

"This proposal was received with the utmost disapprobation by the whole board. Bolgolam, the Admiral, could not preserve his temper; but rising up in fury, said, he wondered how the Secretary durst presume to give his opinion for preserving the life of a traitor: that the services you had performed, were, by all true reasons of state, the great aggravation of your crimes; that you, who were able to extinguish the fire, by discharge of urine in her Majesty's apartment (which he mentioned with horror), might, at another time, raise an inundation by the same means, to drown the whole palace; and the same strength which enabled you to bring over the enemy's fleet, might serve, upon the first discontent, to carry it back: that he had good reasons to think you were a Big-Endian in your heart; and as treason begins in the heart, before it appears in overt acts, so he accused you as a traitor on that account, and therefore insisted you should be put to death.

"The Treasurer was of the same opinion; he showed to what straits his Majesty's revenue was reduced by the charge of maintaining you, which would soon grow insupportable: that the Secretary's expedient of putting out your eyes was so far from being a remedy against this evil, that it would probably increase it, as it is manifest from the common practice of blinding some kind of fowl, after which they fed the faster, and grew sooner fat: that his sacred Majesty and the Council, who are your judges, were in their own consciences fully convinced of your guilt, which was a sufficient argument to condemn you to death, without the formal proofs required by the strict letter of the law.

"But his Imperial Majesty, fully determined against capital punishment, was graciously pleased to say, that since the Council thought the loss of your eyes too easy a censure, some other may be inflicted hereafter. And your friend the Secretary humbly desiring to be heard again, in answer to what the Treasurer had objected concerning the great charge his Majesty was at in maintaining you, said, that his Excellency, who had the sole disposal of the Emperor's revenue, might easily provide against that evil, by gradually lessening your establishment; by which, for want of sufficient food, you would grow weak and faint, and lose your appetite, and consequently decay and consume in a few months; neither would the stench of your carcass be then so dangerous, when it should become more than half diminished; and immediately upon your death, five or six thousand of his Majesty's subjects might, in two or three days, cut your flesh from your bones, take it away by cart-loads, and bury it in distant parts to prevent infection, leaving the skeleton as a monument of admiration to posterity.

"Thus by the great friendship of the Secretary, the whole affair was compromised. It was strictly enjoined, that the project of starving you by degrees should be kept a secret, but the sentence of putting out your eyes was entered on the books; none dissenting except Bolgolam the Admiral, who, being a creature of the Empress, was perpetually instigated by her Majesty to insist upon your death, she having borne perpetual malice against you, on account of that infamous and illegal method you took to extinguish the fire in her apartment.

"In three days your friend the Secretary will be directed to come to your house, and read before you the articles of impeachment; and then to signify the great lenity and favor of his Majesty and Council, whereby you are only condemned to the loss of your eyes, which his Majesty doth not question you will gratefully and humbly submit to; and twenty of his Majesty's surgeons will attend, in order to see the operation well performed, by discharging very sharp-pointed arrows into the balls of your eyes, as you lie on the ground.

"I leave to your prudence what measures you will take; and to avoid suspicion, I must immediately return in as private a manner as I came."

His Lordship did so, and I remained alone, under many doubts and perplexities of mind.

It was a custom introduced by this prince and his ministry (very different, as I have been assured, from the practices of former times,) that after the court had decreed any cruel execution, either to gratify the monarch's resentment, or the malice of a favorite, the Emperor always made a speech to his whole Council, expressing his great lenity and tenderness, as qualities known and confessed by all the world. This speech was immediately published through the kingdom; nor did any thing terrify the people so much as those encomiums on his Majesty's mercy; because it was observed, that the more these praises were enlarged and insisted on, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent. And as to myself, I must confess, having never been designed for a courtier either by my birth or education, I was so ill a judge of things, that I could not discover the lenity and favor of his sentence, but conceived it (perhaps erroneously) rather to be rigorous than gentle. I sometimes thought of standing my trial, for although I could not deny the facts alleged in the several articles, yet I hoped they would admit of some extenuations. But having in my life perused many state-trials, which I ever observed to terminate as the judges thought fit to direct, I durst not rely on so dangerous a decision, in so critical a juncture, and against such powerful enemies. Once I was strongly bent upon resistance, for while I had liberty, the whole strength of that empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces; but I soon rejected that project with horror, by remembering the oath I had made to the Emperor, the favors I received from him, and the high title of Nardac he conferred upon me. Neither had I so soon learned the gratitude of courtiers, to persuade myself that his Majesty's present severities acquitted me of all past obligations.

At last I fixed upon a resolution, for which it is probable I may incur some censure, and not unjustly; for I confess I owe the preserving my eyes, and consequently my liberty, to my own great rashness and want of experience: because if I had then known the nature of princes and ministers, which I have since observed in many other courts, and their methods of treating criminals less obnoxious than myself, I should with great alacrity and readiness have submitted to so easy a punishment. But hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, and having his Imperial Majesty's licence to pay my attendance upon the Emperor of Blefuscu, I took this opportunity, before the three days were elapsed, to send a letter to my friend the Secretary, signifying my resolution of setting out that morning for Blefuscu pursuant to the leave I had got; and without waiting for an answer, I went to that side of the island where our fleet lay. I seized a large man of war, tied a cable to the prow, and, lifting up the anchors, I stripped myself, put my clothes (together with my coverlet, which I brought under my arm) into the vessel, and drawing it after me between wading and swimming, arrived at the royal port of Blefuscu, where the people had long expected me: they lent me two guides to direct me to the capital city, which is of the same name. I held them in my hands till I came within two hundred yards of the gate, and desired them to signify my arrival to one of the secretaries, and let him know, I there waited his Majesty's command. I had an answer in about an hour, that his Majesty, attended by the Royal Family, and great officers of the court, was coming out to receive me. I advanced a hundred yards. The Emperor and his train alighted from their horses, the Empress and ladies from their coaches, and I did not perceive they were in any fright or concern. I lay on the ground to kiss his Majesty's and the Empress's hands. I told his Majesty, that I was come according to my promise, and with the licence of the Emperor my master, to have the honor of seeing so mighty a monarch, and to offer him any service in my power, consistent with my duty to my own prince; not mentioning a word of my disgrace, because I had hitherto no regular information of it, and might suppose myself wholly ignorant of any such design; neither could I reasonably conceive that the Emperor would discover the secret while I was out of his power: wherein, however, it soon appeared I was deceived.

I shall not trouble the reader with the particular account of my reception at this court, which was suitable to the generosity of so great a prince; nor of the difficulties I was in for want of a house and bed, being forced to lie on the ground, wrapped up in my coverlet.

CHAPTER VIII

The Author, by a lucky accident, finds means to leave Blefuscu; and, after some difficulties, returns safe to his native country.

Three days after my arrival, walking out of curiosity to the north-east coast of the island, I observed, about half a league off, in the sea, somewhat that looked like a boat overturned. I pulled off my shoes and stockings, and wading two or three hundred yards, I found the object to approach nearer by force of the tide; and then plainly saw it to be a real boat, which I supposed might, by some tempest, have been driven from a ship; whereupon I returned immediately towards the city, and desired his Imperial Majesty to lend me twenty of the tallest vessels he had left after the loss of his fleet, and three thousand seamen under the command of his Vice-Admiral. This fleet sailed round, while I went back the shortest way to the coast where I first discovered the boat; I found the tide had driven it still nearer. The seamen were all provided with cordage, which I had beforehand twisted to a sufficient strength. When the ships came up, I stripped myself, and waded till I came within an hundred yards of the boat, after which I was forced to swim till I got up to it. The seamen threw me the end of the cord, which I fastened to a hole in the fore-part of the boat, and the other end to a man of war; but I found all my labor to little purpose; for being out of my depth, I was not able to work. In this necessity, I was forced to swim behind, and push the boat forwards as often as I could, with one of my hands; and the tide favoring me, I advanced so far, that I could just hold up my chin and feel the ground. I rested two or three minutes, and then gave the boat another shove, and so on till the sea was no higher than my arm-pits; and now the most laborious part being over, I took out my other cables, which were stowed in one of the ships, and fastening them first to the boat, and then to nine of the vessels which attended me; the wind being favorable, the seamen towed, and I shoved till we arrived within forty yards of the shore; and waiting till the tide was out, I got dry to the boat, and by the assistance of two thousand men, with ropes and engines, I made a shift to turn it on its bottom, and found it was but little damaged.

I shall not trouble the reader with the difficulties I was under by the help of certain paddles, which cost me ten days making, to get my boat to the royal port of Blefuscu, where a mighty concourse of people appeared upon my arrival, full of wonder at the sight of so prodigious a vessel. I told the Emperor that my good fortune had thrown this boat in my way, to carry me to some place from whence I might return into my native country, and begged his Majesty's orders for getting materials to fit it up, together with his licence to depart; which, after some kind expostulations, he was pleased to grant.

I did very much wonder, in all this time, not to have heard of any express relating to me from our Emperor to the court of Blefuscu. But I was afterwards given privately to understand, that his Imperial Majesty, never imagining I had the least notice of his designs, believed I was only gone to Blefuscu in performance of my promise, according to the licence he had given me, which was well known at our court, and would return in a few days when that ceremony was ended. But he was at last in pain at my long absence; and after consulting with the Treasurer, and the rest of that cabal, a person of quality was dispatched with the copy of the articles against me. This envoy had instructions to represent to the monarch of Blefuscu, the great lenity of his master, who was content to punish me no farther than with the loss of my eyes; that I had fled from justice, and if I did not return in two hours, I should be deprived of my title of Nardac, and declared a traitor. The envoy further added, that in order to maintain the peace and amity between both empires, his master expected, that his brother of Blefuscu would give orders to have me sent back to Lilliput, bound hand and foot, to be punished as a traitor.

The Emperor of Blefuscu having taken three days to consult, returned an answer consisting of many civilities and excuses. He said, that as for sending me bound, his brother knew it was impossible; that although I had deprived him of his fleet, yet he owed great obligations to me for many good offices I had done him in making the peace. That however both their Majesties would soon be made easy; for I had found a prodigious vessel on the shore, able to carry me on the sea, which he had given order to fit up with my own assistance and direction; and he hoped in a few weeks both empires would be freed from so insupportable an incumbrance.

With this answer the envoy returned to Lilliput, and the monarch of Blefuscu related to me all that had passed; offering me at the same time (but under the strictest confidence) his gracious protection, if I would continue in his service; wherein although I believed him sincere, yet I resolved never more to put any confidence in princes or ministers, where I could possibly avoid it; and therefore, with all due acknowledgements for his favorable intentions, I humble begged to be excused. I told him, that since fortune, whether good or evil, had thrown a vessel in my way, I was resolved to venture myself in the ocean, rather than be an occasion of difference between two such mighty monarchs. Neither did I find the Emperor at all displeased; and I discovered by a certain accident, that he was very glad of my resolution, and so were most of his ministers.

These considerations moved me to hasten my departure somewhat sooner than I intended; to which the court, impatient to have me gone, very readily contributed. Five hundred workmen were employed to make two sails to my boat, according to my directions, by quilting thirteen fold of their strongest linen together. I was at the pains of making ropes and cables, by twisting ten, twenty or thirty of the thickest and strongest of theirs. A great stone that I happened to find, after a long search, by the sea-shore, served me for an anchor. I had the tallow of three hundred cows for greasing my boat, and other uses. I was at incredible pains in cutting down some of the largest timber-trees for oars and masts, wherein I was, however, much assisted by his Majesty's ship-carpenters, who helped me in smoothing them, after I had done the rough work.

In about a month, when all was prepared, I sent to receive his Majesty's commands, and take my leave. The Emperor and Royal Family came out of the palace; I lay down on my face to kiss his hand, which he very graciously gave me: so did the Empress and young Princes of the blood. His Majesty presented me with fifty purses of two hundred sprugs a-piece, together with his picture at full length, which I put immediately into one of my gloves, to keep it from being hurt. The ceremonies at my departure were too many to trouble the reader with at this time.

I stored the boat with the carcases of an hundred oxen, and three hundred sheep, with bread and drink proportionable, and as much meat ready dressed as four hundred cooks could provide. I took with me six cows and two bulls alive, with as many ewes and rams, intending to carry them into my own country, and propagate the breed. And to feed them on board, I had a good bundle of hay, and a bag of corn. I would gladly have taken a dozen of the natives, but this was a thing the Emperor would by no means permit; and besides a diligent search into my pockets, his Majesty engaged my honor not to carry away any of his subjects, although with their own consent and desire.

